Edward R. Murrow Mon., Nov. 3, 1958

This is the news:

Fair weather is predicted for most of the country tomorrow--Election Day. Forty-eight million Americans, or about 63 percent of the 76-million eligible to vote, are expected to go to the polls. / Democratic and Republican leaders today coupled their victory predictions, with an appeal for "a big vote". / Vice President Nixon...on his way back from Alaska...said, "Let us make sure the decision in each contest tomorrow, will represent the verdict of a majority of our people." / Chairman Paul Butler of the Democratic National Committee urged all eligible citizens to fulfill their "solemn duty" and vote. / "A big vote," he said, "will make stronger the mandate to the party which wins the majority in the Senate and House."

→

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Nov. 3, 1958

This is the news:

Fair weather is predicted for most of the country tomorrow--Election Day. Forty-eight million Americans, or about 63 percent of the 76-million eligible to vote, are expected to go to the polls. / Democratic and Republican leaders today coupled their victory predictions, with an appeal for "a big vote". / Vice President Nixon...on his way back from Alaska...said, "Let us make sure the decision in each contest tomorrow, will represent the verdict of a majority of our people." / Chairman Paul Butler of the Democratic National Committee urged all eligible citizens to fulfill their "solemn duty" and vote. / "A big vote," he said, "will make stronger the mandate to the party which wins the majority in the Senate and House."

→

Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida said that after its victory tomorrow, the Democratic Party will be "pretty much on the spot." He said, "We will have to conduct ourselves with responsibility, and provide the country with leadership." Smathers is chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee.

Chairman Alcorn, of the Republican National Committee, says the Democrats are in for some surprises. The Republicans, he says, may seize control of the House.

President Eisenhower plans to go to Gettysburg by helicopter tomorrow, to cast his vote. And the White House says he will hold a news conference on Wednesday.

Voting was quiet in Cuba today, despite rebel threats. Fidel Castro had said anyone going to the polls was risking his life...and he had threatened to shoot on sight, any of the 10-thousand candidates for state and local office. The leading candidate for the presidency, to succeed Batista, is former Premier Rivero Aguero. He is Batista's own candidate for the job. The three rival candidates have little hope of winning, because the opposition vote is split three ways. THE VOTING TODAY WAS LIGHT.

The State Department today "strongly deplored" the hijacking of the Cuban airliner, which crashed in Cuba on Saturday...killing 17 persons, including six naturalized citizens of the United States. Survivors said that four gunmen...who commandeered the airplane...identified themselves as followers of Fidel Castro. A representative of the rebel movement has denied that it had anything to do with the crash. The United States Embassy in Havana has sent an investigator to the crash scene.

On another subject, the State Department announces that Secretary Dulles underwent a "complete" physical examination at Walter Reed Army Hospital on Saturday...and that he was found to be in "an excellent state of health." Mr. Dulles underwent a major operation for cancer in November, 1956. Today's announcement says: "All tests were negative."

In Geneva today, delegates to the nuclear arms conference met in secret for two hours...and scheduled another meeting for tomorrow afternoon. The United States and Britain submitted an agenda, which would put the delegates at work...at once...on the problems associated with establishing a workable control system. The Western position is that a control system must precede any permanent ban on nuclear weapons tests. The Soviet proposal...submitted last Friday...takes an exactly opposite position. Russia says that an unconditional promise to stop testing forever must come first. A brief communique...issued after today's session...announces a small agreement. "It was agreed," the communique says, "that the title of the conference should be 'A conference on the discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests'."

The United Nations Political Committee tonight voted to set up an 81-nation disarmament commission for 1959. The committee vote was unanimous---with two abstentions---after the United States and Russia finally agreed on how the enlarged commission will operate. (France + Cuba abst.) Each member of the United Nations will have representation on the new commission. It will operate...at the outset...under the rules of the General Assembly. And it may be convened by the secretary general, after consultation with the membership. The commission will be free later to draw up its own rules of procedure. Today's vote...on a compromise resolution drafted by Yugoslavia and India...represents a major move toward breaking a long-existing deadlock between Russia and the United States.

The Chinese Communists today subjected the Quemoy Island complex to its heaviest shelling in seven weeks. / After weeks of sporadic firing, the Communists hit the offshore islands...in a 12-hour period...with more than 36-thousand shells. / Red China had said that it would step up its shelling on odd-numbered days of the month, but today's massive bombardment caught the islands' civilian population off guard. / On Quemoy, many people were caught in the open...on the roads and in the fields...when the bombardment began. / The Nationalists sent a supply convoy into Quemoy today, and that may have been a factor. / There was also speculation that the shelling might have been timed to influence tomorrow's elections in the United States. / So far, there has been no report as to civilian casualties, or as to whether any of the Nationalist supply ships were hit.

In Vatican City, preparations are near completion for the coronation tomorrow of Pope John the twenty-third. / The American delegation to the coronation---led by Secretary of Labor Mitchell---arrived in Rome today. CBS Radio will broadcast the coronation ceremony, direct from Vatican City, starting at 3:15 a.m. tomorrow, Eastern Standard Time.

Edward R. Murrow: November 3, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

A proper label for tomorrow's election might be "Democracy as Usual". Certainly there is nothing unusual about it, and just as certainly it is democratic. The United States by now is about the most venerable democracy in the world, and also the most influential one. That makes any election in this country an important event to the world at large, even if it does not deal directly with world affairs.

The election is taking place at a time when the practice of democracy in the world is both receding and gaining. Self-government has been suspended recently in four countries - Iraq, Pakistan, Burma and Thailand - but it has been introduced in Ghana, Malaya, Tunisia, Morocco, Sudan and Nigeria. Such freedom as was enjoyed by Chinese peasants is being snuffed out by the introduction of communes, which is a big setback for the human race as a whole. But this may be offset somewhat in India, where the government proposes a courageous program to build up the village councils, give them much autonomy and thus develop true self-government for two to three hundred million peasants.

It is not easy to keep the score card of the gains and losses for freedom. But it seems to be true that the sweeping gains for democracy after the war have not been maintained, and that the immediate outlook for a further growth of democracy is not particularly good. Democracy will do well if it holds its own against the tide that seems to be running the other way.

The effect of our election on the world is not going to be important. It does not matter to other countries that we have been campaigning as usual, politicking as usual, and tomorrow will be voting as usual. It will not inspire other countries to emulate us that more than a third of our voters will stay away from the polls tomorrow, and thus mark us individually as being less interested in self-government than individuals in any other self-governing country in the world.

It may be difficult for foreigners, watching our election, to understand how we can become preoccupied with issues that have little to do with the part we must play in the world. It is true that a President is not being elected, and so the foreign policy of a president is not at stake. But an entirely new House of Representatives is being chosen, so is a third of the Senate. And both these bodies will have nothing more important to do in the next two years than deal with the problem of defense, trade, foreign aid, nuclear development and disarmament, all world problems. But if the world tries to get a glimpse of what the Senate and House will be like in handling these weighty subjects it will get little help from reading reports of campaign speeches.

But this may mean no more than that Americans like every now and then to turn from their foreign responsibilities and ignore the influence they wield abroad. A kind of deliberate unreality is adopted for the length of a campaign. President Eisenhower, who has upheld a standard of non-partisan leadership through his six years in the White House, suddenly turned violently partisan a few weeks ago. After having put through his legislative program through the co-operation of Democrats, he turned on the Democrats as dangerous radicals.

This, one can say, is just party politics. The President has been trying to make Republicans look different from Democrats. It may not have been logical to do this, but it has worked in the past. The question is whether it will work now. There is a curious angle in this election campaign to suggest that it may not. For the most notable possibility of a Republican upset victory tomorrow is in New York, where Nelson Rockefeller may be elected governor. But if he is it will be by a large non-partisan vote. He will be liked because he is not an old-line Republican, indeed because he is being much more non-partisan than President Eisenhower. It is the outstanding paradox of the campaign that Mr. Eisenhower has tried to save the Republican Party by campaigning like Mr. Nixon, while Mr. Rockefeller may be saving it in New York State, at least, by campaigning the way Mr. Eisenhower used to.

So the Party system seems to be in a strange muddle. Mr. Eisenhower is trying to point up the differences between Republicans and Democrats, and seems to be getting nowhere. / Mr. Rockefeller is trying to point up their resemblances, and may be accomplishing a great deal, in what is primarily a personal popularity campaign.

What this might do to the future of the right wing of the Republican Party is something to think about - that is, if it happens. / But this concerns the United States, and cannot much interest the world at large. Its chief interest is, that the election is being held, that it is normal, and though quite self-centered, is utterly free. / Beyond that, the world knows it must wait two years more, for any basic change in American foreign policy.

Word for Today

The political campaign is winding up with the usual victory predictions by both major parties. In this, they are following the counsel of my old friend, Petroleum V. Nasby, who said, "Blow your horns, my brethern, for who so bloweth not his own horn, the same shall not be blown. But who so bloweth his own horn, the same shall be blown with a muchness."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Fair weather is predicted for most of the country tomorrow---Election Day. Forty-eight million Americans, or about 63 percent of the 76 million eligible to vote, are expected to go to the polls. Democratic and Republican leaders today coupled their victory predictions with an appeal for "a big vote." Vice President Nixon...on his way back from Alaska...said, "Let us make sure the decision in each contest tomorrow will represent the verdict of a majority of our people." Chairman Paul Butler of the Democratic National Committee urged all eligible citizens to fulfill their "solemn duty" and vote. "A big vote," he said, "will make stronger the mandate to the party which wins the majority in the Senate and House."

Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida said that after its victory tomorrow, the Democratic Party will be "pretty much on the spot." e said, "We will have to conduct ourselves with responsibility and provide the country with leadership." Smathers is chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee.

Chairman Alcorn of the Republican National Committee says the Democrats are in for some surprises. The Republicans, he says, may seize control of the House.

President Eisenhower plans to go to Gettysburg by helicopter tomorrow to cast his vote. And the White House says he will hold a news conference on Wednesday.

Voting was quiet in Cuba today despite rebel threats. Fidel Castro had said anyone going to the polls was risking his life...and he had threatened to shoot on sight any of the 10-thousand candidates for state and local office. The leading candidate for the presidency to succeed Batista is former Premier Rivero Aguero. He is Batista's own candidate for the job. The three rival candidates have little hope of winning because the opposition vote is split three ways. The voting today was light.

The State Department today "strongly deplored" the hijacking of the Cuban airliner which crashed in Cuba in Saturday....killing 17 persons, including six naturalized citizens of the United States. Survivors said that four gunmen... who commandeered the airplane...identified themselves as followers of Fidel Castro. A representative of the rebel movement has denied that it had anything to do with the crash. The United States Embassy in Havana has sent an investigator to the crash scene.

On another subject, the State Department announces that Secretary Dulles underwent a "complete" physical examination at Walter Reed Army Hospital on Saturday...andthat he was found to be in "an excellent state of health." Mr. Dulles underwent a major operation for cancer in November, 1956. Today's announcement says: "All tests were negative."

In Geneva today, delegates to the nuclear arms conference met in secret for two hours...and scheduled another meeting for tomorrow afternoon. The United States and Britain submitted an agenda, which would put the delegates at work... at once...on the problems associated with establishing a workable control system. The Western position is that a control system must precede any permanent ban on nuclear weapons tests. The Soviet proposal...submitted last Friday...takes an exactly opposite position. Russia says that an unconditional promise to stop testing forever must come first. A brief communique...issued after today's session...announces a small agreement. "It was agreed," the communique says, "that the title of the conference should be 'A conference on the discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests.'"

The United Nations Political Committee tonight voted to set up an 81-nation disarmament commission for 1959. The committee vote was unanimous---with two abstentions---after the United States and Russia finally agreed on how the enlarged commission will operate. France and Cuba abstained. Each member of the United Nations will have representation on the new commission. It will operate...at the outset...under the rules of the General Assembly. And it may be convened by the secretary general after consultation with the membership. The commission will be free later to draw up its own rules of procedure. Today's vote...on a compromise resolution drafted by Yugoslavia and India...represents a major move toward breaking a long-existing deadlock between Russia and the United States.

The Chinese Communists today subjected the Quemoy Island complex to its heaviest shelling in seven weeks. After weeks of sporadic firing, the Communists hit the offshore islands...in a 12-hour period...with more than 36-thousand shells. Red China had said that it would step up its shelling on odd-numbered days of the month, but today's massive bombardment caught the islands civilian population off guard. On Quemoy, many people were caught in the open...on the roads and in the fields...when the bombardment began. The Nationalists sent a supply convoy into Quemoy today and that may have been a factor. There was also speculation that the shelling might have been timed to influence tomorrow's elections in the United States. So far, there has been no report as to civilian casualites or as to whether any of the Nationalist supply ships were hit.

In Vatican City, preparations are near completion for the coronation tomorrow of Pope John the twenty-third. The American delegation to the coronation, led by Secretary of Labor Mitchell---arrived in Rome today. CBS Radio will broadcast the coronation ceremony dreect from Vatican City, statting at 3:15 AM tomorrow, Eastern Standard Time.

A proper label for tomorrow's election might be "Democracy as Usual." Certainly there is nothing unusual about it, and just as certainly it is democratic. The United States by now is about the most venerable democracy in the world, and also the most influential one. That makes any election in this country an important event to the world at large, even if it does not deal directly with world affairs.

The election is taking place at a time when the practice of democracy in the world is both receding and gaining. Self-government has been suspended recently in four countries - Iraq, Pakistan, Burma and Thailand - but it has been introduced in Ghana, Malaya, Tunisia, Morocco, Sudan and Nigeria. Such freedom as was enjoyed by Chinese peasants is being snuffed out by the introduction of communes, which is a big setback for the human race as a whole. But this may be offset somewhat in India, where the government proposes a courageous program to build up the village councils, give them much autonomy and thus develop true self-government for two to three hundred million peasants.

It is not easy to keep the score card of the gains and losses for freedom. But it seems to be true that the sweeping gains for democracy after the war have not been maintained, and that the immediate outlook for a further growth of democracy is not particularly good. Democracy will do well if it holds its own against the tide that seems to be running the other way.

The effect of our election on the world is not going to be important. It does not matter to other countries that we have been campaigning as usual, politicking as usual, and tomorrow will be voting as usual. It will not inspire other countries to emulate us that more than a third of our voters will stay away from the polls tomorrow, and thus mark us individually as being less interested in self-government than individuals in any other self-governing country in the world.

It may be difficult for foreigners, watching our election, to understand how we can become preoccupied with issues that have little to do with the part we must play in the world. It is true that a President is not being elected, and so the foreign policy of a president is not at stake. But an entirely new House of Representatives is being chosen, so is a third of the Senate. And both these bodies will have nothing more important to do in the next two years than deal with the problem of defense, trade, foreign aid, nuclear development and disarmament, all world problems. But if the world tries to get a glimpse of what the Senate and House will be like in handling these weighty subjects it will get little help from reading reports of campaign speeches.

But this may mean no more than that Americans like every now and then to turn from their foreign responsibilities and ignore the influence they wield abroad. A kind of deliberate unreality is adopted for the length of a campaign. President Eisenhower, who has upheld a standard of non-partisan leadership through his six years in the White House, suddenly tunned violently partisan a few weeks ago. After having put through his legislative program through the co-operation of Democrats, he turned on the Democrats as dangerous radicals.

This, one can say, is just party politics. The President has been trying to make Republicans look different from Democrats. It may not have been logical to do this, but it has worked in the past. The question is whether it will work now. There is a curious angle in this election campaign to suggest that it may not. For the most notable possibility of a Republican upset victory tomorrow is in New York, where Nelson Rockefeller may be elected governor. But if he is, it will be by a large non-partisan vote. He will be liked because he is not an old-line Republican, indeed because he is being much more non-partisan than President Eisenhower. It is the outstanding paradox of the campaign that Mr. Eisenhower has tried to save the Republican Party by campaigning like Mr. Nixon, while Mr. Rockefeller may be saving it in New York State, at least, by campaigning the way Mr. Eisenhower used to.

So the Party system seems to be in a strange muddle. Mr. Eisenhower is trying to point up the difference between Republicans and Democrats, and seems to be getting nowhere. Mr. Rockefeller is trying to point up their resemblances, and may be accomplishing a great deal, in what is primarily a personal popularity campaign.

What this might do to the future of the right wing of the Republican Party is something to thinkabout - that is, if it happens. But this concerns the United States, and cannot much interest the world at large. Its chief interest is that the election is being held, that it is normal, and though quite self-centered, is utterly free. Beyond that, the world knows it must wait two years more for any basic change in American foreign policy.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The political campaign is winding up with the usual victory predictions by both major parties. In this, they are following the counsel of my old friend, Petroleum V. Nasby, who said, "Blow your horns, my brethern, for who so bloweth not his own horn, the same shall not be blown. But who so bloweth his own horn, the same shall be blown with a muchness."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Nov. 4, 1958

This is the news:

Voters today elected 32 governors, 33 U.S. senators, and a new House of Representatives. It was predicted that 48-million of the 76 and a half million voters registered would go to the polls. But the word from most states is that voting was heavier than expected. The weather in most parts of the country has been ideal, although there has been some wind and rain in the Pacific Northwest.

National attention is focussed on New York and California. The polls in California will not be closed for three hours. There, the Democratic attorney general, Pat Brown, is favored to win the contest for governor over William Knowland. California's Republican Governor Knight, who would have liked to run for re-election, is matched in the U.S. Senate race with Democratic Representative Clair Engle. One of the key issues in California...as in five other states...is the proposal to outlaw the union shop. This is the so-called "right to work" law, and Knowland is strongly in favor of it. Knight is against it. So are many of the other Republican candidates in California and all of the Democrats. It's estimated that 80 percent of California's registered voters are going to the polls to set a new off-year record.

Here in New York, interest has centered on the "Battle of the Millionaires"---the contest for governor between the Democratic incumbent, Averill Harriman, and Nelson Rockefeller. The odds favor Rockefeller. The senate race is between Republican Representative Keating and Frank Hogan, MANHATTAN district attorney for five terms. Hogan was the choice of Tammany Leader Carmine DeSapio. Harriman would have preferred former Air Force secretary Thomas Finletter. And so "bossism" has been an issue in the gubernatorial campaign. Otherwise, it's been pretty much of a "personality contest". The New York polls closed almost an hour ago. Here are some of the early returns:

N.Y.

The town of Salamanca...in upstate New York...has been carried by Governor Harriman. Complete but unofficial returns from Salamanca give Harriman 1-thousand, 805 votes, Rockefeller 1-thousand, 658 votes.

But Rockefeller has a plurality of 1-thousand, 900 votes in complete returns from Rome, New York...also upstate.

Returns from two other districts---one in Oswego County and one in Rensselaer County---give Rockefeller 418 votes and Harriman 251.

Adding up these returns...as of this moment...it's Rockefeller 3-thousand, 216 votes...Harriman, 2-thousand, 904 votes. Rockefeller leading by about 300 votes with 13 upstate precincts reporting.

In Connecticut, voting was moderate to heavy. The polls closed there about 50 minutes ago, and here are the first returns are from Bridgeport. There, Democratic Governor Ribicoff...running for re-election...has chalked up a record plurality of nearly 25-thousand votes over his Republican opponent, Fred Zeller. Four years ago, Ribicoff carried Bridgeport by only 9-thousand votes.

First returns from Vermont come from Brookline...where Republican Congressman Winston Prouty is leading his Democratic rival, Frederick Fayette, 41 votes to 7, in the race for the Senate.

About one-~~eighth~~ SEVENTH of the returns are in on the governor's race in Kansas. These unofficial returns give Democratic Governor Docking a slight margin over his Republican opponent, Clyde Reed, Jr.

The polls in New Jersey are closing in about 10 minutes. The main attraction in New Jersey is the race for U.S. Senator between the ypung Democratic lawyer, Harrison Williams, and Republican Representative Kean, (KANE) a veteran of 20 years in the House of Representatives. This race is expected to be very close.

Another of the states to watch tonight is Pennsylvania...but there again the polls are just closing, and there is nothing to report---except that the balloting was brisk. Seventy-five percent of Pennsylvania's eligible voters may have gone to the polls.

Maine voted in September...choosing Democrats for governor, senator, and two of the three seats at stake in the House. Alaska will vote for a governor, two senators and a representative in its special election on November 25. Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler predicted, before the start of today's voting, that the Democrats would pick up 11 or 12 additional seats in the Senate, and gain 47 seats in the House. Republican National Chairman Meade Alcorn made no specific claims, but said the Democrats could look for some upsets. And he predicted that the Republican Party could win control of the House.

President Eisenhower flew to Gettysburg to cast his ballot and was in the voting booth exactly 24 seconds. He then flew back to Washington and played golf with his son, Major John Eisenhower, at Burning Tree.

Before going to Gettysburg, Mr. Eisenhower conferred for half an hour with Secretary of State Dulles. Their discussion concerned the meeting of Colombo powers in Seattle. The President has definitely decided to speak at that meeting next Monday. The speech will include recommendations for helping the economic development of Southeast Asia.

In Vatican City, Pope John today was crowned 262nd supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church. / The ceremony, lasting four hours, began with a solemn procession of prelates and nobles into St. Peter's Basilica...and ended on the central balcony of the Basilica, where the new Pope received the tiara, adorned with three crowns. / Thirty-thousand persons inside the Basilica watched the long coronation ritual. / And outside, in St. Peter's Square, a quarter of a million persons cheered when the triple-crown was placed. Pope John broke the traditional program for a coronation by delivering a sermon on his duties as head of the Church. / He said, "There are those who expect the Pope to be a diplomat, a scientist, an organizer of collective life." This, he said, is not to conform fully to the "true ideal", the ideal of the good shepherd. / He said, "The good shepherd is ready for every sacred undertaking. If necessary, he engages in combat with the wolf to defend his sheep." / Tonight, Pope John granted an audience to (15-thousand persons from Northern Italy.) He himself is a native of North Italy. And dispatches from Rome say that he was deeply moved.

The Quemoy crisis took an ugly turn today, with a Communist charge that the Nationalists used poison gas shells against the mainland yesterday. This was at once denied, both by the Chinese Nationalist government and the State Department in Washington. /It will be recalled that the Chinese Communists stirred up Asian opinion against the United States in the Korean War, by accusing it of conducting germ warfare. /The present charge is set down primarily to the same motive. /But Nationalist China saw the further possibility that the Communists may be preparing to use poison gas themselves.

The Baghdad radio tonight announced the arrest of Colonel Aref, the No. 2 man in the Iraqi revolt of last July. Aref is pro-Nasser. Premier Kassem recently removed Aref as deputy commander of the Iraqi armed forces, and appointed him ambassador to West Germany. /The Baghdad radio says Aref was arrested because he returned to Iraq "without permission."

The United Nations General Assembly tonight passed a resolution calling on the United States, Britain and Russia to reach "early agreement" in Geneva for the controlled suspension of nuclear tests. The resolution... approved by a vote of 49 to 9, with 22 abstentions...called on the atomic powers to refrain from tests while the talks are in progress. The nine negative votes were cast by the Soviet bloc. Russia has called for [redacted] an immediate, unconditional cessation of tests "for all time."

An Air Force bomber...carrying a nuclear weapon...crashed today near Abilene, Texas. There was no explosion. / And the Air Force says no radioactive contamination occurred. One airman died in the crash, which took place while the aircraft was on a routine training mission. Three other airmen parachuted to safety.

~~FALL~~

A federal grand jury today indicted Clyde Crosby, the teamster union organizer for Oregon, on a charge of perjury. Crosby is accused of lying in testimony he gave before the Senate Rackets Committee in March, 1957. The grand jury also returned perjury indictments against two officials of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union. ~~They are Frank Mykale, international vice president, and Frank Gardone, a union organizer. The Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union was expelled from the A.F.L. - C.I.O. last December for alleged corruption.~~

And here are more returns in the New York race for governor:

With 27 of 11-thousand districts reporting, Rockefeller has 6-thousand, 400 votes...Harriman 5-thousand and seven votes.

Republican Representative Keating also holds a slight lead over Democrat Frank Hogan in the contest for U.S. SEnator.

These are fragmentary returns from upstate New York.

Governor Patterson has been elected in Alabama.

~~BULLETIN~~

THE FIRST NEW YORK CITY ELECTION DISTRICT TO REPORT TONIGHT GAVE DEMOCRATIC GOVERNOR [redacted] HARRIMAN THE EDGE OVER REPUBLICAN NELSON ROCKEFELLER. THE VOTE, IN THE BRONX, WAS HARRIMAN 72 AND ROCKEFELLER 41.

JT755PES 4

In Connecticut...in the race for Governor...

unofficial returns from New Haven give the Democratic incumbent Ribicoff 44-thousand votes, Fred Zeller, 20-thousand votes.

Word for Today

"When the votes are counted," Will Rogers said, "let's everybody get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's offer no alibis but cooperate with the winner. Let's all be friends again." Not bad advice. For as Thomas Huxley observed, "The results of political changes are hardly ever those which their friends hope or their foes fear."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Voters today elected 32 governors, 33 U.S. senators, and a new House of Representatives. It was predicted that 48 million of the 76 and a half million voters registered would go to the polls. But the word from most states is that voting was heavier than expected. The weather in most parts of the country has been ideal, although there has been some wind and rain in the Pacific Northwest.

National attention is focussed on New York and California. The polls in California will not be closed for three hours. There, the Democratic attorney general, Pat Brown, is favored to win the contest for governor over William Knowland. California's Republican Governor Knight, who would have liked to run for re-election, is matched in the U.S. Senate race with Democratic Representative Clair Engle. One of the key issues in California...as in five other states,.. is the proposal to outlaw the union shop. This is the so-called "right to work" law, and Knowland is strongly in favor of it. Knight is against it. So are many of the other Republican candidates in California and all of the Democrats. It's estimated that 80 percent of California's registered voters are going to the polls to set a new off-year record.

Here in New York, interest has centered on the "Battle of the Millionaires"---the contest for governor between the Democratic incumbent, Averell Harriman, and Nelson Rockefeller. The odds favor Rockefeller. The senate race is between Republican Representative Keating and Frank Hogan, Manhattan district attorney for five terms. Hogan was the choice of Tammany Leader Carmine DeSapio. Harriman would have preferred former Air Force Secretary Thomas Finletter. And so "bossism" has been an issue in the gubernatorial campaign. Otherwise, it's been pretty much of a "personality contest." The New York polls closed almost an hour ago. Here are some of the early returns:

The town of Salamanca...in upstate New York...has been carried by Governor Harriman. Complete but unofficial returns from Salamanca give Harriman 1-thousand, 805 votes, Rockefeller 1-thousand, 658 votes.

But Rockefeller has a plurality of 1-thousand, 900 votes in complete returns from Rome, New York...also upstate.

Returns from two other districts---one in Oswego County and one in Rensselaer County---give Rockefeller 418 votes and Harriman 251.

Adding up these returns...as of this moment...it's Rockefeller 3-thousand, 216 votes...Harriman, 2-thousand, 904 votes. Rockefeller leading by about 300 votes with 13 upstate precincts reporting.

In Connecticut, voting was moderate to heavy. The polls closed there about 50 minutes ago, and here are the first returns from Bridgeport. There, Democratic Governor Ribicoff...running for re-election...has chaulked up a record plurality of nearly 25-thousand votes over his Republican opponent, Fred Zeller. Four years ago, Ribicoff carried Bridgeport by only 9-thousand votes.

First returns from Vermont come from Brookline...where Republican Congressman Winston Prouty is leading his Democratic rival, Frederick Fayette, 41 votes to 7, in the race for the Senate.

About one-seventh of the returns are in on the governor's race in Kansas. These unofficial returns give Democratic Governor Docking a slight margin over his Republican opponent, Clyde Reed, Jr.

The polls in New Jersey are closing in about 10 minutes. The main attraction in New Jersey is the race for U.S. Senator between the young Democratic lawyer, Harrison Williams, and Republican Representative Kean, a veteran of twenty years in the House of Representatives. This race is expected to be very close.

Another of the states to watch tonight is Pennsylvania...but there again the polls are just closing, and there is nothing to report---except that the balloting was brisk. Seventy-five percent of Pennsylvania's eligible voters may have gone to the polls.

Maine voted in September...choosing Democrats for governor, senator, and two of the three seats at stake in the House. Alaska will vote for a governor, two senators and a representative in its special election on November 25. Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler predicted before the start to today's voting that the Democrats would pick up 11 or 12 additional seats in the Senate and gain 47 seats in the House. Republican National Chairman Meade Alcorn made no specific claims but said the Democrats could look for some upsets. And he predicted that the Republican Party could win control of the House.

President Eisenhower flew to Gettysburg to cast his ballot and was in the voting booth exactly 24 seconds. He then flew back to Washington and played golf with his son, Major John Eisenhower, at Burning Tree.

Before going to Gettysburg, Mr. Eisenhwwer conferred for half an hour with Secretary of State Dulles. Their discussion concerned the meeting of Colombo powers in Seattle. The President has definitely decided to speak at that meeting next Monday. The speech will include recommendations for helping the economic development of Southeast Asia.

In Vatican City, Pope John today was crowned 262nd supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church. The ceremony, lasting four hours, began with a solemn procession of prelates and nobles into St. Peter's Basilica...and ended on the central balcony of the Basilica, where the new Pope received the tiara adorned with three crowns. Thirty-thousand persons inside the Basilica watched the long coronation ritual. And outside in St. Peter's Square a quarter of a million persons cheered when the triple-crown was placed. Pope John broke the traditional program for a coronation by delivering a sermon on his duties as head of the Church. He said, "There are those who expect the Pope to be a diplomat, a scientist, and organizer of collective life." This, he said, is not to conform fully to the "true ideal," the ideal of the good shepherd. He said, "The good shepherd is ready for every sacred undertaking. If necessary, he engages in combat with the wolf to defend his sheep." Tonight Pope John granted an audience to 15-thousand persons from Northern Italy. He himself is a native of North Italy. And dispatches from Rome say that he was deeply moved.

The Quemoy crisis took an ugly turn today with a Communist charge that the Nationalists used poison gas shells against the mainland yesterday. This was at once denied both by the Chinese Nationalist government and the State Department in Washington. It will be recalled that the Chinese Communists stirred up Asian opinion against the United States in the Korean War by accusing it of conducting germ warfare. The present charge is set down primarily to the same motive. But Nationalist China saw whe future possibility that the Communists may be preparing to use poison gas themselves.

The Baghdad radio tonight announced the arrest of Colonel Aref, the Number 2 man in the Iraqi revolt of last July. Aref is pro-Nasser. Premier Kassem recently removed Aref as deputy commander of the Iraqi armed forces and appointed him ambassador to West Germany. The Baghdad radio says Aref was arrested because he returned to Iraq "without permission."

The United Nations General Assembly todight passed a resolution calling on the United States, Britain and Russia to reach "early agreement" in Geneva for the controlled suspension of nuclear tests. The resolution...approved by a vote of 49 to 9, with 22 abstentions...called on the atomic powers to refrain from tests while the talks are in progress. The nine negative votes were cast by the Soviet bloc. Russia was called for an immediate, unconditional cessation of tests "for all time."

An air Force bomber...carrying a nuclear weapon...crashed today near Abilene, Texas. There was no explosion. And the Air Force says no radio-active contamination occurred. One airman died in the crash, which took place while the aircraft was on a routine training mission. Three other airmen parachuted to safety.

A federal grand jury today indicted Clyde Crosby, the teamster union organizer for Oregon, on a charge of perjury. Crosby is accused of lying in testimony he gave before the Senate Rackets Committee in March, 1957. The grand jury also returned perjury indictments against two officials of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union.

And here are more returns in the New York race for governor: With 27 of 11-thousand districts reporting, Rockefeller has 6-thousand, 400 votes, Harriman, 5-thousand and seven votes. Republican Representative Keating also holds a slight lead over Democrat Frank Hogan in the contest for U.S. Senator. These are fragmentary returns from upstate New York.

Governor Patterson has been elected in Alabama.

The first New York City election district to report tonight gave Democratic Governor Harriman the edge over Republican Nelson Rockefeller. The vote, in the Bronx, was Harriman 72 and Rockefeller 41.

In Connecticut...in the race for governor...unofficial returns from New Haven give the Democratic. incumbent Ribicoff 44-thousand votes, Fred Zeller, 20-thousand votes.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: "When the votes are counted," Will Rogers said, "let's everybody get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's offer no alibis, but cooperate with the winner. Let's all be friends again." Not bad advice. For as Thomas Huxley observed, "The results of political changes are hardly ever those which their friends hope or their foes fear."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Nov. 5, 1958

This is the news:

Almost complete returns give the Democrats an additional 13 seats in the Senate. They have strengthened their control of the House by at least 45 seats. And they have won 24 of the 33 contests for governor. The 13-seat gain in the Senate surpasses the previous Democratic record of 12 seats, set in the Roosevelt landslide of 1932. President Eisenhower was asked at his news conference today whether he thought the voters had chosen "left-wing" government, rather than "sensible" government. (He had said before the election that this was the choice before the American people). Mr. Eisenhower said in reply to the question that he did not know whether the voters "had done this thing deliberately." But, he said,

"they obviously voted for people that I would class among the spenders." Mr. Eisenhower did not conceal his surprise over the election results. He recalled that...in 1956...he had been re-elected by a margin of well over 9-million votes, and everyone knew the program he stood for. "Now," he said, "only two years later, there is a complete reversal. Yet I do not see where there is anything that these people consciously want the Administration to do differently." He said he would devote the remaining two years of his Administration "to trying to keep the economy on a good even keel and to working for peace." Mr. Eisenhower said he was not discouraged. He had not been discouraged at Kasserine Pass, in North Africa, during the war. Nor had he been discouraged in the "Battle of the Bulge". But he agreed with Republican National Chairman Meade Alcorn that if the Republicans "don't start fighting now, this very day, for the next election, they're going to be in a bad way." The President said he was "delighted" by the victory of Nelson Rockefeller in New York, but he declined to comment on the likelihood of Rockefeller---or anyone else---succeeding him in the White House in 1960. He said he would like to see "a whole stable" of young Republican leaders developed---men, he said, of "progressive attitudes" who believe in the free enterprise system. Mr. Eisenhower said he does not expect trouble with the new Democratic-controlled Congress...that "a lot of them" want to do what is good for the country. His battle, he said, was with the "spender" wing of the ~~party~~ Democratic Party. And he said again, as he did during the campaign, that this is the "dominant" wing of the party.

Democratic Senator Green, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said today that he would continue to support the Eisenhower Administration "when I think it is right." "And," he said, "I will voice my objections when I think it is wrong."

~~Most newspapers in Western Europe are interpreting the Democratic victories in terms of a protest against Administration foreign policy, against "brinksmanship", and the difficulties encountered in the Middle East and in the Formosa Strait. Radio Moscow tonight called the election a "crushing defeat" for the foreign and internal policies of the Eisenhower Administration.~~

Several important races were not decided...definitely...until today. In Nevada, returns from virtually all precincts confirm that Howard Cannon, the Democratic city attorney of Las Vegas, has defeated the incumbent Republican senator, George Malone. In Wyoming, a Democratic history professor, Gale McGee, has defeated the re-election bid of Republican Senator Barrett. ~~And in Pennsylvania, Democratic Mayor Lawrence of Pittsburgh has edged out Arthur McGonigle in the race for governor. Republican Representative Scott of Pennsylvania defeated Governor Leader in the contest for U.S. Senate.~~

In Nebraska, the race for governor is so close that it may have to be decided by the counting of absentee ballots. At the moment, Ralph Brooks ~~Democrat Ralph Brooks~~ holds a slight lead ~~midnight lead~~ over the Republican incumbent, Victor ~~Adm~~ Anderson. Another close race, which was not decided until today, saw the Minnesota congresswoman, Mrs. Coya Knutson, defeated in her bid for a third term. It was Mrs. Knutson's husband who...last spring...told her to leave politics and "come home". She was defeated by Republican Odin Langen.

In Arkansas, the veteran congressman, Brooks Hays, was defeated in his try for a ninth term. Hays is president of the Southern Baptist Convention. He is a moderate on the question of school integration, and Governor Faubus said today, that his defeat shows that "the strongest thing in American politics is public sentiment, and that when the people feel, rightly or wrongly, that their best interests are not being represented by a particular candidate, they will get someone they feel will represent them." / Hays was defeated by Dr. Dale Alford, a segregationist member of the Little Rock School Board. Alford ran as an independent write-in candidate.

In California, Republican Governor Knight...running for the U.S. Senate.. did not concede defeat until this afternoon, although he was trailing by more than 400-thousand votes. / The winner is Democratic Representative Clair Engle.

The so-called "right-to-work" proposal lost in California and in four of the other five states where it was an issue. / Only Kansas voted to outlaw the union shop.

Here in New York, the complete unofficial returns in the governor's race show that Rockefeller defeated Democratic Governor Harriman by 557-thousand votes.

The Chinese Communists today resumed their bombardment of Quemoy after a 24-hour lull.

Tunisia today sent a protest to France...charging that two regiments of French troops violated its territory during the night. It charged that one Tunisian was killed and another wounded by French mortar fire.

Edward R. Murrow: November 5, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Excepting for Arizona, the United States yesterday turned thumbs down on conservative Republicanism, and that is perhaps the most significant feature of the election returns. / Senator Knowland, hoping to be Republican presidential candidate in 1960, was banished into private life by California voters, and is expected to devote himself henceforth to his newspaper property in Oakland. / Governor Handley of Indiana, hand-picked by Senator Jenner to fill his seat, was roundly beaten. / A still more significant result, was the defeat of Senator Bricker of Ohio, who went into the election confident of his proven vote-getting appeal, to overcome any Democratic tide. He was one of the most powerful conservatives in the Senate, and if elected, would have tried once more to tie the hands of the President in foreign affairs, with a constitutional amendment that would have legislated this country into isolationism.

The election of Nelson Rockefeller as Governor of New York, only emphasized that the national trend was away from the right wing of the Republican Party. / For Mr. Rockefeller owed his victory to his candid appeal to bi-partisan support, as well as to his personal attractiveness as a candidate. One sees now how justified he was to have induced President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon, when they spoke in New York, to tone down the strongly partisan speeches they had been giving.

Just why Arizona should have been exempted from the rebuff to conservative Republicanism is not to be explained from this distance. But it does not much narrow the broad meaning of the results. The organized Republican Party throughout the country, on the whole dominated by the conservatives, was so badly battered that it will have to be rebuilt if it is to be fit for battle in 1960. Not long ago one could say there were more Taft Republicans than Eisenhower Republicans in the country. And it seemed sure that the Taft Republicans would control the next Republican convention and so choose the next Republican nominee for president. That would explain why Vice President Nixon put into mothballs the new statesmanlike Nixon he had been building up in the past two years and went out campaigning like the pugnacious Nixon of earlier campaigns. It seemed sure he would be clinching the leadership of the Party and the nomination. But results in general, and in New York, California, Indiana and Ohio in particular, have made this strategy appear suddenly incongruous. The Nixon campaign, abetted as it was by an Eisenhower acting out-of-character, did not save the Republican Party, and did not help it much, unless it was on the re-election to the Senate of ~~Beall~~ in Maryland and the election of Hugh Scott, an Eisenhower Republican, in Pennsylvania.

Bell

Now the place of Mr. Nixon in the Republican future is in serious doubt. And Mr. Rockefeller rises on the horizon as the only Republican on the team to have won a sensational victory - that is, excepting Barry Goldwater in Arizona. Mr. Rockefeller's future is not to be defined at this moment. A great deal depends on what happens in the next two years. Rockefeller as a national figure is still an outline. He did not discuss national and international issues in the New York campaign. He held himself strictly to state and local questions. And that turned out to be part of his strength. Everybody knows how he stands on all the local issues, nobody can say how he stands on foreign policy, national finance and the other great problems of national life. One can well expect that he will continue to stick to local affairs for a while, and not swell into a national or world figure. That may be the best way to grow into the larger dimension.

But if one does not know what he would do as president, one knows from his New York campaign that he would not be strongly partisan, and would be something like the antithesis of Nixon in Republican plans. And if Republicans think he can win in 1960 they will have to create a party with a new and different base than existed up till last night's earthquake.

It is interesting, and perhaps not insignificant, to learn about the campaign of the first Democrat to win major office in Vermont in a hundred and six years. He is William H. Meyer, elected congressman-at-large. He is a devout believer in civil liberties, and advocated a new approach to peace without what he called the rigidities of Secretary Dulles and Admiral Straus. He proposed giving up nuclear tests as a calculated risk, and urged an international agreement to abolish the use, manufacture and stock-piling of nuclear weapons, as well as the repeal of the peacetime draft, the ultimate entry of Red China into the United Nations, and an international system of law and order. That this line should have elected a Democrat in Vermont may be only a local phenomenon. But what makes it interesting is that it happened.

Word for Today

The American electorate---a considerable ~~segment~~ part of it anyway---exercised its perogative yesterday and voted. It may have been a record turnout for an off-year. And I am reminded of something Carl Sandburg once said. "The people," he said, "is everyman, everybody. Everybody is you and me and all the others. And what everybody says is what we all say."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The nuclear arms conference opened in Geneva today...attended by representatives of Britain, Russia and the United States. The fitst meating lasted about three hours. For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and Alexander Kendrick.

ALEXANDER KENDRICK: Sandwiched between a meeting of the Executive Council of the International Wheat Conference on one side and a meeting of the Panal of Concilliation of the general agreement on trade and tariffs on the other, the three power conference on the suspension of nuclear testing was formally opened in the Palace of Nations here this afternoon under the usual photographic floodlights. On the public record, the opening was an auspicious one. The Soviet delegate, Semyon Tsarapkin, a diplomat who looks like a wrestler, spoke as if he had never listened to Radio Moscow or read the remarks made in the UN General Assembly by his Foreign Ministry superior Valerian Zorin. Although indicating that Soviet tests will continue until an agreement is reached, Mr. Tsarapkin did not call the Anglo-American proposal for a year by year suspension of tests, a fraud and a delusion. He said, the Soviet Government accepted the idea of a control system and was anxious to see a permanent cessation of testing, so, that the development of nuclear weapons could be slowed down and the radio-active contamination of the air ended. The Soviet delegate, in fact, spoke with such moderation that the subsequent remarks of thr two Western delegates: Ambassador James Wadsworth for the United States, and David Ormsby-Gore for Britain, though mild as toasts seemed almost pugnacious. They too said they would like to see nuclear testing halted and a control system adopted and that everybody should get together and do the same. Then, the floodlights were turned off, the photographers and correspondents and delegates wives and visitors were ushered out of the room and the conference went into strictly secret session as it will function from now to its end. It then remained to decipher all the honeyed words, whereupon, it developed, that all through his speech, the Soviet delegate spoke of complete and immediate cessation of tests. And, all through their speeches, the American and British delegate, uttered only the lesser word, "suspension." It was also clear that when the Soviet delegate mentioned a control system, he mentioned it only after a cessation of testing, while the Western delegates clearly predicted even a prolonged suspension upon the existence and functioning of a control system. Finally, it emerged that while the Soviet delegate envisioned a cessation of testing as a means of limiting the development of nuclear weapons, the Western delegates saw suspension in itself as no disarmament of limitation measure at all, but only a prelude to possible other agreements limiting the production of fissionable materials and of both nuclear and conventional weapons. It is on the basis of such striking differences - not only of approach but of principle that the conference has gone behind locked doors. The success that all the delegates so movingly hope for depends upon the reconciliation of these views. Aside from offering thanks for at least one public hour of tranquility and harmony in these troubled times, only three things remain to be noted tonight in Geneva: One is that the American delegation numbering 21 persons is larger than the Soviet and British delegations put together. The second is that the futuristic map of the world under which the conference is sitting has as its most prominent feature a large Chinese dragon. The third, is that there seems to be no sign here of Donald McClaine, the fugative British diplomat, despite reports that he is a member of the Soviet delegation. Now from the Palace of Nations, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alex Kendrick reporting on the start of the Geneva Conference dealing with nuclear tests.

Russia today formally warned Iran that it had placed itself in danger by signing a new military treaty with the United States. The Soviet warning apparently refers to the realignment of the Baghdad Pact last summer after the military coup in Iraq. Secretary of State Dulles at that time committed the United States to the defense of Turkey, Pakistan and Iran as a virtual partner in the Baghdad alliance. Russia claims that the treaty with Iran "directly endangers the southern frontiers of the Soviet Union." And to this, it says, it cannot "remain indifferent."

Tomorrow marks what is accepted as the fourth anniversary of the start of the Algerian War. Tonight...on the eve of that anniversary... French Premier DeGaulle ordered the immediate release of 1-thousand persons held as political prisoners in Algeria.

In Cairo, the head of the Algerian provisional government...Ferhat Abbas... said tonight that the rebels "are not prepared to hoist a white flag and accept defeat." He said, with reference to DeGaulle's offer to negotiate, that his ministers are prepared to negotiate. But, he said, "not in Paris with ropes around their necks."

The State Department today spelled out the agreement between Secretary Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek regarding the use of force against Communist China. Chiang...in a joint communique...renounced force as the "principal" means of winning back the mainland. Premier Chen of Nationalist China spoke today of counter-attacking, if the Communists "enlarge" their attakks on the off-shore islands. A State Department spokesman said this statement does not represent a departure from announced policy. What Chiang promised in the communique, he said, "does not preclude the use of force in self-defense, or in case of a large-scale uprising on the mainland."

In Baltimore tonight, President Eisenhower is making his last speech of the political campaign. And he is calling for the election of a Republican Congress. "For progressive and effective government," he will say, "we need Republican control of both the congressional and executive branches." Mr. Eisenhower will also submit the following arguments: Only "sturdy Republican opposition"...and his vetoes..blocked the spending programs of Democratic "extremists" for ending the recession. Instead, the Republicans came forth with "practical, sensible, programs" and today "every economic indicator proves that our Republican faith in the economy was right." "All across America things are good. They are getting better every day." "Today America....and all the world...knows that in less than four years we are rapidly closing the missile gap that we inherited." The Democrats are "gloom-dogglers" split on every issue---states rights, civil rights, "and so on down the line."

Earlier today, Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler said the President should throw away his "ghost-written Halloween speech" and "talk about the facts." Butler charged that both Mr. Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon have been "scaring the daylights" out of small children and big contributors with talk of Democratic radicalism, socialism, and "hare-brained schemes." At a Democratic rally in Casper, Wyoming, Senate Leader Lyndon Johnson said, "There are Republicans who lack faith in the strength of America. And he challenged Mr. Eisenhower to list the "socialist" and "radical" Democratic laws he would repeal.

The Agriculture Department reported that prices which farmers receive for their products dropped in the past month by more than 2 percent. At the same time, farm production costs went up nearly 1 percent.

Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court made one of his rare speeches today in his home state of California. For a report on that, we switch to Los Angeles and my colleague, Jack Beck.

BECK: Earl Warren returned to Los Angeles today to dedicate the new Court House in the county of his birth. He returned as the Chief Justice of a Supreme Court, whose rulings during his tenure have been subject to increasing criticism. It has been suggested in some quarters that the Court under Warren has sought to legislate rather than to interpret law. Although criticism of court decisions is as old as Mulberry vs. Madison, it does not befit the custom of the court to indulge in defense of its decisions. So, when Mr. Justice Warren spoke today in dedication of the giant $24 million building, which henceforth is to house the machinery of justice in Los Angeles County, he principally adressed himself to other problems; namely, the inability of our present court system to handle the mountainous volume of litigation now thrust upon it. But, in so doing, the Chief Justice made a point or two which might be construed as having some relevance to the current criticism leveled against the court. Here in part is what he said:

WARREN: The bedrock test of our system is the extent to which our ideals are given concrete reality in the lives of our people, a system of law - however just, which existed only in theory would be a slim reed on which to base our claim that here in America, justice is within the reach of every citizen. It is for this reason that over the entrance to the building of our Supreme Court in Washington, is inscribed the motto: "Equal justice Under Law." This is not a boast, it is an ideal; it is a goal, and it is against this background, that we must view all of our courts - state and federal for the role of the courts is not merely to define the rights, it is also to administer the remedy. Unless the remedy is actually applied to persons and things, the right is a mere plus idea. And, more than that, unless the remedy is applied in seasonable time, it still remains but a delusion.

BECK: That was Mr. Justice Warren speaking in dedication of the new court house in Los Angeles County.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The three atomic powers have met in Geneva to discuss the possible banning of nuclear tests. And the world is watching to see what the outcome will be. The prospects for agreement are not bright. Nations may argue. But the atom is serene. For as Emerson said, "The solar system has no anxiety about its reputation."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Nov. 6, 1958

This is the news:

An artillery duel developed today on the Israeli-Syrian frontier. The shooting was stopped, after two hours, by United Nations military observers. Israel charges, that the shooting began when Syrian troops opened fire with rifles and machineguns on a tractor crew, engaged in the Lake Huleh reclamation project. / The tractor, it says, was operating on territory belonging to Israel. / Israeli police returned the fire. Both sides brought up artillery, and a United Nations spokesman says, there was also some firing from Israeli tanks. / No casualties are reported on either side. The United Arab Republic says an Israeli armored car set off the shooting by penetrating Arab territory. // King Hussein toured the southern part of Jordan today, accompanied by a heavy military escort. The tour included Bethlehem, close to the Israeli border. And in a speech he praised the Jordanian Army for standing fast "against the intrigues of the enemy and the ambitions of adventurers." King Hussein plans to leave Jordan next week on a European vacation, and his trip today was aimed---at least in part---at building up his popularity among the Jordanian people, both Moslem and Christian. He visited the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem and prayed in the mosque at Hebron. He also opened a new hospital.

Premier Kassem of Iraq today issued a declaration pledging his government to a policy of national independence. The declaration came 48 hours after the ~~mmmm~~ arrest of former Deputy Premier Aref, who had advocated union with the United Arab Republic. The charge against Aref is conspiracy against the security of Iraq.

The Geneva conference on discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests, ended its first week today, still undecided on an agenda. Russia wants the conference to take up its proposal for an unconditional, permanent cessation of tests. The United States and Britain want...first...to take up the problem of enforcement. They feel that before a permanent ban, there should be an effective system of control. The British tried to break this deadlock at today's session. They suggested that...as a starter... they all examine "some initial points" dealing with a control system. My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables me from Geneva that the British made the move on the assumption that a de facto suspension of tests already is in effect. No country has exploded a nuclear device since the Geneva talks started a week ago. Also, it seems unlikely for political and propaganda reasons that the truce will be broken while the talks continue. The British reasoning, Kendrick says, is that if a de facto suspension already exists, then the Russian demand for cessation (before taking up the subject of control) already has been met. The British made their proposal after consultation with the United States. We may get the Russian answer when the talks resume tomorrow.

→

In London, the opposition Labour Party tonight issued a statement dealing with the Geneva conference. The statement asks Prime Minister Macmillan's government "to work for an agreement along Soviet lines, provided that the agreement to end testing is conditional on the establishment and effective operation of a control system." The Labour Party would appear to be advocating that steps be taken in two directions at the same time.

President Eisenhower today conferred with Secretary of State Dulles and other government experts, regarding the deadlocked Geneva talks. There are no details, except that the White House will make an announcement on the subject tomorrow---at 9 a.m., Eastern Standard Time.

The Chinese Nationalists unloaded supplies on Quemoy today, unmolested by Communist artillery on the mainland.

Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tze-tung sent a message of greeting to Soviet Premier Khrushchev on the occasion of the 41st anniversary of the Russian revolution. The Chinese people, said Mao, express their "profound thanks" for the support received from Russia "in the struggle against the U.S. imperialists' invasion and occupation of Taiwan."

In Moscow, the anniversary celebration opened today with a lengthy speech by Deputy Premier Mikoyan, in which he claimed that Russia had prevented war in the Formosa Strait. He referred specifically to Russia's warning that an American attack on Communist China would be regarded as an attack on Russia. "This," he said, "acted as a bucket of cold water on the hot-heads among America's military and political leaders." Mikoyan hailed the achievements of Russian science. "Now everyone," he said, "knows the Russian word 'sputnik'."

In this country, the Air Force is hoping early tomorrow to make another probe of the moon. A new improved rocket has been set up at Cape Canaveral. If the launching is successful, a small terminal rocket... carrying 25 pounds of instruments...may reach the vicinity of the moon next Sunday afternoon.

Premier DeGaulle today presented Sir Winston Churchill with one of France's highest awards, the Cross of Companion of the Liberation. There was no trace of the old wartime friction. / DeGaulle paid tribute to Churchill as one who "inspired and directed the resistance of his country, and contributed in a decisive manner to save the liberty of the world." France, DeGaulle said, knows what it owes him. Sir Winston responded by saying that DeGaulle "always would be remembered as the symbol of the soul of France, and of the unbreakable integrity of her spirit in adversity." Churchill spoke in English. He had spoken in French, he said, on occasion during the war...but he saw no reason to subject the French people to such treatment in peacetime. / Today's ceremony in Paris marked the first meeting of the two statesmen in 14 years.

The Cuban airliner that disappeared last night is reported in rebel hands in Eastern Cuba. All 28 persons on board are said to be safe.

Edward R. Murrow: November 6, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The Wall Street Journal this morning said: "There is no use in mincing words. The Republican Party has simply disintegrated, and the wreckage is strewn across three thousand miles of countryside." / From this description, one might gather that the Democrats have nothing to worry about. They have received a national mandate, and all they need to do is legislate. / The opposition has obligingly gone to pieces.

But that is not quite the picture. While it is true that the Republicans were routed, because of the unpopularity of their conservative wing, the Democrats also have wing trouble. / And their conservative wing was not routed, it is just as strong as before. / The Liberals gained enormously, and will insist on putting their stamp on the legislation now to be enacted. / It seems quite possible that the Northern Liberals will now refuse to compromise with Southern Conservatives, for the sake of Party solidarity. Many Northern Democrats believe they can win in 1960 without the South. / If they proceed on that theory, the big Democratic majority in Congress may find itself deadlocked. / For Democratic Conservatives, and Republican Conservatives, still outnumber Democratic Liberals. / And the committee chairmanships remain in Conservative hands. / If the Democrats are to win in 1960, they will have to campaign on the record they now make. They can't compile a record in a deadlock.

Senator Lyndon Johnson, as Senate leader, is reported to be ready with a twelve-point legislative program for the new session. / It is up-to-date and covers a wide range. / It involves spending. / Hearings are to open on some of it right away. It includes relief of depressed areas, security for farmers, labor reform, housing, development of water resources and urban renewal. / Problems of the atomic age are to be tackled, such as the building of a nuclear merchant marine, creating an improved space agency, and developing greater peacetime uses of nuclear energy. / The Senator also proposes to press for a continual review of foreign policy, starting with Latin America.

As reported in the Washington Post, the program simply omits civil rights legislation. / It is stated that Senator Johnson will point out that the Civil Rights Commission has been set up, and that "reasonable men" will want to wait for the recommendations of the Commission. / It also is stated that the Senator feels that the nation is headed for one of the greatest expansions in its history, and that reinforced Democratic majorities will not lose time in divisive, intra-Party quarrels.

Obviously the opposite may be true. The larger the majority, the more likely the intra-Party strife. Every politician knows that a small majority can be held in line by discipline, while large majorities tend to tear themselves to pieces. Senator Johnson's brilliant record as Senate leader has been based on his ability to liberalize Southern Conservatives a little and moderate Northern Radicals a little, all for the good of the Party. That now will become harder, and Senator Johnson's job of ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ compiling a good Party record is less enviable.

This will bear on the Senator's chances of becoming the standard-bearer in 1960. He is not the foremost Democratic aspirant, but he is one of the field. Once he could have claimed credit as a Party harmonizer. If he should manage to harmonize the Party again, the claim will be strengthened.

The victory of Senator Kennedy re-emphasized his importance as a candidate, and at this juncture he has a little better chance for the nomination than anyone else, though it is too early to say how the race will go. Senator Symington also won handsomely, and continues to receive consideration. Governor Mennon Williams, by winning a sixth term in Michigan, stayed in the national picture, though his majority this year fell below that of two years ago. Governor Meyner improved his position by the victory of his man,

Senator-elect Williams, in New Jersey. [A new figure in the field is Pat Brown, who beat Knowland in California. He is now in the category of "the man to watch". He might be called the Democratic counterpart to Nelson Rockefeller in New York, being a new face, having an attractive personality, and winning a big State by a thumping majority.]

It still remains to be seen whether President Eisenhower will try to work with the new Congress. / He said yesterday that he would. / But he also lashed out at the "spenders" who had been elected. / He announced most emphatically that he would fight them. That could mean trouble. / A Democratic Congress bent on expanding the American economy, and an Eisenhower bent on vetoing all heavy spending, could end up in a bitter cold war. / It does not sound like the ideal way for Republicans to rebuild the Party. / But it is what the President seemed to be proposing.

Word for Today

More than ever, the Democrats must now bear the responsibility of leadership in Congress. The historian, Allan Nevins, once observed: "Great leadership and greatness in capacity for popular response are two sides of the same coin. Unless both are firmly stamped, the coin will not pass current."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

An artillery duel developed today on the Israeli-Syrian frontier. The shooting was stopped after two hours by United Nations military observers. Israel charges that the shooting began when Syrian troops opened fire with rifles and machineguns on a tractor crew, engaged in the Lake Huleh reclamation project. The tractor, it says, was operating on territory belonging to Israel. Israeli police returned the fire. Both sides brought up artillery, and a United Nations spokesman says there was also some firing from Israeli tanks. No casualities are reported on either side. The United Arab Republic says an Israeli armored car set off the shooting by penetrating Arab territory.

King Hussein toured the southern part of Jordan today, accompanied by a heavy military escort. The tour included Bethlehem, close to the Israeli border. And in a speech he praised the Jordanian Army for standing fast "against the intrigues of the enemy and the ambitions of adventurers." King Hussein plans to leave Jordan next week on a European vacation, and his trip today was aimed---at least in part---at building up his popularity among the Jordanian people, both Moselm and Christian. He visited the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem and prayed in the mosque at Hebron. He also apened a new hospital.

Premier Kassem of Iraq today issued a declaration pledging his government to a policy of national independence. The declaration came 48 hours after the arrest of former Deputy Premier Aref, who had advocated union with the United Arab Republic. The charge against Aref is conspiracy against the security of Iraq.

The Geneva conference on discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests ended its first week today, still undecided on an agenda. Russia wants the conference to take up its proposal for an unconditional, permanent cessation of tests. The United States and Britain want...first...take up the problem of enforcement. They feel that before a permanent ban, there should be an effective system of control. The British tried to break this deadlock at today's session. They suggested that...as a starter... they all examine "some initial points" dealing with a control system. My colleague, Alexander Kendrick cables me from Geneva that the British made the move on the assumption that a de facto suspension of tests already is in effect. No country has exploded a nuclear device since the Geneva talks started a week ago. Also, it seems unlikely for political and propagnada reasons that the truce will be broken while the talks continue. The British reasoning, Kendrick says, it that if a de facto suspension already exists, then the Russian demand for cessation (before taking up the subject of control) already has been met. The British made their proposal after consultation with the United States. We may get the Russians answer when the talks resume tomorrow.

President Eisenhower today conferred with Secretary of State Dulles and other government experts regarding the deadlocked Geneva talks. There are no details, except that the White House will make an announcement on the subject tomorrow---at 9 A M, Eastern Standard Time.

The Chinese Nationalists unloaded supplies on Quemoy today, unmolested by Communist artillery on the mainland.

Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tze-tung sent a message of greeting to Soviet Premier Khrushchev on the occasion of the 41st anniversary of the Russian revolution. The Chinese people, said Mao, express their "profound thanks" for the support received from Russia "in the struggle against the U.S. imperialists' invasion and occupation of Taiwan."

In Moscow, the anniversary celebration opened today with a lengthy speech by Deputy Premier Mikoyan in which he claimed that Russia had prevented war in the Formosa Strait. He referred specifically to Russia's warning that an American attack on Communist China would be regarded as an attack on Russia. "This," he said, "acted as a bucket of cold water on the hot-heads among Americans military and political leaders." Mikoyan hailed the achievements of Russian science. "Now everyone," he said, "knows the Russian word 'sputnik.'"

In this country, the Air Force is hoping early tomorrow to make another probe of the moon. A new improved rocket has been set up at Cape Canaveral. If the launching is successful, a small terminal rocket...carrying 25 pounds of instruments...may reach the vicinity of the moon next Sunday afternoon.

Premier DeGaulle today presented Sir Winston Churchill with one of France's highest awards, the Cross of Companion of the Liberation. There was no trace of the old wartime friction. DeGaulle paid tribute to Churchill as one who "inspired and directed the resistance of his country and contributed in a decisive manner to save the liberty of the world." France, DeGaulle said, knows what it owes him. Sir Winston responded by saying that DeGaulle "always would be remembered as the symbol of the soul of Fracce and of the unbreakable integrity of her spirit in adversity." Churchill spoke in English. He has spoken in French, he said, on occasion during the war...but he saw no reason to subject the French people to such treatment in peacetime. Today's ceremony in Paris marked the first meeting of the two statesmen in 14 years.

The Cuban airliner that disappeared last night is reported in rebel hands in Eastern Cuba. All 28 persons on board are said to be safe.

The Wall Street Journal this morning said: "There is no use in mincing words. The Republican Party has simply disintegrated, and the wreckage is strewn across three thousand miles of countryside."From this description, one might gather that the Democrats have nothing to worry about. They have received a national mandate, and all they need to do is legislate. The opposition has obligingly gone to pieces.

But that is not quite the picture. While it is true that the Republicans were routed because of the unpopularity of their conservative wing, the Democrats also have wing trouble. And their conservative wing was not routed it is just as strong as before. The Liberals gained enormously and will insist on putting their stamp on legislation now to be enacted. It seems quite possible that the Northern Liberals will now refuse to compromise with Southern Conservatives for the sake of Party solidarity. Many Northern Democrats believe they can win in 1960 without the South. If they proceed on that theory, the big Democratic majority in Congress may find itself deadlocked. For Democratic Conservatives and Republican Conservatives still outnumber Democratic Liberals. And the committee chairmanships remain in Conservative hands. If the Democrats are to win in 1960, they will have to campaign on the record they now make. They can't compile a record in a deadlock.

Senator Lyndon Johnson, as Senate leader, is reported to be ready with a twelve-point legislative program for the new session. It is up-to-date and covers a wide range. It involves spending. Hearings are to open on some of it right away. It includes relief of depressed areas, security for farmers, labor reform, housing, development of water resources and urban renewal. Problems of the atomic age are to be tackled, such as the building of a nuclear mechant marine, creating an improved space agency, and developing greater peacetime uses of nuclear energy. The Senator also proposes to press for a continual review of foreign policy, starting with Latin America.

As reported in the Washington Post, the program simply omits civil rights legislation. It is stated that Senator Johnson will point out that the Civil Rights Commission has been set up, and that "reasonable men" will want to wait for the recommendations of the Commission. It also is stated that the Senator feels that the nation is headed for one of the greatest expansions in its history, and that reinforced Democratic majorities will not lose time in divisive, intra-Party quarrels.

Obviously the opposite may be true. The larger the majority, the more likely the intra-party strife. Every politician knows that a small majority can be held in line by discipline, while large majorities tend to tear themselves to pieces. Senator Johnson's brilliant record as Senate leader has been based on his ability to liberalize Southern Conservatives a little nnd moderate Northern Radicals a little, all for the good of the Party. That now will become harder, and Senator Johnson's job of compiling a good Party record is less enviable.

This will bear on the Senator's chances of becoming the standard-bearer in 1960. He is not the foremost Democratic aspirant, but he is one of the field. Once he could have claimed credit as a Party harmonizer. If he should manage to harmonize the Party again, the claim will be strengthened.

The victory of Senator Kennedy re-emphasized his importance as a candidate, and at this juncture he has a little better chance for the nomination than anyone else, though it is too early to say how the race will go. Senator Symington also won handsomely, and continues to receive consideration. Governor Mennon Williams, by winning a sixth term in Michigan, stayed in the national picture, though his majority this year fell tolow that of two years ago. Governor Meyner improved his position by the victory of his man, Senator-elect Williams, in New Jersey. A new figure in the field is Pat Brown, who beat Knowland in California. He is now in the category of "the man to watch." He might be called the Democratic counterpart to Nelson Rockefeller in New York, being a new face, having an attractive personality, and wiining a big state by a thumping majority.

It still remains to be seen whether President Eisenhower will try to work with the new Congress. He said yesterday that he would. But he also lashed out at the "spenders" who had been elected. He announced most emphatically that he would fight them. That could mean trouble. A Democratic Congress bent on expanding the American economy, and an Eisenhower bent on vetoing all heavy spending, could end up in a bitter cold war. It does not sound like the ideal way for Republicans to rebuild the Party. But it is what the President seemed to be proposing.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: "More than ever, the Democrats must now bear the responsibility of leadership in Congress. The historian Allan Nevins, once observed: "Great leadership and greatness in capacity for popular response are two sides of the same coin. Unless both are firmly stamped, the coin will not pass current."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 7, 1958

This is the news:

The Atomic Energy Commission today announced the detection of two more Russian nuclear weapons tests. The tests were conducted after the start of the Geneva talks on October 31...when the United States and Britain suspended their tests for one year on a provisional basis. The provision was that Russia also would suspend testing and that progress be made toward setting up a control system. The Atomic Energy Commission said the first of the new Soviet tests was carried out last Saturday, the other on Monday. Both explosions were of "relatively low yield" and they occurred in the southern part of Russia---not above the Arctic Circle, where most Soviet tests have been held in recent weeks. | President Eisenhower also issued a statement. "This action by the Soviet Union," he said, "relieves the United States from any obligation under its offer to suspend nuclear weapons tests." / The President said that the United States, nevertheless, will continue suspension of such tests "for the time being." / And he expressed hope Russia will do the same. "If there is not shortly a corresponding renunciation by the Soviet Union," he said, "then the United States will be obliged to reconsider its position."

In London, the British government announced that it, too, had picked up evidence of the Soviet tests. / Foreign Secretary Lloyd...like President Eisenhower...said that Britain will hold no further tests for the present, but will work for agreement at Geneva, on a controlled system for ending nuclear weapons tests. (In a few minutes, we shall be switching to Geneva for a direct report).

Secretary of State Dulles...at a news conference this afternoon... declined to say how long the United States will continue its test suspension. It depends, he said, on the kind of tests we want to make, on what progress is being made in Geneva, and on whether the Russians have now completed their series of tests. ~~when~~ Mr. Dulles spoke with the most studied restraint.

→

He said Russia was under no "legal" obligation to refrain from testing, but that if it continues to TEST it faces world-wide condemnation. The United States, he said, told Russia last Tuesday that it had detected the tests and waited three days for some kind of Russian explanation. Dulles told the reporters he was not discouraged. It was true that the western powers and Russia were moving toward a solution of disarmament problems "at a snail's pace." But the fact remains, he said, that now for the first time we are getting down to "brass tacks".

Moscow radio claimed tonight that the United States was preparing to resume testing "regardless of its promise." President Eisenhower, it said, is trying "to reduce the impression made on world public opinion by the Soviet Union's proposal that all nuclear weapons tests be stopped immediately for all time."

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today that the time is "not distant" when the Russian people will enjoy the highest standard of living in the world. Khrushchev made his prediction in connection with the 41st anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution. The "reality" of Russia and Communist China, he said, must be recognized. Khrushchev commented on this week's congressional election, claiming that the results constituted a repudiation of Eisenhower-Dulles policy.

Mr. Dulles said today that he was not aware that foreign policy played any "particular part" in the outcome. He expressed confidence that he would be able to work with the Democratic-controlled Congress. He was sure President Eisenhower would recommend an "adequate" foreign aid program to Congress, in spite of the President's determination to cut down government costs.

The executive council of the A.F.L. - C.I.O. served notice today that one of its legislative demands will be a 25-cent-an-hour increase in the minimum wage. The present minimum wage law calls for payment of at least one dollar an hour.

President Eisenhower today conferred with his budget director, Maurice Stans, and then took off for Ohio...where he is stppping over on his way to Seattle, Washington, to speak to the Colombo meeting for the economic development of Southeast Asia. He will make that speech on Monday. This afternoon, and the early part of tomorrow, is being spent in Ohio, duck hunting with former Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey.

Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler predicted today that the Democratic Party will win in 1960 only if it takes "a most forthright and positive stand in the area of human rights." Democrats won last Tuesday, he believes, primarily because of a revolt against President Eisenhower's economic policies. He cited Mr. Eisenhower's veto of the depressed areas bill.

The Treasury Department today announced that...next week...it will sell 3-billion dollars' worth of tax anticipation bills to raise new cash. The additional money is needed to operate the government for the rest of the calendar year.

Today...in Warsaw...the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors resumed their talks aimed at reducing tension in the Formosa Strait. It was their first meeting in two weeks. After conferring for an hour and 45 minutes, another meeting was scheduled for November 25.

Now for a direct report on the talks in progress in Geneva, here is my colleague Alexander Kendrick.

(Tape runs 5:15
Ends on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was Alexander Kendrick, reporting from Geneva.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The talks in Geneva involve nothing less than life and death. The implement by which Man could commit universal suicide is his own invention. Thomas Edison foresaw this day when he said, "There will one day spring from the brain of science a machine, or force, so fearful that even Man, the fighter, who will dare torture and death, will be appalled."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, November 7, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... now, for a direct report on the talks in progress in Geneva, here is my colleague Alexander Kendrick.

KENDRICK: Whatever affect the two latest Soviet nuclear explosions will have on the Geneva conference on the discontinuance of nuclear explosions, will be a delayed effect though probably not as delayed as radiation. The Russians were handed a copy of the Atomic Energy Commission and White House statements at this afternoon's session by American delegate James Wadsworth, but, when he emerged from behind the locked doors, Soviet delegateSemyon Tsarapkin said he had never heard of it. Presumably, neither side was surprised by the two Russian blasts, for today's communique for the first time and somewhat belatedly, discloses that Last Monday, Mr. Tsarapkin apparently warned the Western delegates to get ready for a big bang. At Anyrate, he made a conference document out of a Soviet statement opposing the General Assembly resolution which called for a suspension of testing - at least during this conference. Two reasons are advanced at the Palace of Nations tonight for the Soviet action in setting off new explosions barely after the beginning of a conference at which they have time and time again demanded the immediate and permanant cessation of all testing. The more obvious reason is that the Russians want their kind of cessation, that is, without supervision or controls or else, no cessation at all. Although they run the risk of making bad propaganda in the country's they want to impress the most, they have, therefore, continued testing and will continue testing until the West cries "Quits," this is like the story of the wind blowing and blowing in order to make the traveler take off his cloak, but it is one line of reasoning here. The other line has to do not with cessation of testing but with the real reason for this conference the establishment of an international inspection and control system. For the Russians have said over and over while paying lip service to the idea of a control system, that since all nuclear tests can be detected, there is no need for a control system. The most significant thing about the Atomic Energy Commission's announcement is that the lasttwo Soviet tests were of relatively low yield and that they took place in the southern partof the USSR instead of in the Arctic. Now, if these tests were of really low yield, that is, from one to five kilotons in level, and if they tohk place at an unfamiliar site and yet, were detected by existing means, then that seems to prove the Soviet point. For last summer's conference of East-West experts decided that a control system was needed only for blasts in the one to five kiloton range. It is not known here yet just how low the yield was, but there seems to be no doubt that the Russians could use these last two explosions of theirs to suppwrt the argument that no control system is needed. But, since the West will not accept suspension without a control system, then, any failure to come to an agreement here will be presented not as a Soviet but as a Western failure. Whichever of these two effects the Russians are aiming for and it could be both of them, it would not seem to improve the prospects of this Geneva Conference. But, whatever decisions are made will as usual be made in Washington and Moscow and not here. For the record, this conference this afternoon received the official word on the XSoviet action and the White House reaction and then agreed to meet again on Monday, all that can be said is that the week long argument about the agenda seems to be an increasingly academic one. Meanwhile tonight, Geneva is preparing for another East-West conference on a nuclear subject opening Monday and this one promises to be somewhat more intriguing. For military men and defense experts from both sides of the Iron Curtain - five countries from the NATO Alliance, frive from the Warsaw Pact, will talk about missiles, anti-missiles missiles, underwater launching methods, nuclear artillery and perhaps even space platforms as they consider the question of surprise attack and methods of lessening that hazard. This is an experts conference like the last successful one in Geneva and it's not suppose to arrive at political decisions or sign treaties, just to examine the technology of surprise attack. Both sides obviousely regard this as an opportunity for some useful intelligence reconnaissance and although the official large delegations consist of top military brass and civilian advisors, quite a sizeable unofficial contingent has also descended on the tranquil city of Calvin. Cloak and dagger types that used to frequent Vienna, Munich and Istahbul,"now, where have I seen that face before?" are lounging about in hotel lobbies and bars and since they are here, they evidently expect their opposite numbers from the other side of the Iron Curtain will also be here. As for the Generals, Admirals and Air Marshalls, the standing joke here tonight is that both this years Army-Navy game and this years Spartag-Domino game will be played in Geneva.

Now, back to ED Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alexander Kendrick reporting from Geneva.

FT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Atomic Energy Commission today announced the detection of two more Russian nuclear weapons tests. The tests were conducted after the start of the Geneva talks on October 31, when the United States and Britain suspended their tests for one year on a provisional basis. The provision was that Russia also would suspend testing and that progress be made toward setting up a control system. The Atomic Energy Commission said the first of the new Soviet tests was carried out last Saturday, the other on Monday. Both explosions were of "relatively low yield" and they occurred in the southern part of Russia---not above the Arctic Circle, where most Soviet tests have been held in recent weeks. President Eisenhower also issued a statement. "This action by the Soviet Union," he said, "relieves the United States from any obligation under its offer to suspend nuclear weapons tests." The President said that the United States, nevertheless, will continue suspension of such tests "for the time being." And he expressed hope Russia will do the same. "If there is not shortly a corresponding renunciation by the Soviet Union," he said, "then the United States will be obliged to reconsider its position."

In London, the British government announced that it, too, had picked up evidence of the Soviet tests. Foreign Secretary Lloyd...like President Eisenhower...said that Britain will hold no furhher tests for the present but will work for agreement at Geneva on a controlled system for ending nuclear weapons tests. (In a few minutes, we shall be switching to Geneva for a direct report.)

Secretary of State Dulles...at a news conference this afternoon... declined to say how long the United States will continue its test suspension. It depends, he said, on the kind of tests we want to make, on what progress is being made in Geneva, and on whether the Russians have now completed their series of tests. Mr. Dulles spoke with the most studied restraint. He said Russia was under no "legal" obligation to refrain from testing, but that if it continues to test, it faces world-wide condemnation. The United States, he said, told Russia last Tuesday that it had detected the tests and waited three days for some kind of Russian explanation. Dulles told the reporters he was not discouraged. It was true that the western powers and Russia were moving toward a solution of disarmament problems "at a snail's pace." But the fact remains, he said, that now for the first time we are getting down to "brass tacks."

Moscow radio claimed tonight that the United States was preparing to resume testing "regardless of its promise." President Eisenhower, it said, is trying "to reduce the impression made on world public opinion by the Soviet Union's proposal that all nuclear weapons tests be stopped immediately for all time."

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today that the time is "not distant" when the Russian people will enjoy the highest standard of living in the world. Khrushchev made his prediction in connection with the 41st anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution. The "reality" of Russia and Communist China, he said, must be recognized. Khrushchev commented on this week's congressional election claiming that the results constituted a repudiation of Eisenhower-Dulles policy.

Mr. Dulles said today that he was not aware that foreign policy played any "particular part" in the outcome. He expressed confidence that he would be able to work with the Democratic-controlled Congress. He was sure President Eisenhower would recommend an "adequate" foreign aid program to Congress, in spite of the President's determination to cut down government costs.

The executive council of the A.F.L. - C.I.O. served notice today that one of its legislative demands will be a 25 cent an hour increase in the minimum wage. The present minimum wage law calls for payment of at least one dollar an hour.

President Eisenhower today conferred with his budget director, Maurice Stans, and then took off for Ohio...where he is stopping over on his way to Seattle, Washington, to speak to the Colombo meeting for the economic development of Southeast Asia. He will make that speech on Monday. This afternoon and the early part of tomorrow is being spent in Ohio, duck hunting with former Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey.

Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler predicted today that the Democratic Party will win in 1960 only if it takes "a most forthright and positive stand in the area of human rights." Democrats won last Tuesday, he believes, primarily because of a revolt against President Eisenhower's economic policies. He cited Mr. Eisenhower's veto of the depressed areas bill.

The Treasury Department today announced that...next week...it will sell 3-billion dollars' worth of tax anticipation bills to raise new cash. The additional money is needed to operate the government for the rest of the calendar year.

Today in Warsaw...the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors resumed their talks aimed at reducing tension in the Formosa Strait. It was their first meeting in two weeks. After conferring for an hour and 45 minutes, another meeting was scheduled for November 25th.

Now for a direct report on the talks in progress in Geneva, here is my colleague Alexander Kendrick.

KENDRICK: Whatever effect the two latest Soviet nuclear explosions will have on the Geneva conference on the discontinuance of nuclear explosions, will be a delayed effect though probably not as delayed as radiation. The Russians were handed a copy of the Atomic Energy Commission and White House statements at this afternoon's session by American delegate James Wadsworth, but, when he emerged from behind the locked doors, Soviet delegate Semyon Tsarapkin said he had never heard of it. Presumably, neither side was surprised by the two Russian blasts, for today's communique for the first time and somewhat belatedly, discloses that last Monday, Mr. Tsarapkin apparently warned the Western delegates to get ready for a big bang. At any rate, he made a conference document out of a Soviet statement opposing the General Assembly resolution which called for a suspension of testing - at least during this conference. Two reasons are advanced at the Palace of Nations tonight for the Soviet action in setting off new explosions barely after the beginning of a conference at which they have time and time again demanded the immediate and permanent cessation of all testing. The more obvious reason is that the Russians want their kind of cessation, that is, without supervison or controls or else, no cessation at all. Although they run the risk of making bad propaganda in the countries they want to impress the most, they have, therefore, continued testing and will continue testing until the West cries "Quits." This is like the story of the wind blowing and blowing in order to make the traveler take off his cloak, but it is one line of reasoning here. The other line has to do not with cessation of testing but with the real reason for this conference, the establishment of an international inspection and control system. For the Russians have said over and over while paying lip service to the idea of a control system, that since all nuclear tests can be detected, there is no need for a control system. The most significant thing about the Atomic Energy Commission's announcement is that the last two Soviet tests were of relatively low yield and that they took place in the southern part of the USSR instead of in the Arctic. Now, if these tests were of really low yield, that is, from one to five kilotons in level, and if they took place at an unfamiliar site and yet, were detected by exisiting means, then that seems to prove the Soviet point. For last summer's conference of East-West experts decided that a control system was needed only for blasts in the one to five kiloton range. It is not known here yet just how low the yield was, but there seems to be no doubt that the Russians could use these last two explosions of theirs to support the argument that no control system is needed. But since the West will not accept suspension without a control system, then any failure to come to an agreement here will be presented not as a Soviet but as a Western failure. Whichever of these two effects the Russians are aiming for and it could be both of them, it would not seem to improve the prospects of this Geneva Conference. But, whatever decisions are made will as usual be made in Washington and Moscow and not here. For the record, this conference this afternoon received the official word on the Soviet action and the White House reaction and then agreed to meet again on Monday. All that can be said is that the week long argument about the agenda seems to be an increasingly academic one. Meanwhile tonight, Geneva is preparing for another East-West conference on a nuclear subject opening Monday and this one promises to be somewhat more intriguing. For military men and defense experts from both sides of the Iron Curtain - five countries from the NATO Alliance, five from the Warsaw Pact, will talk about missiles, anti-missiles missiles, underwater launching methods, nuclear artillery and perhaps even space platforms as they consider the question of surprise attack and methods of lessening that hazard. This is an expert's conference like the last successful one in Geneva and it's not supposed to arrive at political decisions or sign treaties, just to examine the technology of surprise attack. Both sides obviously regard this as an opportunity for some useful intelligence reconnaissance and although the official large delegations consist of top military brass and civilian advisors, quite a sizeable unofficial contingent has also descended on the tranquil city of Calvin. Cloak and dagger types that used to frequent Vienna, Munich and Istanbul, "Now, where have I seen that face before?" are lounging about in hotel lobbies and bars and since they are here, they evidently expect their opposite numbers from the other side of the Iron curtain will also be here. As for the Generals, Admirals and Air Marshals, the standing joke here tonight is that both this year's Army-Navy game and this year's Spartag-Domino game will be played in Geneva.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Alexander Kendrick, reporting from Geneva.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The talks in Geneva involve nothing less than life and death. The implement by which Man could commit universal suicide is his own invention. Thomas Edison foresaw this day when he said, "There will one day spring from the brain of science a machine, or force, so fearful that even Man, the fighter, who will dare torture and death, will be appalled."

Goodnight and good luck!

This is the news:

King Hussein today charged that the airplane in which he was a passenger was attacked by jet fighters belonging to the United Arab Republic. The "attack" occurred over Syrian territory as the king was leaving Jordan for a vacation in Europe. Hussein flew back to his capital, Amman, and broadcast an account of the incident over the Jordan radio. He said that on reaching the Syrian border, his pilot immediately established contact with the control tower in Damascus, capital of Syria, "in accordance with customary usages." They received permission, he said, to proceed. But about 15 miles from Damascus, they were told that their flight was unauthorized and that they must land. Instead, they turned around and headed for Amman. Hussein said that before reaching the Jordanian frontier, they were overtaken by two jet fighters...and that the fighter aircraft made six passes "each time opening fire." After his broadcast, the king held an emergency meeting with his cabinet. His plans for a holiday are cancelled. And tomorrow the Jordanian Parliament will meet in special session to deal with what Hussein called "this flagrant attack."

The United Arab Republic denies that an attack was made on King Hussein's private airplane. It claims that Hussein did not clear his flight plans through Damascus...and that the fighter planes merely "escorted" the young monarch until he left Syrian air space.

A military tribunal in Iraq today sentenced to death three former leaders of the government that was overthrown last July. Three other defendants were sentenced to prison terms...ranging from five years to life. Among the three condemned to death is former Premier Jamali, who also once served as chief Iraqi delegate to the United Nations.

The Iranian foreign minister today announced that his country will sign a defense agreement with the United States. The agreement will include economic cooperation. The foreign minister stressed the defensive nature of the agreement. Last month, Russia warned Iran against making such a move, claiming that it would "directly endanger the southern frontiers of the U.S.S.R." / In Washington, the State Department confirms that the United States is negotiating a new defense agreement with Iran, under the Baghdad Pact. / It points out that this will not be a treaty, but rather an arrangement, made within the executive authority of the President. Senate ratification will not be required.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today called for an end to four-power control of Berlin. The United States, Britain and France, he said, have turned Berlin into "a kind of state within a state." He thought it would be "proper" for Russia to turn its control functions over to the Communist government of East Germany. / And, he said, let the Western powers "follow suit". Khrushchev accused the West of "doing everything" to aid the growth of German militarism. / Militarists in West Germany, he said, represent a grave danger. / And he warned that any attack on East Germany, would be regarded as an attack on Russia itself. Khrushchev spoke in Moscow, at a meeting honoring Polish Communist Party Leader Gomulka.

The East-West conference on means of preventing surprise attack opened in Geneva today on a note of recrimination. Russia's first deputy foreign minister, Kuznetsov, accused the West of pursuing "a pernicious policy." He made sweeping demands for the complete prohibition of nuclear weapons and the liquidation of all military bases on foreign soil. The opening statement by William Foster, head of the American delegation, was non-political. "We are meeting here," he said, "as experts to discuss technical matters." And he suggested as a proper subject for discussion, the techniques by which ~~them~~ instruments of surprise attack may be detected. After these remarks, the delegates met behind closed doors.

—7

President Eisenhower today outlined a long-term economic assistance program for Free Asia. Mr. Eisenhower made his proposals at the conference of 18 Colombo Plan countries in Seattle. For the economic improvement of these countries, he called for expansion of international trade, wider sharing of technical skills, more private investment, and greater provision for public loans as already extended by the World Bank. [~~Mr. Eisenhower noted that the bank had agreed to consider an increase in its capital subscriptions. And he recommended an expansion of financing under the Development Loan Fund created by Congress last year.~~] He said he would ask the new Congress for additional "adequate" resources but mentioned no specific amount.

The Nobel peace prize was awarded today to a Belgian priest for his work in resettling refugees. The recipient, Father Georges Pire, (PEER roll "r") said the prize money of about 41-thousand dollars will go into his resettlement work.

There was a major ruling today in the Little Rock school integration case. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals...in St. Louis...directed the Little Rock School Board to take "affirmative steps" to achieve integration "in accordance with the court's prior orders." It also enjoined the School Board from leasing property for the operation of private, segregated schools. The Supreme Court, it said, already has made it clear that the rights of Negro children cannot be nullified "through evasive schemes for segregation." And it said that in entering into a lease agreement with the private school corporation, the school board was "simply yielding to local desire or clamor and to the importuning of the governor." [~~Some private~~ segregated high school classes are being held in Little Rock...but not on school property. ~~The classes are being financed by private donations.~~]

Legal counsel for the Federal Communications Commission made [redacted] recommendations today in the controversial case over the awarding of Channel 10 in Miami. A brief...filed by Edgar Holtz, associate general counsel... [redacted] recommended that the grant of the channel to Public Service Television, Incorporated, be set aside. It also described three of the four applicants as "adsolutely disqualified." This would leave only one of the original applicants in the [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: November 10, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

King Hussein of Jordan is twenty-three. Probably no young man in the world happens to have as much political importance. He can claim no achievements to justify such importance, other than that he has long lived in constant danger of assassination and has shown no end of courage. But bravery is not a substitute for political ability. Hussein is no statesman, nor even an outstanding politician. He is a hapless young Arab monarch. Most of his people do not want him. But because everybody wants the land that he governs, the absence of war in the Middle East depends to some extent and for the moment on his continuing to govern it.

When King Hussein announced that he would leave his country today for Switzerland, the Middle East went into a state of high tension. So did many of the world's Foreign Offices. His departure was to be a test. A great deal could happen. Hussein might be deposed. Maybe he was going away gladly, knowing he would never come back. Maybe Nasser would seize the opportunity to seize Jordan, which he needs if he is to make progress in setting up a true Arab Federation. But if he moved, Israel was expected to occupy at once the country up to the West bank of the Jordan. That would mean war between Israel and the United Arab Republic. Such a war might bring Soviet volunteers to the side of Nasser, and that might touch off fighting involving the Western Powers, and turn into the catastrophe that lies behind all the conflicts between East and West.

Then again nothing might happen. Dag Hammarskjold had set up United Nations representatives in Cairo and Amman to watch over the fulfilment of the pledge to the United Nations of the Arab countries to respect each other's governments and territory. Certainly Nasser was going through the motions of living up to the U.N. resolution. He had piped down on hostile broadcasting and had officially opened communications between the United Arab Republic and Jordan.

There might also be trouble from Iraq. This country was federated with Jordan until the assassination of King Feisal, and might now try to restore the Federation. Or elements inside Jordan which do not want Nasser might seize control and insist on federation with Iraq. But this threat seemed unlikely for the reason that General Kassem has his hands full right now trying to purge from the Iraq Army the elements friendly to Nasser led by Colonel Aref, once his right-hand man.

King Hussein announced his trip to Switzerland just after the British troops that had flown in during the Lebanese and Iraqi crisis had been withdrawn. Their withdrawal was part of the United Nations achievement in restoring so-called normal conditions in the region. Hussein apparently thought he could bank on a brief spell of stability. He had his army in hand, and seemed to think Nasser would not move now. It has been reported that he has romantic reasons for going to Switzerland, and this probably is so.

The one disquieting note in the days before his departure was a shrill warning from Arab propaganda centers of a coming Israeli aggression against Jordan. This could be explained as preparing the ground for United Arab Federation action against Jordan, which then would be justified to the world as a counter-move to the Israeli initiative. Those close to Ben Gurion were sure he would not be the one to move first, but were also sure he would pounce if Nasser moved.

There is an obvious lesson in the Jordan crisis, a lesson for everyone concerned. For the United States it is a kind of last warning that we cannot go on indefinitely maintaining a King in Jordan whom the country doesn't want, even though it is better all around that he should be there now. It is a lesson to Jordan's Arab neighbors that Jordan cannot survive by itself and ultimately has to be received into some kind of Federal Union. Failure to do this harmoniously would leave the most dangerous hostility within the Arab world. It is a lesson for Israel that if Arabs fall out over Jordan, Israel's future may be even more in jeopardy than if Arabs finally learn to work together. [That is, there must be a regional settlement, including all those affected, if there is to be peace and economic development.

Hussein is important because no such regional settlement is in sight. He happens to be better than chaos. [And others who do not want chaos are keeping him in. It is not a flattering destiny for a youth of twenty-three. True, he has the glittering compensations of being a King. But at best these will not last much longer.]

Word for Today

King Hussein...at the age of 23...finds himself in the center of an international storm. And it has happened, not because of anything he has done, but simply by his being [redacted] there. Horace wrote 2-thousand years ago, "Fate with impartial hand turns out the doom of high and low. Her capacious urn is shaking out the names of all mankind."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

King Hussein today charged that the airplane in which he was a passenger was attacked by jet fighters belonging to the United Arab Republic. The "attack" occurred over Syrian territory as the king was leaving Jordan for a vacation in Europe. Hussein flew back to his capital, Amman, and broadcast an account of the incident over the Jordan radio. He said that on reaching the Syrian border, his pilot immediately established contact with the control tower in Damascus, capital of Syria, "in accordance with customary usages." They received permission, he said, to proceed. But about 15 miles from Damascus, they were told that their flight was unauthorized and that they must land. Instead, they turned around and headed for Amman. Hussein said that before reaching the Jordanian frontier, they were overtaken by two jet fighters...and that the fighter aircraft made six passes "each time opening fire." After his broadcast, the king held an emergency meeting with his cabinet. His plans for a holiday are cancelled. And tomorrow the Jordanian Parliament will meet in special session to deal with what Hussein caleed "this flagrant attack."

The United Arab Republic denies that an attack was made on King Hussein's private airplane. It claims that Hussein did not clear his flight plans through Damascus...and that the fighter planes merely "escorted" the young monarch until he left Syrian air space.

A military tribunal in Iraq today sentenced to death three former leaders of the government that was overthrown last July. Three other defendants were sentenced to prison terms...ranging from five years to life. Among the three condemned to death is former Premier Jamali, who also once served as chief Iraqi delegate to the United Nations.

The Iranian foreign minister today announced that his country will sign a defense agreement with the United States. The agreement will include economic cooperation. The foreign minister stressed the defensive nature of the agreement. Last month, Russia warned Iran against making such a move, claiming that it would "directly endanger the southern frontiers of the U.S.S.R." In Washington, the State Department confirms that the United States is negotiating a new defense agreement with Iran, under the Baghdad Pact. It points out that this will not be a treaty but rather an arrangement made within the executive authority of the President. Senate ratification will not be required.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today called for an end to four-power control of Berlin. The United States, Britain and France, he said, have turned Berlin into "a kind of state within a state." He thought it would be proper for Russia to turn its control functions over to the Communist government of East Germany. And, he said, let the Western powers "follow suit." Khrushchev accused the West of "doing everything" to aid the growth of Gemman militarism. Militarists in West Germany, he said, represent a grave danger. And he warned that any attack on East Germany would be regarded as an attack on Russia itself. Khrushchev spoke in Moscow, at a meeting honoring Polish Communist Leader Gomulka.

The East-West conference on means of preventing surprise attack opened in Geneva today on a note of recrimination. Russia's first deputy foreign minister, Kuznetsov, accused the West of pursuing "a pernicious policy." He made sweeping demands for the complete prohibition of nuclear weapons and the liquidation of all military bases on foreign soil. The opening statement by William Foster, head of the American delegation, was non-political. "We are meeting here," he said, "as experts to discuss technical metters." And he suggested as a proper subject for discussion, the techniques by which instruments of surprise attack may be detected. After these remarks, the delegates met behind closed doors.

President Eisenhower today outlined a long-term economic assistance program for Free Asia. Mr. Eisenhower made his proposals at the conference of 18 Colombo Plan countries in Seattle. For the economic improvement of these countries, he called for expansion of international trade, wider sharing of technical skills, more private investment, and greater provision for public loans as already extended by the World Bank. He said he would ask the new Congress for additional "adequate" resources but mentioned no specific amount.

The Nobel peace prize was awarded today to a Belgian priest for his work in resettling refugees. The recipient, Father Georges Pire said the prize money of about 41-thousand dollars will go into his resettlement work.

There was a major ruling today in the Little Rock school integration case. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals...in St. Louis...directed the Little Rock School Board to take "affirmative steps" to achieve integration "in accordance with the cuurt's prior orders." It also enjoined the School Board from leasing property for the operation of private, segregated schools. The Supreme Court, it said, already has made it clear that the rights of Negro children cannot be nullified "through evasive schemes for segregation." And it said, that in entering into a lease agreement with the private school corporation, the school board was "simply yielding to local desire or clamor and to the importuning of the governor."

Legal counsel for the Federal Communications Commission made recommendations today in the controversial case over the awarding of Channel 10 in Miami. A brief...filed by Edgar Holtz, associate general counsel...recommended that the grant of the channel to Public Service Television, Incorporated, be set aside. It also described three of the four applicants as "absolutely disqualified."

King Hussein of Jordan is twenty-three. Probably no young man in the world happens to have as much political importance. He can claim no achievements to justify such importance , other than that he has long lived in constant danger of assassination and has shown no end of courage. But bravery is not a substitute for political ability. Hussein is no statesman, nor even an outstanding politician He is a hapless young Arab monarch. Most of his people do not want him. But because everybody wants the land that he governs, the absence of war in the Middle East depends to some extent and for the moment on his continuing to govern it.

When King Hussein announced that he would leave his country today for Switzerland, the Middle East went into a state of high tension. So did many of the World's Foreign Offices. His departure was to be a test. A great deal could happen. Hussein might be deposed. Maybe he was going away gladly, knowing he would never come back. Maybe Nasser would seize the opportunity to seize Jordan, which he needs if he is to make progress in setting up a true Arab Federation. But if he moved, Israel was expected to occupy at once the country up to the west bank of the Jordan. That would mean war between Israel and the United Arab Republic. Such a war might bring Soviet volunteers to the side of Nasser, and that might touch off fighting involving the Western Powers, and turn into the catastrophe that lies behind all the conflicts between East and West.

Then again nothing might happen. Dag Hammarksjold had set up United Nations representatives in Cairo and Amman to watch over the fulfillment of the pledge to the United Nations of the Arab countries to respect each other's governments and territory. Certainly Nasser was going thoughh the motions of living up to the U.N. resolution. He had piped down on hostile broadcasting and had officially opened communications between the United Arab Republic and Jordan.

There might also be trouble from Iraq. This country was federated with Jordan until the assassination of King Feisal, and might now try to restore the Federation. Or elements inside Jordan which do not want Nasser might seize control and insist on federation with Iraq. But this threat seemed unlikely for the reason that General Kassem has his hands full right now trying to purge from the Iraq Army the elements friendly to Nasser led by Colonel Aref, once his right-hand man.

King Hussein announced his trip to Switzerland just after the British troops that had flown in during the Lebanese and Iraqi crisis had been withdrawn. Their withdrawal was part of the United Nations achievement in restoring so-called normal conditions in the region. Hussein apparently thought he could bank on a brief spell of stability. He had his army in hand, and seemed to think Nasser would not move now. It has been reported that he has romantic reasons for going to Switzerland, and this probably is so.

The one disquieting note in the days before his departure was a shrill warning from Arab propaganda centers of a coming Israeli aggression against Jordan. This could be explained as preparing the ground for United Arab Federation action against Jordan, which then would be justified to the world as a counter-move to the Israeli initiative. Those close to Ben Gurion were sure he would not be the one to move first, but were also sure he would pounce if Nasser moved.

There is an obvious lesson in the Jordan crisis, a lesson for everyone concerned. For the United States it is a kind of last warning that we cannot go on indefinitely maintaining a King in Jordan whom the country doesn't want, even though it is better all around that he should be there now. It is a lesson to Jordan's Arab neighbors that Jordan cannot survive by itself and ultimately has to be received into some kind of Federal Union. Failure to do this harmoniously would leave the most dangerous hostility within the Arab world. It is a lesson for Israel that if Arabs fall out over Jordan, Israel's future may be even more in jeopardy than if Arabs finally learn to work together. That is, there must be a regional settlement, including all those affected, ff there is to be peace and economic development.

Hussein is important because no such regional settlement is in sight. He happens to be better than chaos. And others who do not want chaos are keeping him in. It is not a flattering destiny for a youth of twenty-three. True, he has the glittering compensations of being a King. But at best these will not last much longer.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: King Hussein...at the age of twenty-three...finds himself in the center of an international storm. And it has happened, not because of anything he has done, but simply by his being there. Horace wrote 2-thousand years ago, "Fate with impartial hand turns out the doom of high and low. Her capacious urn is shaking out the names of all mankind."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Nov. 11, 1958

This is the news:

Russia and Poland today called for strengthening of the Warsaw alliance, the Communist counter-part to NATO. / They also agreed on the need for an East-West summit meeting "to examine and solve the most pressing problems of disarmament." / Russia and Poland made this announcement in a joint communique issued in Moscow after two weeks of talks. / The communique said that Soviet Premier Khrushchev and Polish Leader Gomulka reached "a full coincidence of views" on all subjects discussed. / Gomulka joined Khrushchev in denouncing what they called the "militaristic and revenge-seeking elements" in West Germany...elements, they said, which represent a threat to peace. They accused the West of trying to turn Western Europe into an "arsenal" of nuclear weapons. They declared their "complete solidarity" with those peoples who, they said, are fighting "to liberate themselves from the colonialist yoke." / Gomulka said...along with Khrushchev...that "an uncompromising struggle" must be waged against "revisionism". / And Khrushchev promised Poland an undisclosed amount of economic aid.

In Geneva today, the two East-West conferences remained deadlocked. The one meeting that began last Friday did agree on a name. / It will be known as "The Conference of Experts for the Study of Possible Measures Which Might be Helpful in Preventing Suprise Attack and for the Preparation of a Report Thereon." / The three-power conference on nuclear weapons tests met informally behind closed doors. / It was hoped that an informal session might be more conducive to agreement. No official minutes are taken at such meetings.

A Soviet note...dealing with the conference for the prevention of surprise attack...was delivered tonight to the American embassy in Moscow. The note, according to Moscow radio, says that this conference must be tied in with "definite steps in disarmament."

In this country, the Cold War was a recurring theme in the speeches made on the occasion of Veterans Day. Robert Murphy, deputy undersecretary of state, said that the United States refuses to be discouraged---even though

Russia's behavior at Geneva offers little ground for optimism. Democratic Senator Kefauver said there can be no cutting down on defense spending, until an effective arms limitation program can be worked out with the Soviet Union. Schools, he said, are as vital as armament. ~~General Sarnoff spoke at the Arlington National Cemetery. He said, "Perhaps beyond any prior generation, ours is called upon to muster the material vitality, the moral fervor, the confident faith and intellectual understanding that will guarantee peace---or, should the peace be shattered, will guarantee victory."~~

Tomorrow, the United Nations Political Committee will open its debate on problems of outer space. Today...by a vote of 54 to 9...it approved a Western resolution, calling for reunification of Korea through "genuinely free elections." The nine opposing votes were cast by the Soviet bloc. The American plan for United Nations control of outer space is expected to be submitted to the political committee next week by Democratic Senator Lyndon Johnson. Secretary of State Dulles announced last night that Johnson had agreed to represent the United States in the United Nations debate. Mr. Dulles said the appointment of the Senate Democratic leader would "make it clear to the world how much all Americans agree on the importance of the subject."

Johnson said tonight...in a speech in San Antonio, Texas...that space may yield the answer to lasting peace. "Peace," he said, "is the first and greatest opportunity space affords. We are moving to extend the frontiers of freedom."

Jordan today accused the United Arab Republic of committing "an act of aggression", and said it was taking its complaint to the United Nations Security Council. / Jordan's case is based on the interception of King Hussein's private airplane yesterday, by Syrian jet fighters. The interception took place over Syria, as Hussein was leaving Jordan for a European vacation. / Last night on this program I quoted Hussein as saying that his airplane was fired upon. That is what the king said, according to the text of his speech, originally carried by Reuters. A later version of the text, transmitted by Reuters, does not say that Hussein's aircraft was fired on. It quotes Hussein as saying, "They attacked my plane with aggressive intentions." No mention of gunfire. This is also the version reported by the other news services. / The king said his airplane was pursued "a long distance" inside Jordan. / Syria, which is part of Nasser's United Arab Republic, denies this. It also denies that the king's airplane was "attacked". / Moscow radio joined the argument today, claiming that Hussein invented the story of an attack, in order to build up support at home. / The Jordanian parliament met this morning...and approved a resolution, authorizing the government to take whatever measures it deemed necessary. It also called for a meeting of the Arab League Council to discuss the incident.

→

Two British-built jet fighters arrived in Amman today for delivery to the Jordanian Air Force--the first of 12 scheduled to arrive in the next few days ~~under the Anglo-American military aid program.~~ The British Foreign Office says the fact that delivery of the first two jets came at this time is "~~pure coincidence.~~"

~~A national holiday was proclaimed in Jordan today to celebrate the king's safe return.~~

In Cuba, the rebel movement says that it has released all passengers and crewmen of two Cuban airliners hijacked since October 21. It announces that all 31 persons...including one American sailor...have been turned over to Red Cross representatives.

The Chrysler Corporation was hit today by a strike of 8-thousand salaried workers. Eight of the company's ten assembly plants were shut down...when production workers refused to cross picket lines. The United Auto Workers Union says that it is urging production men to stay on the job.

~~At Laurel Race Track today...in Maryland...two American thoroughbreds~~

Edward R. Murrow: November 11, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Premier Khrushchev's demand for an end of Four-Power occupation of Berlin may be the opening round of a new and dangerous test of cold war strength between East and West. He is trying to force de facto recognition of the East German regime first of all. One needs only to look back on the Berlin airlift to appreciate how dangerous such a test could be. The West won that one, but only retreat and restraint by the Kremlin kept it from leading to open hostilities.

Secretary Dulles said on Friday - and before the Khrushchev speech - that we are "solemnly committed to hold West Berlin, by military force if need be." This was in response to a statement by Premier Ulbrecht of East Germany, calling West Berlin a kind of Quemoy which really belongs to East Germany. It may be that Ulbrecht asked Khrushchev to back up his claim. Or it may be that the Kremlin has decided to strike out on a new line, one that raises trouble inside Europe, rather than letting trouble develop for the West in regions like the Middle East and Southeast Asia.

Washington observers see one persuasive reason not to believe that Khrushchev's demand is the start of a new cold war battle. That is that if the Russians go back on the terms of their agreements in respect to Berlin, they are letting the German question slip out from the absolute control of the Four-Power agreement. And that would entitle the West to carry the German question to another tribunal, such as the United Nations. In the Four-Power agreement on Germany the Soviet Union has the strongest kind of veto. Nothing can happen about German unification, or about German frontiers, that the Soviet Union does not sanction. But in the United Nations Assembly the Soviet Union has no veto, and debates on the Communist refusal to permit free elections in East Germany could lose the Russians a great deal of world approval. The Germans have unofficially pressed to get the German question before the United Nations. They always have run into a firm Soviet refusal to give up any of the authority it wields under the Four-Power agreement.

Khrushchev in his speech yesterday built up an elaborate case against the West for violating the Potsdam Agreement. His big argument, and one he often makes, is that the re-armament of Germany violates the pledge at Potsdam that Germany never again should become a military power. No doubt about it, the re-armament of Germany was contrary to the Potsdam Declaration. But what Mr. Khrushchev does not mention is that the first and decisive violation of the Potsdam Agreement was by the Soviet Union. At Potsdam it had been solemnly undertaken that Germany should be treated as an economic whole. The Soviet Union then proceeded to separate East Germany economically and subject it to the most elaborate and systematic looting. / The Western policy of building up West Germany followed this action, and in a sense grew out of it.

Khrushchev demanded withdrawal of the Four Powers from Berlin on the ground that the Western Powers had destroyed the lawful basis of their occupation, that is, by violating other provisions of the pact. / But in the same speech, he carefully re-affirmed the validity of the agreement in one respect. / He said it has the sole right to ~~write~~ draft the peace treaty which is to fix Germany's frontiers. / And this inconsistent treatment of the agreement - which is worthless in one respect and inviolable in another - may support the view that Khrushchev was blustering but did not necessarily launch a fresh cold war offensive.

He delivered his speech yesterday at a Moscow gathering in honor of Gomulka, the Polish leader. So he was not only bolstering up East Germany's hopes of getting Berlin, but was reassuring the Poles of Soviet protection against the Germans, which he did in strong and explicit terms. / And that may have been the main motive of the speech. The Russians and Poles are drawing together after some bitter and even explosive disagreements. / It is always hard for them to get along. But if the Poles don't ~~much~~ like the Russians, they dislike the Germans still more and also are more afraid of them. So the accent on German militarism in Khrushchev's speech, and his pledge of protection, may have been designed primarily to comfort the Poles. But it is a reminder that German question, as long as it is unsolved, is the greatest potential danger in Europe, and that the Soviet Union is in no mood for its solution on terms acceptable to the West or West Germany.

Back in a moment

George Bryan -

Word for Today

Soviet Premier Khrushchev would appear...in rather plain language... to have demanded an end to the four-power occupation of Berlin. But, still, what he said is open to interpretation. He may have been after something else. Dagobert Runes once said, "Diplomacy is the verbal technique of saying what you don't mean and making it mean what you don't say."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia and Poland today called for strengthening of the Warsaw alliance, the Communist counter-part to NATO. They also agreed on the need for an East-West summit meeting "to examine and solve the most pressing problems of disarmament." Russia and Poland made the announcement in a joint communique issued in Moscow after two weeks of talks. The communique said that Soviet Premier Khrushchev and Polish Leader Gomulka reached "a full coincidence of views" on all subjects discussed. Gomulka joined Khrushchev in denouncing what they called the "militaristic and revenge-seeking elements" in West Germany...elements, they said, which represent a threat to peace. They accused the West of trying to turn Western Europe into an "arsenal" of nuclear weapons. They declared their "complete solidarity" with those peoples who, they said, are fighting "to liberate themselves from the colonialist yoke." Gomulka said...along with Khrushchev... that "an uncompromising struggle" must be waged against "revisionism." And Khrushchev promised Poland an undisclosed amount of economic aid.

In Geneva today, the two East-West conferences remained deadlocked. The one meeting that began last Friday did agree on a name. It will be known as "The Conference of Experts for the Study of Possible Measures Which Might be Helpful in Preventing Surprise Attack and for the Preparation of a Report Thereon." The three-power conference on nuclear weapons tests met informally behind closed doors. It was hoped that an informal session might be more conducive to agreement. No official minutes are taken at such meetings.

A Soviet note...dealing with the conference for the prevention of surprise attack...was delivered tonight to the American Embassy in Moscow. The note, according to Moscow radio, says that this conference must be tied in with "definite steps in disarmament."

In this country, the Cold War was a recurring theme in the speeches made on the occasion of Veterans Day. Robert Murphy, deputy undersecretary of state, said that the United States refuses to be discouraged---even though Russia's behavior at Geneva offers little ground for optimism. Democratic Senator Kefauver said there can be no cutting down on defense spending, until an effective arms limitation program can be worked out with the Soviet Union. Schools, he said, are as vital as armament.

Tomorrow, the United Nations Political Committee will open its debate on problems of outer space. Today...by a vote of 54 to 9...it approved a Western resolution, calling for reunification of Korea through "genuinely free elections." The nine opposing votes were cast by the Soviet bloc. The American plan for United Nations control of outer space is expected to be submitted to the political committee next week by Democratic Senator Lyndon Johnson. Secretary of State Dulles announced last night that Johnson had agreed to represent the United States in the United Nations debate. Mr. Dulles said the appointment of the Senate Democratic leader would "make it clear to the world how much all Americans agree on the importance of the subject." Johnson said tonight...in a speech in San Antonio, Texas...that space may yield the answer to lasting peace. "Peace," he said, "is the first and greatest opportunity space affords. We are moving to extend the frontiers of freedom.

Jordan today accused the United Arab Republic of committing "an act of aggression" and said it was taking its complaint to the United Nations Security Council. Jordan's case is based on the interception of King Hussein's private airplane yesterday by Syrian jet fighters. The interception took place over Syria as Hussein was leaving Jordan for a European vacation. Last night on this program I quoted Hussein as saying that his airplane was fired upon. That is what the king said, according to the text of his speech originally carried by Reuters. A later version of the text, transmitted by Reuters, does not say that Hussein's aircraft was fired on. It quotes Hussein as saying, "They attacked my plane with aggressive intentions." No mention of gunfire. This is also the version reported by the other news services. The king said his airplane was pursued "a long distance" inside Jordan. Syria, which is part of Nasser's United Arab Republic, denies this. It also denies that the king's airplane was "attacked." Moscow radio joined the argument today, claiming that Hussein invented the story of an attack in order to build up support at home. The Jordanian parliament met this morning...and approved a resolution authorizing the government to take whatever measures it deemed necessary. It also called for a meeting of the Arab League Council to discuss the incident.

In Cuba, the rebel movement says that it has released all passengers and crewmen of two Cuban airliners hijacked since October 21. It announces that all 31 persons...including one American sailor....have been turned over to Red Cross representatives.

The Chrysler Corporation was hit today by a strike of 8 thousand salaried workers. Eight of the company's ten assembly plants were shut down... when production workers refused to cross picket lines. The United Auto Workers Union says that it is urging production men to stay on the job.

Premier Khrushchev's demand for an end of Four-Power occupation of Berlin may be the opening round of a new and dangerous test of cold war strength between East and West. He is trying to force de facto recognition of the East German regime first of all. One needs only to look back on the Berlin airlift to appreciate how dangerous such a test could be. The West won that one, but only retreat and restraint by the Kremlin kept it from leading to open hostilities.

Secretary Dulles said on Friday - and before the Khrushchev sppech - that we are "solemnly committed to hold West Berlin, by military force if need be." This was in response to a statement by Premier Ulbrecht of East Germany calling West Berlin a kind of Quemoy which really belongs to East Germany. It may be that Ulbrecht asked Khrushchev to back up his claim. Or it may be that the Kremlin has decided to strike out on a new line, one that raises trouble inside Europe, rather than letting trouble develop for the West in regions like the Middle East and Southeast Asia.

Washington observers are one persuasive reason not to believe that Khrushchev's demand is the start of a new cold war battle. That is that if the Russians go back on the terms of their agreements in respect to Berlin, they are letting the German question slip out from the absolute control of the Four-Power agreement. And that would entitle the West to carry the German question to another tribunal, such as the united Nations. In the Four-Power agreement on Germany, the Soviet Union has the strongest kind of veto. Nothing can happen about German unification, or about German frontiers, that the Soviet Union does not sanction. But in the United Nations Assembly the Soviet Union has no veto, and debates on the Communist refusal to permit free elections in West Germany could lose the Russians a great deal of world approaal. The Germans have unofficially pressed to get the German question before the United Nations. They always have run into a firm Soviet refusal to give up any of the authority it wields under the Four-Power agreement.

Khrushchev in his speech yesterday built up an elaborate case against the West for violating the Potsdam Agreement. His big argument, and one he often makes, is that the re-armament of Germany violates the pledge at Potsdam that Germany never again should become a military power. No doubt about it, the re-armament of Germany was contrary to the Potsdam Declaration. But what Mr. Khrushchev does not mention is that the first and decisive violation of the Potsdam Agreement was by the Soviet Union. At Potsdam it had been solemnly undertaken that Germany should be treated as an economic whole. The Soviet Union then proceeded to separate East Germany economically and subject it to the most elaborate and systematic looting. The Western policy of building up West Germany followed this action, and in a sense grew out of it.

Khrushchev demanded withdrawal of the Four Powers from Berlin on the ground that the Western Powers had destroyed the lawful basis of their occupation, that is, by violating other provisions of the pact. But in the same speech, he carefully re-affirmed the validity of the agreement in one respect. He said it has the sole right to draft the peace treaty which is to fix Germany's frontiers. And this inconsistent treatment of the agreement - which is worthless in one respect and inviolable in another - may support the view that Khrushchev was blustering but did not necessarily launch a fresh cold war offensive.

He delivered his speech yesterday at a Moscow gathering in honor of Gomulka, the Polish leader. So he was not only bolstering up East Germany's hopes of getting Berlin, but was reassuring the Poles of Soviet protection against the Germans, which he did in strong and explicit terms. And that may have been the main motive of the speech. The Russians and Poles are drawing together after some bitter and even explosive disagreements. It is always hard forthem to get along. But if the Poles don't like the Russians, they dislike the Germans still more and also are more afraid of them. So the accent on German militarism in Khrushchev's speech, and his pledge of protection, may have been designed primarily to comfort the Poles. But it is a reminder that German question, as long as it is unsolved, is the greatest potential danger in Europe, and that the Soviet Union is in no mood for its solution on terms acceptable to the West or West Germany.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Soviet Premier Khrushchev would appear...in rather plain language...to have demanded an end to the four-power occupation of Berlin. But, still, what he said is open to interpretation. He may have been after something else. Dagobert Runes once said, "Diplomacy is the verbal technique of ssying what you don't mean and making it mean what you don't say."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Nov. 12, 1958

This is the news:

The United Nations political committee today began debate on control of outer space. Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin, of Russia, said that any plan for prohibiting the use of outer space for military purposes must also include the prohibition of military bases on foreign soil. He said the United States wants to outlaw Russia's intercontinental ballistic missile and...at the same time...maintain its intermediate range rocket bases that encircle the Soviet Union. For this reason, he said, the question of space control and the elimination of military bases on foreign territory must be tied together. Henry Cabot Lodge spoke for the United States. The American bases, he said, are necessary so long as the "proven aggressive nature of Soviet imperialism continues." They exist for mutual defense---only for defense. And they are maintained with the full consent of the countries involved. Lodge said that Russia in demanding the elimination of these bases was concealing its real purpose, which is "to destroy the capacity of the non-Soviet world to defend itself."

In Geneva today, the conference on prevention of surprise attack held its second full session with the Russians still insisting that the political question of disarmament be included in the talks. There is still no agreement on the order of business. In the other Geneva conference dealing with suspension of nuclear tests it is much the same story. Both sides have reworded their agenda proposals, but the basic difference remains. The Russians demand an immediate, unconditional suspension of tests. The United States and Britain say that first there must be agreement on an adequate control system.

The joint statement...issued yesterday by Russia and Poland...brought reaction today from the State Department. The statement said, among other things, that a summit conference had been impossible because of "delaying tactics" employed by the United States. The statement also accused the United States of trying to convert Western Europe into "an arsenal of atomic weapons." The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, said today that the Russians were guilty of "gross misrepresentation." The United States, he said, is still waiting for Russia's response to the proposals dealing with a summit conference that it made last May. He said the "real danger" to the peace of Europe is not the cooperation of West Germany in the NATO defense effort but in Russia's prevention of the formation of an all-German government in accordance with the will of the German people.

—>

The West Germany government today warned Russia that ending the four-power occupation of Berlin could "sharpen the already tense situation in the world to a perilous extent." The formal West German statement said the Soviet Union would have to bear "the complete and lone responsibility for such a development." The statement was provoked by Khrushchev's bid last Monday for an end to four-power control. What Khrushchev said was that Russia planned to pull out of Berlin and that the Western powers ought to do the same. Prime Minister Grotewohl of East Germany indicated today that Russia might pull out its troops, even if American, British and French troops pulled out of West Germany. Six hours later, he had to put out a correction...making it clear that the Soviet army would not withdraw from East Germany until the allied forces left West Germany.

In Argentina, the oil workers are still scheduled to strike at midnight, despite President Frondizi's proclamation of a state of siege. One thousand persons...identified as Communists and supporters of ex-dictator Peron...are reported under arrest.

A caller at the White House today was Harold Stassen, President Eisenhower's former adviser on disarmament. / Stassen saw the President for about an hour...and then, for the benefit of reporters, listed the four men he thought could win the White House for the Republican Party in 1960. The list does not include Vice President Nixon. / The four...any one of whom Stassen said could win...are Nelson Rockefeller, Henry Cabot Lodge, Secretary of the Interior Fred Seaton, and Secretary of the Treasury Robert Anderson. A reporter asked whether the omission of Mr. Nixon's name meant that he thought Nixon was "not a good candidate." Stassen, who has himself had presidential ambitions, replied that his views on that were well known. "And," he said, "I believe that the results of the election (last week's election) prove me right." / In 1956, Stassen tried to block Nixon's nomination at the Republican national convention.

News Secretary Hagerty emphasizes that Stassen today was not speaking for the President. ~~Vice President Nixon's office had "no comment."~~ ~~Secretary of Labor Mitchell issued a statement saying that Nixon "ought to be and will be the next President of the United States."~~

The Civil Rights Commission decided today to call a national conference "on problems involved in transition from segregated to non-segregated schools." The conference is to be held in Nashville, next February.

FOR TODAY'S STORY IN POLAND,

[redacted] we switch now to Warsaw and my colleague Daniel Schorr.

Tape runs 6:10
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague Daniel Schorr, reporting from Warsaw on the new tough line adopted by Gomulka and what may have brought it about.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

The Polish leader, Gomulka, would appear no longer to be seeking a middle course between East and West. For in signing on the dotted line with Khrushchev, he accepted Soviet policy. Gomulka may have been prompted in this by fear of Germany and fear of China as Schorr suggested. But there is an old Russian proverb that says: "Beware an obliging bear."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, November 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: For today's story in Poland, we switch now to Warsaw and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Poland's Communist leader, Wladyslaw Gomulka, returned today from twenty days in Russia with a message that Poland is a firm member of the Soviet camp. At the railway station, he called Soviet friendship Poland's most valuable asset. And of Nikita Khrushchev, who flew to Warsaw two years ago to block his reform of the Polish regime, Gomulka said today, that he is a good and sincere friend of Poland's.

Tonight before an obedient, but undemonstrative audience of four thousand in the ornate Palace of Culture that Stalin gave to Poland, Gomulka made his most anti-American speech yet. He singled out what he called "America's brink of war policy" as the main danger to peace. He accused the United States of intervention in the Middle East and the Far East. He denounced the United States for supporting what he called West Germany's expansionist design, and he likened Chancellor Adenauer to Hitler, but more dangerous because of West Germany's atomic potential. And he repeated support of Moscow's move to end four power control of Berlin. This was no longer a Polish regime looking for a middle course between East and West. The Gomulka who once went to prison on charges of being pro-Tito, now joined Russia in condemning Titoism. His support of the Kremlin was without reservation.

Gomulka's home-coming speech tonight crystallized a change in progress for many months. There's been a gradual chilling of the climate in this country since the heady days of October 1956, when Gomulka launched on Poland's only road to Socialism. Today, there are still Western books on sale, but the word has gone out to publishers that in the future there will be fewer, and Poles are beginning to hoard them from the bookshops.

The Polish Press, rigorously censored, displays greater uniformity. There's been nervousness among intellectuals. It is not like the worst days. There have been no political arrests, but some writers have been fired from newspapers. A threat against a non-conformist writer now is not the midnight knock, but the curt dismissal notice.

Gomulka's line is tougher towards the West, towards the unorthodox in the Communist camp, and towards dissidence at home. And the reason is not Soviet handouts. Gomulka brought home from Moscow this time nothing more than offers of more technical assistance, and some help in prospecting for oil in Poland. Those who defend Gomulka say he has not really changed. They say he is a practical man with little interest in doctrine, and that he is ready to pay lip service to the Kremlin's international policy in order to keep freedom of action at home. They note that a recent meeting of the Polish Party's Central Committee, he brushed off an attempt to formulate some theoretical point, saying that such things were unimportant. They quote him at the same meeting as rejecting a suggestion that he evoke police powersagainst malcontents, saying that these were the techniques that Stalin used. They represent him as defending some Polish newspapers attacked by Communist diehards for not going far enough to justify the execution of Nagy in Hungary, and the attack on Tito in Yugoslavia. Gomulka is supposed to have stated that he said all that needed to be said on these subjects. But Gomulka was not paying lip service tonight as he went down the line with the Kremlin's policy. There appeared to be other factors in his closer bond with Khrushchev. For one, there is Poland's fear of Germany, apparently skillfully exploited by Khrushchev to give the two common cause. Gomulka said tonight, that Russia was Poland's only guarantee against German reconquest of the Silesian territories wrested from Germany after the war.

The Polish Press said today that Khrushchev's move to denounce the Potsdam Agreement was the greatest result of Gomulka's trip to Moscow. An indication that Gomulka played a leading part in Khrushchev's current diplomatic offensive. For Gomulka, the Soviet move serves a double pupose. It puts more steam behind Poland's Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone in Central Europe. And it shores up East Germany as a buffer between Poland and West Germany. And there is still another factor in Gomulka's support of the Kremlin. The fear of the growing strength of Red China. There's an undercurrent of nervousness in Poland about China today, displayed in some current Warsaw anecdotes. One wit says, "Thank God, we have Russia as a buffer state between us and China." There's also the story of Mao Tse-tung offering to send an advisory mission to Poland. "How big a mission do you have in mind," Gomulka is supposed to have asked. "Oh," says Mao, "about thirty or forty million."

Polish Communists are horrified by the inhuman course that China is pursuing in organizing her slave-like communes. As one put it, "What China does is her own affair, but ideologists always want to universalize their policy." Polish newspapers are reporting very little of what is happening in China. Some have scrapped stories from their own correspondents in Peiping on instructions to play down China's internal development. And it is the spectre of China, among other things, that may be driving East European countries like Poland to rally around the Kremlin.

Thus, Gomulka is apparently haunted today by two fears: Of Germany, outside the Communist camp; and of China, within. And this may help to account for his closer bond with Russia's Khrushchev.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Dan Schorr, reporting from Warsaw.

Ed. trans. sk

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The United Nations political committee today began debate on control of outer space. Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin, of Russia said that any plan for prohibiting the use of outer space for military purposes must also include the probibition of military bases on foreign soil. He said the United States wants to outlaw Russia's intercontinental ballistic missile, and...at the same time...maintain its intermediate range rocket bases that encircle the Soviet Union. For this reason, he said, the question of space control and the elimination of military bases on foreign territory must be tied together. Henry Cabot Lodge spoke for the United States. The American bases, he said, are necessary as long as the "proven aggressive nature of Soviet imperialism continues." They exist for mutual defense---only for defense. And they are maintained with the full consent of the countries involved. Lodge said that Russia in demanding the elimination of these bases was concealing its real purpose, which is "to destroy the capacity of the non-Soviet world to defend itself."

The joint statement...issued yesterday by Russia and Poland...brought reaction today from the State Department. The statement said, among other things, that a summit conference had been impossible because of "delaying tactics" employed by the United States. The statement also accused the United States of trying to convert Western Europe into "an arsenal of atomic weapons." The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, said today that the Russians were guilty of "gross misrepresentation." The United States, he said, is still waiting for Russia's response to the proposals dealing with a summit conference that it made last May. He said the "real danger" to the peace of Europe is not the cooperation of West Germany in the NATO defense effort but in Russia's prevention of the formation of an all-German government in accordance with the will of the German people.

The West Germany government today warned Russia that ending the four-power occupation of Berlin could "sharpen the already tense situation in the world to a perilous extent." The formal West German statement said the Soviet Union would have to bear "the complete and lone responsibility for such a development." The statement was provoked by Khrushchev's bid last Monday for an end to four-power control. What Khrushchev said was that Russia planned to pull out of Berlin and that the Western powers ought to do the same. Prime Minister Grotewohl of East Germany indicated today that Russia might pull out its troops, even if American, British and French troops pulled out of West Germany. Six hours later, he had to put out a correction...making it clear that the Soviet army would not withdraw from East Germany until the allied forces left West Germany.

In Argentina, the oil workers are still scheduled to strike at midnight, despite President Frondizi's proclamation of a state of siege. One thousand persons...identified as Communists and supporters of ex-dictator Peron...are reported under arrest.

A caller at the White House today was Harold Stassen, President Eisenhower's former adviser on disarmament. Stassen saw the President for about an hour...and then, for the benefit of reporters, listed the four men he thought could win the White House for the Republican Party in 1960. The list does not include Vice President Nixon. The four...any one of whom Stassen said could win...are Nelson Rockefeller, Henry Cabot Lodge, Secretary of the Interior, Fred Seaton, and Secretary of the Treasury Robert Anderson. A reporter asked whether the omission of Mr. Nixon's name meant that he thought Nixon was "not a good candidate." Stassen, who has himself had presidential ambitions, replied that his views on that were well known. "And," he said, "I bliieve that the results of the election (last week's election) prove me right." In 1956, Stassen tried to block Nixon's nomination at the Republican national convention.

News Secretary Hagerty emphasizes that Stassen today was not speaking for the President.

The Civil Rights Commission decided today to call a national conference "on problems involved in transition from segregated to non-segregated schools." The conference is to be held in Nashville, next February.

For today's story in Poland, we swtich now to Warsaw and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Poland's Communist leader, Wladyslaw Gomulka, returned today from twenty days in Russia with a message that Poland is a firm member of the Soviet camp. At the railway station, he called Soviet friendship Poland's most valuable asset. And of Nikita Khrushchev, who flew to Warsaw two years ago to block his reform of the Polish regime, Gomulka said today, that he is a good and sincere friend of Poland's.

Tonight before an obedient, but undemonstrative audience of four thousand in the ornate Palace of Culture that Stalin gave to Poland, Gomulka made his most anti-American speech yet. He singled out what he called "America's brink of war policy" as the main danger to peace. He accused the United States of intervention in the Middle East and the Far East. He denounced the United States for supporting what he called West Germany's expansionist design, and he likened Chancellor Adenauer to Hitler, but more dangerous because of West Germany's atomic potential. And he repeated support of Moscow's move to end four power control of Berlin. This was no longer a Polish regime looking for a middle course between East and West. The Gomulka who once went to prison on charges of being pro-Tito, now joined Russia in condemning Titoism. His support of the Kremlin was without reservation.

Gomulka's home-coming speech tonight crystallized a change in progress for many months. There's been a gradual chilling of the climate in this country since the heady days of October 1956, when Gomulka launched on Poland's only road to Socialism. Today, there are still Western books on sale, but the word has gone out to publishers that in the future there will be fewer, and Poles are beginning to hoard them from the bookshops.

The Polish Press, rigorously censored, displays greater uniformity. There's been nervousness among intellectuals. It is not like the worst days. There have been no political arrests, but some writers have been fired from newspapers. A threat against a non-conformist writer now is not the midnight knock, but the curt dismissal notice.

Gomulka's line is tougher towards the West, towards the unorthodox in the Communist camp, and towards dissidence at home. And the reason is not Soviet handouts. Gomulka brought home from Moscow this morning nothing more than offers of more technical assistance, and some help in prospecting for oil in Poland. Those who defend Gomulka say he has not really changed. They say he is a practical man with little interest in doctrine, and that he is ready to pay lip service to the Kremlin's international policy in order to keep freedom of action at home. They note that a recent meeting of the Polish Party's Central Committee, he brushed off an attempt to formulate some theoretical point, saying that such things were unimportant. They quote him at the same meeting as rejecting a suggestion that he evoke police powers against malcontents, saying that those were the techniques that Stalin used. They represent him as defending some Polish newspapers attacked by Communist diehards for not going far enough to justify the execution of Nagy in Hungary, and the attack on Tito in Yugoslavia. Gomulka is supposed to have stated that he said all that needed to be said on those subjects. But Gomulka was not paying lip service tonight as he went down the line with the Kremlin's policy. There appeared to be other factors in his closer bond with Khrushchev. For one, there is Poland's fear of Germany, apparently skillfully exploited by Khrushchev to give the two common cause. Gomulka said tonight, that Russia was Poland's only guarantee against German reconquest of the Silesian territories wrested from Germany after the war.

The Polish Press said today that Khrushchev's move to denounce the Potsdam Agreement was the greatest result of Gomulka's trip to Moscow. An indication that Gomulka played a leading part in Khrushchev's current diplomatic offensive. For Gomulka, the Soviet move serves a double purpose. It puts more steam behind Poland's Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone in Central Euorpe. And it shores up East Germany as a buffer between Poland and West Germany. And there is still another factor in Gomulka's support of the Kremlin. The fear of the growing strength of Red China. There's an undercurrent of nervousness in Poland about China today, displayed in some current Warsaw anecdotes. One wit says, "Thank God, we have Russia as a buffer state between us and China." There's also the story of Mao Tse-tung offering to sendan advisory mission to Poland. "How big a mission do you have in mind?" Gomulka is supposed to have asked. "Oh," says Mao, "about thirty or forty million."

Polish Communists are horrified by the inhuman course that China is pursuing in organizing her slave-like communes. As one put it, "What China does is her own affair, but ideologists always want to universalize their policy." Polish newspapers are reporting very little of what is happening in China. Some have scrapped stories from their own correspondents in Peiping on instructions to play down China's internal development. And it is the spectre of China, among other things, that may be driving East European countries like Poland to rally around the Kremlin.

Thus, Gomulka is apparently haunted today by two fears: Of Germany, outside the Communist camp; and of China, within. And this may help to account for his closer bond with Russia's Khrushchev.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Dan Schorr, reporting from Warsaw on the new tough line adopted by Gomulka and what may have brought it about.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Polish leader, Gomulka would appear no longer to be seeking a middle course between East and West. For in signing on the dotted line with Khrushchev, he accepted Soviet policy. Gomulka may have been prompted in this by fear of Germany and fear of China as Schorr suggested. But there is an old Russian proverb that says: "Beware an obliging bear."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Nov. 13, 1958

This is the news:

Serious charges against former Premier Bulganin have been broadcast by the Moscow radio for the first time. Bulganin, who fell into disfavor a year ago, was publicly denounced tonight as a member of the "anti-party" group. This is the group of former Soviet leaders...made up of Molotov, Malenkov, Shepilov and Kaganovich...who were stripped of their government posts in the summer of 1957. In broadcasting the denunciation of Bulganin, the Moscow radio was quoting a report by Premier Khrushchev on the new Russian seven-year plan. It was revealed...at the same time...that the Communist Party central committee is meeting in Moscow and that the committee has endorsed the plan. The central committee also has endorsed Khrushchev's new education program. The program makes office or factory work mandatory for most Soviet students.

An anti-Communist riot broke out tonight in West Berlin. Thousands of West Germans---mostly students---stormed the West German sport palace, where a Communist rally was being held, smashing doors and windows. Police broke up the riot with clubs. The demonstration apparently was provoked by Khrushchev's statement last Monday...calling, in effect, for an end to the Allied presence in Berlin.

The State Department said today...in Washington...that Khrushchev was "confused" if he thought that the Americans, British and French are in West Berlin only because of the Potsdam Agreement of 1945. It said that the rights of the Western powers in Berlin...including their right of access to the city...are derived from "the right of occupation based on their defeat of Nazi Germany." ~~Also on other four-power agreement and arrangements made through the years.~~

In Geneva today, the United States submitted a "working paper" outlining a treaty for the discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests. The exact terms were not disclosed. However, a communique says the treaty would include

"establishment of an effective international control organization." The submission of this "working paper" caused the three-power Geneva conference to proceed to a discussion of matters of substance.

In the United Nations political committee today, a resolution was submitted...proposing that a special committee be set up to study the problem of control of outer space and report back next year. The resolution is sponsored by 20 countries, including the United States.

The Chinese Communists hit Quemoy today with nearly 500 high explosive shells.

Secretary of State Dulles said today it is "hard to believe" that the new Commune system created in Communist China will succeed. "Any despotism founded upon the denial of human values," he said, "has within it the seeds of its own destruction." Dulles spoke in Seattle, where he has been attending the conference of 18 Colombo countries. The conference has been dealing with the economic development of Free Asia and with what Dulles called the personal dignity of the individual.

Israel today announced the arrest of 20 Israeli Arabs suspected of syping for the United Arab Republic. Further arrests are reported imminent.

President Bourguiba said today that in selling arms to Tunisia the United States and Britain had imposed "unacceptable conditions". As a result, he said, Tunisia has approached Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia...as well as Sweden...regarding a possible arms deal. Tunisia has accused the United States and Britain of consulting France in the course of arms negotiations. The State Department concedes that the French government was given information, but it denies that France had a veto right in the matter. ~~A department spokesmen said today that the only conditions attached to the sale of arms to Tunisia would be that they not be transferred to the Algerian rebels or used for aggressive purposes. Bourguiba says that, henceforth, Tunisia will get its weapons from any country "ready to sell them without referring to France."~~

In Argentina, the Frondizi government is reported firmly in power, and the armed forces continuing on full alert. The nationwide strike of oil workers failed to materialize.

Attorney General Rogers said today that the Administration is drafting new civil rights legislation to present to Congress when it reconvenes in January. Rogers made the announcement at a news conference. He gave no details, but said the legislation would cover the "whole gamut" of civil rights. He indicated it would include measures for coping with the recent bombing of schools, churches, and synagogues. The measures, he said, would not infringe on local or state authority. ~~The attorney general has ordered a federal grand jury investigation of the recent arrest of three Negro ministers in Birmingham, Alabama. The Negroes were held on a technical charge of vagrancy, and the grand jury would determine whether there had been violation of their civil rights. The three ministers came from Montgomery, Alabama, to support the campaign against racial segregation on Birmingham city buses.~~

Governor Faubus of Arkansas today declined comment on the mass resignation last night of five members of the Little Rock School Board. The sixth member of the board...who did not resign...is Dr. Dale Alford, a pro-segregationist, who must leave anyway, because his term is expiring and he has been elected to Congress. He defeated Representative Brooks Hays.

→

Before resigning last night, the five board members voted to terminate the contract of School Superintendent Vargil Blossom---and pay him the 19-thousand dollars he would receive for the full term. Today, as the result of a taxpayer's suit, a state judge issued a temporary restraining order, blocking payment of the money.

The Catholic bishops of the United States tonight issued a 15-hundred word statement...calling on Americans of all religious faiths "to seize the mantle of leadership from the agitator and racist before it is too late." The statement also said that steps toward the Christian goal of a completely de-segregated society should be approached with "prudence".

When Khrushchev filled the vacancy caused by the death of Stalin, a current of optimism spread through the world like a draught of fresh air. Here was a man who seemed to be both strong and sensible and who proclaimed the need of correcting the mistakes of his predecessor. A new day might be dawning in which the threat of war could be dispelled and world leaders could turn at last to the solution of the vast accumulation of world problems.

The new day is now well along, and the optimism has not been borne out. The threat of war - that is, of a world war - has subsided, but not because of increasing wisdom among statesmen, but simply because nuclear weapons have made unlimited war so suicidal that no power dares to risk it. Few of the world's problems have been solved. And by now the fresh air that Khrushchev brought with him seems to have lost its purity. Here is a man who is even stronger than before, who now seems to be talking sense only some of the time, and who apparently has forgotten there are mistakes to correct.

The last two Americans to have interviewed Khrushchev are Adlai Stevenson and Walter Lippmann, and what they have to report does not make the hope of reaching an understanding with the Russian leader particularly promising. To both he expressed a desire to improve relations with the West. To both he said it would improve relations if the West would recognize the status quo, that is, not try to change it. But the term status quo has a very special meaning to him, which Mr. Lippmann, in his articles for the Herald-Tribune syndicate, spelled out.

The simpler part of the concept, he says, is that there should be no change of frontiers by force. But a more important part is that the social and economic revolution now in progress in Russia, China and elsewhere in Asia and Africa is the status quo. Khrushchev wants us to recognize not only this revolution as it is, but as it will be. And he insists that we keep hands off. He is confident that Russia will overtake and surpass the West in per capita production, so that the future belongs to Communism by growth, and not by military conquest.

As Mr. Stevenson reported his interview in the current issue of LOOK, Khrushchev contends the West, when it tries to stem the spread of Communism, is automatically guilty of interfering in the internal affairs of other countries. To Mr. Stevenson he read off a list of the places where the United ~~XXXXXX~~ States was interfering -- Jordan, Lebanon, Guatemala, Cuba -- but when Mr. Stevenson mentioned Hungary, Khrushchev lost his smile. What went on in the Communist world, he was saying, was none of our business.

As to the present balance of power, Khrushchev believes that it rests on Soviet mastery of intermediate and short-range missiles. He is sure that the Soviet Union can dominate Germany and Western Europe, Turkey and Iran. While he professes to know that neither the United States nor the Soviet Union can beat the other in a direct conflict, he says that the American forward positions, particularly in Germany and Turkey, can no longer be defended because of the rocket. So he is sure the Western assessment of its own power is obsolete. NATO forces sent to defend Turkey, for example, would, he said, arrive too late for the funeral.

In discussing current differences, Khrushchev scoffed at the West's insistence on inspection and controls in approaching the suspension of nuclear tests and the prevention of surprise attack. He insisted that confidence must come before controls. He called it elementary that a treaty of friendship be signed first. "Suppose," he argued to Mr. Lippmann, "that you and another man start to make friends, and the first thing your new friend says to you is: give me the key to your house. You would think him impudent." And when the United States asks the key to our house, he said, we tell him to go to the Devil. It makes us suspicious that you want the keys to the house before you will sign a treaty of friendship.

He made it clear that he was sure the Soviet Union would never attack the United States, but was just as sure that one day the United States would attack the Soviet Union. He did not realize that Americans have an almost identical fear of the Soviet Union.

It is clear from these interviews that we cannot expect Khrushchev to accept the world of realities as we see it, just as we cannot accept his version of the status quo. So we are not going to agree, simply by out-arguing each other. And since we cannot expect to reach a settlement merely by piling up weapons, the future may well belong to the rival who proves to be not only strong, but also more helpful and constructive to the rest of the world.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

Khrushchev's argument that confidence must come before control reminds me of a story. A scorpion once asked a frog to let him ride on his back across a wide river. "Ah," said the frog, "but you may sting me while I'm busy swimming." "Nonsense," said the scorpion, "that would be the end of me, too. I can't swim." But the scorpion stung him anyway.

Goodnight and good luck!

Ruth Pinkhard x

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Serious charges against former Premier Bulganin have been broadcast by the Moscow radio for the first time. Bulganin, who fell into disfavor a year ago, was publicly denounced tonight as a member of the "anti-party" group. This is the group of former Soviet leaders...made up of Molotov, Malenkov, Shepilov and Kaganovich...who were stripped of their government posts in the summer of 1957. In broadcasting the denunciation of Bulganin, the Moscow radio was quoting a report by Premier Khrushchev on the new Russian seven-year plan. It was revealed...at the same time...that the Communist Party central committee is meeting in Moscow and that the committee has endorsed the plan. The central committee also has endorsed Khrushchev's new education program. The program makes office or factory work mandatory for most Soviet students.

An anti-Communist riot broke out tonight in West Berlin. Thousands of West Germans---mostly students---stormed the West German sport palace, where a Communist rally was being held, smashing doors and windows. Police broke up the riot with clubs. The demonstration apparently was provoked by Khrushchev's statement last Monday...calling, in effect, for an end to the Allied presence in Berlin.

The State Department said today...in Washington...that Khrushchev was "confused" if he thought that the Americans, British and French are in West Berlin only because of the Potsdam Agreement of 1945. It said that the rights of the Western powers in Berlin...including their right of access to the city... are derived from "the right of occupation based on their defeat of Nazi Germany."

In Geneva today, the United States submitted a "working paper" outlining a treaty for the discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests. The exact terms were not disclosed. However, a communique says the treaty would include "establishment of an effective international control organization." The submission of this "working paper" caused the three-power Geneva conference to proceed to a discussion of matters of substance.

The Chinese Communists hit Quemoy today with nearly 500 high explosive shells.

Secretary of State Dulles said today it is "hard to believe" that the new Commune system created in Communist China will succeed. "Any despotism founded upon the denial of human values," he said, "has within it the seeds of its own destruction." Dulles spoke in Seattle where he has been attending the conference of 18 Colombo countries. The conference has been dealing with the economic development of Free Asia and with what Dulles called the personal dignity of the individual.

Israel today announced the arrest of 20 Israeli Arabs suspected of spying for the United Arab Republic. Further arrests are reported imiinent.

President Bourguiba said today that in selling arms to Tunisia the United States and Britain had imposed "unacceptable conditions." As a result, he said, Tunisia has approached Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia...as well as Sweden...regarding a possible arms deal. Tunisia has accused the United States and Britain of consulting France in the course of arms negotiations. The State Department concedes that the French government was given information, but it denies that France had a veto right in the matter.

In Argentina, the Frondizi government is reported firmly in power, and the armed forces continuing on full alert. The nationwide strike of oil workers failed to materialize.

Attorney General Rogers said today that the Administration is drafting new civil rights legislation to present to Congress when it reconvenes in January. Rogers made the announcement at a news conference. He gave no details, but said the legislation would cover the "whole gamut" of civil rights. He indicated it would include measures for copying with the recent bombing of schools, churches, and synagogues.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas today declined comment on the mass resignation last night of five members of the Little Rock School Board. The sixth member of the board...who did not resign...is Dr. Dale Afford, a pro-segregationist who must leave anyway because his term is expiring and he has been elected to Congress. He defeated Representative Brooks Hays. Before resigning last night, the five board members voted to terminate the contract of School Superintendent Virgil Blossom---and pay him the 19-thousand dollars he would receive for the full term. Today as the result of a taxpayer's suit, a state judge issued a temproary restraining order, blocking payment of the money.

The Catholic bishops of the United States tonight issued a 15-hundred word statement...calling on Americans of all religious faiths "to seize the mantle of leadership from the agitator and racist before it is too late." The statement also said that steps toward the Christian goal of a completely de-segregated society should be approached with "prudence."

When Khrushchev filled the vacancy caused by the death of Stalin, a current ofoptinism spread through the world like a draught of fresh air. Here was a man who seemed to be both strong and sensible and who proclaimed the need of correcting the mistakes of his predecessor. A new day might be dawning in which the threat of war could be dispelled and world leaders could turn at last to the solution of the vast accumulation of world problems.

The new day is now well along, and the optimism has not been borne out. The threat of war - that is, of a world war - has subsided, but not because of increasing wisdom among statesmen, but simply because nuclear weapons have made unlimited war so suicidal that no power dares to risk it. Few of the world's problems have been solved. And by now the fresh air that Khrushchev brought with him seems to have lost its purity. Here is a man who is even stronger than before, who now seems to be talking sense only some of the time, and who apparently has forgotten there are mistakes to correct.

The last two Americans to have interviewed Khrushchev are Adlai Stevenson and Walter Lippmann, and what they have to report does not make the hope of reaching an understanding with the Russian leader particularly promising. To both he expressed a desire to improve relations with the West. To both he said it would improve relations if the West would recognize the status quo, that is not try to change it. But the term status quo has a very special meaning to him, which Mr. Lippmann, in his articles for the Herald-Tribune syndicate, spelled out.

The simpler part of the concept, he says is that there should be no change of frontiers by force. But a more important part is that the social and economic revolution now in progress in Russia, China and elsewhere in Asia and Africa is the status quo. Khrushchev wants us to recognize not only this revolution as it is, but as it will be. And he insists that we keep hands off. He is confdient that Russia will overtake and surpass the West in per capita production, so that the future belongs to Communism by growth, and not by military conqeest.

As Mr. Stevenson reported his interview in the current issue of LOOK, Khrushchev contends the West, when it tries to stem the spread of Communism, is automatically guilty of interfering in the internal affairs of other countries. To Mr. Stevenson he read off a list of the places where the United States was interfering - Jordan, Lebanon, Guatemala,Cuba - but when Mr. Stevenson mentioned Hungary, Khrushchev lost his smile. What went on in the Communist world, he was saying, was none of our business.

As to the present balance of power, Khrushchev believes that it rests on Soviet mastery of intermediate and short-range missiles. He is sure that the Soviet Union can dominate Germany and Western Europe, Turkey and Iran. While he professes to know that neither the United States nor the Soviet Union can beat the other in a direct conflict, he says that the American forward positions, particularly in Germany and Turkey, can no longer be defended because of the rocket. So he is sure the Western assessment of its own power is obsolete. NATO forces sent to defend Turkey, for example, would, he said, arrive too late for the funeral.

In discussing current differences, Khrushchev scoffed at the West's insistence on inspection and controls in approaching the suspension of nuclear tests and the prevention of surprise attack. He insisted that confidence must come before controls. He called it elementary that a treaty of friendship be signed first. "Suppose," he argued to Mr. Lippmann, "that you and another man start to make friends, and the first thing your new friend says to you is, give me the key to your house. You would think him impudent." And when the United States asks the key to our house, he said, we tell him to go to the Devil. It makes us suspicious that you want the keys to the house before you will sign a treaty of friendship. He made it clear that he was sure the Soviet Union would never attack the United States, but was just as sure that one day the United States would attack the Soviet Union. He did not realize that Americans have an almost identical fear of the Soviet Union.

It is clear from these interviews that we cannot expect Khrushchev to accept the world of realities as we see it, just as we cannot accept his version of the status quo. So we are not going to agree, simply by out-arguing each other. And since we cannot expect to reach a settlement merely by piling up weapons, the future may well belong to the rival who proves to be not only strong, but also more helpful and constructive to the rest of the world.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is Geroge Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Khrushchev's argument that confidence must come before control reminds me of a story. A scorpion once asked a frog to let him ride on his back across a wide river, "Ah," said the frog, "but you may sting me while I'm busy swimming." "Nonsense," said the scorpion, "that would be the end of me, too. I can't swim." But the scorpion stung him anyway and both perished.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 14, 1958

This is the news:

The State Department said today that there has been "no basic change" in American defense policy. The department was taking the unusual action of interpreting the remarks of the head of another government department. Secretary of Defense McElroy indicated at a news conference yesterday that the United States was re-appraising its global strategy. The United States, he said, will fulfill all its orders for the production of intermediate-range missiles for NATO. But he implied that henceforth, we will depend increasingly on the intercontinental ballistic missile. "The farther you go down the road of the I.C.B.M.," he said, "the less interesting it is to employ additional ~~I.R.B.M.~~ Intermediate Range Missile

The I.C.B.M. has a range of better than 5-thousand miles. / It can, therefore, be launched against Russia from bases in the United States. / This, McElroy pointed out, gives us "complete control". / He also announced that the delayed cutback in American ground forces "is about ready to start." The cut in Army and Marine Corps personnel, would amount to about 55-thousand men. At the same time, McElroy spoke of building up the ground forces of our allies. / My colleague, David Schoenbrun, cables me that press reports of the McElroy news conference have "stirred up a hornet's nest in Paris." Schoenbrun says NATO officials do not want to be quoted, because they have not seen the full text of what McElroy said, but that they sent "a number" of cables to Washington, demanding an explanation. / For years, Schoenbrun points out, the Communists have been claiming that the United States eventually would sit back with its long-range missiles and let its allies in Europe supply the "cannon-fodder". Reports of McElroy's news conference reaching Paris, he says, seemed to confirm Russia's propaganda. / The special statement put out by the State Department this afternoon seeks to allay allied fears. It says: "We do not find in the transcript of Secretary McElroy's comments any departure from U.S. defense strategy such as has been alleged in some of the press stories. There have, in fact, been no basic changes in U.S. defense policies." The statement emphasizes that the United States still wants its allies to set up bases for the I.R.B.M.---bases, that is, for missiles of only 15-hundred-mile range---and that the United States program for developing intercontinental missiles is only part of our over-all strategy for free world defense.

→

Army chief of staff, General Taylor, told a news conference today that the strength of the Army may be cut by 30-thousand men in the next few months. The Army, he said, will need 3-billion dollars a year for the next five years to "modernize" its ground forces. The 3-billion-dollar figure is more than double the amount of money provided for modernization in the current Army budget.

Reports from Washington say that President Eisenhower is almost certain to ask Congress to increase the federal gasoline tax. The present federal tax on gasoline is three cents a gallon.

The Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial production went up slightly in October for the sixth consecutive month. Production of non-durable goods---such as food and clothing---advanced on a broad front. Total new construction---industrial and residential---reached a new record rate. Gains in the auto and glass manufacturing industries were limited, due to work stoppages.

Moscow Radio and the entire Soviet press today publicized the new Seven Year Plan, aimed at expanding Russia's industrial production by 80 percent. They quoted a report by Khrushchev that in 1965 the Communist bloc will be producing more than half of the world's industrial goods. Khrushchev also predicted that by 1970, Russia will have outstripped per capita production in the United States. And he extended to the Russian people the promise that by 1970 they would have the highest standard of living in the world. Thus, he said, the victory of communism over capitalism will be assured.

The Moscow radio tonight rejected as "a clumsy maneuver" the West's latest effort to break the deadlock at the Geneva conference for the cessation of nuclear tests. Yesterday, the United States submitted a draft treaty, coupling a suspension of tests with adequate controls. Russia has demanded that tests be stopped first...permanently and unconditionally... and that controls be worked out later. We insist that a control system must come first. Tonight's Moscow broadcast called on the United States and Britain to "stop hedging".

→

Three United States Army trucks were held for more than eight hours today by Russian border guards at a checkpoint outside of Berlin. /The Russians demanded the right to search the vehicles...which were bound for West Germany. The drivers refused, insisting that the Russian guards had no such right. The trucks finally were released after American officials filed a protest at Russian Army headquarters in East Berlin. This is the first harrassment of an American convoy since Khrushchev's speech last Monday...calling for an end to four-power control of Berlin.

Representatives of the United States, Britain and France---the three Western powers in Berlin---conferred in West Berlin today regarding possible eventualities. /An American spokesman said after the meeting that a unilaterial Russian withdrawal from any of the four-power agreements on Berlin was NOT expected.

Edward R. Murrow: November 14, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The demand by Khrushchev that the Four Powers get out of Berlin has by now stirred up a strong reaction in the West. Bonn has hinted that it will break off relations with Moscow if anything is done to drive the West out. Washington and London have responded officially with reminders that they are in Berlin by incontestible rights, and asserted that they intend to stay. And a ringing affirmation to this effect is to be sought from the Ministerial meeting of the NATO Council in Paris next month.

But the nature of the threat already has changed. It now is officially explained in East Berlin that the Russians are not planning to take out their own troops and leave East Germany in full charge. To do that would at once bring on a crisis. The Russians will withdraw only if the Western Powers also withdraw. And Premier Grotewohl of the East German Government has explained that the Khrushchev proposal is being misunderstood. The main question, he said, is not Berlin, but is to come to an understanding among Germans and to preserve peace. By an understanding among Germans he means a German settlement negotiated between the Two Germanys, which is the Soviet formula for re-uniting Germany.

What Khrushchev and the East Germans are after, and now are pressing for, is confederation. They insist that East Germany, where socialization of industry and land is far along, must keep these reforms and enjoy complete local autonomy in the Confederation. They want local autonomy, not only to preserve the changed status of property, but because it means the continuation of the Communist bureaucracy. The Confederation's central government would have control of foreign policy, trade and national finance, in which East Germany would have only a minority voice. But if the Communists are to negotiate with the West Germans, they do not intend to negotiate themselves out of power altogether.

The Western formula for German re-unification is that free elections must precede negotiations. The West is confident that if really free elections are held in East Germany, the Communist regime will be voted out of existence. And the Germany that would re-unite would be a unit, which could be expected to remain a member of NATO and a devoted associate of the West.

Obviously these two plans are irreconcilable. If the Western plan were to be adopted, the Soviet Union would suffer a staggering defeat which might lead to the loosening of the whole Soviet satellite structure. No doubt that is one reason so many in the West want it. But because the Soviet Union is strong -- stronger than before with its nuclear missiles -- it will not permit it to happen.

The Soviet formula starts with negotiations at the top between East and West Germany before there are any elections. It also insists that the German confederation must end its millitary alliance with the West and not become a member of NATO. Dr. Adenauer would not negotiate on any such terms. He staunchly refuses to recognize the East German regime. He even recalled his Ambassador from Yugoslavia when Tito recognized the East German Government.

But it would be a mistake to believe that all West Germans are dead set against the creation of a German Federation, even if it leaves the Communists in charge of local affairs in their sector. If the choice is between this and a long continuation of the present deadlock and the persistent danger of war, they would prefer Federation. They even believe that such a Federation would win approval in both parts of Germany in free elections.

The idea also has appeal in West Europe because of the growing belief that peace would be best served by the disengagement of all military forces from Central Europe. Many British Laborites take this view, just as many Frenchmen would like to keep the Germans disarmed. A United Germany would not automatically assume the duties of West Germany in NATO. In the West's treaty with West Germany it is specifically provided that a re-united Germany is free to make its own choice in that matter. If unification were to become part of a broader settlement that went on to military disengagement by both East and West, it is certain that many Germans would vote for it. In fact, many Germans in high places in the government are already reconciled to the idea of Federation with East Germany. They feel that a refusal to sit down with East Germans is getting them nothing, and they are more interested in German problems than in the great power struggle with the Soviet Union. It is to these Germans, and to the advocates of disengagement, that the Khrushchev campaign is directed.

Back in a moment -

George Bryan -

Word for Today

The news continues to be a rather monotonous mixture of good and bad...reminding one of Charles Dickens' opening sentence in his Tale of Two Cities. "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times. It was the age of reason, it was the age of foolishness. It was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair." That's the situation today.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER14, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The State Department said today that there has been "no basic change" in American defense policy. The department was taking the unusual action of interpreting the remarks of the head of another government department. Secretary of Defense McElroy indicated at a news conference yesterday that the United States was reappraising its global strategy. The United States, he said, will fulfill all its orders for the production of intermediate-range missiles for NATO. But he implied that henceforth he will depend increasingly on the intercontinental ballistic missile. "The farther you go down the road of the I.C.B.M.," he said, "the less interesting it is to employ additional Intermediate Range Missiles. The ICBM has a range of better than 5-thousand miles. It can, therefore, be launched against Russia from bases in the United States. This, McElroy pointed out, gives us "complete control". He also announced that the delayed cutback in American ground forces " is about ready to start." The cut in Army and Marine Corps personnel would amount to about 55-thousand men. At the same time, McElroy spoke of building up the ground forces of our allies. My colleague, David Schoenbrun, cables me that press reports of the McElroy news conference have "stirred up a hornet's nest in Paris." Schoenbrun says NATO officials do not want to be quoted because they have not seen the full text of what McElroy said but that they sent "a number" of cables to Washington, demanding an explanation. For years, Schoenbrun points out, The Communists have been claiming that the United States eventually would sit back with its long-range missiles and let its allies in Europe supply the "Cannon-folder". Reports of McElroy's news conference reaching Paris, he says, seemed to confirm Russia's propaganda. The special statement put out by the State Department this afternoon seeks to allay allied fears. It says: "We do not find in the transcript of Secretary McElroy's comments any departure from U. S. defense strategy such as has been alleged in some of the press stories.

There have, in fact, been no basic changes in U.S. defense policies." The statement emphasizes that the United States still wants its allies to set up bases for the I.R.B.M.---bases, that is, for missiles of only 15-hundred-mile range---and that the United States program for developing intercontinental missiles is only part of our over-all strategy for free world defense.

Army chief of staff, General Taylor, told a news conference today that the strength of the Army may be cut by 30-thousand men in the next few months. The Army, he said, will need 3-billion dollars a year for the next five years to "modernize" its ground forces. The 3-billion-dollar figure is more than double the amount of money provided for modernization in the current Army budget.

Reports from Washington say that President Eisenhower is almost certain to ask Congress to increase the federal gasoline tax. The present federal tax on gasoline is three cents a gallon.

The Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial production went up slightly in October for the sixth consecutive month. Production of non-durable goods---such as food and clothing---advanced on a broad front. Total new construction---industrial and residential---reached a new record rate. Gains in the auto and glass manufacturing industries were limited, due to work stoppages.

Moscow Radio and the entire Soviet press today publicized the new Seven Year Plan, aimed at expanding Russia's industrial production by 80 percent. They quoted a report by Khrushchev that in 1965 the Communist bloc will be producing more than half of the world's industrial goods. Khrushchev also predicted that by 1970 they would have the highest standard of living in the world. Thus, he said, the victory of communism over capitalism will be assured.

The Moscow radio tonight rejected as "a clumsy maneuver" the West's latest effort to break the deadlock at the Geneva conference for the cessation of nuclear tests. Yesterday, the United States submitted a draft treaty, coupling a suspension of tests with adequate controls. Russia has demanded that the tests be stopped first...permanently and unconditionally...and that controls be worked out later. We insist that a control system must come first. Tonight's Moscow broadcast called on the United States and Britain to "stop hedging".

Three United States Army trucks were held for more than eight hours today by Russian border guards at a checkpoint outside of Berlin. The Russians demanded the right to search the vehicles...which were bound for West Germany. The drivers refused, insisting that the Russian guards had no such right. The trucks finally were released after American officials filled a protest at Russian Army headquarters in East Berlin. This is the first harrassment of an American convoy since Khrushchev's speech last Monday...calling for an end to four-power control of Berlin.

Representatives of the United States, Britain and France---the three Western powers in Berlin---conferred in West Berlin today regarding possible eventualities. An American spokesman said after the meeting that a unilaterial Russian withdrawal from any of the four-power agreements on Berlin was not expected.

The demand by Khrushchev that the Four Powers get out of Berlin has by now stirred up a strong reaction in the West. Bonn has hinted that it will break off relations with Moscow if anything is done to drive the West out. Washington and London have responded officially with reminders that they are in Berlin by incontestible rights, and asserted that they intend to stay. And a ringing affirmation to this effect is to be sought from the Ministerial meeting of the Nato Council in Paris next month.

But the nature of the threat already has changed. It now is officially explained in East Berlin that the Russians are not planning to take out their own troops and leave East Germany in full charge. To do that would at once bring on a crisis. The Russians will withdraw only if the Western Powers also withdraw. And Premier Grotewohl of the East German Government has explained that the Khrushchev proposal is being misunderstood. The main question, he said, is not Berlin, but is to come to an understanding among Germans and to preserve peace. By an understanding among Germans he means a German settlement negotiated between the Two Germanys, which is the Soviet formula for re-uniting Germany.

What Khrushchev and the East Germans are after, and now are pressing for, is confederation. They insist that East Germany, where socialization of industry and land is far along, must keep reforms and enjoy complete local autonomy in the Confederation. They want local autonomy, not only to preserve the changed status of property, but because it means the continuation of the Communist bureaucracy. The Confederation's central government would have control of foreign policy, trade and national finance, in which East Germany would have only a minority voice. But if the Communists are to negotiate with the West Germans, they do not intend to negotiate themselves out of power altogether.

The Western formula for German re-unification is that free elections must precede negotiations. The West is confident that if really free elections are held in East Germany, the Communist regime will be voted out of existence. And the Germany that would re-unite would be a unit, which could be expected to remain a member of NATO and a devoted associate of the West.

Obviously these two plans are irreconcilable. If the Western plan were to be adopted, the Soviet Union would suffer a staggering defeat which might lead to the loosening of the whole Soviet satellite structure. No doubt that is one reason so many in the West want it. But because the Soviet Union is strong - stronger than before with its nuclear missiles - it will not permit it to happen.

The Soviet formula statts with negotiations at the top between East and West Germany before there are any elections. It also insists that the German confederation must end its military alliance with the West and not become a member of NATO. Dr. Adenauer would not negotiate on any such terms. He staunchly refuses to recognize the East German regime. He even recalled his Ambassador from Yugoslavia when Tito recognized the East German Government.

But it would be a mistake to believe that all West Germans are dead set against the creation of a German Federation, even if it leaves the Communists in charge of local affairs in their sector.

If the choice is between this and a long continuation of the present deadlock and the persistent danger of war, they would prefer Federation. They even believe that such a Federation would win approval in both parts of Germany in free elections.

The idea also has appeal in West Europe because of the growing belief that peace would be best served by the disengagement of all military forces from Central Europe. Many British Laborites take this view, just as many Frenchmen would like to keep the Germans disarmed. A United Germany would not automatically assume the duties of West Germany in NATO. In the West's treaty with West Germany it is specifically provided that a re-united Germany is free to make its own choice in that matter. If unification were to become part of a broader settlement that went on to military disengagement by both East and West, it is certain that many Germans would vote for it. In fact, many Germans in high places in the Government are already reconciled to the idea of Federation with East Germany. They feel that a refusal to sit down with East Germans is getting them nothing, and they are more interested in German problems than in the great power struggle with the Soviet Union. It is to these Germans, and to the advocates of disengagement, that the Khrushchev campaign is directed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for thtoday. Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

ED MURROW: The news continues to be a rather monotonous mixture of good and bad...reminding one of Charles Dickens' opening sentence in his Tale of Two Cities. "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times. It was the age of reason, it was the age of foolishness. It was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair." That's the situation today.

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Nov. 17, 1958

This is the news:

A state of emergency has been proclaimed in the Sudan, following seizure of power by the Army in a bloddless coup. / All political parties have been dissolved and publication of newspapers suspended. / Parliament also have been dissolved. / The leader of the revolt, General Abboud, said he had acted to put an end to corruption and political instability. The parties, he said, "did not seek to safeguard Sudan's independence or the progress of her people." / The capital city of Khartoum is reported quiet. / And tonight the country's two most influential religious leaders broadcast statements of their support. / There have been differences between Egypt and the Sudan over their common frontier and the use of Nile River water, if Egypt builds the Aswan High Dam. The Khartoum radio said tonight that the Sudan wants to restore good relations with President Nasser. A spokesman for General Abboud said earlier that he wanted to maintain friendly relations with all countries "on an equal basis." In Cairo, there is...at the moment...an apparent reticence on the part of Egyptian officials to predict.

~~In Washington, the State Department says there is "no reason to believe that this is not entirely an internal matter." The United States ambassador to the Sudan reports that all Americans are believed safe.~~

Jordan today dropped its complaint to the United Nations over the interception of King Hussein's aircraft last week by Syrian jet fighters. Jordan said the matter was being dropped "in the interest of keeping the Arab ship from getting embroiled once more in turbulent international currents."

The State Department said today that it has protested Soviet interferenc with two American aircraft. A department spokesman disclosed that Russian fighters fired on a U.S. Air Force plane in the Baltic Sea area on November 7. On the same day, three "simulated attacks" were made on an American aircraft flying over the Sea of Japan. ~~The department said both aircraft were making normal training flights well outside Soviet territory. Neither aircraft was hit.~~ The department warned that if there is a continuation of such interference, Russia must bear full responsibility for the consequences.

In Geneva today, Russia suggested that two treaties be negotiated for nuclear test suspension, instead of just one. The Russians submitted... separately...a draft agreement on discontinuance of tests and a draft treaty on controls. And they proposed that both agreements be signed simultaneously. The Americans are reported cool to this proposal. Western sources point out that they could commit themselves to an agreement to end nuclear tests and still not have a functioning control system. At the other Geneva conference for the prevention of surprise attack Russia proposed today that all aircraft carrying nuclear weapons be prohibited from flying over either foreign territory or over the high seas. This would make close down all our overseas bases.

~~Legislators from 15 NATO countries...meeting in Paris...voted today to send a NATO satellite into outer space next year.~~ The plan to put up such a satellite for strictly peaceful purposes was submitted by

Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State. The legislators also passed a resolution recommending that the NATO Council draw up a basic long-range policy for stimulating NATO development and research.]

Democratic Senator Johnson told the United Nations political committee today that on the subject of dedicating outer space to peaceful purposes, "there are no differences within our government, between our parties, or among our people." The Senate majority leader was invited by Secretary of State Dulles to present the American position. Johnson urged the United Nations to approve the American proposal calling for establishment of a special committee to explore all aspects of the space problem. He appealed for international cooperation.

Senator Gore of Tennessee called at the White House today to report to President Eisenhower on the Geneva conference for suspension of nuclear weapons tests. Gore has been attending the conference as an observer. He suggested that the United States "seize the initiative" and challenge Russia to agree to a three-year suspension of all nuclear tests conducted above ground.

[In Vatican City, Pope John today named 23 new cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church. The new College of Cardinals...after the consistory next month...will have 75 members, the largest membership in the history of the church. ~~For nearly four centuries, the prescribed membership of the Secred College has been 70.~~ Of the new cardinals, two are American---Archbishop O'Hara of Philadelphia and Archbishop Cushing of Boston. ~~Perhaps the best known Italian prelate named today is Archbishop Montini of Milan.~~

The White House says President Eisenhower plans to leave Washington Thursday or Friday for his customary November vacation at the National Golf Club in Augusta. News Secretary Hagerty says the President will be in Augusta for about 10 days.

George McConnaughy, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, today denied under oath that he ever solicited money for his vote in the "Channel Four" Pittsburgh television case. He called rumors that he had solicited bribes "unbelievable" and "vicious". McConnaughy testified before the House committee on legislative oversight. The committee has heard second and third-hand reports of ~~[illegible]~~ ~~Pittsburgh [illegible] McConnaughy~~ bribes offered and solicited in the Pittsburgh case. McConnaughey said one of the people interested in the case once suggested that he might give some legal business to his son...who is an attorney...but that he--McConnaughey--changed the conversation as rapidly as I could." He said the subject was dropped. The committee is turning its records of four days of testimony over to the Justice Department for possible prosecution for perjury.

Edward R. Murrow: November 17, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

When the story of 1958 comes to be written, two events are likely to rank as the most important economic developments of the year. / One is the introduction of communes on mainland China. / The other is the announcement of the Soviet Union's new seven-year plan. / These events may shape the future, not only of Russia and China, but of the world. / Our own big economic story of the year shows no such boldness on our part. It is our recovery from the recession.

The announcement of the seven-year plan last week was adequately reported, but it was overshadowed in the news, by the new Berlin crisis, and reports from the deadlocked Geneva conferences. / We also were encouraged not to take the seven-year plan seriously, because it was promptly discredited as being based on unreliable statistics, and that it set goals that cannot be achieved.

As the Russians plan it, industrial production is to grow eighty percent in seven years. / This is an expansion of over eleven percent a year, which is more than double our best year, and roughly three times our normal rate of expansion. / During the recession, of course, we stopped expanding altogether.

The Russians expect to expand production of heavy goods more than consumer goods. The figure for heavy goods is eighty-five to eighty-eight percent; for consumer goods sixty-two to sixty-five percent. It is promised that the real income for all workers - factory, office and farm - will go up forty percent by 1965. By then the Communist bloc is to have more industrial production than all the rest of the world put together. That year the Russians intend to have the highest per capita production in Europe, and to have the highest in the world by 1970. That, Khrushchev said, would give the Soviet people the highest living standard in the world.

One fallacy of these claims lies in their comparing the Soviet Union in seven and twelve years with the United States of today. This pre-supposes that we stop growing. If we did, we would lose first place as world leader. But now that the recession is passing we can expect to start expanding again. However, if we only grow at the earlier rate we shall be overtaken, if not in seven or twelve years, then not long thereafter.

So the seriousness to us of the seven-year plan lies in its workability. The comfortable thing to say about it is that the goals can't be reached, and forget about the whole business. But there are factors in favor of a big Soviet expansion that cannot be forgotten. One is that the Soviet form of society is tailored for swift industrial expansion. Much of the Soviet increase of heavy industry is to be for production of weapons. But a big part of it will be the building of factories. Soviet industry can concentrate on automation more easily than ours. This requires a high degree of technological skill, which Soviet education is providing in a way that has made the West catch its breath. Very extensive automation needs long-term co-ordination of output and consumption, which is difficult to provide in an uncontrolled economy, but is quite practicable in a regimented one. Once the Soviet Union starts making consumer goods in volume, it can produce them in a quantity not only to satisfy the starved Russian market, but the starved markets of under-developed countries.

Another factor in favor of the Russians is their vast reserve of national resources. We are rapidly using ours up. They are just beginning to develop theirs.

The Soviet Union also has control over its labor. It can train its manpower according to plan. It can induce workers to move from one part of the country to another. It alone can fix wages and working conditions. The new educational program announced along with the seven-year plan will make virtually every student in the country a part of the national labor force for two full years. [This is a regression from the ambitious educational program which has startled the world, but it gives the State a huge labor reserve for farms and factories.]

Khrushchev makes no secret of it to anyone he talks with; he expects the Soviet Union to conquer the world economically, not militarily. If he were going to do it by force of arms, he would not publish his staff plans. But the staff plans for the economic victory are proclaimed to all. They may strike onlookers as being too grandiose. But even if these staff plans are discounted heavily, they still are a challenge to this country. If they were military plans, one can be sure they would be studied carefully and the needed steps would be taken to meet them. We have less experience in acting nationally in economic matters, something we have only done in time of war. But since our place in the world is just as much at stake, we need to understand what may be happening, and do something about it. —

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan. —

Word for Today

Will Rogers was prophetic in his autobiography...published more than 30 years ago. Speaking of the Russians he said, "They are going to be dangerous competitors. We just can't laugh it off. It's a terrible way to live..and do...but you can't beat hard work, sacrifice, and unlimited resources. It's liable, if it just half way works out, to have us winging on our foreign trade."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A state of emergency has been proclaimed in the Sudan, following seizure of power by the Army in a bloodless coup. All political parties have been dissolved and publication of newspapers suspended. Parliament also have been dissolved. The leader of the revolt, General Abboud, said he had acted to put an end to corruption and political instability. The parties, he said, "did not seek to safeguard Sudan's independence or the progress of her people." The capital city of Khartoum is reported quiet. And tonight the country's two most influential religious leaders broadcast statements of their support. There have been differences between Egypt and the Sudan over their common frontier and the use of Nile River water, if Egypt builds the Aswan High Dam. The Khartoum radio said tonight that the Sudan wants to restore good relations with President Nasser. A spokesman for General Abboud said earlier that he wanted to maintain friendly relations with all countries "on an equal basis." In Cairo, there is... at the moment...an apparent reticence on the part of Egyptian officials to predict

Jordan today dropped its complaint to the United Nations over the interception of King Hussein's aircraft last week by Syrian jet fighters. Jordan said the matter was being dropped "in the interest of keeping the Arab ship from getting embroiled once more in turbulent international currents."

The State Department said today that it has protested Soviet interference with two American aircraft. A department spokesman disclosed that Russian fighters fired on a U.S. Air Force plane in the Baltic Sea area on November 7. On the same day, theee "simulated attacks" were made on an American aircraft flying over the Sea of Japan.

In Geneva today, Russia suggested that two treaties be negotiated for nuclear test suspension, instead of just one. The Russians submitted...separately a draft agreement on discontinuance of tests and a draft treaty on controls. And they proposed that both agreements be signed simultaneously. The Americans are reported cool to this proposal. Western sources point out that they could commit themselves to an agreement to end nuclear tests and still not have a functioning control system. At the other Geneva conference for the prevention of surprise attack, Russia proposed today that all aircraft carrying nuclear weapons be prohibited from flying over either foreign territory or over the high seas. This would make close down all our overseas bases.

Democratic Senator Johnson told the United Nations political committee today that on the subject of dedicating outer space to peaceful purposes "there are no differences within our government, between our parties, or among our people." The Senate majority leader was invited by Secretary of State Dulles to present the American position. Johnson urged the United Nations to approve the American proposal calling for establishment of a special committee to explore all aspects of the space problem. He appealed for international cooperation.

Senator Gore of Tennnssee called at the White House today to report to President Eisenhower on the Geneva conference for suspension of nuclear weapons tests. Gore has been attending the conference as an observer. He suggested that the United States "seize the initiative" and challenge Russia to agree to a three-year suspension of all nuclear tests conducted above ground.

In Vatican City, Pope John today named 23 new cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church. The new College of Cardinals...after the consistory next month...will have 75 members, the largest membership in the history of the church.

The White House says President Eisenhower plans to leave Washington Thursday or Friday for his customary November vacation at the National Golf Club in Augusta. News Secretary Hagerty says the President will be in Augusta for about 10 days.

George McConnaughy, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission today denied under oath that he ever solicited money for his vote in the "Channel Four" Pittsburgh television case. He called rumors that he had solicited bribes "unbelievable" and "vicious". McConnaughy testified before the House committee on legislative oversight. The committee has heard second and third hand reports of bribes offered and solicited in the Pittsburgh case. McConnaughey said one of the people interested in the case once suggested that he might give some legal business to his son...who is an attorney...but that he---McConnaughey---"changed the conversation as rapidly as I could." He said the subject was dropped. The committee is turning its records of four days of testimony over to the Justice Department for possible prosecution for perjury.

When the story of 1958 comes to be written, two events are likely to rank as the most important economic developments of the year. One is the introduction of communes on mainland China. The other is the announcement of the Soviet Union's new seven year plan. These events may shape the future, not only of Russia and China but of the world. Our own big economic story of the year shows no such boldness of our part. It is our recovery from the recession. The announcement of the seven-year plan last week was adequately reported, but it was overshadowed in the news by the new Berlin crisis and reports from the deadlocked Geneva conference. We also were encouraged not to take the seven-year plan seriously, because it was promptly discredited as being based on unreliable statistics, and that it set goals that cannot be achieved.

As the Russians plan it, industrial production is to grow eighty percent in seven years. This is an expansion of over eleven percent a year, which is more than double our best year, and roughly three times our normal rate of expansion. During the recession, of course, we stopped expanding altogether.

The Russians expect to expand production of heavy goods more than consumer goods. The figure for heavy goods is eighty-five to eighty-eight percent; for consumer goods sixty-two to sixty-five percent. It is promised that the real income for all workers - factory, office and farm - will go up forty percent by 1965. By then the Communist bloc is to have more industrial production than all the rest of the world put together. That year the Russians intend to have the highest per capita production in Europe, and to have the highest in the world by 1970. That, Khrushchev said, would give the Soviet people the highest living standard in the world.

On fallacy of these claims lies in their comparing the Soviet Union in seven and twelve years with the United States of today. This pre-supposes that we stop growing. If we did, we would lose first place as world leader. But now that the recession is passing we can expect to start expanding again. However, if we only grow at the earlier rate we shall be overtaken, if not in seven or twelve years, then not long thereafter.

So the seriousness to us of the seven-year plan lies in its workability. The comfortable thing to say about it is that the goals can't be reached, and forget about the whole business. But there are factors in favor of a big Soviet expansion that cannot be forgotten. One is that the Soviet form of society is tailored for swift industrial expansion. Much of the Soviet increase of heavy industry is to be for production of weapons. But a big part of it will be the building of factories. Soviet industry can concentrate on automation more easily than ours. This requires a high degree of technological skill, which Soviet education is providing in a way that has made the West catch its breath. Very extensive automation needs long-term co-ordination of output and consumption, which is difficult to provide in an uncontrolled economy, but is quite practicable in a regimented one. Once the Soviet Union starts making consumer goods in volume, it can produce them in a quantity not only to satisfy the starved Russian market, but the starved markets of under-developed countries.

Another factor in favor of the Russians is their vast reserve of national resources. We are rapidly using ours up. They are just beginning to develop theirs.

The Soviet Union also has control over its labor. It can train its manpower according to plan. It can induce workers to move from one part of the country to another. It alone can fix wages and working conditions. The new educational program announced along with the seven-year plan will make virtually every student in the country a part of the national labor force for two full years. This is a regression from the ambitious educational program which has startled the world, but it gives the State a huge labor reserve for farms and factories.

Khrushchev makes no secret of it to anyone he talks with, he expects the Soviet Union to conquer the world economically, not militarily. If he were going to do it by force of arms, he would not publish his staff plans. But the staff plans for the economic victory are proclaimed to all. They may strike onlookers as being too grandiose. But even if these staff plans are discounted heavily, they still are a challenge to this country. If they were military plans, one can be sure they would be studied carefully and the needed steps would be taken to meet them. We have less experience in acting nationally in economic matters, something we have only done in time of war. But since our place in the world is just as much at stake, we need to understand what may be happening, and do something about it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Will Rogers was prophetic in his autobiography...published more than 30 years ago. Speaking of the Russians he said, "They are going to be dangerous competitors. We just can't laugh it off. It's a terrible way to live...and do...but you can't beat hard work, sacrifice, and unlimited resources. It's liable, if it just half way works out, to have us winging on our foreign trade."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Nov. 18, 1958

This is the news:

Russia today proposed the creation of a permanent committee "for cooperation in the study of cosmic space, for peaceful purposes." It suggested that the groundwork for the organization be done by an 11-nation "preparatory committee". This preparatory group would work on the problem for a year, and then report to the 1959 General Assembly. The permanent committee would continue the space research, now being conducted as part of the International Geophysical Year, and it would have "close links" with the United Nations. In submitting this proposal, before the United Nations political committee, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin dropped Russia's previous demand, that the question of space control be tied in with the abolition of American bases overseas. Zorin made it clear that Russia will continue to press for the abolition of these bases. But he said, "We do not feel like wasting the General Assembly's time."

→

Before making his new proposal, Zorin conferred privately with United States Ambassador Lodge. Lodge called it "a sign that the Soviet Union may be willing to cooperate in some peaceful endeavor in outer space. And he said the plan had been sent to the State Department in Washington for further study. Britain's chief delegate, Sir Pierson Dixon, called the Russian proposal "a step in the right direction." It was noted that the title of the proposed committee omits the word "control". The United States had earlier joined Britain and 18 other nations in calling for creation of a similar study committee. This committee would have had nine countries as members and nothing had been said about it being permanent. In fact, it would make a study of the problem of space control and report its findings more in the nature of the "preparatory committee" Russia has now proposed. The [redacted] according to the [redacted], France, Russia, India, [redacted], Sweden, Argentina, Czechoslovakia, Roumania and Poland.

Secretary of State Dulles is making a speech tonight...in Cleveland... entitled "Principles and Policies in a Changing World." / Nothing, he will say, would be more dangerous than to operate on the theory that if hostile and evil forces do not readily change, it is always we who must change to accommodate them. / "Capacity to change is indispensable; equally indispensable is the capacity to hold fast that which is good."

Mr. Dulles will note a seeming inability "to articulate a basic philosophy for our times." / "We seem to be treating freedom as an opportunity for moral license, and our productive power seems often to be dedicated to frivolities." He will say: "In some respects, we seem to be as materialistic as the Communists, but without their supporting philosophy and efficiency. Surely when we concern ourselves with change, we must not ignore the need for changing ourselves." / ~~Dulles will be speaking before a World Order~~ Study Conference, sponsored by the National Council ~~of Churches~~ of Christ.

The United States today offered to "intensify" its participation in technical assistance programs in Latin America. The offer was made to representatives of 21 American republics, meeting in Washington.

→

C. Douglas Dillon, undersecretary of state for economic affairs, spoke for the United States. While pledging cooperation, he warned that government loan programs can never take the place of private investment. The United States, he said, is prepared to negotiate tax agreements in order to make investments in Latin America more attractive. And he pledged this country's participation in the creation of an Inter-American Bank at the earliest possible date.

In Argentina, Vice President Gomez has resigned. Last week, President Frondizi accused Gomez of trying to overthrow the government in a palace coup. Gomez denied the accusation.

General Abboud today assumed all legislative, juridicial and executive power in the Sudan. The general overthrew the government yesterday in order, he said, to eliminate "political corruption and chaos." The Sudanese parliament...and all political parties...were dissolved. He has appointed a cabinet of 12 members, dominated by military officers and also what is called a Supreme Council. This council is made up entirely of the military. Abboud reserved for himself the premiership and the post of Minister of Defense. His regime was recognized today by the United Arab Republic and Jordan.

In Morocco today, King Mohamed reiterated that all foreign troops must leave the country, including U.S. Air Force personnel. The king called the presence of French, Spanish and American troops on Moroccan soil "a contradiction of sovereignty." The United States has four bases in Morocco, belonging to the Strategic Air Command. Negotiation on their status already is in progress. The United States agrees to pull out, but the matter of timing is still to be resolved. King Mohamed said today that the withdrawal must be "unconditional".

~~The Commerce Department reports a sharp increase in American exports to Russia, measured by dollar volume. Export licenses for the third quarter totaled 10 million dollars. Five and a half million dollars of this was due to a single Russian order for sheet steel.~~ is designed to cut down the amount of cash borrowing, due to be announced in January. This is believed to be the first time that the Treasury Department has ever offered certificates and notes at a discount from face value.

The Treasury Department today announced a new plan for refinancing government indebtedness. Notes and certificates will be offered at a discount to holders of issues maturing next month in the amount of more than 12-billion dollars. The department also plans to raise 2-billion, 600-million dollars of new money through a revamping of its weekly auction of Treasury bills. This action...over the next three months...

Citizens of Norfolk, Virginia, voted today on whether they want the six schools closed in Norfolk reopened on an integrated basis. The vote will be an expression of public sentiment, not binding either upon Governor Almond or the Norfolk City Council. The "returns" are not in.

Edward R. Murrow: November 18, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The fall of the Sudanese Government through an army coup is another setback for democratic government in a lengthening list of such setbacks. But it has attracted more attention for what it means and does not mean in Nasser's campaign to dominate the Arab world. What makes the event intriguing is that while Nasser produced it, it was not what he intended or wanted. General Abboud, who seized power in Khartoum, is not a Nasser man. And what caused his intervention was not his desire to give Nasser an assist. Whatever his motives, he averted a settlement on Nasser's terms of the Nile water dispute between the two countries, and he kept an out-and-out Nasser man from taking over the government. Ali Abdel Rahman, Sudanese Minister of Commerce, and head of one of the coalition parties in the government, last week went to Cairo to negotiate a Nile settlement with Nasser. He went without telling his Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is quite Western in his orientation. In Cairo Rahman saw Nasser several times a day and came to an agreement with him. When word of its terms reached Khartoum, six members of the Cabinet resigned. Prime Minister Khalil was in a desperate position. He decided to defy Rahman by announcing the acceptance of a technical assistance program from the United States for the cotton industry which the Minister had rejected. He postponed the calling of Parliament and announced he would go to Cairo himself to seek better terms. But the leader of the Opposition, Ismael El Azhari, an outright Nasser man, also turned up in Cairo and came out for the agreement with Nasser. It was clear that if Khalil went to Cairo he was trapped. His own Minister and the leader of the Opposition were in league against him.

Here General Abboud stepped in. He acted to prevent the Prime Minister's overthrow by El Azhari, the Nasser tool, but he did it by overthrowing Khalil himself, probably with the Prime Minister's consent.

Abboud's seizure of power was a normal and bloodless military putsch. He cancelled the provisional Parliament, outlawed parties, imposed censorship and proclaimed that he had been compelled to act because of the corrupt and selfish betrayal of the country's interests by politicians. He also said it was his object to improve relations with the United Arab Republic, and "solve all outstanding questions and to eliminate artificially contrived tension between the two sister countries." If this looks like an embrace of Nasser, it was probably meant to. But it could just as well mean that Abboud is going to stand up for Sudan's full share of Nile water. Actually nobody in Washington or London knows precisely what Abboud is up to. But since Nasser doesn't either, he hasn't won a victory, at least not yet.

Behind the Sudan drama lies one of the big economic and political issues of the Middle East, the development of the Nile. The question is whether the Nile is to be developed in a way that builds up Nasser or is to be developed regionally for the benefit of all nations affected by it. Nasser has persistently rejected a regional development.

When the United States was on the point of assisting in building the dam Aswan, it was playing along with the ambitious Nasser. Secretary Dulles withdrew the offer for political reasons and started a series of wholly unhappy events. What has not been sufficiently emphasized since then by the State Department, is that we were then ready, and have always been ready, to give financial assistance for the regional development program.

This would require the co-operation of five regions where the Nile or its tributaries flow - Egypt, Sudan, Ethiopia, Tanganyika and Uganda. Egypt still would be the key country and the key beneficiary. Nasser is trying to limit the amount of water the other countries use. He has been spending money lavishly in Sudan, buying political and newspaper support to further his control over the Nile.

If it turns out that the coup of General Abboud is a setback for Nasser, the State Department may find this a good moment to open again the consideration of a regional development of the Nile. The fact that the Soviet Union has made a down payment to Nasser for the Aswan Dam need not be an obstacle. This could be the opportunity to obtain truly international co-operation for a vast regional development. And if Nasser and the Soviet Union don't want it, it will not hurt anybody but them, if that is made clear.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

Secretary Dulles says that in this world of change, we ourselves need to change...and this we should not dread. For Washington Irving once said, "There is a certain relief in change, even though it be from bad to worse." "I have found," he said, "that in traveling in a stagecoach that it is often a comfort to shift one's position and be bruised in a new place."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia today proposed the creation of a permanent committee "for cooperation in the study of cosmic space for peaceful purposes." It suggested that the groundwork for the organization be done by an 11-nation "preparatory committee." This preparatory group would work on the problem for a year and then report to the 1959 General Assembly. The permanent committee would continue the space research now being conducted as part of the International Geophysical Year, and it would have "close links" with the United Nations. In submitting this proposal before the United Nations political committee, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin dropped Russia's previous demand that the question of space control be tied in with the abolition of American bases overseas. Zorin made it clear that Russia will continue to press for the abolition of these bases. But he said, "We do not feel like wasting the General Assembly's time." Before making his new proposal, Zorin conferred privately with United States Ambassador Lodge. Lodge called it "a sign that the Soviet Union may be willing to cooperate in some peaceful endeavor in outer space. And he said the plan had been sent to the State Department in Washington for further study. Britain's chief delegate Sir Pierson Dixon, called the Russian proposal "a step in the right direction." It was noted that the title of the proposed committee omits the word "control." The United States had earlier joined Britain and 18 other nations in calling for creation of a similar study committee. This committee would have had nine countries as members and nothing had been said about it being permanent. In fact, it would make a study of the problem of space control and report its findings more in the nature of the "preparatory committee" Russia has now peoposed.

Secretary of State Dulles is making a speech tonight...in Clevelend... entitled "Principles and Policies in a Changing World." Nothing, he will say, would be more dangerous than to operate on the theory that if hostile and evil forces do not readily change, it is always we who must change to accommodate them. "Capacity to change is indispensable; equally indispensable is the capacity to hold fast that which is good." Mr. Dulles will note a seeming inability "to articulate a basic philosophy for our times." "We seem to be treating freedom as an opportunity for moral license, and our productive power seems often to be dedicated to frivolities." He will say: "In some respects, we seem to be as materialistic as the Communists but without their supporting philosophy and efficiency. Surely when we concern ourselves with change, we must not ignore the need for changing ourselves."

The United States today offered to "intensify" its participation in technical assistance programs in Latin America. The offer was made to representatives of 21 American republics meeting in Washington. C. Douglas Dillon, undersecretary of state for economic affairs, spoke for the United States. While pledging cooperation, he warned that government loan programs can never take the place of private investment. The United States, he said, is prepared to negotiate tax agreements in order to make investments in Latin American more attractive. And he pledged this country's participation in the creation of an Inter-American Bank at the earliest possible date.

In Argentina, Vice President Gomez has resigned. Last week, President Frondizi accused Gomez of trying to overthrow the government in a palace coup. Gomez denied the accusation.

General Abboud today assumed all legislative, juridicial and executive power in the Sudan. The general overthrew the government yesterday in order, he said, to eliminate "political corruption and chaos." The Sudanese parliament... and all political parties....were dissolved. He has appointed a cabinet of 12 members, dominated by military officers and also what is called a Supreme Council. This council is made up entirely of the military. Abboud reserved for himself the premiership and the post of Minister of Defense. His regime was recognized today by the United Arab Republic and Jordan.

In Morocco today, King Mohamed reiterated that all foreign troops must leave the country, including U.S. Air Force personnel. The king called the presence of French, Spanish and American troops on Moroccan soil "a contradiction of sovereignty." The United States has four bases in Morocco, belonging to the Strategic Air Command. Negotiation on their status already is in progress. The United States agrees to pull out, but the matter of timing is still to be resolved. King Mohamed said today that the withdrawal must be "unconditional."

The Treasury Department today announced a new plan for refinancing government indebtedness. Notes and certificates will be offered at a discount to holders of issues maturing next month in the amount of more than 12-billion dollars. The department also plans to raise 2-billion, 600 million dollars of new money through a revamping of its weekly auction of Treasury bills. This action...over the next three months...is designed to cut down the amount of cash borrowing, due to be announced in January. This is believed to be the first time that the Treasury Department has ever offered certificates and notes at a discount from face value.

Citizens of Norfolk, Virginia voted today on whether they want the six schools closed in Norfolk reopened on an integrated basis. The vote will be an expression of public sentiment, not binding either upon Governor Almond or the Norfolk City Council. The "returns" are not in.

The fall of the Sudanese Government through an army coup is another setback for democratic government in a lengthening list of such setbacks. But it has attracted more attention for what it means and does not mean in Nasser's campaign to dominate the Arab world. What makes the event intriguing is that while Nasser produced it, it was not what he intended or wanted. General Abboud, who seized power in Khartoum, is not a Nasser man. And what caused his intervention was not his desire to give Nasser an assist. Whatever his motives, he averted a settlement on Nasser's terms of the Nile water dispute between the two countries, and he kept an out-and-out Nasser man from taking over the government. Ali Abdel Rahman, Sudanese Minister of Commerce, and head of one of the coalition parties in the government, last week went to Cairo to negotiate a Nile settlement with Nasser. He went without telling his Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is quite Western in his orientation. In Cairo Rahman saw Nasser several times a day and came to an agreement with him. When word of its terms reached Kartoum, six members of the Cabinet resigned. Prime Minister Khalil was in a desperate position. He decided to defy Rahman by announcing the acceptance of a technical assistance program from the United States for the cotton industry which the Minister had rejected. He postponed the calling of Parliament and announced he would go to Cairo himself to seek better terms. But the leader of the Opposition, Ismael El Ashari, an outright Nasser man, also turned up in Cairo and came out for the agreement with Nasser. It was clear that if Khalil went to Cairo, he was trapped. His own minister and the leader of the Opposition were in league against him.

Here General Abboud stepped in. He acted to prevent the Prime Minister's overthrow by El Azhari, the Nasser tool, but he did it by overthrowing Khalil himself probably with the Prime Minister's consent.

Abboud's seizure of power was a normal and bloodless military putsch. He cancelled the provisional Parliament, outlawed parties, imposed censorship and proclaimed that he had been compelled to act because of the corrupt and selfish betrayal of the country's interests by politicians. He also said it was his object to improve relations with the United Arab Republic, and "solve all outstanding questions and to eliminate artificially contrived tension between the two sister countries." If this looks like an embrace of Nasser, it was probably meant to. But it could just as well mean that Abboud is going to stand up for Sudan's full share of Nile water. Actually nobody in Washington or London knows precisely what Abboud is up to. But since Nasser doesn't either, he hasn't won a victory, at least not yet.

Behind the Sudan drama lies one of the big economic and political issues of the Middle East, the development of the Nile. The question is whether the Nile is to be developed in a way that builds up Nasser or is to be developed regionally for the benefit of all nations affected by it. Nasser has persistently rejected a regional development.

When the United States was on the point of asisting in building the dam in Aswan, it was playing along with the ambitious Nasser. Secretary Dulles withdrew the offer for political reasons and started a series of wholly unhappy events. What has not been sufficiently emphasized since then by the State Department, is that we were then ready, and have always been ready, to give financial assistance for the regional development program.

This would require the co-operation of five regions where the Nile or its tributaries flow - Egypt, Sudan, Ethiopia, Tanganyika and Uganda. Egypt still would be the key country and the key beneficiary. Nasser is trying to limit the amount of water the other countries use. He has been spending money lavishly in Sudan, buying political and newspaper support to further his control over the Nile.

If it turns out that the coup of General Abboud is a setbeck for Nasser, the State Department may find this a good moment to open again the consideration of a regional development of the Nile. The fact that the Soviet Union has made a down payment to Nasser for the Aswan Dam need not be an obstacle. This could be the opportunity to obtain truly international co-operation for a vast regional development. And if Nassar and the Soviet Union don't want it, it will not hurt anybody but them, if that is made clear.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Secretary Dulles says that in this world of change, we ourselves need to change...and this we should not dread. For Washington Irving once said, "There is a certain relief in change, even though it be from bad to worse. I have found" he said, "that in traveling in a stagecoach that it is often a comfort to shift one's position and be bruised in a new place."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Nov. 19, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of Defense McElroy today ordered the armed forces cut by 71-thousand men. / The Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps are all affected, but the Navy and Air Force reductions are relatively small. Army manpower would be cut by 31-thousand, the Marine Corps by 14-thousand. McElroy asked the service secretaries to start making the cuts now and, if "feasible", to complete the reductions by June 30, 1959. / His order was not unexpected. / The reductions had been scheduled earlier, but were held up because of the crisis last summer in the Middle East. / Simultaneously, McElroy ordered 9-thousand men drafted for the Army in January. / This is 2-thousand below the Army draft call announced for the past ten months. //

~~The lower draft quota is attributed to the over-all reduction in manpower and to a higher rate of Army re-enlistment.~~

West Germany today announced that it plans to double its men under arms by 1960. The announcement was made by West German Defense Minister Strauss at the NATO parliamentary conference in Paris. It was suggested ~~that~~ by the military committee of the conference that some of the limitations placed on West Germany's military strength (in the 1954 agreement giving it sovereignty) be lifted. This, it was argued, would enable West Germany to play a greater role in NATO defense.

Premier DeGaulle announces that he will go to West Germany a week from today to confer with Chancellor Adenauer "on problems of mutual interest." No details of the agenda were immediately announced. It will be the first visit to Germany by a French premier in twenty years. The last visit was made by Daladier...to Munich...in 1938.

The Associated Press says that Russia intends to turn over to East Germany control of all Allied traffic to West Berlin. The A.P. quotes "a responsible Soviet source" in Berlin. (I ~~should like to examine~~ Russian policy in this and other regards in ~~a few minutes~~).

The East-West conferences in Geneva on ending nuclear weapons tests and preventing surprise attack remain deadlocked. The Western powers did tell Russia today what technical apparatus for detecting a potential surprise attack might be used.

Secretary General Hammarskjold announces that United Nations military observers are being pulled out of Lebanon. The observer group has reported that its presence is no longer necessary in view of the improved relations between Lebanon and the United Arab Republic. The Lebanese government also has asked the United Nations Security Council to drop the complaint filed last Spring, that the United Arab Republic was interferring in Lebanon's internal affairs. Lebanon said, "Cordial and close relations between Lebanon and the United Arab Republic have resumed their normal course."

A military tribunal in Baghdad today sentenced former Premier Baban of Iraq to death by hanging. He is the second former Iraqi premier to be sentenced to death within a week. Both served King Faisal, who was killed in the revolt last July.

Britain today recognized the new military regime in the Sudan. Cairo newspapers are claiming that the former Sudanese government was overthrown as a reaction to American economic interference. ~~They also accuse the United States of trying to bribe members of the Sudanese parliament.~~

Israel has filed a murder complaint against Syria as the result of the death of Mrs. Joyce Doran, wife of the British air attache in Jerusalem. Mrs. Doran's body was found on Israeli territory, 800 yards FROM the Syrian frontier. Israeli police say she died of a bullet of the type commonly used by Syrian snipers.

On Cyprus today, British security forces cornered...and killed... Kyriaco Matsis, one of the leaders of the EOKA underground movement.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson held a news conference in Washington this afternoon and predicted that the new Congress will be "careful with the taxpayer's dollar." Johnson told reporters he expects the Senate to modify its rules so as to make it easier to curb filibusters. But he doubted that Congress will pass new civil rights legislation. It is "pretty hard", he said, to pass a bill that will give the President more authority than he used when he "pressed the button and sent the troops into Little Rock." Senator Johnson disclosed that he had met with President Eisenhower last evening. He said they did not discuss the charge Mr. Eisenhower made during the campaign that many Democratic candidates were "radical". However, Johnson said he did give the President the figures on the appropriation bills passed by the last Democratic controlled Congress. And these, he said, showed that Mr. Eisenhower's budget requests actually had been trimmed by five and a half billion dollars. House Speaker Joe Martin saw the President today...and said afterward that Mr. Eisenhower would do "everything humanly possible" to cut federal spending. He predicted that the President would veto any bill which he thought entailed the expenditure of too much money.

Governor Almond of Virginia says that yesterday's "straw vote" in Norfolk, on the reopening of schools on an integrated basis, shows that "the people feel deeply that the mixing of races is no solution to the problem." The vote against re-opening the schools was in the ratio of 3 to 2.

In Lake Michigan, only two survivors have been picked up from the sinking last night of the freighter "Carl D. Bradley", which broke in two in a storm. Thirty-three other crewmen are believed to have been DROWNED.

Edward R. Murrow: November 19, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Conducting Western policy against the Soviet Union is pretty much like a football game in which one side hardly ever has the ball. The West is a great defensive team. It has made some spectacular goal-line stands. But its greatness ends there. When it gets the ball it has no pre-arranged signals, it seldom can put eleven men into any play, and an individual star can only occasionally get loose for a long run.

The foreign policy of the Soviet Union is all of one piece. Right now the Kremlin has dealings in the two important East-West conferences in Geneva, in the United Nations, where control of outer space is being discussed, and in Germany where the three Western Powers are on notice to get out of Berlin. These are all major issues. All the plays are being called by the same quarterback, or at least thought out by the same head coach. The West has no head coach, and while there is a Western huddle at each of the Geneva conferences, at the United Nations and over the German crisis, nobody sits down to plan Western strategy as a whole. This is not said to suggest a remedy, for there probably is no way to unify the foreign policies of independent and sovereign Western democracies. It is merely a reminder of the disadvantage under which the West operates. It has to rely on defense and on Russian fumbles. Fortunately the Russians fumble quite often.

Under-Secretary of State Robert Murphy recalled in a speech this week that Sunday was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the recognition of the Soviet Union. And it seems, he said, "to mark the crescendo in the hard line" in Soviet relations with this country. That is an official admission that we are not getting anywhere with the Soviet Union, and don't much expect to.

A crisis is now blowing up over Berlin. The prompt statement of Secretary Dulles, that we would fight to stay in Berlin, has not headed it off. It probably is not the formula for dealing with what confronts us. For the Russians are not going to try to drive us out, and when they turn over the controls they now exercise to the East Germans, the East Germans will not try to drive us out.

Khrushchev already has said that he would make a proposal to the three Western Powers in writing, for a withdrawal from Berlin. The note has not arrived. It may be timed to arrive after President Eisenhower has begun his vacation. PRAVDA said yesterday that Khrushchev's plan for Berlin can be carried out without the consent of the three Powers. It also said that turning over Russia's occupation functions to East Germany was a "decision of the Soviet Government." In other words, it already has been made. It warned that a long legal squabble over the right to stay in Berlin would be useless. "Two sovereign states exist in Germany", it said, "and any reference to the occupation status has long lost its meaning."

It is only guesswork to anticipate Soviet strategy. But it is noteworthy that the Kremlin timed yesterday's concession in the U.N. outer space negotiations, to come shortly before the note is sent about Berlin. It happens that the concession doesn't give away anything in outer space. All it does is to drop the insistence on linking discussion of outer space with the abandonment of our foreign bases. But the world is asked to see that the Soviet Union is being reasonable, and to forget how unreasonable it is being in the two Geneva conferences.

The first thing the Soviet Union is after in Berlin is recognition of East Germany. For then the way is open for unification of the two Germanys in a Federation. So the pressure is not so much on getting Western troops out of Berlin, as on forcing the West to negotiate with East Germans for transportation facilities into the city, and across the corridor. Dr. Adenauer is dead against recognizing East Germany. So are we. But West Germans already are maintaining low-level relations with East German officials, and we have had some recent dealings on that level ourselves.

Now we are to be pressured into having more. The question will be, whether we will extend such day-to-day relations, and whether we can long contend that they are not de facto recognition. The State Department can be pretty arbitrary in such matters. We have been negotiating for months with Communist China, first in Geneva, now in Warsaw, and deny that this is de facto recognition. Judging from Khrushchev's statements, this won't be enough in Berlin. But to get even this much for East Germany would be a start.

The point to note in all this is that we are again on the defensive, getting ready to make another stand. We are digging in, so as not to lose too much. But to do that is not winning.

Back in a moment.

George Bryan.

Word for Today

The events in Germany are showing..once again...that initiative is a great thing. Jan Struther once said, "There are some situations in which we are unable to take action. All we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But there are other situations," she said, "in which we have the power to act. And that is when we need all our firmness and singleness of purpose."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of Defense McElroy today ordered the armed forces cut by 71-thousand men. The Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps are all affected, but the Navy and Air Force reductions are relatively small. Army manpower would be cut by 31-thousand, the Marine Corps by 14-thousand. McElroy asked the service secretaries to start making the cuts now and, if "feasible," to complete the reductions by June 30, 1959. His order was not unexpected. The reductions had been scheduled earlier, but were held up because of the crisis last summer in the Middle East. Simultaneously, McElroy ordered 9-thousand men drafted for the Army in January. This is 2-thousand below the Army draft call announced for the past ten months.

West Germany today announced that it plans to double its men under arms by 1960. The announcement was made by West German Defense Minister Strauss at the NATO parliamentary conference in Paris. It was suggested by the military committee of the conference that some of the limitations placed on West Germany's military strength (in the 1954 agreement giving it sovereignty) be lifted. This, it was argued, would enable West Germany to play a greater role in NATO defense.

Premier DeGaulle announces that he will go to West Germany a week from today to confer with Chancellor Adenauer "on problems of mutual interest." No details of the agenda were immediately announced. It will be the first visit to Germany by a French premier in twenty years. The last visit was made by Daladier...to Munich...in 1938.

The Associated Press says that Russia intends to turn over to East Germnay control of all Allied traffic to West Berlin. The A.P. quotes "a responsible Soviet source" in Berlin.

The East-West conferences in Geneva on ending nuclear weapons tests and preventing surprise attack remain deadlocked. The Western powers did tell Russia today what technical apparatus for detecting a potential surprise attack might be used.

Secretary General Hammarskjold announces that United Nations military observers are being pulled out of Lebanon. The observer group has reported that its presence is no longer necessary in view of the improved relations between Lebanon and the United Arab Republic. The Lebanese government also has asked the United Nations Security Council to drop the complaint filed last Spring, that the United Arab Republic was interferring in Lebanon's internal affairs. Lebanon said, "Cordial and close relations between Lebanon and the United Arab Republic have resumed their normal course."

A military tribunal in Baghdad today sentenced former Premier Baban of Iraq to death by hanging. He is the second former Iraqi premier to be sentenced to death within a week. Both served King Faisal, who was killed in the revolt last July.

Britain today recognized ihe new military regime in the Sudan. Cairo newspapers are claiming that the former Sudanese government was overthrown as a reaction to American economic interference.

Israel has filed a murder complaint against Syria as the result of the death of Mrs. Joyce Doran, wife of the British air attache in Jerusalem. Mrs. Doran's body was found on Israeli territory, 800 yards from the Syrian frontier. Israeli police say she died of a bullet of the type commonly used by Syrian snipers.

On Cyprus today, British security forces cornered...and killed... Kyricos Matsis, one of the leaders of the EOKA underground movement.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson held a news conference in Washington this afternoon and predicted that the new Congress will be "careful with the taxpayer's dollar." Johnson told reporters he expects the Senate to modify its rules so as to make it easier to curb filibusters. But he doubted that Congress will pass new civil rights legislation, It is "pretty hard," he said, to pass a bill that will give the President more authority than he used when he "pressed the button and sent the troops into Little Rock." Senator Johnson disclosed that he had met with President Eisenhower last evening. He said they did not discuss the charge Mr. Eisenhower made during the campaign that many Democratic candidates were "radical." However, Johnson said he did give the President the figures on the appropriation bills passed by the last Democratic controlled Congress. And these, he said, showed that Mr. Eisenhower's budget requests had been trimmed by five and a half billion dollars. House Speaker Joe Martin saw the President today...and said afterward that Mr. Eisenhower would do "everything humanly possible" to cut federal spending. He predicted that the President would veto any bill which he thought entailed the expenditure of too much money.

Governor Almond of Virginia says that yesterday's "straw vote" in Norfolk, on the reopening of schools on an integrated basis, shows that "the people feel deeply that the mixing of races is no solution to the problem." The vote against re-opening the schools was in the ratio of 3 to 2.

In Lake Michigan, only two survivors have been picked up from the sinking last night of the freighter "Carl D. Bradley" which broke in two in a storm. Thirty-three other crewmen are believed to have been drowned.

Conducting Western policy against the Soviet Union is pretty much like a football game in which one side hardly ever has the ball. The West is a great defensive team. It has made some spectacular goal-line stands. But its greatness ends there. When it gets the ball, it has no pre-arranged signals, it seldom can put eleven men into any play, and an individual star can only occasionally get loose for a long run.

The foreign policy of the Soviet Union is all of one piece. Right now the Kremlin has dealings in the two important East-West conferences in Geneva, in the United Nations, where control of outer space is being discussed and in Germany where the three Western Powers are on notice to get out of Berlin. These are all major issues. All the plays are being called by the same quarterback, or at least thought out by the same head coach. The West has no head coach, and while there is a Western huddle at each of the Geneva conferences, at the United Nations and over the German crisis, nobody sits down to plan Western strategy as a whole. This is not said to suggest a remedy, for there probably is no way to unify the foreign policies of independent and sovereign Western democracies. It is merely a reminder of the disadvantage under which the West operates. It has to rely on defense and on Russian fumbles. Fortunately the Russians fumble quite often.

Under-Secretary of State Robert Murphy recalled in a speech this week that Sunday was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the recognition of the Soviet Union. And it seems, he said, "to mark the crescendo in the hard line" in Soviet relations with this country. That is an official admission that we are no getting anywhere with the Soviet Union, and don't much expect to.

A crisis is now blowing up over Berlin. The prompt statement of Secretary Dulles, that we would fight to stay in Berlin, has not headed it off. It probably is not the formula for dealing with what confronts us. For the Russians are not going to try to drive us out, and when they turn over the controls they now exercise to the East Germans, the East Germans will not try to drive us out.

Khrushchev already has said that he would make a proposal to the three Western Powers in writing, for a withdrawal from Berlin. The note has not arrived. It may be timed to arrive after President Eisenhower has begun his vacation. Pravda said yesterday that Khrushchev's plan for Berlin can be carried out without the consent of the three Powers. It also said that turning over Russia's occupation functions to East Germany was a "decision of the Soviet Government." In other words, it already has been made. It warned that a long legal squabble over the right to stay in Berlin would be useless. "Two sovereign states exist in Germany," it said, "and any reference to the occupation status has long lost its meaning."

It is only guesswork to anticipate Soviet strategy. But it is noteworthy that the Kremlin timed yesterday's concession in the U.N. outer space negotiations, to come shortly before the note is sent about Berlin. It happens that the concession doesn't give away anything in outer space. All it does is to drop the insistence on linking discussion of outer space with the abandonment of our foreign bases. But the world is asked to see that the Soviet Union is being reasonable, and to forget how unreasonable it is being in the two Geneva conferences.

The first thing the Soviet Union is after in Berlin is recognition of East Germany. For then the way is open for unification of the two Germanys in a Federation. So the pressure is not so much on getting Western troops out of Berlin, as on forcing the West to negotiate with East Germans for transportation facilities into the city, and across the corridor. Dr. Adenauer is dead against recognizing East Germany. So are we. But West Germans already are maintaining low-level relations with East German officials, and we have had some recent dealings on that level ourselves. Now we are to be pressured into having more. The question will be, whether we will extend such day-to-day relations, and whether we can long contend that they are not de facto recognition. The State Department can be pretty arbitrary in such matters. We have been negotiating for months with Communist China, first in Geneva, now in Warsaw, and deny that this is de facto recognition. Judging from Khrushchev's statements, this won't be enough in Berlin. But to get even this much for East Germany would be a start.

The point to note in all this is that we are again on the defensive, getting ready to make another stand. We are digging in, so as not to lose too much. But to do that is not winning.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The events in Germany are showing...once again...that initiative is a great thing. Jan Struther once said, "There are some situations in which we are unable to take action. All we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But there are other situations," she said, "in which we have the power to act. And that is when we need all our firmness and singleness of purpose."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Nov. 20, 1958

This is the news:

A West German spokesman says the Berlin situation is "very serious" but...at the moment..."not acute". / This appraisal of the situation, follows a surprise call made on Chancellor Adenauer today, by the Soviet ambassador in Bonn. / The Soviet ambassador outlined Russia's plans "for liquidating the occupation status of Berlin." / So far, there has been no announcement of these plans, but Adenauer immediately communicated them to the United States, Britain and France. / Adenauer's press officer said, that Russia seemed to be conducting a diplomatic offensive against West Berlin. / He stressed the word "diplomatic" as opposed to "military." There is speculation that Russia is about to turn over to the East German government the occupation rights which it has exercised in Berlin since 1945. This would give the East Germans control over transportation facilities used by the three Western powers in maintaining their garrisons in Berlin. It poses the possibility of a new Berlin Blockade, unless we negotiate with a regime which we have steadfastly refused to recognize. Soviet Premier Khrushchev said last week that "definite proposals" for ending four-power control of Berlin were being drafted, and a note containing these proposals is expected momentarily in Washington. CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reports, "No official in Bonn is doing any talking or predicting tonight." As a sidelight, Leiser notes that he---and a number of other Western correspondents---have been invited by Communist authorities to make an eight-day tour of East Germany. An indication, he says, that the Communist "squeeze" will remain on the diplomatic level for the next two weeks. The tour starts a week from today.

→

The Berlin crisis has overshadowed the NATO parliamentary meeting in Paris. The political committee of the conference passed a resolution today, denouncing Russia's action as "a transparent attempt to impose recognition of a puppet dictatorship, from which millions of people want to escape."

Paul-Henri Spaak, secretary general of NATO, said the Berlin crisis has reminded Europe that it can be endangered...and that to that extent it may have done some good. Spaak warned that Asia and Africa also are danger areas, due to Russia's economic-political drive. And he called for the creation of an organization...other than NATO...for meeting this non-military threat. As of today, he said, the free world does not have an organization competent to deal with the problem.

President Eisenhower met with the National Security Council this morning and then flew to Augusta, Georgia, for a vacation of about 10 days.

At the United Nations today, work began on a compromise proposal dealing with outer space. The United Nations political committee has before it two proposals---one submitted by Russia, the other by 20 countries, including Britain and the United States. The Western plan calls for creation of a committee of nine countries to study the problem of space control and report back to the United Nations in a year. Russia submitted a similar proposal day before yesterday, only its committee would represent 11 countries and pave the way for setting up a permanent group for dealing with the space problem. Russia also dropped its earlier demand that the question be tied in with abandonment of our bases overseas. Today the chief United States delegate, Cabot Lodge, conferred privately with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin in an effort to work out a compromise. And the political committee adjourned its debate to await the outcome of private negotiations. ~~While the West is said to be agreeable to the idea of a permanent committee, it reportedly objects to the composition of the committee as proposed by the Soviet Union. Zorin said earlier that this was a negotiable point.~~

The head of the American project to build a nuclear-powered airplane, Major General Keirn, said today that there is "an even chance" that Russia will fly one first. If the Russians are first, he would not expect their aircraft to be "too sophisitcated". Keirn emphasized that good progress is being made by the United States in developing an atomic airplane. He said: "We are now on the threshold of success in the various technological areas and will soon be ready to embark on an experimental flight development phase." He declined to give details.

Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas said today that if Majority Leader Johnson averts a Senate fight on the anti-filibuster question, he will be a "magician". / Johnson has said the issue can be settled in "an intelligent, dignified manner." / Under present Senate rules, 64 votes---or two-thirds of the total membership of the Senate---are required in order to shut off debate. Fulbright doesn't want this rule changed, but he calls Johnson's proposal that debate can be terminated by two-thirds of the senators present, "a good compromise." Spec Bulletin next page

Here in New York, a United States District Court judge has ruled that the Bethlehem Steel Corporation cannot merge with Youngstown Sheet and Tube. Judge Weinfield said that such a merger would tend to create a monopoly in the iron and steel industry. His decision is expected to be appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

The National Labor Relations Board announces that it will reopen hearings in the four-year-old dispute between the Kohler Company and the United Auto Workers Union. / New hearings are being ordered in light of testimony given last March before the Senate Rackets Committee. The U.A.W. strike against Kohler began in April, 1954.

[redacted] United Press International reports from Moscow that former Premier Bulganin is "seriously ill." The report gives no details.

Edward R. Murrow: November 20, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Fantasies of the future used to be confined to works of science fiction. Now they are news, which is a sign that we already like to feel that we live in the space age. Forecasts made to the American Rocket Society, at its New York meeting yesterday, are attracting nationwide attention.

For example, it was disclosed that a study is under way of a passenger rocket. The first one is likely to be about the size of a D.C. 3, and carry thirty to forty passengers. It would have a range of six thousand miles, a distance to be covered in two hours. The trip from New York to London would last an hour. The rocket would start off at a speed of about eight thousand miles an hour, rise to an altitude of twenty miles, and after the engines had burned out, glide the rest of the way and land finally at a comfortable hundred miles an hour.

The force of the acceleration on passengers would be three to four times the pull of gravity, as against one and one-half times in the commercial planes of today. This force would press passengers to their seats. They would not need seat belts, but might have to wear special harness to stay in position. But this would not be an unpleasant experience, though not recommended for heart patients or persons with respiratory diseases. There would be no hostesses in the rocket, and no meals would be served. The duration of the trip would be too short. The rocket itself would glow red-hot through most of the flight because of air friction, but passengers would be kept cool by air conditioning.

The study of the passenger rocket was reported by Dr. Robert A Cornog of Space Technological Laboratories, Los Angeles. He said that operating a passenger rocket will be more economical than the passenger plane of today, and a ticket to London would cost about half the present fare. However, applications for seats need not be rushed to Los Angeles. It will take another ten years to perfect the passenger rocket, and a cargo-carrying rocket will have to come first to demonstrate that the ship is safe.

Plans also were presented to the Rocket Society by Roy Johnson, Director of the Advanced Research Projects Division of the Defense Department, for satellites of many and wondrous powers. Three of them poised at chosen places 22,300 miles from the earth would permit the establishment of a worldwide radio network. Such satellites also could be used to detect and identify enemy missiles as soon as they are launched. This would increase the warning time by fifteen to twenty-five minutes, which might spell the difference between survival and annihilation.

The first of these satellites is scheduled for launching in 1960. It probably will be stationed somewhere over the Equator, and for it to poise there, it must circle the earth at exactly the same rate that the earth turns on its axis. Three such satellites properly fixed in space would permit direct communication between any two points on earth. The satellite would be launched in three stages. The first would be a cluster of eight Jupiter engines with a thrust of a million-and-a-half pounds. This is to be tested next Summer. Either the Atlas or the Titan will be used for the second stage. The third stage will be a high-energy propellant motor with a thrust of seventy-five thousand pounds. It is yet to be developed. The device would be able to put a two-ton payload into orbit, and could be used for many missions. One of them would be to send a manned vehicle around the moon on a return trip from the earth.

The Rocket Society was officially assured that the Pentagon has no plans for establishing a military base on the moon, which would seem to leave that celestial real-estate open for civilian use. Some civilians apparently are already interested in it as such, for the Bureau of Land Management in the Interior Department in Washington is now using a form letter to answer inquiries about how to obtain land on the moon or other planets. The writer is told with the best bureaucratic solemnity that: "It is not now, nor has ever been possible for anyone to make applications for, or obtain right to, land on the moon or planets through the United States Government. The United States," says the letter, "has as yet made no claim to any territory beyond the earth." Thereupon the writer is thanked for his inquiry.

The fact that such inquiries come to be made not only proves that we live in the space age. This ~~It also~~ suggests that our planet is far from being the most satisfactory place to live for some of its inhabitants.

Back in a moment.

George Bryan

Word for Today

James Breasted, the historian, observed that Man's struggle with himself has become increasingly far-reaching and dangerous. After all, this has been called the Age of Nuclear Terror. But if we are planning nuclear weapons, we are also planning rocket ships for tourists. In the phrase of Henry Bergson, the ~~French~~ philosopher, "The vital impulse is optimistic."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A West German spokesman says the Berlin situation is "very serious" but...at the moment..."not acute." This appraisal of the situation follows a surprise call made on Chancellor Adenauer today by the Soviet ambassador in Bonn. The Soviet ambassador outlined Russia's plans "for liquidating the occupation status of Berlin." So far, there has been no announcement of these plans, but Adenauer immediately communicated them to the United States, Britain and France. Adenauer's press officer said that Russia seemed to be conducting a diplomatic offensive against West Berlin. He stressed the word "diplomatic" as opposed to "military." There is speculation that Russia is about to turn over to the East German government the occupation rights which it has exercised in Berlin since 1945. This would give the East Germans control over tranasportation facilities used by the three Western powers in maintaining their garrisons in Berlin. It poses the possibility of a new Berlin Blockade, unless we negotiate with a regime which we have steadfastly refused to recognize. Soviet Premier Khrushchev said last week that "definite proposals" for ending four-power control of Berlin were being drafted, and a note containing these proposals is expected momentarily in Washington. CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reports, "No official in Bonn is doing any talking or predicting tonight." As a sidelight, Leiser notes that he---and a number of other Western correspondents---have been invited by Communist authorities to make an eight-day tour of East Germany. An indication, he says, that the Communist "squeeze" will remain on the diplomatic level for the next two weeks. The tour starts a week from today.

The Berlin crisis has overshadowed the NATO parliamentary meeting in Paris. The political committee of the conference passed a resolution today, denouncing Russia's action as "a transparent attempt to impose recognition of a puppet dictatorship, from which millions of people want to escape." Paul Henri Spaak, secretary general of NATO, said the Berlin crisis has reminded Europe that it can be endangered...and that to that extent it may have done some good. Spaak warned that Asia and Africa also are danger areas, due to Russia's economic-political drive. And he called for the creation of an organization ... other than NATO...for meeting this non-military threat. As of today, he said, the free world does not have an organization competent to deal with the problem.

President Eisenhower met with the National Security Council this morning and then flew to Augusta, Georgia for a vacation of about 10 days.

At the United Nations today, work began on a compromise proposal dealing with outer space. The United Nations political committee has before it two proposals---one sumbitted by Russia, the other by 20 countries, including Britain and the United States. The Western plan calls for creation of a committee of nine countries to study the problem of space control and report back to the United Nations in a year. Russia submitted a similar proposal day before yesterday, only its committee would represent 11 countries and pave the way for setting up a permanent group for dealing with the space problem. Russia also dropped its earlier demand that the question be tied in with abandonment of our bases overseas. Today the chief United States Delegate, Cabot Lodge, conferred privately with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin in an effort to work out a compromise. And the political committee adjourned its debate to await the outcome of private negotiations.

The head of the American project to build a nuclear-powered airplane, Major General Keirn, said today that there is "an even change" that Russia will fly one first. If the Russians are first, he would not expect their aircraft to be "too sophisticated." Keirn emphasized that good progress is being made by the United States in developing an atomic airplane. He said, "We are now on the threshold of success in the various technological areas and will soon be ready to embark on an experimental flight development phase." He declined to give details.

Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas said today that if Majority Leader Johnson averts a Senate fight on the anti-filibuster question, he will be a "magician." Johnson has said the issue can be settled in "an intelligent, dignified manner." Under present Senate rules, 64 votes---or two-thirds of the total membership of the Senate---are required in order to shut off debate. Fulbright doesn't want this rule changed, but he calls Johnson's proposal that debate can be terminated by two-thirds of the senators present "a good compromise."

United Press International reports from Moscow that former Premier Bulganin is "seriously ill." The report gives no details.

Here in New York, a United States District Court judge has ruled that the Bethlehem Steel Corporation cannot merge with Youngstown Sheet and Tube. Judge Weinfield said that such a merger would tend to create a monopoly in the iron and steel industry. His decision is expected to be appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

The National Labor Relations Board announces that it will reopen hearings in the four-year-old dispute between the Kohler Company and the United Auto Workers Union. New hearings are being ordered in light of testimony given last March before the Senate Rackets Committee, The U.A.W. strike against Kohler began in April, 1954.

Fantasies of the future used to be confined to works of science fiction. Now they are news, which is a sign that we already like to feel that we live in the space age. Forecasts made to the American Rocket Society, at its New York meeting yesterday, are attracting nationwide attention.

For example, it was disclosed that a study is under way of a passenger rocket. The first one is likely to be about the size of a D.C. 3, and carry thirty to forty passengers. It would have a range of six thousand miles, a distance to be covered in two hours. The trip from New York to London would last an hour. The rocket would start off at a speed of about eight thousand miles an hour, rise to an altitude of twenty miles, and after the engines had burned out, glide the rest of the way and land finally at a comfortable hundred miles an hour.

The force of the acceleration on passengers would be three to four times the pull of gravity, as against one and one-half times in the commercial planes of today. This force would press passengers to their seats. They would not need seat belts, but might have to wear special harness to stay in position. But this would not be an unpleasant experience, though not recommended for heart patients or persons with respiratory diseases. There would be no hostesses in the rocket and no meals would be served. The duration of the trip would be too short. The rocket itself would glow red-hot through most of the flight because of air friction, but passengers would be kept cool by air conditioning.

The study of the passenger rocket was reported by Dr. Robert A. Cornog of Space Technological Laboratories, Los Angeles. He said that operating a passenger rocket will be more economical than the passenger plane of today, and a ticket to London would cost about half the present fare. However, applications for seats need not be rushed to Los Angeles. It will take another ten years to perfect the passenger rocket, and a cargo-carrying rocket will have to come first to demonstrate that the ship is safe.

Plans also were presented to the Rocket Society by Roy Johnson, Director of the Advanced Research Projects Division of the Defense Department, for satellites of many and wondrous powers. Three of them poised at chosen places 22,300 miles from the earth would permit the establishment of a worldwide radio network. Such satellites also could be used to detect and identify enemy missiles as soon as they are launched. This would increase the warning time by fifteen to twenty-five minutes, which might spell the difference between survival and annihilation.

The first of these satellites is scheduled for launching in 1960. It probably will be stationed somewhere over the Equator, and for it to poise there, it must circle the earth at exactly the same rate that the earth turns on its axis. Three such satellites properly fixed in space would permit direct communication between any two points on earth. The satellite would be launched in three stages. The first would be a cluster of eight Jupiter engines with a thrust of a million-and-a-half pounds. This is to be tested next summer. Either the Atlas or the Titan will be used for the second stage. The third stage will be a high-energy propellant motor with a thrust of seventy-five thousand po ds. It is yet to be developed. The device would be able to put a two-ton payload into orbit, and could be used for many missions. One of them would be to send a manned vehicle around the moon on a return trip from the earth.

The Rocket Society was officially assured that the Pentagon has no plans for establishing a military base on the moon, which would seem to leave that celestial real-estate open for civilian use. Some civilians apparently are already interested in it as such, for the Bureau of Land Management in the Interior Department in Washington is now using a form letter to ans er inquiries about how to obtain land on the moon or other planets. The writer is told with the best bureaucratic solemnity that: "It is not now, nor has ever been possible for anyone to make applications for, or obtain right to, land on the moon or planets through the United States Government. The United States," says the letter, "has as yet made no claim to any territory beyond the earth." Thereupon the writer is thanked for his inquiry.

The fact that such inquiries come to be made not only proves that we live in the space age. This suggests that our planet is far from being the most satisfactory place to live for some of its inhabitants.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: James Breasted, the historian, observed that Man's struggle with himself has become increasingly far-reaching and dangerous. After all, this has been called the Age of Nuclear Terror. But if we are planning nuclear weapons, we are also planning rocket ships for tourists. In the phrase of Henry Bergson, the philosopher, "The vital impulse is optimistic."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 21, 1958

This is the news:

The Berlin crisis today provoked diplomatic activity on several fronts. The United States ambassador to West Germany, David Bruce, returned to Bonn from Washington and immediately went into conference with Heinrich Von Brentano, the West German foreign minister. Von Brentano then flew to Berlin. His government, he said, views the Soviet attitude with "great seriousness and concern." He has called home for consultation the West German ambassadors to Moscow, Washington, London, Paris and Rome.

The Western ambassadors in Moscow have been asked to present themselves at the Soviet Foreign Ministry tomorrow morning. They are expected...at that time...to be handed formal notes, setting forth Russia's plan for ending four-power control of Berlin. Russia presumably would turn its control functions in Berlin over to the East German regime. This means that the East German government (which we do not recognize) would control Allied traffic in and out of the city.

Russia's ambassador to West Germany suggested today that the transfer of control functions will take place before Christmas. He said at a diplomatic reception, "I hope it will go quickly. I believe the Germans will be able to celebrate a peaceful Christmas." There was a report today that Russian troops already had begun pulling out of East Berlin. Soviet authorities said the withdrawals which may have given rise to this rumor were part of a troop rotation program which has been going on for years.

It was announced that the East and West German governments have signed a new trade agreement. One clause of the agreement suggests that avenues of trade between East and West Germany will be kept open. There is, however, no guarantee that the supply routes to Berlin from West Germany may not be blocked. It is also pointed out that the agreement concerns civilian traffic, nothing about military access to Berlin...where the United States, Britain and France, together, maintain a garrison of 10-thousand men.

News Secretary Hagerty said today, "Our firm intentions in West Berlin remain unchanged." Hagerty made the statement at the President's vacation headquarters in Augusta, Georgia. By "firm intentions", he said, he meant "maintaining the integrity of West Berlin." A reporter asked Hagerty whether he was speaking for Britain and France as well as for the United States. He said he could speak only for the United States but emphasized that the Western powers are in close consultation. Mr. Eisenhower conferred on the telephone today with Christian Herter, acting secretary of state. Secretary Dulles is vacationing at his Duck Island retreat.

British Prime Minister Macmillan said tonight, "We intend to stay in Berlin." He expressed confidence that the problem can be solved peacefully, saying it was his "very strong impression" that the Russians would confine their moves to the realm of diplomacy.

And West German Chancellor Adenauer said tonight, "We must not lose our nerve."

In Geneva, the United States, Britain and Russia today began discussing specific proposals for ending nuclear weapons tests. The break in the agenda deadlock came with a tacit agreement to go ahead without a formal agenda---at least for the time being. / There was no break in the deadlock in the conference on prevention of surprise attack.

—>

In the United Nations today, East and West were unable to agree on a committee for studying the peaceful uses of outer space. / Russia wants a committee of 11 countries, four of whom would be from the Soviet bloc. The West objected to the idea of having four Communist countries on the committee. But, despite new private negotiations, Russia refused to budge.

T.W.A. flights were halted today by a strike of machinists, who have been working without a contract since October first. The machinists want higher pay, but T.W.A. says they also want the company to limit the authority of its supervisory personnel.

—INSERT—

Here is a late dispatch from Berlin.....

The official East German news agency said tonight that representatives of East Germany and Russia met today to discuss the 1957 treaty providing for the so-called "temporary" stationing of Russian troops in East Germany. The East German news agency says that "full agreement was reached on all details." It does not say of what these details consist. They could concern a possible limited withdrawal of Soviet troops.

Mel Ott, former player-manager for the New York Giants and member of baseball's Hall of Fame, died today of injuries received last week in an automobile accident. He succumbed in New Orleans after a series of emergency operations at the age of 49. ~~His wife, who was injured in the same accident, remains in critical condition.~~

Parliamentary elections are being held today in Australia. And the Conservative government of Prime Minister Menzies is expected to be returned to power.

On Sunday, French voters will elect the first National Assembly of the Fifth Republic. The vote will determine in large measure how the new republic will look. But, at the moment, issues and parties are confused. For a preview of the election and some predictions we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

(Tape runs 5:25
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting on the election that will be held in France on Sunday.

— INSERT —

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Premier DeGaulle would seem to have caused some confusion by his failure to speak out on issues and candidates. No doubt he chose to remain aloof from campaign oratory in order to operate more independently in the crucial days to come. In this he is perhaps of the same mind as Calvin Coolidge, who remarked that he was never hurt by anything he didn't say.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, November 21, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... On Sunday French voters will elect the first National Assembly of the Fifth Republic. The vote will determine, in large measure, how the new republic will look. But at the moment issues and parties are confused. For a preview of the election and some predictions, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: "Do as I say not as I do." That seems to sum up Charles de Gaulle's policy on the French elections this Sunday. He has called for a massive turnout of voters but he won't tell them how to vote. While preaching against abstentionism, de Gaulle practices abstention by refusing to take sides or against any party or candidate. De Gaulle sees his role as that of supreme arbitrator rather than political leader of the French. He holds himself resolutely aloof from the battles of his people. He stated this position on October 23rd at his news conference when he announced that he would not endorse any party or any candidate for office. This has served simply to confuse the voters. For de Gaulle's refusal to endorse any ticket has not prevented politicians from presenting themselves as Gaullists. The attempts of politicians to use his magic name have become ludicrous these last days of the campaign.

Pre-war Premier Paul Reynaud has told electoral audiences this week that he's the first Gaullist in history, the dean of all the general's followers, because he knew de Gaulle as an obscure lieutenant colonel back in 1935 and sponsored his theories on tank warfare. Another prominent candidate, Dr. Bernard Lafaye, went even further back in history to challenge Reynaud's claim to be the first Gaullist. He said that in 1917 he was a friend of de Gaulle's father - so that makes him the very first oldest and noblest Gaullist of them all.

This kind of appeal to the voters has produced one of the saddest, most humiliating, as well as most confused campaigns in modern French history. It is sad because there are very real issues that ought to be debated, but very few candidates debating them. It is humiliating for the French to be reduced to the status of courtesans seeking the favor of a monarch's name. And it is confusing because no one knows what anybody really stands for outside of the few opposition candidates like Pierre Mendes-France or the communist party. The confusion was created by de Gaulle himself. He has constantly denounced the political parties, blaming them as the root of all evil, but he admits that a democratic republic cannot function without political parties - therefore De Gaulle tolerates the parties but he won't endorse them nor form any party of his own. The result, total confusion. All the traditional parties whom de Gaulle holds responsible for the paralysis of France are back in the running. Not only that, but their party leaders are all in de Gaulle's government: Socialist Mollett, Conservative Pinay, Catholic Pflimlin. These are all former premiers of the old hated system, yet each of them is a minister of de Gaulle's present cabinet. Is de Gaulle for them or is he against them? And what about the Gaullists themselves? De Gaulle has rejected the integration policy for Algeria, proposed by his most fervent follower, Jacques Soustelle. And he has rebuffed Soustelle's attempts to form a Gaullist party. So, apparently, de Gaulle favors the men of the old system and their advice against his own followers. What are ordinary people to think?

The result of all this confusion has been to discourage the voters who are sitting out the campaign. They may show up at the polls on Sunday because the French do have the voting habit. But they certainly have not been showing up at electoral meetings. Despite this confusion there are a few major trends that can be predicted with some safety because of the nature of the electoral system itself. It seems clear that the communist party will lose heavily, not necessarily in the total of votes, but in the total of seats which their votes can win. It works this way: France has been divided up into electoral districts of 93,000 inhabitants each, with one seat per district. To be elected this Sunday, a candidate must win an absolute majority. But this won't happen in more than about 80 of the 465 metropolitan districts because the votes are divided among so many competing candidates. Therefore, there'll have to be a runoff election the following Sunday with no majority required, the seat simply going to the man with the most votes. And in this runoff, it's expected, that all of the non-communists will get together behind one of their own men against the communist. This system, therefore, favors the more conservative and Right-Wing elements. Thus, the Fifth Republic is likely to look very different from its unhappy predecessor. The Fourth Republic had a huge swollen Left-Wing and a shrivelled up Right-Wing, with a pretty soft under-belly in the center. The Fifth Republic reverses the balance, with a huge, swollen Right-Wing and a shrivelled up Left-Wing. There is this major difference, however. The Fifth Republic has a head and a stout heart in Charles de Gaulle - whereas the Fourth Republic had no central brain or heart at all. Thus, on the eve of elections, France is again dependent upon the will power and the wisdom of only one man to overcome the contradictions and the weaknesses of its ill-conceived body politic.

I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting on the election that will be held in France on Sunday.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Berlin crisis today provoked diplomatic activity on several fronts. The United States ambassador to West Germany, David Bruce, returned to Bonn from Washington and immediately went into conference with Heinrich Von Brentano, the West German foreign minister. Von Brentano then flew to Berlin. His government, he said, views the Soviet attitude with "great seriousness and concern." He has called home for consultation, the West German ambassadors to Moscow, Washington, London, Paris and Rome.

The Western ambassadors in Moscow have been asked to present themselves at the Soviet Foreign Ministry tomorrow morning. They are expected.... at that time...to be handed formal notes, setting forth Russia's plan for ending four-power control of Berlin. Russia presumably would turn its control functions in Berlin over to the East German regime. This means that the East German government (which we do not recognize) would control Allied traffic in and out of the city.

Russia's ambassador to West Germany suggested today that the transfer of control functions will take place before Christmas. He said at a diplomatic reception, "I hope it will go quickly. I believe the Germans will be able to celebrate a peaceful Christmas." There was a report today that Russian troops already had begun pulling out of East Berlin. Soviet authorities said the withdrawals which may have given rise to this rumor were part of a troop rotation program which has been going on for years.

It was announced that the East and West German governments have signed a new trade agreement. One clause of the agreement suggests that avenues of trade between East and West Germany will be kept open. There is, however, no guarantee that the supply routes to Berlin from West Germany may not be blocked.

It is also pointed out that the agreement concerns civilian traffic, nothing about military access to Berlin...where the United States, Britain and France, together, maintain a garrison of 10-thousand men.

News Secretary Hagerty said today, "Our firm intentions in West Berlin remain unchanged." Hagerty made the statement at the President's vacation headquarters in Augusta, Georgia. By "firm intentions," he said, he meant "maintaining the integrity of West Berlin." A reporter asked Hagerty whether he was speaking for Britain and France as well as for the United States. He said he could speak only for the United States but emphasized that the Western powers are in close consultation. Mr. Eisenhower conferred on the telephone today with Christian Herter, acting secretary of state. Secretary Dulles is vacationing at his Duck Island retreat.

British Prime Minister Macmillan said tonight, "We intend to stay in Berlin." He expressed confidence that the problem can be solved peacefully, saying it was his "very strong impression" that the Russians would confine their moves to the realm of diplomacy.

And West German Chancellor Adenauer said tonight, "We must not lose our nerve."

In Geneva, the United States, Britain and Russia today began discussing specific proposals for ending nuclear weapons tests. The break in the agenda deadlock came with a tacit agreement to go ahead without a formal agenda---at least for the time being. There was no break in the deadlock in the conference on prevention of surprise attack.

In the United Nations today, East and West were unable to agree on a committee for studying the peaceful uses of outer space. Russia wants a committee of 11 countries, four of whom would be from the Soviet bloc. The West objetted to the idea of having four Communist countries on the committee. But, despite new private negotiations, Russia refused to budge.

TWA flights were halted today by a strike of machinists, who have been working without a contract since October first. The machinists want higher pay, but TWA says they also want the company to limit the authority of its supervisory personnel.

Here is a late dispatch from Berlin...

The official East German news agency said tonight that representatives of East Germany and Russia met today to discuss the 1957 treaty providing for the so-called "temporary" stationing of Russian troops in East Germany. The East German news agency says that "full agreement was reached on all details." It does not say of what these details consist. They could concern a possible limited withdrawal of Soviet troops.

Mel Ott, former player-manager for the New York Giants and member of baseball's Hall of Fame, died today of injuries received last week in an automobile accident. He succumbed in New Orleans after a series of emergency operations at the age of 49.

Parliamentary elections are being held ioday in Australia. And the Conservative government of Prime Minister Menzies is expected to be returned to power.

On Sunday, French voters will elect the first National Assembly of the Fifth Republic. The vote will determine in large measure how the new republic will look. But, at the moment, issues and parties are confused. For a preview of the election and some predictions we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: "Do as I say not as I do." That seems to sum up Charles de Gaulle's policy on the French elections this Sunday. He has called for a massive turnout of voters, but he won't tell them how to vote. While preaching against abstentionism, de Gaulle practices abstention by refusing to take sides or against any party or candidate. De Gaulle sees his role as that of supreme arbitrator rather than political leader of the French. He holds himself resolutely aloof from the battles of his people. He stated this position on October 23rd at his news conference when he announced that he would not endorse any party or any candidate for office. This has served simply to confuse the voters. For DeGaulle's refusal to endorse any ticket has not prevented politicians from pres nting themselves as Gaullists. The attempts of politicians to use his magic name have become ludicrous these last days of the campaign.

Pre-war Premier Paul Reynaud has told electoral audiences this week that he's the first Gaullist in history, the dean of all the general's followers, because he knew de Gaulle as an obscure lieutenant colonel back in 1935 and sponsored his theories on tank warfare. Another prominent candidate, Dr. Bernard Lafaye, went even further back in history to challenge Reynaud's claim to be the first Gaullist. He said that in 1917 he was a friend of deGaulle's father - so that makes him the very first oldest and noblest Gaullist of them all. This kind of appeal to the voters has produced one of the saddest, most humiliating, as well as most confused campaigns in modern French history. It is sad because there are very real issues that ought to be debated, but very few candidates debating them. It is humiliating for the French to be reduced to the status of courtesans seeking the favor of a monarch's name. And it is confusing because no noe knows what anybody really stands for outside of the few opposition candidates like Pierre Mendes-France or the communist party. The confusion was created by DeGaulle himself. He has constantly denounced the political parties, blaming them as the root of all evil, but he admits that a democratic republic cannot function without political parties - therefore DeGaulle tolerates the parties but he won't endorse them nor form any party of his own. The result, total confusion. All the traditional parties whom De Gaulle holds responsible for the paralysis of France are back in the running. Not only that, but their party leaders are all in DeGaulle's government: Socialist Mollett, Conservative

Pinay, Catholic Pflimlin. These are all former premiers of the old hated system, yet each of them is a minister of de Gaulle's present cabinet. Is de Gaulle for them or is he against them? And what about the Gaullists themselves? DeGaulle has rejected the integration policy for Algeria, proposed by his most fervent follower, Jacques Soustelle. And he has rebuffed Soustelle's attempts to form a Gaullist party. So, apparently, DeGaulle favors the men of the old system and their advice against his own followers. What are ordinary people to think?

The result of all this confusion has been to discourage the voters who are sitting out the campaign. They may show up at the polls on Sunday because the French do have the voting habit. But they certainly have not been showing up at electoral meetings. Despite this confusion there are afewmajor trends that can be predicted with some safety because of the nature of the electoral system itself. It seems clear thet the communist party will lose heavily, not necessraily in the total of votes but in the total of seats which their votes can win. It works this way: France has been divided up into electoral districts of 93,000 inhabitants each, with one seat per district. To be elected this Sunday, a candidate must win an absolute majority. But this won't happen in more than about 80 of the 465 metropolitan districts because the votes are divided among so many competing candidates. Therefore, there'll have to be a runoff election the following Sunday with no majority required, the seat simply going to the man with the most votes. And in this runoff, it's expected that, all of the non-communists will get together behind one of their own men against the communist. This system, therefore, favors the most conservative and Right-Wing elements. Thus, the Fifth Republic is likely to look very different from its unhappy predecessor. The Fourth Republic had a huge swollen Left- Wing and a shrivelled up Right-Wing, with a pretty soft under-belly in the center. The Fifth Republic reverses the balance, with a huge, swollen Right-Wing and a shrivelled up Left-Wing. There is this major difference, however, The Fifth Republic has a head and a stout heart in Charles de Gaulle - whereasthe Fourth Republic had no central brain or heart at all. Thus, on the eve of elections, France is again dependent upon the will power and the wisdom of only one man to overcome the contradictions and the weaknesses of its ill-conceived body politic.

I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting on the election that will be held in France on Sunday.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

MURROW: Premier DeGaulle would seem to have caused some confusion by his failure to speak out on issues and candidates. No doubt he chose to remain aloof from campaign oratory in order to operate more independently in the crucial days to come. In this he is perhaps of the same mind as Calvin Coolidge, who remarked that he was never hurt by anything he didn't say.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Nov. 24, 1958

This is the news:

The United Nations political committee voted tonight to set up an 18-nation committee on outer space. The vote was on a resolution sponsored by the United States and 19 other countries...after Russia withdrew its resolution which the West opposed. The vote for the Western resolution was 54 to 9, with 18 abstentions. The nine negative votes were cast by the Soviet bloc. Most of the abstentions were from the Afro-Asian group of nations which favored further private talks between the United States and Russia in hope of reaching a compromise. The space committee sought by Russia would have 11 members...instead of 18...and four of them would be countries behind the Iron Curtain. The West objected to so much Communist representation. It was the purpose of both committees to lay the groundwork for a permanent group to collaborate on the peaceful use of outer space. Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin has served notice that Russia will not take part in the work of the preparatory committee approved tonight. Its membership...in addition to Russia...would include only two Soviet satellites, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

President Eisenhower today named a nine-man committee to evaluate this country's military assistance program. The committee's recommendations will be used by the President in drawing up a mutual security budget for submission to Congress. Mr. Eisenhower said he wants an appraisal of the "relative emphasis" which should be given military and economic problems, particularly in the less developed areas. He said this should take into account the "many highly significant technological, economic and political developments which have taken place since the origin of the present military assistance program." The committee has as its chairman William H. Draper, an investment banker who served as under-secretary of the Army in the Truman Administration. General Gruenther, Admiral Radford and John J. McCloy, former high commissioner to Germany, are among the other eight members. They met for the first time this afternoon and plan to start submitting recommendations in March.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that any Russian move on Berlin will be met with "unity and firmness" by the United States, Britain and France. Mr. Dulles made the statement on his arrival in Washington, after a week's vacation at his Duck Island retreat in Lake Ontario. He saw no need at this time for a meeting of American, British and French foreign ministers. He told reporters, "I want to say very emphatically that there is no evidence at all as to disagreement between the principal Allied powers and the Federal Republic of Germany." (I should like to examine the Berlin situation further in a few minutes).

Returns in yesterday's French parliamentary election show the Communists losing one and a half million votes as compared to other elections since World War Two. However, the Communist Party...with about 17 percent of the total vote...remains the strongest party in France. Most followers of Premier DeGaulle were elected to the National Assembly without difficulty. / But opponents of DeGaulle...like former Premier Mendes-France...met with defeat. / A run-off election will be held next Sunday.

The French Sudan today proclaimed itself a republic within the new French Community. The French Sudan is a territory in West Africa, on the other side of the continent from the Sudan which was once part of Egypt. The territory now becomes partly independent.

The Supreme Court today upheld a lower court ruling that the pupil placement law in Alabama is constitutional. The Supreme Court emphasized that it was upholding the lower court on the "limited grounds" on which that court based its decision. The decision was made in the case of four Negro children who wanted to attend white schools nearer their homes. They were given a series of tests...under the Alabama law...and denied admittance on grounds that they were not "qualified." Qualification takes into account, not only aptitude of the student, but also the available school space and various psychological factors, including possibility of disorder. Race is not mentioned as a factor. Parents of the four children argued that the fact race is not specifically mentioned is immaterial...that the purpose of the law is to prevent non-segregated public education. A special three-judge court overruled this argument...saying that the law "furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the schools in a constitutional manner." The special court went on to say that if the law is not administered in this way, "then in some future proceeding it is possible that it may be declared unconstitutional in its application." This is what the Supreme Court affirmed today. The affirmation was brief and unsigned, indicating that all nine justices concurred. / There are pupil placement laws, in varying forms, in ten Southern states.

→

Vice President and Mrs. Nixon are flying to London tonight, for an official four-day visit. / While in London, Nixon will confer with Prime Minister Macmillan and represent President Eisenhower at the dedication of an American memorial chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Flight engineers, and machinists, went on strike today against Eastern Airlines, and the company suspended all flights "in the interest of public safety." / T.W.A. flights have been grounded since Friday, due to a walkout of machinists. / ~~And a strike against American Airlines, by the Air Line Pilots Association, is scheduled for midnight tomorrow.~~

~~Stewardesses went~~ on strike today against Lake Central Airlines, a Midwest carrier, in what ~~may be the first walkout of stewardesses.~~ / ~~In each of these disputes, pay is an issue. An additional factor, in the strike against Eastern Airlines, is a company demand that flight engineers take pilot training.~~

The Studebaker-Packard plant in South Bend was shut down today by a strike of United Auto Workers. / ~~Yesterday, the U.A.W. local rejected the~~

→

Edward R. Murrow: November 24, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The Berlin crisis is not developing into a great showdown between East and West, at least not yet. / And if hints from Soviet sources are to be trusted, the Russians do not want it to. / They want to wear down Western resistance to a withdrawal, not trample over it.

Nor is the Berlin crisis going to be a repeat performance of the 1949 airlift. There may be an airlift. That appears to be the American program, if and when the Russians turn over their Berlin corridor controls to the East Germans. / We have six hundred and eighty planes ready to conduct an airlift. / But it would not be the same as the last one. / The Russians have seen to that. They arranged to have the East Germans negotiate an inter-zonal trade agreement with the West Germans, which should assure the supply of West Berlin civilians, and which was signed last week. / If there is to be an airlift, it will be limited to the supply of the Western garrisons in West Berlin and their dependents, all told about ten thousand persons. / So a city of millions will not be dramatically blockaded, with its people relying on the arrival of food and fuel out of the skies.

The Western program in Berlin has not been finally decided. It has to be an agreed program, and while such an agreement will be easy to reach, the preliminary approach to it developed a difference between the American and French view, which is to take a firm line, and the British view, which is to take one a little less firm. We and the French are against submitting papers to East Germans at control posts in the corridor for them to stamp. The British asked if it would not be wiser to try that way first. They would be ready to treat East Germans as agents of the Russians, make it clear they are not recognizing the East German regime, and then see what happens.

Other than an airlift, the possibility remains of sending Allied convoys through with military escorts, pushing their way through. This would mean hostilities with the East Germans, and as the Russians have announced that an attack on East Germans would be considered an attack on themselves, it seems more precarious than the airlift.

But the airlift is not without danger. For the control of the air corridors would be turned over to East Germans, and the Allied planes would come in with fighter protection. If East German planes did not molest the Allied cargo planes, there would be no trouble. But if they did, the Allied fighter planes would shoot. And that also would be hostilities.

The Berlin crisis did not come as a surprise. Since 1949 the possibility of a blockade has always been kept in mind. Study after study has been made of what to do. When the National Security Council on Friday determined what program to recommend to the Allies, it needed only to pull the appropriate plan from the pigeon hole. It is taken for granted by Washington observers that this program calls for an airlift, and not for convoys to shoot their way across the corridors. But care has been taken not to say anything publicly that would sound like sabre-rattling. Mr. Hagerty, speaking from the President's vacation headquarters about the policy, did not even mention an airlift. He said only that our Allies are being consulted and our "firm intentions" in Berlin remain unchanged. Later he added that we would maintain the integrity of West Berlin, and would not pull out of that city or West Germany.

There is an overtone to the crisis worth mentioning. It arises from the fact that the West Germans have been pressing the Allies to take a strong line in Berlin, even to sending convoys to Berlin with force if needed. At almost the same time they signed the inter-zonal agreement with East Germany. They may not think this is inconsistent. They have been dealing with low-level East German officials for some time, and have always made it clear that this was not recognition. Now they think that if the Allies compromise their military rights, by dealing with East Germans, it becomes harder for West Germans to uphold the policy of non-recognition. / As we see it, the West Germans appear to be urging us to take a stronger line than they are ready to follow themselves.

[Doubts on this score might be easily answered at a new Allied conference in West Berlin, as could any differences that remain with the British over emphasis. / Such a meeting is being discussed abroad, though Mr. Dulles said today he sees no need for it. / No important decisions dealing with the crisis are expected in Washington, before Mr. Dulles has had time to catch up.]

Back in a moment, -

George Bryan -

It would be a mistake to assume that this Berlin crisis is going to be a repeat performance of the crisis of 1949. Even if there is an airlift, its function would not be the same. Circumstances are always changing, demanding policies to match. "The hole and the patch," Thomas Jefferson said, "must be commensurate." It still holds true.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The United Nations political committee voted tonight to set up an 18-nation committee on outer space. The vote was on a resolution sponsored by the United States and 19 other countries...after Russia withdrew its resolution which the West opposed. The vote for the Western resolution was 54 to 9, with 18 abstentions. The nine negative votes were cast by the Soviet bloc. Most of the abstentions were from the Afro-Asian group of nations which favored further private talks between the United States and Russia in hope of reaching a compromise. The space committee sought by Russia would have 11 members...instead of 18, and four of them would be countries behind the Iron curtain. The West objected to so much Communist representation. It was the purpose of both committees to lay the groundwork for a permanent group to collaborate on the peaceful use of outer space. Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin has served notice that Russia will not take part in the work of the preparatory committee approved tonight. Its membership...in addition to Russia...would include only two Soviet satellites, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

President Eisenhower today named a nine-man committee to evalute this country's military assistance program. The committee's recommendations will be used by the President in drawing up a mutual security budget for submission to Congress. Mr. Eisenhower said he wants an appraisal of the "relative emphasis" which should be given military and economic problems, particularly in the less developed areas. He said this should take into account the "many highly significant technological, economic and political developments which have taken place since the origin of the present military assistance program." The committee has as its chairman, William H. Draper, an investment banker who served as under-secretary of the Army in the Truman Administration. General Gruenther, Admiral Radford and John J. McCloy, former high commissioner to Germany, are among the other eight members. They met for the first time this afternoon and plan to start summitting recommendations in March.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that any Russian move on Berlin will be met with "unity and firmness" by the United States, Britain and France. Mr. Dulles made the statement on his arrival in Washington, after a week's vacation at his Duck Island retreat in Lake Ontario. He saw no need at this time for a meeting of American, British and French foreign ministers. He told reporters, "I want to say very emphatically that there is no evidence at all as to disagreement between the principal allied powers and the Federal Republic of Germany." (I should like to examine the Berlin situation further in a few minutes.)

Returns in yesterday's French parliamentary election show the Communists losing one and a half million votes as compared to other elections since World War Two. However, the Communist Party...with about 17 percent of the total vote...remains the strongest party in France. Most followers of Premier DeGaulle were elected to the National Assembly without difficulty. But opponents of DeGaulle...like former Premier Mendes-France...met with defeat. A run-off election will be held next Sunday.

The Supreme Court today upheld a lower court ruling that the pupil placement law in Alabama is constitutional. The Supreme Court emphasized that it was upholding the lower court on the "limited grounds" on which that court based its decision. The decision was made in the case of four Negro chlldren who wanted to attend while schools nearer their homes. They were given a series of tests...under the Alabama law...and denied admittance on grounds that they were not "qualified." Qualification takes into account, not only aptitude of the student, but also the available school space and various psychological factors, including possibility of disorder. Race is not mentioned as a factor. Parents of the four children argued that the fact race is not specifically mentioned is immaterial...that the purpose of the law is to prevent non-segregated public education. A special three-judge court overruled this argument....saying that the law "furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the schools in a constitutional manner." The special court went on to say that if the law is not administered in this way, "then in some future proceeding it is possible that it may be declared unconsitutional in its application." This is what the Supreme Court affirmed today. The affirmation was brief and unsigned, indicating that all nine justices concurred. Three are pupil placement laws in varying forms in ten Southern states.

Vice President and Mrs. Nixon are flying to London tonight for an offical four-day visit. While in London, Nixon will confer with Prime Minister Macmillan and represent President Eisenhower at the dedication of an American memorial chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Flight engineers and machinists went on strike today against Eastern Airlines, and the company suspended all flights "in the interest of public safety." T.W.A. flights have been grounded since Friday, due to a walkout of machinists.

The Studebaker-Packard plant in South Bend was shut down today by a strike of United Auto Workers.

The Berlin crisis is not developing into a great showdown between East and West, at least not yet. And if hints from Soviet sources are to be trusted, the Russians do not want it to. They want to wear down Western resistance to a withdrawal, not trample over it.

Nor is the Berlin crisis going to be a repeat performance of the 1949 airlift. There may be an airlift. That appears to be the American program, if and when the Russians turn over their Berlin corridor controls to the East Germans. We have six hundred and eighty planes ready to conduct an airlift. But it would not be the same as the last one. The Russians have seen to that.

They arranged to have the East Germans negotiate an inter-zonal trade agreement with the West Germans, which should assure the supply of West Berlin civilians, and which was signed last week. If there is to be an airlift, it will be limited to the supply of the Western garrisons in West Berlin and their dependents, all told about ten thousand persons. So a city of millions will not be dramatically blockaded, with its people relying on the arrival of food and fuel out of the skies.

The Western program in Berlin has not been finally decided. It has to be an agreed program, and while such an agreement will be easy to reach, the preliminary approach to it developed a difference between the American and French view, which is to take a firm line, and the British view, which is to take one a little less firm. We and the French are against submitting papers to East Germans at control posts in the corridor for them to stamp. The British asked if it would not be wiser to try that way first. They would be ready to treat East Germans as agents of the Russians, make it clear they are not recognizing the East German regime, and then see what happens.

Other than an airlift, the possibility remains of sending Allied convoys through with military escorts pushing their way through. This would mean hostilities with the East Germans, and as the Russians have announced that an attack on East Germans would be considered an attack on themselves, it seems more precarious than the airlift.

But the airflft is not without danger. For the control of the air corridors would be turned over to East Germans, and the Allied planes would come in with fighter protection. If East German planes did not molest the Allied cargo planes, there would be no trouble. But if they did, the Allied fighter planes would shoot. And that also would be hostilities.

The Berlin crisis did not come as a surprise. Since 1949 the possibility of a blockade has always been kept in mind. Study after study has been made of what to do. When the National Security Council on Friday determined what program to recommend to the Allies, it needed only to pull the appropriate plan from the pigeonhole. It is taken for granted by Washington observers that this program calls for an airlift and not for convoys to shoot their way across the corridors. But care has been taken not to say anything publicly that would sound like sabre-rattling. Mr. Hagerty, speaking from the President's vacation headquarters about the policy, did not even mention an airlift. He said only that our allies are being consulted and our "firm intentions" in Berlin remain unchanged. Later he added that we would maintain the integrity of West Berlin, and would not pull out of that city or West Germany.

There is an overtone to the crisis worth mentioning. It arises from the fact that the West Germans have been pressing the Allies to take a strong line in Berlin, even to sending convoys to Berlin with force if needed. At almost the same time, they signed the inter-zonal agreement with East Germany. They may not think this is inconsistent. They have been dealing with low-level East German officials for some time, and have always made it cdear that this was not recognition. Now they think that if the Allies compromise their military rights,by dealing with East Germans, it becomes harder for West Germans to uphold the policy of non-recognition. As we see it, the West Germans appear to be urging us to take a stronger line than they are ready to follow themselves.

Doubts on this score might be easily answered at a new Allied conference in West Berlin, as could any differences that remain with the British over emphasis. Such a meeting is being discussed abroad, though Mr. Dulles said today he sees no need for it. No important decisions dealing with the crisis are expected in Washington, before Mr. Dulles has had time to catch up.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: It would be a mistake to assume that this Berlin crisis is going to be a repeat performance of the crisis of 1949. Even if there is an airlift, its function would not be the same. Circumstances are always changing, demanding policies to match. "The hole and the patch," Thomas Jefferson said, "must be commensurate." It still holds true.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Nov. 25, 1958

This is the news:

Alaska today voted for the first time for officials who will represent it as the 49th state. The polls will be open for several more hours because of the time difference. The weather is clear and cold. And early voting in Fairbanks and Anchorage, the two major cities, was brisk. Altogether, 30-thousand voters are expected to cast their ballots for governor, U.S. senator, and U.S. representative. They will elect two senators but only one representative. Henry Benson, Republican of Juneau, is running against Ralph Rivers, Fairbanks Democrat, for the one seat in the House. In the Senate race, the principal contest is between Mike Stepovich, the last appointed governor of the territory...who is a Republican...and Ernest Gruening, who was governor from 1939 to 1953. / The contest for the other Senate seat is between R.E. Robertson, Republican, and Bob Bartlett, who was Alaska's congressional delegate for 14 years. Bartlett, of course, is a Democrat. / In the governor's contest, the Republican candidate, John Butrovich of Fairbanks, is running against William Egan of Valdez. When the election results have been certified by the governor of Alaska, and proclaimed by President Eisenhower, the territory will officially become the 49th state.

Vice President Nixon said today that...in situations like Berlin...the West must show "unmistakable determination to stand firm." Nixon was speaking in London, at a luncheon of the Pilgrims' Society, shortly after he and Mrs. Nixon arrived from Washington for a four-day visit. / Nixon said Khrushchev could make "no greater miscalculation" than to think that the recent gains made by the Democratic Party reflect a lack of confidence in President Eisenhower's leadership in foreign affairs. / "The overwhelming majority of the American people," he said, "continue to support the President in the foreign policy area." / Nixon conferred in the afternoon with Prime Minister Macmillan. A British statement...issued afterward...said they discussed "various subjects of mutual interest, including world trade problems, the current situation in Berlin, and the Far East."

→

Reports from Berlin say the Western "Big Three" powers have agreed on a common plan for countering any Communist attempt to squeeze them out of Berlin. It is reported that under the plan the United States, Britain and France would not allow East Germany to take Russia's place in the four-power "air safety center" in West Berlin. This is the center which controls all air traffic in and out of Berlin.

Today...in Bonn...the West German foreign minister, Heinrich Von Brentano, conferred for more than three hours with the West German ambassadors summoned home last week from Moscow and the capitals of the principal Western powers.

The death of George Zarubin, former Russian ambassador to the United States, was reported today by the official Soviet news agency Tass. Tass said he died yesterday "after a serious illness." Zarubin left Washington early this year to become a deputy foreign minister. He was 58.

~~In Geneva today, the talks dealing with suspension of nuclear weapons tests and prevention of surprise attack continued. The West presented~~

~~more of its plan for policing a ban on nuclear tests. The chief Soviet delegate raised a number of points concerning the plan but was non-committal.~~

The almost forgotten talks between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors continued in Warsaw today with a meeting that lasted an hour and 45 minutes. The only official word was that the two ambassadors will meet again on December 12. Unofficially, it was reported that United States Ambassador Jacob Beam made another strong demand for the release of four Americans still held prisoner in Communist China.

The State Department announces that the United States has agreed to sell more arms to Tunisia. The type and amount of arms to be delivered was not disclosed. President Bourguiba of Tunisia said recently that he would have to buy weapons from Communist countries because the United States was clearing its arms deal with France. The United States acknowledged that France was being consulted, but denied that it had any veto right in the matter. # The State Department said today that it is "prepared to consider" giving military as well as economic assistance to Indonesia.

The United Nations political committee began debating the Cyprus question today. The Greek foreign minister demanded independence for the island. Britain pointed out that the Turkish minority on Cyprus wants partition, not independence. To force a long-term solution now, it said, could result in civil war, or worse.

—)

The Air Line Pilots Association says it will bow to a Federal Court restraining order...and not strike against American Airlines at midnight tonight as scheduled. The strike against Eastern Airlines AND T-W-A continues. And there is a threat that machinists will stage a walkout against National Air Lines. Negotiations with National are still in progress.

Dr. Charles F. Kettering, inventor and philanthropist, died today in Dayton after suffering a stroke. He was 82 years of age. Among Dr. Kettering's many inventions was the self-starter for automobiles. In 1945, with Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., he founded the Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research.

The Air Force today awarded a 29-million-dollar contract to the American Machine and Foundry Company for developing an underground launching system for the Titan intercontinental ballistic missile. A prototype of the Titan missile has been delivered to Cape Canaveral for testing.

The government reports living costs unchanged in October for the second straight month. Food prices averaged one-half of 1 percent lower than in September, but this was offset by higher prices for other goods and services, including new cars.

The Commerce Department tonight issued a report saying that the business recovery is being sustained. Production, employment and income, it says, "continue strong." It also notes a rising demand for consumer goods.

The vacation White House announces that President Eisenhower will meet Friday with government officials engaged in drawing up the new defense budget.

The officials...who will fly down to Augusta early Friday morning...include Secretary of Defense McElroy, Budget Director Stans, and General Twining, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

Edward R. Murrow: November 25, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

President Eisenhower came out of the election with blood in his eye against spenders and spending, and the cry for economy is now shrill in every office in Washington. / All hands are busy cutting the budget. / All agencies are under firm orders to accept substantial reductions. The Defense Department, which has to spend astonomically on missiles, to keep abreast of technological progress - and the Russians - is trying to hold within its allotted funds, by dismissing part of the Army and the Marine Corps. This is worse than, cutting to the bone. It is mutilation, and may even be unsound defense.

The cause for all this anguish, is the deficit of thirteen point seven billion dollars in the upcoming Federal budget. / This is the result of a decline in revenue of two billions, and an increase in spending by nearly eleven billions. / This increase was the answer of the Administration and Congress to the recession. And what is startling about it, is that virtually none of this fresh expenditure has yet hit the economy. / In other words, we recovered without it, though the fact that the money was voted was a help. Now the effect of the spending is going to be inflationary, and though the cost-of-living index did not rise this month, subsequent months are pretty sure to tell a different story. / So the feverish cry for economy in Washington is not just financial orthodoxy. / The economic situation is not healthy.

Something seems to have been wrong with the way Washington dealt with the recession. / Dr. Arthur Burns, Columbia University economist, and for several years chief economic adviser of President Eisenhower, gave a clear analysis of what it was in a speech last week. / He pointed out that the recession was the sharpest and briefest on record. / It was overcome largely because the economic stabilizers worked -- of which unemployment insurance was most important -- and because ordinary consumers maintained a high rate of spending. / Dr. Burns noted the good effects of the credit-easing policy of the Federal reserve system in liberalizing housing credits. / But he parted ways with the Administration and Congress because they put their main emphasis on overcoming the recession by Federal spending. / He points out that they could not time it right. By the end of the Fiscal year last June, recovery had already begun before the impact of any of the new spending had been felt. Only now is this spending beginning to count. And a sharply-rising scale of Federal spending, ordered by the last Congress, is still to come.

In the midst of the recession Dr. Burns advocated a five-billion-dollar tax cut as the best way to deal with the crisis. He also would have extended unemployment insurance at a cost of half a billion. If his advice had been followed, the budget deficit, counting the loss of revenue, would have been seven-and-a-half billion dollars. The effects of the tax reduction would have been prompt, and together with the additional unemployment insurance, the recovery would have been farther along than it is today. The inflationary consequences of the spending program would have been absent. The spiralling wage rises of last Summer and this Autumn might have been avoided or reduced. ~~This would have been done with a budget deficit of thirteen point seven billions.~~

Dr. Burns is sure a lesson can be learned for future policy in dealing with recessions. He would put increasing dependence on unemployment insurance, which has been a boon surpassing expectations. He would like to see a tax cut built into the economy, and if politically possible, made flexible to rise or fall in accordance with the rate of production, in the way wages are tied in some contracts with the rise or fall of the cost of living. The biggest lesson of the recession, he said, is that we no longer can count on a recession wiping out accumulated price increases. That being so, he urges that measures be planned to deal with recessions that do not of themselves turn into inflationary forces.

If Dr. Burns is right, and if his advice had been followed, Washington would now be a happier city, and budget-cutting would not be quite so desperate a necessity.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

President Eisenhower wants to cut down federal spending. This is natural, but as the population and the economy of this country expand, spending must correspondingly increase. The question then becomes when to spend and for what. As Thomas Fuller observed in the Seventeenth Century, "Everything hath its time, and that time must be watched."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Nov. 26, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Western powers have reached "basic agreement" on how to react to Soviet pressures on Berlin. Mr. Dulles declined...at his news conference...to spell out this agreement. He said if Russia turns over control of the Berlin supply routes to East Germany, the Western powers might deal with the East Germans as agents of the Soviet Union. If this were done, it would be in such a way as not to imply recognition of the East German regime. Whether it is done at all, he said, would depend on the "precise circumstances." (West German officials tonight expressed surprise at this statement. They said they knew of no agreement that the West might deal with the East Germans on the basis that they were agents for Moscow). A reporter asked Mr. Dulles about the recent proposal by Senator Gore that the United States might...voluntarily...stop all nuclear weapons testing, except for explosions conducted underground or far out in space. Gore suggested that the suspension of tests which pollute the atmosphere last for three years. Such a suspension, he said, would call Russia's "propaganda bluff"...and strengthen our moral position throughout the world. Dulles said that Gore's proposal might be considered when and if the Geneva talks on nuclear test suspension break down. But Dulles said he is not assuming the Geneva negotiations will break down, even though the going is difficult. There is "some slight evidence", he said, that the Russians have conducted nuclear tests since November third...when the last Soviet test was detected and announced by the Atomic Energy Commission. He said it would be "premature" to conclude that a de facto cessation now exists. ~~(The Atomic Energy Commission this afternoon declined comment on Mr. Dulles' statement about a possible new Soviet test).~~ Dulles said underdeveloped countries that are free cannot expect to achieve economic progress as rapidly as Communist areas, where slave labor is used, and human rights are submerged in the interests of the state. / It may be, he said, that in our foreign aid program, more emphasis should be put on economic assistance, as compared to aid of a military nature. / And he pointed out that a committee...named by President Eisenhower to look into the matter...will be making recommendations.

It was announced today that Secretary Dulles will be seeing the President in Augusta over the week-end. / News Secretary Hagerty said the meeting will not be "of an emergency nature."

The official East German news agency discloses that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko made a secret visit to East Berlin "within the past few days." / During the visit, Gromyko conferred with Premier Grotewohl and other East German leaders. / We are given no details.

Premier DeGaulle flew to West Germany today, for an all-day conference with Chancellor Adenauer. A communique, issued after their meeting, called for maintaining the status of Berlin..."as defined," it said, "by international agreements now in force, and as guaranteed by the governments of France, the United States and the United Kingdom." / Reportedly, DeGaulle and Adenauer also agreed on measures to prevent discrimination against countries outside the European Common Market when it becomes operative on January first. West Germany and France are both members of the Common Market. Britain is not.

~~The British government has sent a note to Moscow, setting forth its position in the Berlin dispute. The text of the note has not been released.~~

In London today, Vice President Nixon attended the dedication of an American memorial chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral. The chapel commemorates 28-thousand Americans...based in Britain...who died during World War Two. And it was built with funds contributed by the British people. Nixon said in a speech...later in the day...that the West should adopt as its primary goal "the victory of plenty over want, health over disease, freedom over tyranny." "Let us speak less," he said, "of the threat of Communism and more of the promise of freedom." In a crowded day, Nixon also made a courtesy call on Sir Winston Churchill.

In Washington, Mr. Nixon's office today released the text of a telegram the vice president sent out to all Republican congressional candidates around the middle of October. Mr. Nixon told them (in his telegram) that they could "blitz" the opposition, if they would go over to the attack. The line of the attack, Nixon said, should be that "by electing more Democrats, the voters are taking a grave risk that their taxes will be raised, prices will sky-rocket and unemployment will increase." In foreign policy, he said, "all the opposition offers is a return to the Acheson policy of weakness and appeasement." Nixon's office made the telegram public after it was quoted at length in the New York Post and the Washington Star.

Latest returns in the Alaska election give the Democratic Party a clean sweep of every major race. The last contest to be decided was between Democrat Ernest Gruening and the Republican, Mike Stepovich, running for one of the two seats in the U.S. Senate. Gruening has now taken an insurmountable lead.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today congratulated corn farmers on their vote to eliminate acreage controls and accept lower price supports. It was a decision, he said, to which he believed Congress would pay "great attention". In a referendum yesterday, farmers voted better than 2-to-1 to end production controls on corn. The referendum was conducted in 26 states.

A third of the nation's airliners remain grounded as strikes continue against Eastern Airlines and T.W.A. As of this Thanksgiving Eve, some 200 cities served by the struck carriers are feeling the effect.

Edward R. Murrow: November 26, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

At the start of the Berlin crisis, Secretary Dulles told a news conference, that we would maintain our position in West Berlin and do so by force if need be. At his news conference today he said that we will insist on the Soviet Union living up to its obligations in assuring Western access to Berlin, but he ~~did not mention the~~ said to talk about would be academic use of force. It was a startling difference, and it took his news conference by surprise. He was pressed with questions about an air lift and about our shooting our way through to Berlin with supplies. But he avoided any answer that indicated an intention to use force. It all depends on what happens. He even said it was quite possible to deal with the East Germans as agents of the Soviet Union at check points, and do it without de facto recognition of the East German regime. ~~This is a possibility suggested by the British at the start of consultations on an agreed Berlin policy. In accepting it the United States may have given up its preference for an air lift rather than have any dealings whatever with East German officials.~~

Mr. Dulles's statement is reported to have caused concern in Bonn. But he justified it on the ground that East Germans are already being dealt with as Soviet agents, by all three Western Powers, and by the West Germans.

It may, however, be misconstruing Mr. Dulles's painstaking effort today to avoid sabre-rattling to conclude there is no sabre to rattle. Today's statements were interpreted at the State Department as being meant to be read in Moscow, not as Western retreat, but as leaving the door open for a modification of Russian policy. It is thought that Khrushchev "goofed" in his handling of the Berlin crisis. He started out arguing that the West should pull out of Berlin because it had violated the Potsdam Agreement to the point that it no longer was valid. The Soviet proposals for Berlin were to have been spelled out to Western Governments in notes delivered last week end. The notes were not delivered. That certainly suggests a hitch.

Mr. Dulles suggested today that Khrushchev spoke at the outset without benefit of legal advice, which he said, with a smile, is always a bad thing to do. He explained that the Allied rights in Berlin do not rest on the Potsdam Agreement which does not even mention them. And the crisis, as Mr. Dulles put it, is not over a Western withdrawal from Berlin, but over an announced Soviet intention to turn over its own rights to the East German Government. Mr. Dulles said that the Soviet Union is under an explicit obligation to assure normal access and egress at Berlin, which was accepted at the Foreign Ministers' meeting in Paris in June 1949 after the end of the Berlin blockade. There the Four Powers exchanged what were formally called "obligations" to assure those rights. "We do not" Mr. Dulles said, "accept the view that the Soviet Union can disengage itself from that responsibility." He argued that the responsibility was re-affirmed at the Summit Conference in 1955, when the Four Powers recognized their responsibility for the German question. The "German question", he said, "has always been held to include Berlin."

So it is this transfer of an obligation by the Soviet Union which the Western Powers have agreed to reject, and they have not ruled out any course of action needed to hold the Soviet Union to its obligations, ~~Mr. Dulles said~~. But they note that the Soviet policy may be changing. Herr Ullbricht, Communist boss in East Germany, said yesterday that East Germany would not use force in exercising the functions to be handed over by the Soviet Union. And an official statement from Moscow last night also said there was no intention to use force. In the light of disavowal to use force in the crisis from the other side, Mr. Dulles might have sounded bellicose if he talked of using it. And that might make it harder for Khrushchev to change his policy.

If there is a hitch in Moscow, it may be that Poland has had something to do with it. For while the Potsdam Agreement says nothing about the Allied rights in Berlin, it does say a lot about Poland's frontiers. And if the Potsdam agreement is to be scotched, Poland's claim to its frontiers will be weakened.

It may seem pretty unrealistic to act as though Mr. Khrushchev would beat a retreat even to assuage the Poles. But actually Mr. Dulles, as the State Department sees it, was doing some sparring. If there is trouble in Berlin, Dulles does not intend to have it appear to be the result of Western belligerence. He hopes to make it clear, that it resulted from Soviet repudiation of its own solemn obligation.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

Secretary of State Dulles would appear to have taken pains at his news conference not to sound bellicose. He did not threaten use of force. Horace, the wise old Roman, said, "Force unaccompanied by prudence sinks under its own weight. The gods give effect to force regulated by wisdom. They pursue with wrath bold, unhallowed schemes."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Western powers have reached "basic agreement" on how to react to Soviet pressures on Berlin. Mr. Dulles declined...at his news conference...to spell out this agreement. He said if Russia turns over control of the Berlin supply routes to East Germany, the Western powers might deal with the East Germans as agents of the Soviet Union. If this were done, it would be in such a way as not to imply recognition of the East German regime. Whether it is done at all, he said, would depend on the "precise circumstances." (West German officials tonight expressed surprise at this statement. They said they knew of no agreement that the West might deal with the East Germans on the basis that they were agents for Moscow.) A reporter asked Mr. Dulles about the recent proposal by Senator Gore that the United States might...voluntarily...stop all nuclear weapons testing, except for explosions conducted underground or far out in space. Gore suggested that the suspension of tests which pollute the atmosphere last for three years. Such a suspension, he said, would call Russia's "propaganda bluff"...and strengthen our moral position throughout the world. Dulles said that Gore's proposal might be considered when and if the Geneva talks on nuclear test suspension break down. But Dulles said he is not assuming the Geneva negotiations will break down, even though the going is difficult. There is "some slight evidence" he said, that the Russians have conducted nuclear tests since November third... when the last Soviet test was detected and announced by the Atomic Energy Commission. He said it would be "premature" to conclude that a de facto cessation now exists. Dulles said underdeveloped countries that are free cannot expect to achieve economic progress as rapidly as Communist areas, where slave labor is used and human rights are submerged in the interests of the state. It may be, he said, that in our foreign aid program more emphasis should be put on economic assistance as compared to aid of a military nature. And he pointed out that a committee...named by President Eisenhower to look into the matter... will be making recommendations.

It was announced today that Secretary Dulles will be seeing the President in Augusta over the week-end. News Secretary Hagerty said the meeting will not be "of an emergency nature."

The official East German news agency discloses that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko made a secret visit to East Berlin "within the past few days." During the visit, Gromyko conferred with Premier Grotewohl and other East German leaders. We are given no details.

Premier DeGaulle flew to West Germany today for an all-day conference with Chancellor Adenauer. A communique issued after their meeting called for maintaining the status of Berlin..."as defined," it said, "by international agreements now in force and as guaranteed by the governments of France, the United States and the United Kingdom."' Reportedly, DeGaulle and Adenauer also agreed on measures to prevent discrimination against countries outside the European Common Market when it becomes operative on January first. West Germany and France are both members of the Common Market. Britain is not.

In London today, Vice President Nixon attended the dedication of an American memorial chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral. The chapel commemorates 28-thousand Americans...based in Britain...who died during World War Two. And it was built with funds contributed by the British people. Nixon said in a speech...later in the day...that the West should adopt as its primary goal "the victory of plenty over want, health over disease, freedom over tyranny." "Let us speak less," he said, "of the threat of Communism and more of the promise of freedom." In a crowded day, Nixon also made a courtesy call on Sir Winston Churchill.

In Washington, Mr. Nixon's office today released the text of a telegram the vice president sent out to all Republican congressional candidates around the middle of October. Mr. Nixon told them (in his telegram) that they could "blitz" the opposition, if they would go over to the attack. The line of attack, Nixon said, should be that "by electing more Democrats, the voters are taking a grave risk that their taxes will be raised, prices will sky-rocket and unemployment will increase." In foreign policy, he said, "all the opposition offers is a return to the Acheson policy of weakness and appeasement." Nixon's office made the telegram public after it was quoted it length in the New York Post and the Washington Star.

Latest returns in the Alaska election give the Democratic Party a clean sweep of every major race. The last contest to be decided was between Democrat Ernest Gruening and the Republican, Mike Stepovich, running for one of two seats in the U.S. Senate. Gruening has now taken an insurmountable lead.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today congratulated corn farmers on their vote to eliminate acreage controls and accept lower price supports. It was a decision, he said, to which he believed Congress would pay "great attention." In a referendum yesterday, farmers voted better than 2-to-1 to end production controls on corn. The referendum was conducted in 26 states.

A third of the nation's airliners remain grounded as strikes continue against Eastern Airlines and TWA. As of this Thanksgiving Eve, some 200 cities served by the struck carriers are feeling the effect.

At the start of the Berlin crisis, Secretary Dulles told a news conference that we would maintain our position in West Berlin and do so by force if need be. At his news conference today he said that we will insist on the Soviet Union living up to its obligations in assuring Western access to Berlin, but he said to talk about use of force would be academic. It was a startling difference and it took his news conference by surprise. He was pressed with questions about an air lift and about our shooting our way through to Berlin with supplies. But he avoided any answer that indicated an intention to use force. It all depends on what happens. He even said it was quite possible to deal with the East Germans as agents of the Soviet Union at check points, and do it without de facto recognition of the East German regime.

Mr. Dulles's statement is reported to have caused concern in Bonn. But he justified it on the ground that East Germans are already being dealt with as Soviet agents, by all three Western Powers and by the West Germans.

It may, however, be misconstruing Mr. Dulles's painstaking effort today to avoid sabre-rattling to conclude there is no sabre to rattle. Today's statements were interpreted at the State Department as being meant to be read in Moscow, not as Western retreat, but as leaving the door open for a modification of Russian policy. It is thought that Khrushchev "goofed" in his handling of the Berlin crisis. He started out arguing that the West should pull out of Berlin because it had violated the Potsdam Agreement to the point that it no longer was valid. The Soviet proposals for Berlin were to have been spelled out to Western Governments in notes delivered last weekend. The notes were not delivered. That certainly suggests a hitch.

Mr. Dulles suggested today that Khrushchev spoke at the outset without benefit of legal advice, which he said, with a smile, is always a bad thing to do. He explained that the Allied rights in Berlin do not rest on the Potsdam Agreement which does not even mention them. And the crisis, as Mr. Dulles put it, is not over a Western withdrawal from Berlin, but over an announced Soviet intention to turn over its own rights to the East German Government. Mr. Dulles said that the Soviet Union is under an explicit obligation to assure normal access and egress at Berlin, which was accepted at the Foreign Ministers' meeting in Paris in June 1949 after the end of the Berlin blockade. There the Four Powers exchanged what were formally called "obligations" to assure those rights. "We do not" Mr. Dulles said, "accept the view that the Soviet Union can disengage itself from that responsibility." He argued that the responsibility was re-affirmed at the Summit Conference in 1955, when the Four Powers recognized their responsibility for the German question. The "German question," he said, "has always been held to include Berlin."

So it is this transfer of an obligation by the Soviet Union which the Western Powers have agreed to reject, and they have not ruled out any course of action needed to hold the Soviet Union to its obligations, But they note that the Soviet policy may be changing. Herr Ullbricht, Communist boss in East Germany, said yesterday that East Germany would not use force in exercising the functions to be handed over by the Soviet Union. And an official statement from Moscow last night also said there was no intention to use force. In the light of disavowal to use force in the crisis from the other side, Mr. Dulles might have sounded bellicose if he talked of using it. And that might make it harder for Khrushchev to change his policy.

If there is a hitch in Moscow, it may be that Poland has had something to do with it. For while the Potsdam Agreement says nothing about the Allied rights in Berlin, it does say a lot about Poland's frontiers. And if the Potsdam Agreement is to be scotched, Poland's claim to its frontiers will be weakened.

It may seem pretty unrealistic to act as though Mr. Khrushchev would beat a retreat even to assuage the Poles. But actually Mr. Dulles, as the State Department sees it, was doing some sparring. If there is trouble in Berlin Dulles does not intend to have it appear to be the result of Western belligerence. He hopes to make it clear that it resulted from Soviet repudiation of its own solemn obligation.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles would appear to have taken pains at his news conference not to sound bellicose. He did not threaten use of force. Horace, the wise old Roman said, "Force unaccompanied by prudence sinks under its own weight. The gods give effect fo force regulated by wisdom. They pursue with wrath, bold, unhallowed schemes."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Nov. 27, 1958

This is the news:

The State Department reacted firmly tonight to Russia's proposal that West Berlin be made a "free city", stripped of the protection of Western troops. "The Soviets," the department said, "seem to be proposing that while they keep their grip on East Berlin, the three Western allies abandon their rights in West Berlin and retire in favor of what is called a free city." The United States, it said, will not enter into any agreement with Russia which, "whatever the form, would have the end result of abandoning the people of West Berlin to hostile domination."

~~This is the crux~~

Russia ~~has~~ HAD suggested that West Berlin be made a "free city" with its own government, independent of both East and West. / Under the Soviet plan, the four-power occupation of Berlin would be abolished. Russia would turn over to the East Germans control of the supply routes in and out of the city. / And West Berlin would be demilitarized, meaning the withdrawal of all American, British and French troops. / Russia proposes that the new status of West Berlin be negotiated over a period of six months. The status of East Berlin would not be affected. It would continue to serve as capital of the East German Communist state. / Russia says it would have "no objection" to the United Nations "also sharing, in one way or another, in observing the free city status of West Berlin." These proposals were made in a long formal note, delivered to the Western ambassadors in Moscow. The note accuses the Western powers of breaking the Potsdam Agreement by arming West Germany and turning it into "an instrument of policy spearheaded against the Soviet Union." The Soviet note also accuses the United States, Britain and France of using their position in West Berlin as a base for carrying out subversive activity. It claims that their withdrawal would eliminate a source of constant friction and serve the cause of peace. The note adds, "If this proposal is not acceptable to the governments of the three Western powers, the government of the U.S.S.R. emphasizes there is no topic left for discussion relating to the Berlin issue."

→

In Moscow, Khrushchev held his first news conference since becoming premier. A Western correspondent asked Khrushchev whether...if the West rejected his proposal...it would mean the end of negotiation on the Berlin question---that was what the note seemed to say. Khrushchev said that would depend on the Western "approach". In any case, he said, West Berlin at present is a "cancerous tumor" and the Russian plan is designed to remove it. He said, "This is not an ultimatum."

Newhere has the reaction to the Russian proposals been stronger than in West Germany, and for that story we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

(Tape runs 3:12
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

West Germany remains concerned over Secretary Dulles' statement yesterday that we might deal with the East Germans as agents for Russia in the matter of access to Berlin. When the West German government's press chief, Felix von Eckardt, held a news conference this afternoon, two-thirds of the time was devoted to answering questions concerning what Dulles said yesterday. Eckardt told the West German reporters they should bear in mind that when Mr. Dulles spoke, he had not seen the new Russian note.

In Augusta, Georgia...President Eisenhower received a State Department memorandum, outlining the Soviet note and had Thanksgiving dinner with his four small grandchildren. He also got in a round of golf.

Edward R. Murrow: November 28, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

This is the season for the counting of blessings. ~~This reporter would doubt that any man has ever set down in a fashion that satisfied him completely his multifaceted reasons for being thankful. And this reporter has no intention of trying it. For most of us the real reasons for giving thanks are probably too personal to be made public, or at least unlikely to be of any considerable interest to our fellow citizens.~~

For my own part I am grateful for being alive and curious at this particular time in human history. If given a choice of living a few score of years at any period in the recorded history of man, I would quickly choose to live those years here and now, because never before has so much been at stake. History turns on pivots, and we are the pivot. This, I think, is the first time in the history of mankind when everyone is able to partake in a choice, indeed is forced to partake in a choice between having a future and having no future. There has never been a time when the future was at the same time so promising and so ominous.

We in this country are going to play a leading role in determining whether the threat or the promise shall be realized. ~~When man possessed only a dull hoe, how he used it made very little difference to the society~~

~~in which he lived. Only his immediate family was affected. Humans now have instruments capable of destroying humanity~~, and there is no guarantee that ~~they will not be used. This small planet on which we live can within reasonable time become literally a land of milk and honey~~, or it can with ~~very little effort commit suicide. That, of course, would take care of the cows and the bees too.~~

We are, I think, going to find out something about our own country. Are we merely an accident of history and geography? To what extent have we been living on the wisdom and dedication of our ancestors? They established on this continent a set of profound values, the belief in freedom, belief in the search for truth, belief in hard work - willingness to sacrifice. And in this generous and capacious land they scored a great success. We built within our borders; we were spared the exhaustive struggles for power outside those borders. When we took part in the world battles we did it from a distance, so that two World Wars left us even richer, stronger and more productive than before. Now there is no safety in distance. Now there are no allies capable of holding and bleeding, while we re-tool.

About twenty years ago a perceptive Frenchman, Andre Siegfried, wrote a book called "America Comes Of Age". The title would be more appropriate today. We can no longer use our youth as an excuse for what we do or fail to do at home or abroad. If we place private good ahead of the public good, it will be known. We can, for the time being, probably maintain our luxurious standard of living, and end up by being a great continental island off the coast of Siberia, with the rest of the world either united against us or indifferent to our fate. We can also lose our freedom while busily preparing to defend it. Or we can set an example of expanding social and economic equality, which may in the end of the day be more powerful than the exponent of our dollars.

I had the privilege of watching the testing time of another nation. That was Britain in the time of Baldwin and Chamberlain. The British had finally to choose between comfort and commitments. They chose a trial of faith by fire. There was a time when it appeared that the trial would not be risked; but it was, and the record will be there so long as men read English.

We in this country do not face a trial by fire. The challenge is utterly different. The British were saved because they found themselves in a common peril that affected them all and united them all. They were great because greatness was demanded of them by ~~their leaders.~~ We also face a common peril, together with what is left of the free world. When we understand it, it may unite us. [As a young nation we face an old problem. What must we do to be saved? [redacted] It is possible that the world will again resort to the terrible arbitrament of war. No one knows. Meanwhile, we must make our plans, our policies and our sacrifices in cold blood. There are no trumpets, no first light glancing off bayonets — and there won't be. Nothing less than The sum total of man's achievements to date, and his hopes for the future is at stake. And we Americans, by our action or inaction, whether we want to or not, are going to play a large role in determining the outcome. / This, without question, is the best time to be alive. / For we approach, and I should think fairly rapidly, the dawn of a new era, or the destruction of [redacted] civilization as we have known it. / We in this country are not cast in the role of spectators; and who among us would have it otherwise?

Winston Churchill.

Back in to moment.

George Bryan —

Word for Today

There are many things for which we can be thankful...and not the least among them is the fact that we live in a momentous time, in which we have much to gain and everything to lose. What must we do to be saved? Stephen Vincent Benet once said in a Thanksgiving prayer, "Give us brotherhood, not only for this day but for all our years, a brotherhood not only of words but of deeds."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, November 27, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... and for that story, we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

LEISER: Nikita Khrushchev's latest proposal for Berlin was described here tonight by one West German official as a "grotesque practical joke." "The catch," the official told this correspondent, "is that the victims of the joke would be the two and a quarter million human beings who live in West Berlin, and the Western powers as well. If you considered such a proposal," said the official, "you would find yourselves not only out of Berlin, but confidence in your power to hold the line in West Europe would be so shattered that you soon would be off the continent." The public top-level German reaction to the Khrushchev proposal is that the Berlin situation remains extraordinarily serious. These were the words this afternoon of West German press chief, Felix von Eckhart. The private German reaction is a good deal more explosive. The proposal simply makes no sense for the West, a man in the Bonn Foreign Ministry said to me today after the Soviet notes came out. "The West," he said, "is asked to sacrifice a position that it has held for 13 years by right. Incidentally, it's only position within the Communist satellite belt in Europe. And," said this German, "in exchange it gets nothing except a promise that West Berlin might retain the capitalist system. But, you are rendered powerless to see that the promise is kept." The West Germans note especially the Soviet declaration that it stands to reason that it would be necessary to come to an agreement with the East German Republic An free access to Berlin. Here in Bonn, it is pointed out that this question of getting in and out of Berlin without being dependent on the mercy of the East Germans is what the crisis of the past 17 days has been all about. The West Germans also take note of the Soviet demand that the free city of West Berlin should undertake not to allow any hostile or subversive activities within its borders. In practical terms, it's pointed out here, this would mean that West Berlin would have to close its boundaries to the flow of refugees from Communist East Germany nearly two hundred thousand of them a year. West Berlin would also have to close down the two radio stations which now give the East Germans their only non-Communist news. And, it would mean that the West Berlin Free City, in fact, only a fragment of a city, since the East Sector would remain Communist would be subjected to endless pressure with no means of defense against the pressure. Finally, it is noted by the Germans here, that the Soviet plan does not even offer United Nations protection of West Berlin, but only UN observation to see that Moscow's guarantees are kept.

This is Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: West Germany remains concerned over Secretary ....

FZ/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

This is the news:

The State Department reacted firmly tonight to Russia's proposal that West Berlin be made a "free city", stripped of the protection of Western troops. "The Soviets," the department said, "seem to be proposing that while they keep their grip on East Berlin, the three Western allies abandon their rights in West Berlin and retire in favor of what is called a free city." The United States, it said, will not enter into any agreement with Russia which, "whatever the form, would have the end result of abandoning the people of West Berlin to hostile domination."

Russia had suggested that West Berlin be made a "free city" with its own government, independent of both East and West. Under the Soviet plan, the four-power occupation of Berlin would be abolished. Russia would turn over to the East Germans control of the supply routes in and out of the city. And West Berlin would be demilitarized, meaning the withdrawal of all American, British and French troops. Russia proposes that the new status of West Berlin be negotiated over a period of six months. The status of East Berlin would not be affected. It would continue to serve as capital of the East German Communist state. Russia says it would have "no objection" to the United Nations "also sharing, in one way or another, in observing the free city status of West Berlin." These proposals were made in a long formal note, delivered to the Western ambassadors in Moscow. The note accuses the Western powers of breaking the Potsdam Agreement by arming West Germany and turning it into "an instrument of policy spearheaded against the Soviet Union." The Soviet note also accuses the United States, Britain and France of using their position in West Berlin as a base for carrying out subversive activity. It claims that their withdrawal would eliminate a source of constant friction and serve the cause of peace. The note adds, "If this proposal is not acceptable to the governments of the three Western powers, the government of the U.S.S.R. emphasizes there is no topic left for discussion relating to the Berlin issue."

In Moscow, Khrushchev held his first news conference since becoming premier. A Western correspondent asked Khrushchev whether...if the West rejected his proposal...it would mean the end of negotiation on the Berlin question---that was what the note seemed to say. Khrushchev siad that would depend on the Western "approach." In any case, he said, West Berlin at present is a "cancerous tumor" and the Russian plan is designed to remove it. He said, "This is not an ultimatum."

Nowhere has the reaction to the Russian proposals been stronger than in West Germany, and for that story we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

LEISER: Nikita Khrushchev's latest proposal for Berlin was described here tonight by one West German official as a "grotesque practical joke," "The catch," the official told this correspondent, "is that the victims of the joke would be the two and a quarter million human beings who live in West Berlin, and the Western powers as well. If you considered such a proposal," said the official, "you would find yourselves not only out of Berlin, but confidence in your power to hold the line in West Europe would be so shattered that you soon would be off the continent." The public top level German reaction to the Khrushchev is that the Berlin situation remains extraordinarily serious. Those were the words this afternoon of West German press chief, Felix von Eckhart. The private German reaction is a good deal more explosive. The proposal simply makes no sense for the West, a man in the Bonn Foreign Ministry said to me today after the Soviet notes came out. "The West," he said, "is asked to sacrifice a position that it has held for 13 years by right. Incidentally, its only position within the Communist satellite belt in Europe. And," said this German, "in exchange it gets nothing except a promise that West Berlin might retain the capitalist system. But, you are rendered powerless to see that the promise is kept."

The West Germans note especially the Soviet declaration that it stands to reason that it would be necessary to come to an agreement with the East German Republic in free access to Berlin. Here in Bonn, it is pointed out that this question of getting in and out of Berlin without being dependent on the mercy of the East Germans is what the crisis of the past 17 days has been all about. The West Germans also take note of the Soviet demand that the free city of West Berlin should undertake not to allow any hostile or subversive activities within its borders. In practical terms, it's pointed out here, this would mean that West Berlin would have to close its boundaries to the flow of refugees from Communist East Germany nearly two hundred thousand of them a year. West Berlin would also have to close down the two radio stations which now give the East Germans their only non-Communist news. And, it would mean that the West Berlin Free City, in fact, only a fragment of a city, since the East Sector would remain Communist would be subjected to endless pressure with no means of defense against the pressure. Finally, it is noted by the Germans here, that the Soviet plan does not even offer United Nations protection of West Berlin, but only UN observation to see that Moscow's guarantees are kept.

This is Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW:West Germany remains concerned over Secretary Dulles' statement yesterday that we might deal with the East Germans as agents for Russia in the matter of access to Berlin. When the West German government's press chief, Felix von Eckhardt held a news conference this afternoon, two-thirds of the time was devoted to answering questions concerning what Dulles said yesterday. Eckhardt told the West German reporters they should bear in mind that when Mr. Dulles spoke, he had not seen the new Russian note.

In Augusta, Georgia...President Eisenhower received a State Department memorandum, outlining the Soviet note and had Thanksgiving dinner with his four small grandchildren. He also got in a round of golf.

This is the season for the counting of blessings. For my own part I am grateful for being alive and curious at this particular time in human history. If given a choice of living a few score of years at any period in the recorded history of man, I would quickly choose to live those years here and now, because never before has so much been at stake. History turns on pivots, and we are the pivot. This, I think, is the first time in the history of mankind when everyone is able to partake in a choice, indeed is forced to partake in a choice between having a future and having no future. There has never been a time when the future was at the same time so promising and so ominous.

We in this country are going to play a leading role in determining whether the threat or the promise shall be realized.

We are I think, going to find out something about our country. Are we merely an accident of history and geography? To what extent have we been living on the wisdom and dedication of our ancestors? They established on this continent a set of profound values, the belief in freedom, belief in the search for truth, belief in hard work - willingness to sacrifice. And in this generous and capacious land they scored a great success. We built within our borders; we were spared the exhaustive struggles for power outside those borders. When we took part in the world battles, we did it from a distance, so that two World Wars left us even richer, stronger, and more productive than before. Now there is no safety in distance. Now there are no allies capable of holding and bleeding, while we re-tool.

About twenty years ago a perceptive Frenchman, Andre Siegfreid wrote a book called "America Comes Of Age." The title would be more appropriate today. We can no longer use our youth as an excuse for what we do or fail to do at home or abroad. If we place private good ahead of the public good, it will be known. We can, for the time being, probably maintain our luxurious standard of living, and end up by being a great continental island off the coast of Siberia with the rest of the world either united against us or indifferent to our fate. We can also lose our freedom while busily preparing to defend it. Or we can set an example of expanding social and economic equality, which may in the end of the day be more powerful than the export of our dollars.

We in this country do not face a trial by fire. The challenge is utterly different. The British were saved because they found themselves in a common peril that affected them all and united them all. They were great because greatness was demanded of them by Winston Churchill. We also face a common peril, together with what is left of the free world. When we understand it, it may unite us. As a young nation we face an old problem. What must we do to be saved? It is possible that the world will again resort to the terrible arbitrament of war. No one knows. Meanwhile, we must make our plans, our policies and our sacrifices in cold blood. There are no trumpets, no first light glancing off bayonets - and there won't be. Nothing less than the sum total of man's achievements to date, and his hopes for the future is at stake. And we Americans, by our action or inaction, whether we want to or not, are going to play a large role in determining the outcome. This, without question, is the best time to be alive. For we approach, and I should think fairly rapidly, the dawn of a new era, or the destruction of civilization as we have known it. We in this country are not cast in the role of spectators; and who among us would have it otherwise?

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There are many things for which we can be thankful...and not the least among them is the fact that we live in a momentous time, in which we have much to gain and everything to lose. What must we do to be saved? Stephen Vincent Benet once said in a Thanksgiving prayer, "Give us brotherhood, not only for this day, but for all our years, a brotherhood not only of words but of deeds."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 28, 1958

This is the news:

The Western powers have begun consultations on how to answer Russia's proposal on Berlin. Russia proposed yesterday that West Berlin be ~~demilitarized~~ disarmed and proclaimed a "free city". The State Department said last night that the United States "will not enter into any agreement with Russia which would have the end result of abandoning the people of West Berlin to hostile domination." Similar statements were made in London and Paris, but the Western powers must now draft a formal joint reply. The United States ambassador to West Germany, David Bruce, conferred today with Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn. In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles talked on the telephone with President Eisenhower and then saw the French ambassador. These consultations may take some time. The Soviet proposal reportedly will be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of NATO foreign ministers, and that meeting is scheduled for December 16. Whether a joint policy statement is issued before that time remains to be seen. One approach said to be under consideration is a "Big Four" meeting with the Russians themselves.

Vice President Nixon today sent a message of reassurance to the mayor of West Berlin, Willy Brandt. Nixon said that the people of West Berlin have America's "undiminished support". He told a news conference in London, "The solution to Berlin is the solution to the basic German problem." Reporters took it that he meant reunification.

Mayor Brandt of West Berlin said today that the words of support voiced by the United States are "an encouraging sign." "But," he said, "do not stick your head in the sand. The naked existence of 2-million people who live in West Berlin is at stake."

West Berlin was visited today by five members of the United States Congress. One of them---Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio---told Mayor Brandt that Khrushchev would not be allowed "to nibble away" the freedom of the city. "We should take a strong position," he said, "and not retreat." Hays is a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reports a growing air of pessimism in West Berlin. There is no panic, he says, but some people are talking about getting out "while there is still time." Some money also is being transferred out of the city.

In Geneva today, Russia formally submitted a set of proposals for preventing surprise attack. The proposals include limited ground and "aerial skies" inspection. They also include neutralization of Germany and disarmament---political subjects which the West insists are outside the technical scope of the conference.

President Eisenhower today conferred in Augusta, Georgia, with his top budget and defense advisers. Secretary of Defense McElroy told reporters after the two and a half hour conference that the Administration was going to have "a pretty rough time" avoiding an increase in military spending in the next fiscal year. He indicated that the increase in the defense budget might be about a billion dollars. The increase, he said, would not be as much as two billion. McElroy said no final or even tentative figure had been agreed on so far.

Today...in Algeria...voters began electing 67 deputies to the French National Assembly. Rebel forces attacked a polling station in Eastern Algeria. A French military spokesman says no voters were hurt, but that 20 of the attackers were killed. The voting will continue through Sunday.

Four more French territories in Africa decided today to become members of the new French Community. They were: The West African territory of Mauretania, and the territories of the Middle Congo, GA-BON CHAD Gabon and Chad in French Equatorial Africa. They will now become autonomous states within the community.

Russia has sent a note to Japan, protesting what it calls "the continued use of American bases in Japan for anti-Chinese aggression." "The U.S.S.R.," the note says, "cautions that Japan is risking involvement in a war with all its grave consequences."

A three-judge federal court in New Orleans today ruled unconstitutional a Louisiana state law prohibiting Negroes and whites from competing with each other in athletic events. The decision deals only with the section of the law governing participants, and does not alter the state ban on integrated seating of spectators. That issue was not before the court.

The Labor Department reports that the steady increase in employment, which began in mid-summer, is continuing. It probably will continue to rise, the department says, through the end of the year. Most employment centers, however, still have what the department calls ~~"an over-all labor surplus."~~

The Agriculture Department reports that the prices farmers receive for their products dropped almost one-half of one percent in the month ending November 15th. The cost of production went up one-third of one percent to reach a new all-time high.

Here in New York today, a federal judge ordered the Air Line Pilots Association not to strike against American Airlines before next Monday. His previous restraining order would have expired tonight. The strikes against Eastern Airlines and T.W.A. continue. However, another federal judge ruled ~~that the flight engineers union that it cannot base its strike against Eastern solely on the issue of whether a flight engineer is required to take pilot training. The union opposes the requirement, which is favored by the airline.~~

Edward R. Murrow: November 28, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The only response so far to the Soviet proposal to make West Berlin a free city has been a loud and dramatic "No" from the three Western capitals, from West Germany and from West Berlin itself. It was not a preconcerted "No". It rang out impulsively and without consultation. But from now on consultation is imperative. For the Soviet proposal was not a final offer. It was an opening gambit of a new stage in the treatment of the German question.

So much is being said about the unacceptability of the free city idea that little attention has been paid to the fact that the Russians have changed their pitch in regard to Berlin. A few days ago the world was heading toward a crisis in which an airlift was the least to be expected, and hostilities both on the ground and in the air were dstinct possibilities. Now peace is PROMISED for six months. Those who pilot Western foreign policies can breathe freely, if not easily. They have been given a plan. A plan invites a counter-plan. A counter-plan in turn calls for modifications and counter-modifications.

The fact that the initial plan is not acceptable is a point, but not the main point. Probably nobody would have been more surprised than Khrushchev, if his proposal had been found acceptable. The main point is that the West has been invited to plough up fresh ground in approaching the German question. It very much looks as though the Russians hope for enough progress in six months, to justify their renewing pressure for a Summit Conference.

If the Western Allies had a single foreign policy staff, the Soviet proposal might not have been met by today's unanimous and unqualified "No". It might have been greeted with a "Yes, perhaps". All right, the West might have said, you suggest a free and de-militarized West Berlin. We like both words if they are used together. Let's apply both of them to East Berlin, too. Let's make East Berlin a free city, from which you remove your troops, and your puppet government removes its troops. Then let ten thousand United Nations troops guarantee the two cities. Or if that is too many, any reasonable number, that can keep the lines of communication open. And to make sure that East Berlin is free, let's hold really free elections, so that East Berlin has a government of its own choosing. We should like the elections, so that East Berlin has a government of its own choosing. We should like the election to result in the unification of Berlin, as a miniature preview of the unification of Germany. But if East Berlin does not vote for that - which it might not, because of the difficulty of unscrambling all the socialization that has been put through - we are ready to set up twin cities, each free and under special guarantee by the United Nations.

This might have been the West's first counter-proposal. Never mind that Khrushchev and the East Germans would have turned it down. It would have been good propaganda, just as the Soviet plan was good propaganda. But it wasn't offered, and nothing like it can be offered right away. For the Western Allies are hobbled. They can't improvise. They have to consult, iron out the inevitable disagreements, and finally come up with something that is hard to modify in the course of bargaining. There seems to be nothing more inflexible than the loose alliance of free countries.

The Kremlin starts negotiations with the advantage of being able to shift, advance, and retreat at will. In fact, the proposal to make West Berlin a free city may have been a rabbit pulled out of the hat in the last few days. Perhaps the Soviet Foreign Office did intend to make this proposal in just this way when it notified the Western diplomats that the notes were to be ready last week end. But it looks as though Khrushchev had been so startled to find himself headed for a physical showdown with the West, that he changed his strategy. He hastily put off any showdown for six months, and offered something to negotiate about.

The novelty of the idea is that a free city of West Berlin would be put under the United Nations. This the Soviet note keeps vague so as to win the maximum favor from members of the United Nations, and from elements inside the Western countries.

It serves the constant purpose of the Soviet Union to divide the Allies. It also familiarizes the world with the notion of the United Nations having a role in a German settlement. One day Khrushchev may propose that a free, federated and de-militarized Germany be put under United Nations supervision. That too might be unacceptable to the West. But if the Kremlin is not to be handed a great propaganda victory, the West must be able to offer something more constructive than blank negatives, and more promising of results than the old formula of free elections in East Germany as a pre-condition to unification.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

The Russians say, "Let's make West Berlin a free city." And now it is up to us to make a counter-proposal. The counter-proposal, in turn, may prompt still other proposals from the other side. In all of this, the West may gain by resourceful application of the Novel Idea. As John K. Hutchens once said, "If the race is to the swift, it is also to the imaginative."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Western powers have begun consultations on how to answer Russia's proposal on Berlin. Russia proposed yesterday that West Berlin be disarmed and proclaimed a "free city." The State Department said last night that the United States "will not enter into any agreement with Russia which would have the end result of abandoning the people of West Berlin to hostile domination." Similar statements were made in London and Paris, but the Western powers must now draft a formal joint reply. The United States ambassador to West Germany, David Bruce, conferred today with Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn. In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles talked on the telephone with President Eisenhower and then saw the French ambassador. These consultations may take some time. The Soviet proposal reportedly will be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of NATO foreign ministers, and that meeting is scheduled for December 16. Whether a joint policy statement is issued before that time remains to be seen. One approach said to be under consideration is a "Big Four" meeting with the Russians themselves.

Vice President Nixon today sent a meesage of reassurance to the mayor of West Berlin, Willy Brandt. Nixon said that the people of West Berlin have America's "undiminished support." He told a news conference in London, "The solution to Berlin is the solution to the basic German problem". Reporters took it that he meant reunification.

Mayor Brandt of West Berlin said today that the words of support voiced by the United States are "an encouraging sign." "But," he said, "do not stick your head in the sand. The naked existence of 2-million people who live in West Berlin is at stake."

West Berlin was visited today by five members of the United States Congress. One of them---Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio---told Mayor Brandt that Khrushchev would not be allowed "to nibble away" the freedom of the city. "We should take a strong position," he said, " and not retreat." Hays is a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reports a growing air of pessimism in West Berlin. There is no panic, he says, but some people are talking about getting out "while there is still time." Some money also is being transferred out of the city.

In Geneva today, Russia formally submitted a set of proposals for preventing surprise attack. The proposals include limited ground and "aerial skies" inspection. They also include neutralization of Germany and disarmament, political subjects which the West insists are outside the technical scope of the conference.

President Eisenhower today conferred in Augusta, Georgia, with his top budget and defense advisers. Secretary of Defense McElroy told reporters after the two and a half hour conference that the Administration was going to have "a pretty rough time" avoiding an increase in military spending in the next fiscal year. He indicated that the increase in the defense budget might be about a billion dollars. The increase, he said, would not be as much as two billion. McElroy said no final or even tentative figure had benn agreed on so far.

Today,..in Algeria...voters began electing 67 deputies to the French National Assembly. Rebel forces attacked a polling station in Eastern Algeria. A French military spokesman says no voters were hurt, but that 20 of the attackers were killed. The voting will continue through Sunday.

Four more French territories in Africa decided today to become members of the new French Community. They were: The West African territory of Mauretania, and the territories of the Middle Congo, Gabon and Chad in French Equatorial Africa. They will now become autonomous states within the community.

Russia has sent a note to Japan, protesting what it calls "the continued use of American bases in Japan for anti-Chinese aggression." "The U.S.S.R.," the note says, "cautions that Japan is risking involvement in a war with all its grave consequences."

A three-judge federal court in New Orleans today ruled unconstitutional a Louisiana state law probibiting Negroes and whites from competing with each other in athletic avents. The decision deals only with the section of the law governing participants, and does not alter the state ban on integrated seating of spectators. That issue was not before the court.

The Labor Department reports that the steady increase in employment, which began in mid-summer, is continuing. It probably will continue to rise, the department says, through the end of the year.

The Agriculture Department reports that the prices farmers receive for their products dropped almost one-half of one percent in the month ending November 15th. The cost of production went up one-third of one percent to reach a new all-time high.

Here in New York today, a federal judge ordered the Air Line Pilots Association not to strike against American Airlines before next Monday. His previous restraining order would have expired tonight. The strikes against Eastern Airlines and T.W.A. continue.

The only response so far to the Soviet proposal to make West Berlin a free city has been a loud and dramatic "No" from the three Western capitals, from West Germany and from West Berlin itself. It was nota preconcerted "No." It rang out impulsively and without consultation. But from now on consultation is imperative. For the Soviet proposal was not a final offer. It was an opening gambit of a new stage in the treatment of the German question.

So much is being said about the unacceptability of the free city idea that little attention has been paid to the fact that the Russians have changed their pitch in regard to Berlin. A few days ago the world was heading toward a crisis in which an airlift was the least to be expected, and hostilities both on the ground and in the air were distinct possibilities. Now peace is promised for six months. Those who pilot Western foreign policies can breathe freely, if not easily. They have been given a plan. A plan invites a counter-plan. A counter-plan in turn calls for modifications and counter-modifications.

The fact that the initial plan is not acceptable is a point, but not the main point. Probably nobody would have been more surprised than Khrushchev if his proposal had been found acceptable. The main point is that the West has been invited to plough up fresh ground in approaching the German question. It very much looks as though the Russians hope for enough progress in six months, to justify their renewing pressure for a Summit Conference.

If the Western Allies had a single foreign policy staff, the Soviet proposal might not have been met by today's unanimous and unqualified "No." It might have been greeted with a "Yes perhaps." All right, the West might have said, you suggest a free and de-militarized West Berlin. We like both words if they are used together. Let's apply both of them to East Berlin, too. Let's make East Berlin a free city from which you remove your troops and your puppet government removes its troops. Then let ten thousand United Nations troops guarantee the two cities. Or if that is too many, any reasonable number that can keep the lines of communication open. And to make sure that East Berlin is free, let's hold really free elections, so that East Berlin has a government of its own choosing. We should like the elections, so that East Berlin has a government of its own choosing. We should like the election to result in the unification of Berlin, as a miniature preview of the unification of Germany. But if East Berlin hoes not vote for that -which it might not because of the difficulty of unscrambling all the socialization that has been put through - we are ready to set up twin cities, each free and under special guarantee by the United Nations.

This might have been the West's first counter-proposal. Never mind that Khrushchev and the East Germans would have turned it down. It would have been good propaganda, just as the Soviet plan was good propaganda. But it wasn't offered, and nothing like it can be offered right away. For the Western Allies are hobbled. They can't improvise. They have to consult, iron out the inevitable disagreements, and finally come up with something that is hard to modify in the course of bargaining. There seems to be nothing more inflexible than the lose alliance of free countries.

The Kremlin starts negotiations with the advantage of being able to shift, advance, and retreat at will. In fact, the proposal to make West Berlin a free city may have been a rabbit pulled out of the hat in the last few days. Perhaps the Soviet Foreign Office did intend to make this proposal in just this way when it notified the Western diplomats that the notes were to be ready last week end. But it looks as though Khrushchev had been so startled to find himself headed for a physical showdown with the West, that he changed his strategy. He hastily put off any showdown for six months, and offered something to negotiate about.

The novelty of the idea is that a free city of West Berlin would be put under the United Nations. This the Soviet note keeps vague so as to win the maximum favor from members of the United Nations, and from elements inside the Western countries.

It serves the constant purpose of the Soviet Union to divide the Allies. It also familiarizes the world with the notion of the United Nations having a role in a German settlement. One day Khrushchev may propose that a free, federated and de-militarized Germany be put under United Nations supervision. That too might be unacceptable to the West. But if the Kremlin is not to be handed a great propaganda victory, the West must be able to offer something more constructive than blank negatives, and more promising of results than the old formula of free elections in East Germany as a pre-condition to unification.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Russians say, "Let's make West Berlin a free city." And now it is up to us to make a counter-proposal. The counter-proposal, in turn, may prompt still other proposals from the other side. In all of this, the West may gain by resourceful application of the Novel Idea. As John K. Hutchens once said, "If the race is to the swift, it is also to the imaginative."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 1, 1958

This is the news:

A school fire in Chicago has claimed more than 80 lives. For a direct report, we switch to Paul Rogers in Chicago.

(Spot to run 1:30
Returns on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was Paul Rogers, reporting on the disaster in Chicago.

Today...for the first time...the United States, Britain and Russia got "down to cases" in discussing a treaty for ending nuclear weapons tests. Today's discussion (at the three-power Geneva conference) concerned the wording of Article One of a possible draft treaty. The chief American representative, James J. Wadsworth, reportedly argued the Western position that the article should ~~tie in~~ combine any cessation of tests with control. A Western source said it was a "useful" discussion. But he warned that "a lot of problems remain."

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that ~~the~~ he is "highly skeptical" of the report that Russia has flown a nuclear-powered aircraft. But if it is true, he added, it would be "a tremendous jolt." The report was carried ~~by~~ by the magazine "Aviation Week". The United States and Russia have both been working to develop an aircraft powered by nuclear energy. Major General ~~Keirn~~ Keirn, director of the United States program, said recently that although we are making good progress, there was an "even chance" Russia would fly one first.

Russia today announced a seven-year scientific research program with the principal emphasis on harnessing the power of the hydrogen bomb. Pravda devoted two full pages to the program, which includes automation development and cancer research.

There are increasing indications that the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany will meet in Paris December 14th or 15th to discuss the Berlin situation. The foreign and defense ministers of the 15 NATO countries already are scheduled to meet in Paris on the sixteenth. West Germany said today that it had proposed a special foreign ministers meeting for the purpose of coordinating policy. The West German government spokesman said no decision on this had been reached.

The Communist foreign minister of East Germany claimed today that "no agreements exist" which give the Western powers the right of access to Berlin. All of Berlin, he said, rightfully belongs to East Germany.

In Washington, the State Department called the possibility of Big Four talks with Russia "a speculative matter." The department spokesman, Lincoln White, told reporters he knew nothing "which would indicate any immediate meeting along those lines."

The Chinese Communists hit Big and Little Quemoy today with 2-thousand, 400 shells. It was the heaviest bombardment of the Quemoy complex in almost a month.

President Coty of France today formally announced that he will not seek another term. This clears the way for the almost certain election to the presidency of Premier Charles DeGaulle. Under the new constitution, the premiership is less important than the presidency. The president will be chosen by a kind of "electoral college", made up of members of Parliament and other regional and municipal officials throughout France. Gaullists will control the new Parliament, elected in the voting that ended yesterday.

President Tito left Yugoslavia tonight for a goodwill tour of Asia and the Middle East.

A special examiner has recommended that the award of television Channel 10 in Miami to a subsidiary of National Airlines be revoked. The examiner, Judge Horace Stern, had been appointed by the Federal Communications Commission to make an investigation. He said the award should be set aside because of alleged pressures brought to bear on a member of the commission, Richard Mack. Mack has resigned from the F.C.C. He and a Miami attorney, Thurman Whiteside, are under indictment on charges of improper conduct. Both have pleaded innocent.

Among the countries affected by the Berlin crisis is Communist Poland. For a direct report on the Polish reaction...which has been largely overlooked... we switch to Warsaw and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

Tape runs 5:15
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Danied Schorr, reporting from Warsaw on Polish reaction to the developing crisis in Berlin.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Here is the story, as we have received it here in New York.

(The latest report give 88 children and teachers dead, in the fire that swept this afternoon through a Roman Catholic parochial school on the Chicago northwest side.) It was Our Lady of the Angels elementary school.

Word for Today

It is not easy to find a "word" [redacted] on such an occasion of tragedy as that which befell the school in Chicago this afternoon. Perhaps [redacted] this line by Stephen Vincent Benet: "Grant us the wisdom and the vision to comprehend the greatness of man's spirit that suffers and endures so hugely for a goal beyond his brief span. Grant us honor for the dead who died in the faith."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, December 1, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... A school fire in Chicago has claimed more than 80 lives. For a direct report, we switch to Paul Rogers in Chicago.

ROGERS: The death toll in the tragic afternoon fire at a Catholic grade school on Chicago's far West Side, is now known to have reached 88. Three nuns, who were teachers at the school, are among the dead. As yet, there's no definite information on how the fire actually began. Chicago's Fire Commissioner Robert Quinn has ordered an investigation into the possibility of arson. He says he does not think there was an explosion, that the fire spread too rapidly for that.

The scene of the tragedy is Our Lady of Angels school. It's comprised of two buildings, two stories high. The fire broke out in mid-afternoon. A woman living directly across the street told us that she heard children screaming. She rushed to her window and saw children jumping out of the school windows. She says she saw one eleven year old girl leap from the second floor with her hair in flames. The woman then phoned the fire department, grabbed a blanket and went out into the street to help the children. Priests rushed to the scene and administered the Last Rites of the church as bodies were removed. Chicago's new archbishop, Albert Gregory Meyer, went to the fire scene after visiting one of the hospitals and blessing the children taken there.

The enrollment at the school is 1700. At least 100 of the children have been taken to five hospitals in the immediate area. A number of firemen and possibly some of the nuns are among the injured. The school itself is now a gutted ruin, smoldering ashes, telling the tale of this tragedy.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Paul Rogers reporting on the disaster in Chicago.

... Among the countries deeply affected by the Berlin crisis is Communist Poland. For a direct report on the Polish reaction, which has been largely overlooked, we switch to Warsaw and my colleague Daniel Scherr.

SCHERR: East Germany's rulers, party chief Ulbricht and Premier Grotewohl, are coming to Warsaw next week for an official visit. Such tours are usually arranged in milder weather when a proper display of public enthusiasm can be organized. But this one was set up on short notice to concert views on the Berlin crisis. On the surface, that would seem to be unnecessary. The Polish regime went along when Khrushchev denounced the Potsdam Agreement; it tagged along, too, with the plan for a free city of West Berlin. It swallowed a program that Warsaw did not help to make and which pulled the rug out from under Poland's moderate foreign policy. No country is closer to Berlin than Poland; only 50 miles away from her post-war Western border. No country has a more vested interest in the status quo. The war settlement literally moved Poland westward, tore off a strip of Poland in the east to be given to Russia and gave her a strip in the west, torn from Germany. Poland has worked to make that settlement permanent, has resettled four million Poles in the newly acquired territory to consolidate her hold. And the Poles say no more territorial changes. "We are not a nation of wheels to be moved about at will." Poland's only legal claim to that land rests on the Potsdam Agreement. That has been denounced by Khrushchev. Khrushchev has said "don't worry - I'll defend that line" and dutifully the Polish press hails this. But some Poles wonder if a one-sided guarantee makes up for a multilateral agreement with the West.

When Secretary Dulles put his finger on this sensitive point, his remarks were blacked out in the Polish press. Poland's aim has been a relaxation of tension in Central Europe. That was why Poland pressed the Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone and gradual disarmament. Foreign Minister Rapacki thought it more important to go to Norway and try to enlist Western support than to join Gomulka on his mission to Moscow.

But while Rapacki was in Norway, Khrushchev started his offensive against Berlin, and the (indistinct) atmosphere that it created have blighted any early hope for Poland's Rapacki Plan, although the Polish press dutifully says that West Berlin is a free city - would be in harmony with the Rapacki Plan.

Rapacki said that a diplomatic drive against Berlin was made necessary by West Germany's alleged policy of atomic armament. But last week Khrushchev pulled the rug from under him again and said his program for Berlin was not connected with German militarization. The basic motive for Khrushchev's campaign to oust the Western Allies from Berlin is understood here in Warsaw. It is not to force recognition of East Germany, to exert pressure for a big power conference, to create a new point of tension to replace the Middle East and Formosa Strait. These may be incidental factors but not the central ones. Basically, this is a part of the reconsolidation of the communist world, an attempt to close the biggest gap in the Iron Curtain. The ferment behind that curtain started with the East German riots of 1953, before Poznan, before Hungary. Today, when restrictive measures are announced in Hungary the Hungarians must comply. But when an attempt was made to regiment physicians in East Germany, more than half the doctors fled to West Berlin.

Some 3,000,000 persons have escaped from East

Germany since 1945. And this, the Poles think, is what Khrushchev meant when he spoke of Berlin as a cancerous sore; it must be removed as a Western base before the Communist world can be considered safe.

Some non-Communist Poles would like to see a door of that open. They know why Khrushchev is trying to close it. The Poles have learned, at a cost of six and a half million lives, to fear and hate the Germans. They have no special love for the East Germans. They would like to see all Germany neutralized and demilitarized. But they don't see a change in the status of West Berlin as any great help. They only know that there's a chance of more trouble in Germany, which they do not want, and that they lie unhappily between Berlin and Moscow. No one really believes here that the drive against Berlin is a part of Polish foreign policy. But Poland cannot afford the luxury of its own foreign policy - and the past three weeks have brought this home in bitter fashion. These are the feelings of the Poles as the Gomulka regime prepares, obediently, to receive Ulbricht and Grotewohl in Warsaw in bleak December, and to hold what will undoubtedly be described as warm and cordial talks.

Now, back to Edward R, Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting from Warsaw, on Polish reaction to the developing crisis in Berlin.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A school fire in Chicago has claimed more than 80 lives. For a direct report, we switch to Paul Rogers in Chicago.

ROGERS: The death toll in the tragic afternoon fire at a Catholic grade school on Chicago's far West Side, is now known to have reached 88. Three nuns, who were teachers at the school, are among the dead. As yet, there's no definite information on how the fire actually began. Chicago's Fire Commissioner Robert Quinn has ordered an investigation into the possibility of arson. He says he does not think there was an explosion, that the fire spread too rapidly for that.

The scene of the tragedy is Our Lady of Angels school. It's comprised of two buildings, two stories high. The fire broke out in mid-afternoon. A woman living directly across the street told us that she heard children screaming. She rushed to the window and saw children jumping out of the school windows. She says she saw one eleven year old girl leap from the second floor with her hair in flames. The woman then phoned the fire department, grabbed a blanket and went out into the street to help the children. Priests rushed to the scene and administered the Last Rites of the church as bodies were removed. Chicago's new archbishop, Albert Gregory Meyer, went to the fire scene after visiting one of the hospitals and blessing the children taken there.

The enrollment at the school is 1700. At least 100 of the children have been taken to five hospitals in the immediate area. A number of firemen and possibly some of the nuns are among the injured. The school itself is now a gutted ruin, smoldering ashes, telling the tale of this tragedy.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Paul Rogers reporting on the disaster in Chicago.

Today for the first time, the United States, Britain and Russia got down to cases" in discussing a treaty for ending nuclear weapons tests. Today's discussion (at the three-power Geneva conference) concerned the wording of Article One of a possible draft treaty. The chief American representative, James J. Wadsworth, reportedly argued the Western position that the article should combine any cessation of tests with controls. A Western source said it was a "useful" discussion. But he warned that "a lot of problems remain."

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that he is "highly skeptical" of the report that Russia has flown a nuclear-powered aircraft. But if it is true, he added, it would be "a tremendous jolt." The report was carried by the magazine "Aviation Week." The United States and Russia have both been working to develop an aircraft powered by nuclear energy. Major General Keirn director of the United States program, said recently that although we are making good progress, there was an "even chance" Russia would fly one first.

Russia today announced a seven-year scientific research program with the principal emphasis on harnassing the power of the hydrogen bomb. Pravda devoted two full pages to the program, which included automation development and cancer research.

There are increasing indications that the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany will meet in Paris December 14th or 15th to discuss the Berlin situation. The foreign and defense ministers of the 15 NATO countries already are scheduled to meet in Paris on the 16th. West Germany said today that it had proposed a special foreign ministers meeting for the purpose of coordinating policy. The West German government spokesman said no decision on this had been reached.

The Communist foreign minister of East Germany claimed today that "no agreements exist" which give the Western powers the right of access to Berlin. All of Berlin, he said, rightfully belongs to East Germany.

In Washington, the State Department called the possibility of Big Four talks with Russia "a speculative matter." The department spokesman, Lincoln White, told reporters he knew nothing "which would indicate any immediate meeting along those lines."

The Chinese Communists hit Big and Little Quemoy today with 2-thousand, 400 shells. It was the heaviest bombardment of the Quemoy complex in almost a month.

President Coty of France today formally announced that he will not seek another term. This clears the way for the almost certain election to the presidency of Premier Charles DeGaulle. Under the new constitution, the premiership is less important than the presidency. The president will be chosen by a kind of "electoral college" made up of members of Parliament and other regional and municipal officials throughout France. Gaullists will control the new Parliament, elected in the voting that ended yesterday.

President Tito left Yugoslavia tonight for a good will tour of Asia and the Middle East.

A special examiner has recommended that the award of television Channel 10 in Miami to a subsidiary of National Airlines be revoked. The examiner, Judge Horace Stern, had been appointed by the Federal Communications Commission to make in investigation. He said the award should be set aside because of alleged pressures brought to bear on a member of the commission, Richard Mack. Mack has resigned from the F.C.C. He and a Miami attorney, Thurman Whiteside, are under indictment on charges of improper conduct. Both have pleaded innocent.

Among the countries affected by the Berlin crisis is Communist Poland. For a direct report on the Polish reaction...which has been largely overlooked... we switch to Warsaw and my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: East Germany's rulers, party chief Ulbrecht and Premier Grotewohl are coming to Warsaw next week for an official visit. Such tours are usually arranged in milder weather when a proper display of public enthusiasm can be organized. But this one was set up on short notice to concert views on the Berlin crisis. On the surface, that would seem to be unnecessary. The Polish regime went along when Khrushchev denounced the Potsdam Agreement; it tagged along, too, with the plan for a free city of West Berlin. It swallowed a program that Warsaw did not help to make and which pulled the rug out from under Poland's moderate foreign policy. No country is closer to Berlin than Poland; only 50 miles away from her post-war Western border. No country has a more vested interest in the status quo. The war settlement literally moved Poland westward, tore off a strip of Poland in the east to be given to Russia and gave her a strip in the west, torn from Germany. Poland has worked to make that settlement permanent, has re-settled four million Poles in the newly acqired territory to consolidate her hold. And the Poles say no more territorial changes. "We are not a nation of wheels to be moved about at will." Poland's only legal claim to that land rests on the Potsdam Agreement. That has been denounced by Khrushchev. Khrushchev has said "Don't worry - I'll defend that line" and dutifully the Polish press hails this. But some Poles wonder if a one-sided guarantee makes up for a multilateral agreement with the West.

When Secretary Dulles put his finger on this sensitive point, his remarks were blacked out in the Polish press. Poland's aim has been a relaxation of tension in Central Europe. That was why Poland pressed the Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone and gradual disarmament. Foreign Minister Rapacki thought it more important to go to Norway and try to enlist Western support than to join Gomulka on his mission to Moscow.

But while Rapacki was in Norway, Khruschev started his offensive against Berlin, and the (indistinct) atmosphere that it created have blighted any early hope for Poland's Rapacki Plan, although the Polish press dutifully says that West Berlin is a free city - would be in harmony with the Rapacki Plan.

Rapacki said that a diplomatic drive against Berlin was made necessary by West Germany's alleged policy of atomic armament. But last week Khrushchev pulled the rug from under him again and said his program for Berlin was not connected with German militarization. The basic motive for Khrushchev's campaign to oust the Western Allies from Berlin is understood here in Warsaw. It is not to force recognition of East Germany, to exert pressure for a big power conference, to create a new point of tension to replace the Middle East and Formosa Strait. These may be incidental factors but not the central ones. Basically, this is a part of the reconsolidation of the communist world, an attempt to close the biggest gap in the Iron Curtain. The ferment behind that curtain started with the East German riots of 1953, before Poznan, before Hungary. Today, when restrictive measures are announced in Hungary the Hungarians must comply. But when an attempt was made to regiment physicians in East Germany, more than half the doctors fled to West Berlin.

Some 3,000,000 persons have escaped from East Germany since 1945. And this, the Poles think, is what Khrushchev meant when he spoke of Berlin as a cancerous sore; it must be removed as a Western base before the Communist world can be considered safe.

Some non-Communist Poles would like to see a door of that open. They know why Khrushchev is trying to close it. The Poles have learned, at a cost of six and a half million lives, to fear and hate the Germans. They have no special love for the East Germans. They would like to see all Germany neutralized and de-militarized. But they don't see a change in the status of West Berlin as any great help. They only know that there's a chance of more trouble in Germany, which they do not want, and that they lie unhappily between Berlin and Moscow. No one really believes here that the drive against Berlin is a part of Polish foreign policy. But Poland cannot afford the luxury of its own foreign policy - and the past three weeks have brought this home in bitter fashion. These are the feelings of the Poles as the Gomulka regime prepares, obediently, to receive Ulbrecht and Grotewohl in Warsaw in bleak December, and to hold what will undoubtedly be described as warm and cordial talks.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting from Warsaw, on Polish reaction to the developing crisis in Berlin.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: It is not easy to find a "word" on such an occasion of tragedy as that which befell the school in Chicago this afternoon. Perhaps this line by Stephen Vincent Benet: "Grant us the wisdom and the vision to comprehend the greatness of man's spirit that suffers and endures so hugely for a goal beyond his brief span. Grant us honor for the dead who died in the faith."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 2, 1958

This is the news:

John L. Lewis and the soft coal operators are reported to have agreed on a new contract giving most of the nation's soft coal miners a wage increase of two dollars a day. The contract with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association is expected to be signed within 48 hours. Lewis broke precedent in agreeing to sign one contract with the association, the industry's major bargaining group, and another with the so-called "captive" mines owned and operated by the steel companies. ~~There will...reportedly...be only one difference in the two contracts. In the "captive" contract there will be no clause barring the operator from buying or selling coal produced at non-union mines.~~

In the Santa Monica Mountains...in Southern California...brush fires

~~have forced more than a thousand persons from their homes. Some of~~ the ~~threatened homes are in the fashionable Malibu Lake~~ district.

~~[illegible]~~

The cause of the fire that killed 87 Chicago school children and three nuns is still undetermined. The possibility of arson is not ruled out. However, another theory which is being investigated is that the fire began in the school basement by accident. Sergeant Drew Brown of the Arson Squad says the fire may have had its origin in a carelessly discarded cigarette, tossed into a waste basket by a boy "sneaking a smoke." Several students have been questioned on the strength of this theory, but Sergeant Brown emphasizes that is all it is---a theory. The F.B.I. has offered to cooperate, in the event evidence of arson is found. Coroner Walter McCarron has deferred ~~[illegible]~~ holding an inquest until sometime next week so that a "blue ribbon" jury can be impaneled. Seventy-five of the students who attended the parochial school, remain hospitalized. Plans are under way for a mass burial of those who died.

Pope John the Twenty-third today cabled his condolences to the Archdiocese of Chicago, and offered his apostolic blessing to the bereaved. He said he had been "profoundly saddened."

The United States commissioner of Education in Washington...Lawrence Derthick...said his agency would help in any way it could, to prevent recurrence of such a disaster. It was pointed out, however, that the federal government has no authority to supervise school safety standards.

Dr. William Carr, executive secretary of the National Education Association, warned that many schools in the United States are unsafe. Chicago fire department officials, say that the parochial school held fire drills as required by law. There were three separate stairways inside the building and one fire escape. #

Russia today used the tragedy for making propaganda. The Soviet news agency Tass said, the disaster was "no accident". It accused the last session of Congress of refusing to appropriate one-half of 1 percent as much, for new school buildings, as for military purposes.

Democratic Senator Humphrey talked to correspondents in Moscow today, about the eight-hour meeting he had yesterday with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. / Humphrey said the talk left him convinced that the foreign policy differences between East and West are "broad and deep", and that they will not be resolved for a considerable time. / He said Khrushchev favored his plan for expanding cooperation between the United States and Russia, in the field of medical research. / Russia recently closed the CBS News bureau in Moscow, and so Daniel Schorr telephoned Senator Humphrey from Warsaw. / Humphrey told Schorr, he got the impression, that prospects of reaching an agreement on ending nuclear weapons tests are good, but that Khrushchev sees little hope of reaching an accord, on preventing surprise attack. Humphrey...who is chairman of the Senate subcommittee on disarmament...said he discussed modern weapons with Khrushchev at great length. / Humphrey said some things Khrushchev mentioned were new to him. He did not say what the "new things" were.

President Eisenhower returned to Washington today, after a two-week vacation in Augusta. / Tomorrow, he will meet with the National Aeronautics and Space Council, to consider the proposed transfer of Army missile scientists to the new civilian space agency. Mr. Eisenhower also will confer tomorrow and Thursday with the National Security Council.

→

Senator Chavez of New Mexico said today that if Secretary of Defense McElroy "fights" for what he needs in the new budget, he will have the support of most of Congress. Chavez said, "We're going to vote every penny needed for national security."

Democratic Representative Price of Illinois demanded today that the Administration make "a clear-cut decision" on when the United States will have a nuclear powered airplane. Price is chairman of the joint subcommittee on atomic research. He said the United States "can ill afford further delay." Yesterday, Secretary McElroy discounted reports that Russia already has flown an atomic powered aircraft but conceded the Russians might have "a slight lead."

A Moscow broadcast said today that the West wants a big power conference on Germany in order to "torpedo" Russia's Berlin proposals. West German Chancellor Adenauer told members of his party today that he believes Russia may make some concessions on the Berlin question, "if," he said, "the West remains absolutely firm." Adenauer said the negotiations might last for a long time "but could lead toward a good end for Germany."

Again, some progress reported in the Geneva conference on ending nuclear weapons tests. The representatives of Russia, Britain and the United States met today for two hours and forty minutes---their longest session so far. The conference on preventing suprise attack remained completely deadlocked.

~~The United States will spend three and a quarter million dollars for a six-week exhibition in Moscow. The American exhibition is tentatively scheduled to open in Moscow next Fourth of July. Russia will also send an exhibition to the United States.~~

Edward R. Murrow: December 2, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The cold war is now operating on its new timetable. No real trouble is to be expected for six months. Only then will the Soviet Union proceed to transfer its authority in Berlin to the East German Government. The new timetable changes the character of the cold war. It now is a war of maneuver. And the news reports are full of what the West will do and not do in answer to the Khrushchev proposal about Berlin. Chief of these is a Western plan for a new Four-Power conference, or a Summit Meeting, on the settlement of the entire German question, including a peace treaty.

Two things can be said about this particular proposal. First is that it has not been agreed to by the West, and can't be before the Western Foreign Ministers meet in advance of the Nato Conference in Paris later this month. The other is that such a proposal as now publicized would be based on the old thesis of free elections before unification; in other words, no confederation of East and West Germany. This would amount to total surrender by the Soviet Union in the German question, so it cannot be meant as a genuine negotiating offer. It is just an opening move, answering Khrushchev's opening move.

A complete German settlement is going to take a long time. With East-West power nearly equal, it can hardly involve surrender by either side.

The West has no dependable clue to what Khrushchev would settle for. Judging from his long note last week, he is trying to prevent the nuclear arming of West Germany and to detach West Germany from the Western defense system. To get this, he sounded willing to unite the two Germanys if they were neutralized, and to be willing to base neutralization on international guarantees. That would be a change from Khrushchev's statement a year ago to a French diplomat: "You keep your Germans and we shall keep ours."

But at his news conference last week Khrushchev was asked point-blank if he would drop his Berlin proposal if the West decided not to give West Germany nuclear weapons. He said promptly that he would not, and that the Berlin proposal was quite separate from the question of German re-armament. He may have said this only to keep his freedom to maneuver. But it did not clarify what the note was about.

Another doubt about Soviet intentions is uncertainty as to Khrushchev himself. He is now securely on top in the Soviet Union. He also may think that with his operational inter-continental missiles he also is securely on top in the world. He may be swollen with confidence that the Soviet Union is so strong that it can drive the West to accept a bargain it does not like. A hint as to his state of mind may be found in what he said the first time he met the new Italian Ambassador to Moscow. He greeted him with the boast that Russia could knock Italy out of the war in two hours.

There was a time when sole possession of nuclear weapons gave the West a feeling of confident superiority. The Russians once were virtually ordered out of Iran and they departed. If Khrushchev has the delusion that the inter-continental missile gives him a similar superiority - which the Pentagon is sure it doesn't - he will be hard to deal with. A grave test of strength would then lie ahead.

But the "selling price" of the West is also a secret, as of course it should be at this stage. The Russians insist on German re-unification through a confederation of the two Germanys. One purpose of the Berlin maneuver is to force the de facto recognition of the East German Government. Washington and Bonn are against confederation and recognition. But they might change their minds if they could buy something worth while by conceding the point. The German Social Democrats are dead against setting up a free city in West Berlin, but they are not at all sure a confederation would be undesirable, if accompanied by disengagement by both sides. Dr. Adenauer now finds he needs a bi-partisan foreign policy and is sitting down with Opposition leaders to find it. [He may hope to induce the Socialists to oppose confederation. But opinion in Germany is divided on this, even within Adenauer's own following. If he gets a united foreign policy he may have to be ready to compromise on confederation.]

The point to keep in mind in watching the German drama is that it is much too early for anything to emerge as to terms and conditions. All that both sides are doing is to advertise their asking price. That might be called stage one of the war of maneuver. How many stages will be needed before real negotiations are possible - if they ever are - is anybody's guess. But several stages can be reached in six months.

Back in a moment -

George Bryan -

Word for Today

What Khrushchev has been demanding so far is only his asking price, and we may expect some hard bargaining with regard to Germany and Berlin in the next six months. Khrushchev's selling price...and ours...remains to be disclosed. In this both sides might well mark the counsel of Selwyn Champion who warned, "You cannot buy what is not for sale."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

John L. Lewis and the soft coal operators are reported to have agreed on a new contract giving most of the nation's soft coal miners a wage increase of two dollars a day. The contract with the Bituminous Coal Operator Association is expected to be signed within 48 hours. Lewis broke precedent in agreeing to sign one contract with the association, the industry's major bargaining group, and another with the so-called "captive" mines owned and operated by the steel companies.

The cause of the fire that killed 87 Chicago school children and three nuns is still undetermined. The possibility of arson is not ruled out. However, another theory which is being investigated is that the fire began in the school basement by accident. Sergeant Drew Brown of the Arson Squad says the fire may have had its origin in a carelessly discarded cigarette, tossed into a waste basket by a boy "sneaking a smoke." Several students have been questioned on the strength of this theory, but Sergeant Brown emphasizes that is all it is---a theory. The F.B.I. has offered to co-operate, in the event evidence of arson is found. Coroner Walter McCarron has deferred holding an inquest until sometime next week so that a "blue ribbon" jury can be impaneled. Seventy-five of the students who attended the parochial school remain hospitalized. Plans are under way for a mass burial of those who died.

Pope John the Twenty-third today cabled his condolences to the Archdiocese of Chicago and offered his apostolic blessing to the bereaved. He said he had been "profoundly saddened."

The United States commissioner of Education in Washington...Lawrence Derthick...said his agency would help in any way it could to prevent recurrence of such a disaster. It was pointed out, however, that the federal government has no authority to supervise school safety standards.

Dr. William Carr, executive secretary of the National Education Association, warned that many schools in the United States are unsafe. Chicago fire department officials say that the school held fire drills as required by law. There were three separate stairways inside the building and one fire escape.

Russia today used the tragedy for making propaganda. The Soviet news agency Tass said the disaster was "no accident." It accused the last session of Congress of refusing to appropriate one-half of 1 percent as much for new school buildings as for military purposes.

Decmocratic Senator Humphrey talked to correspondents in Moscow today about the eight-hour meeting he had yesterday w h Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Humphrey said the talk left him convinced that the foreign policy differences between East and West are "broad and deep" and that they will not be resolved for a considerable time. He said Khrushchev favored his plan for expanding cooperation between the United States and Russia in the field of medical research. Russia recently closed the CBS News bureau in Moscow, and so Daniel Schorr telephoned Senator Humphrey from Warsaw. Humphrey told Schcrr he got the impression that prospects of reaching an agreement on ending nuclear weapons tests are good but that Khrushchev sees little hope of reaching an accord on preventing surprise attack. Humphrey...who is chairman of the Senate subcommittee on disarmament....said he discussed modern weapons with Khuushchev at great length. Humphrey said some things Khrushchev mentioned were new to him. He did not say what the "new things" were.

President Eisenhower returned to Washington today after a two-week vacation in Augusta. Tomorrow, he will meet with the National Aeronautics and Space Council to consider the proposed transfer of Army missile scientists to the new civilian space agency. Mr. Eisenhower also will confer tomorrow and Thursday with the National Security Council.

Senator Chavez of New Mexico said today that if Secretary of Defense McElroy "fights" for what he needs in the new budget, he will have the support of most of Congress. Chavez said, "We're going to vote every penny needed for national security."

Democratic Representative Price of Illinois demanded today that the Administration make "a clear-cut decision" on when the United States will have a nuclear powered airplane. Price is chairman of the joint subcommittee on atomic research. He said the United States "can ill afford further delay." Yesterday Secretary McElroy discounted reports that Russia already has flown an atomic powered aircraft but conceded the Russians might have "a slight lead."

A Moscow broadcast said today that the West wants a big power conference on Germany in order to "torpedo" Russia's Berlin proposals. West German Chancellor Adenauer told members of his party today that he believes Russia may make some concessions on the Berlin question, "if," he said, "the West remains absolutely firm." Adenauer said the negotiations might last for a long time "but could lead toward a good end for Germany."

Again, some progress reported in the Geneva conference on ending nuclear weapons tests. The representatives of Russia, Britain and the United States met today for two hours and forty minutes---their longest session so far. The conference on preventing surprise attack remained completely deadlocked.

The cold war is now operating on its new timetable. No real trouble is to be expected for six months. Only then will the Soviet Union proceed to transfer its authority in Berlin to the East German Government. The new timetable changes the character of the cold war. It now is a war of maneuver. And the news reports are full of what the West will do and not do in answer to the Khrushchev proposal about Berlin. Chief of these is a Western plan for a new Four-Power conference, or a Summit Meeting, on the settlement of the entire German question, including a peace treaty.

Two things can be said about this particular proposal. First is that it has not been agreed to by the West, and can't be before the Western Foreign Ministers meet in advance of the NATO Conference in Paris later this month. The other is that such a proposal as now publicized would be based on the old thesis of free elections before unification; in other words, no confederation of East and West Germany. This would amount to total surrender by the Soviet Union in the German question, so it cannot be meant as a genuine negotiating offer. It is just an opening move, answering Khrushchev's opening move.

A complete German settlement is going to take a long time. With East-West power nearly equal, it can hardly involve surrender by either side.

The West has no dependable clue to what Khrushchev would settle for. Judging from his long note last week, he is trying to prevent the nuclear arming of West Germany and to detach West Germany from the Western defense system. To get this, he sounded willing to unite the two Germanys if they were neutralized, and to be willing to base neutralization on international guarantees. That would be a change from Khrushchev's statement a year ago to a French diplomat: "You keep your Germans and we shall keep ours."

But at his news conference last week Khrushchev was asked point-blank if he would drop his Berlin proposal if the West decided not to give West Germany nuclear weapons. He said promptly that he would not, and that the Berlin proposal was quite separate from the question of German re-armament. He may have said this only to keep his freedom to maneuver. But it did not clarify what the note was about.

Another doubt about Soviet intentions is uncertainty as to Khrushchev himself. He is now securely on top in the Soviet Union. He also may think that with his operational inter-continental missiles he also is securely on top in the world. He may be swollen with confidence that the Soviet Union is so strong that it can drive the West to accept a bargain it does not like. A hint as to his state of mind may be found in what he said the first time he met the new Italian Ambassador to Moscow. He greeted him with the boast that Russia could knock Italy out of the war in two hours.

There was a time when sole possession of nuclear weapons gave th West a feeling of confident superiority. The Russians once were virtually ordered out of Iran and they departed. If Khrushchev has the delusion that the inter-continental missile gives him a similar superiority - which the Pentagon is sure it doesn't - he will be hard to deal with. A grave test of strength would then lie ahead.

But the "selling price" of the West is also a secret, as of course it should be at this stage. The Russians insist on German re-unification through a confederation of the two Germanys. One purpose of the Berlin maneuver is to force the de facto recognition of the East German Government. Washington and Bonn are against confederation and recognition. But they might change their minds if they could buy something worth while by conceding the point. The German Social Democrats are dead against setting up a free city in West Berlin, but they are not at all sure a confederation would be undesirable, if accompanied by disengagement by both sides. Dr. Adenauer now finds he needs a bi-partisan foreign policy and is sitting down with Oppositon leaders to find it.

The point to keep in mind in watching the German drama is that it is much too early for anything to emerge as to terms and conditions. All that both sides are doing is to advertise their asking price. That might be called stage one of the war of maneuver. How many stages will be needed before real negotiations are possible - if they ever are - is anybody's guess. But several stages can be reached in six months.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is a George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: What Khrushchev has been demanding so far is only his asking price, and we may expect some hard bargaining with regard to Germany and Berlin in the next six months. Khrushchev's selling price...and ours...remains to be disclosed. In this both sides might well mark the counsel of Selwyn Champion who warned, "You cannot buy what is not for sale."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 3, 1958

This is the news:

Two announcements were made in Washington today, dealing with this country's future in space. For that story, we go direct to Washington and CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd.

(Von Fremd to run approx 4 minutes, returns on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.")

That was Charles Von Fremd, reporting from Washington.

The carrier rocket of Russia's third sputnik is believed to have burned up today in the earth's atmosphere. However, scientists at the Smithsonian Observatory in Boston say they have received no confirming reports. The Russian satellite itself has about another year of life.

The United States submitted a new proposal today at the Geneva conference for prevention of surprise attack. It proposed that the long-range missile bases of the major powers be opened to international inspection. Russian reaction to the proposal was negative. Apparently no change today in the continuing talks on possible cessation of nuclear weapons tests.

The East German parliament today unanimously approved Khrushchev's proposals on Berlin. The West, it said, treats Berlin "as though it were the 50th state of the United States, a member of the British Commonwealth, or a second Algerian colony of France." The rubber-stamp parliament also approved the appointment of Premier Grotewohl to another four-year term.

Russian newspapers today accused the West of trying "to dictate its will on the German people." The government paper Izvestia referred to reports that the Western powers want a top-level meeting with Russia on the question of German reunification. Izvestia called this "an attempt by hook or crook to convert the internal German problem into an international problem," and it predicted that any such "attempt" would fail. The West, it said, has "sufficient time" to negotiate the Berlin question---half a year. Red Star said only "madmen" would think of "brandishing arms to preserve the occupation status of Berlin."

In a speech tonight, Polish leader Gomulka declared his support of Russia's proposal to turn West Berlin into a "free city". He attacked "resurgent German militarism", and said that the only peaceful way to unify Germany was through a confederation of the two German states.

Only Russia, he said, had remained faithful to the Potsdam Agreement. Consequently, the "Potsdam path" to the unification of Germany, had ceased to exist.

Czechoslovakia today accused the United States of conducting "provocative aerial maneuvers" over its western frontier. It said the "maneuvers" involved the violation of Czech air space yesterday, by two American jets. All responsibility for the consequences of this practice, it said, must be borne by the United States government.

The Japanese foreign office today rejected Russia's note...warning Japan not to renew its military assistance treaty with the United States. The foreign office said the treaty was designed "purely for self-defense." It told Russia in diplomatic language to mind its own business.

Premier DeGaulle today began a five-day tour of Algeria, with Constantine as his first stop. He also visited several small farm communities...and made an inspection flight, by helicopter, over rugged country near the Tunisian border. DeGaulle...presumably...is getting information on which to base his Algerian program, which---so far---has not been entirely disclosed.

An artillery duel was fought today on the Israeli-Syrian frontier. Each side accused the other of provoking the action, which lasted an hour and ten minutes. Quiet was restored when United Nations truce observers called for a cease-fire. An Israeli Army spokesman said the shelling began after Syrian border guards fired on some Israeli shepherds. One shepherd was killed and another wounded. According to Syria, the fighting started when a group of armed Israelis penetrated Syrian territory with a herd of cows and opened fire when Arab villagers tried to make them leave. The action centered near the Lake Huleh reclamation project, which has been the scene of similar incidents in recent months. The Israeli spokesman said that at the height of the action the Syrians were shelling Israeli settlements "all along the Israeli-Syrian border." The Jewish Telegraphic Agency says that one settlement was set on fire.

Lebanon announces that the United States is giving it 10-million dollars in economic aid. This is in addition to the two and a half million dollars that Lebanon recently got from the United States to help it recover from five months of civil war. The Lebanese prime minister says the 10-million dollars is an outright grant with no strings attached.

The Indonesian parliament passed a law today, nationalizing all Dutch business enterprises in Indonesia. The law covers the Dutch banks, railways and plantations, which the Indonesian government seized a year ago. Compensation for the nationalized properties is left up to future legislation, and to the courts.

The British government today announced a five-year education program, costing more than a billion dollars. The emphasis will be on new school construction, and improved teacher training.

The investigation of the Chicago school fire continues. The coroner's inquest has now been set for next Wednesday. And schools throughout the country are being rechecked for possible fire hazards. Here in New York this afternoon, a junior high school in the Bronx was ordered closed, when inspectors found the exits obstructed, and acetylene tanks stored in the basement. Eight hundred students in the building were sent home.

The brush fire...in the Malibu Beach area of Southern California... is being brought under control. Twenty thousand acres have been burned over, and forty homes destroyed.

A tentative agreement was signed today...ending the 13-day strike ~~of~~ by the machinists union, against T.W.A. The company announces that service probably will be restored on Monday. The union rank-and-file must still approve the agreement, ~~which~~ the details of which have not yet been disclosed.

The strike against Eastern Airlines continues.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan

In South America, modified martial law has been declared throughout Colombia, as the president of Colombia said he had smashed a plot against his government. The Army (which was loyal) virtually occupied Bogota, the Colombian capital.

Back in a moment

George Bryan

Word for Today

The United States has again demonstrated its resolve to reach out in space for purposes of peace and possible war. The mice and the monkeys are to be the first pioneers, following the dog Laika. We would seem to be making progress. Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "We think our civilization is near its meridian. Yet we are only at the cock-crowing and the morning star."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, December 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Two announcements were made in Washington today, dealing with this country's future in space. For that story we go direct to Washington, and CBS News correspondent Charles von Fremd.

FREMD: In the first of two important U.S. space developments today, the Pentagon pulled a surprise by announcing a bold new military satellite program for the next twelve months. Roy Johnson, Director of A. R. P. A., the Advanced Research Projects Agency, told us that late this month or early next year a new missile test center will be activated, at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. The first satellite-carrying missile to soar out over the Pacific test range, will consist of an Air Force first-stage Thor rocket, designed to hurl a thirteen hundred pound payload into orbit; this in comparison to the less than 40 pound Army Explorers and the four pound Navy Vanguard satellite currently swinging around the earth. Some time next year A. R. P. A. hopes to orbit a satellite weighing ten thousand pounds, using the mighty I.C.B.M. Atlas as its vehicle.

The military agency will send aloft in these satellites animals ranging from mice to monkeys, which will send back biomedical data on conditions in space.

The most ambitious part of A.R.P.A.'s program, in the months ahead, will be the attempt to bring these satellites and their animal passengers back through the atmosphere to a pre-determined landing area. Johnson explained that the satellites, which will orbit about the North and South Poles, will remain aloft a relatively short time, for just a few revolutions, days or at the most - a week. Then he believes the artificial moons will be able to solve the reentry problem without burning up and land one hundred miles or so from a selected site with the animals alive. Johnson and the other A.R.P.A. officials refuse to discuss how they plan to solve the reentry problem - but one solution would be to eject the animals from the burning nose cone in recoverable capsules of some type. If these experiments work - and Johnson said he thought a third of them would - then we can start talking seriously about putting a man into space. A.R.P.A. expects to launch about one satellite a month from the new launching pads at Vandenberg Air Force Base. The name given this sweeping space program is Project Discoverer.

To many veteran Pentagon reporters, the most surprising part of the Johnson news conference was the fact that the Defense Department and A.R.P.A. gave out the optimistic time table and what the program planned to attempt. In the fourteen months since the first Sputnik, Defense Department Public Information officials here - and at Cape Canaveral - have stamped a "classified" label on such projects.

The month-long battle between the Army rocket man and the National Aeronautics and Space Agency was resolved, for the time being, today, by President Eisenhower. The feud that existed since Dr. Keith Glennan, Director of the new civilian space agency, announced he wished to absorb the Army's famed Redstone Arsenal at Huntsville, Alabama and the jet propulsion lab in California. N.A.S.A. wanted not only the physical properties and equipment at both sites, but also close to two thousand army scientists, including the crack team of former German missilemen led by Dr. Wehrner von Braun. Army brass violently opposed the move, called it a raid, warned it would wreck the army missile program and thereby jeopardize our national defense. Today the President ordered a compromise. Von Braun and the other scientists and technicians, at Huntsville, will - for the next year at least - remain under army control. However, a N.A.S.A. unit will operate at Huntsville to co-ordinate space agency contracts with the army. And N.A.S.A. will take over almost exclusive control of the jet propulsion lab at Cal. Tech.

As in most compromises - neither side was completely satisfied. CBS News White House correspondent Bob Pierpoint reported that nasa Director Glennon appeared a bit unhappy as he left the President's office where the decision was reached. Pierpoint added that Glennon still feels that some time - after the one year trial period is over - his agency will assume outright control at Huntsville. In this, Glennon is probably correct. Army officials I have talked to glumly acknowledge that in another year the research and development phase of the Army's larger missiles will be complete. But the desperate rear-guard fight of the Army did partially block - at least temporarily - N.A.S.A.'s attempt to take over the Army's long range missile and space programs.

Now, back to Ed. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Charles von Fremd reporting from Washington.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Two announcements were made in Washington today, dealing with this country's future in space. For that story, we go direct to Washington and CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd.

VON FREMD: In the first of two important U.S. space developments today, the Pentagon pulled a surprise by announcing a bold new military satellite program for the next twelve months. Roy Johnson, Director of A.R.P.A., the Advanced Research Projects Agency, told us that late this month or early next year a new missile test center will be activated, at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. The first satellite-carrying missile to soar out over the Pacific test range, will consist of an Air Force first-stage Thor rocket, designed to hurl a thirteen hundred pound payload into orbit; this in comparison to the less than 40 pound Army Explorers and the four pound Navy Vanguard satellite currently swinging around the earth. Some time next year A.R.P.A. hopes to orbit a satellite weighing ten thousand pounds, using the mighty I.C.B.M. Atlas as its vehicle.

The military agency will send aloft in these satellites animals ranging from mice to monkeys, which will send back biomedical date on conditions in space.

The most ambitious part of A.R.P.A.'s program, in the months ahead, will be the attempt to bring these satellites and their animal passengers back through the atmosphere to a pre-determined landing area. Johnson explained that the satellites, which will orbit about the North and South Poles, will remain aloft a relatively short time, for just a few revolutions, days or at the most - a week. Then he believes the artificial moons will be able to solve the reentry problem without burning up and land one hundred miles or so from a selected site with the animals alive. Johnson and the other A.R.P.A. officials refuse to discuss how they plan to solve the reentry problem - but one solution would be to eject the animals from the burning nose cone in recoverable capsules of some type. If these experiments work - and Johnson said he thought a third of them would - then we can start talking seriously about putting a man into space. A.R.P.A. expects to launch about one satellite a month from the new launching pads at Vandenberg Air Force Base. The name given this sweeping space program is Project Discoverer.

To many veteran Pentagon reporters, the most surprising part of the Johnson news conference was the fact that the Defense Department and A.R.P.A. gave out the optimistic time table and what the program planned to attempt. In the fourteen months since the first Sputnik, Defense Department Public Information officials here - and at Cape Canaveral - have stamped a "classified" label on such projects.

The month-long battle between the Army rocket men and the National Aeronautics and Space Agency was resolved, for the time being, today, by President Eisenhower. The feud that existed since Dr. Keith Glennon, Director of the new civilian space agency, announced he wished to absorb the Army's famed Redstone Arsenal at Huntsville, Alabama and the jet propulsion lab in California. N.A.S.A. wanted not only the physical properties and equipment at both sites, but also close to two thousand army scientists, including the crack team of former German missilemen led by Dr. Werner Von Braun. Army brass violently opposed the move, called it a raid, warned it would wreck the army missile program and thereby jeopardize our national defense. Today the President ordered a compromise. Von Braun and the other scientists and technicians, at Huntsville, will - for the next year at least - remain under army control. However, a N.A.S.A. unit will operate at Huntsville to co-ordinate space agency contracts with the army. And N.A.S.A. will take over almost exclusive control of the jet propulsion lab at Cal. Tech.

As in most compromises - neither side was completely satisfied. CBS News White House correspondent Bob Pierpoint reported that N.A.S.A. Director

Glennon appeared a bit unhappy as he left the President's office where the decision was reached. Pierpoint added that Glennon still feels that some time - after the one year trial period is over - his agency will assume outright control at Huntsville. In this, Glennon is probably correct. Army officials I have talked to glumly acknowledge that in another year the research and development phase of the Army's larger missiles will be complete. But the desperate rear-guard fight of the Army did partially block - at least temporarily - N.A.S.A.'s attempt to take over the Army's long range missile and space programs.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Charles Von Fremd reporting from Washington.

The carrier rocket of Russia's third sputnik is believed to have burned up today in the earth's atmosphere. However, scientists at the Smithsonian Observatory in Boston say they have received no confirming reports. The Russian satellite itself has about another year of life.

The United States submttted a new proposal today at the Geneva conference for prevention of surprise attack. It proposed that the long-range missile bases of the major powers be opened to international inspection. Russian reaction to the proposal was negative. Apparently no change today in the continuing talks on possible cessation of nuclear weapons tests.

The East German parliament today unanimously approved Khrushchev's proposals on Berlin. The West, it said, treats Berlin "as though it were the 50th state of the United States, a member of the British Commonwealth, or a second Algerian colony of France." The rubber-stamp parliament also approved the appointment of Premier Grotewohl to another four-year term.

Russian newspapers today accused the West of trying "to dictate its will on the German people" The government paper Izvestia referred to reports that the Western powers want a top-level meeting with Russia on the question of German reunification. Izvestia called this "an attempt by hook or crook to convert the internal German problem into an international problem," and it predicted that any such "attempt" would fail. The West, it said, has "sufficient time" to negotiate the Berlin question---half a year. Red Star said only "madmen" would think of "brandishing arms to preserve the occupation status of Berlin."

In a speech tonight, Polish leader Gomulka declared his support of Russia's proposal to turn West Berlin into a "free city." He attacked "resurgent German militarism," and said that the only peaceful way to unify Germany was through a confederation of the two German states. Only Russia, he said, had remained faithful to the Potsdam Agreement. Consequently, the "Potsdam path" to the unification of Germany had ceased to exist.

Czechoslovakia today accused the United States of conducting "provocative aerial maneuvers" over its western frontier. It said the "maneuvers" involved the violation of Czech air space yesterday by two American jets. All responsibility for the consequences of this practice, it said, must be borne by the United States government.

The Japanese foreign office today rejected Russia's note...warning Japan not to renew its military assistance treaty with the United States. The foreign office said the treaty was designed "purely for self-defense." It told Russia in diplomatic language to mind its own business.

Premier DeGaulle today began a five-day tour of Algeria with Constantine as his first stop. He also visited several small farm communities...and made an inspection flight by helicopter over rugged country near the Tunisian border. DeGaulle...presumably...is getting information on which to base his Algerian program, which---so far---has not been entirely disclosed.

An artillery duel was fought today on the Israeli-Syrian frontier. Each side accused the other of provoking the action, which lasted an hour and ten minutes. Quiet was restored when United Nations truce observers called for a cease-fire. An Israeli Army spokesman said the shelling began after Syrian border guards fired on some Israeli shepherds. One shepherd was killed and another wounded. According to Syria, the fighting started when a group of armed Israelis penetrated Syrian territory with a herd of cows and opened fire when Arab villagers tried to make them leave. The action centered near the Lake Huleh reclamation project which has been the scene of similar incidents in recent months. The Israeli spokesman said that at the height of the action the Syrians were shelling Israeli settlements "all along the Israeli-Syrian border." The Jewish Telegraphic Agency says that one settlement was set on fire.

Lebanon announces that the United States is giving it 10-million dollars in economic aid. This is in addition to the two a a half million dollars that Lebanon recently got from the United States to help it recover from five months of civil war. The Lebanese prime minister says the 10-million dollars is an outright grant with no strings attached.

The Indonesian parliament passed a law today nationalizing all Dutch business enterprises in Indonesia. The law covers the Dutch banks, railways and plantations which the Indonesian government seized a year ago. Compensation for the nationalized properties is left up to future legislation and to the courts.

The Btitish government today announced a five-year education program costing more than a billion dollars. The emphasis will be on new school construction and improved teacher training.

The investigation of the Chicago school fire continues. The coroner's inquest has now been set for next Wednesday. And schools throughout the country are being rechecked for possible fire hazards. Here in New York this afternoon, a junior high school in the Bronx was ordered closed when inspectors found the exits obstructed and acetylene tanks stored in the basement. Eight hundred students in the building were sent home.

The brush fire...in the Malibu Beach area of Southern California... is b eing brought under control. Twenty thousand acres have been burned over and forty homes destroyed.

A tentative agreement was signed today...ending the 13-day strike by the machinists union against T.W.A. The company announces that service probably will be restored on Monday. The union rank-and-file must still approve the agreement, the details of which have not yet been disclosed.

The strike against Eastern Airlines continues.

In South America, modified martial law has been declared throughout Columbia is the president of Colombia said he had smashed a plot against his governmnet. The Army (which was loyal) virtually occupied Bogota, the Colombian capital.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first a word from George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The United States has again demonstrated its resolve to reach out in space for purposes of peace and possible war. The mice and the monkeys are to be the first pioneers, following the dog Laika. We would seem to be making progress. Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "We think our civilization is near its meridian. Yet we are only at the cock-crowing and the morning star."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 4, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that recognition of Red China would be "a well-nigh mortal blow" to the non-Communist governments of the Far East. If these governments go under, he said, all our markets in Asia will be lost...and the Pacific Ocean will be dominated in large measure by forces hostile to the United States. Mr. Dulles was speaking in San Francisco at a meeting of the California Chamber of Commerce. #

The Chinese Communists, he said, are "dumping" goods on the Asian market as part of a trade offensive. And he said studies are being made aimed at assuring that free enterprise "will continue to play its full role as a dynamic and expanding force in developing the economies of the free world nations."

→

Russia today signed a new trade agreement with Japan. The agreement could result...in the next year...in an increase in trade between the two countries of about 40 percent. Each country would exchange a volume of goods valued at up to 35-million dollars. / Japan would export finished products...such as machinery...in exchange for Russian lumber, potassium, and coal.

The government of Finland fell today under Soviet economic pressure. Premier Fagerholm, a moderate Socialist, resigned after five members of the Agrarian Party quit his coalition cabinet. / The Agrarians had been demanding a whole new cabinet, and they were supported by the so-called "rebel" Socialists, who had been left out of the cabinet and wanted representation. / The Communists also lacked representation, although they made up the single largest party in Parliament. / This lack of Communist representation annoyed Moscow, and last month Russia put the economic squeeze on Finland by threatening to cut off trade. Finland tonight is faced with a political and diplomatic crisis. Fagerholm continues as "caretaker" premier until a new government is formed.

The government of Iceland also resigned today because of growing economic difficulties. The designation of Premier YO-NAS-SON Jonasson and his coalition cabinet came when the Icelandic trades union congress insisted that workers receive more pay. The cabinet was made up of Progressives, Social Democrats, and Communists, each holding two ministerial posts. YO-NAS-SON Jonasson wanted to freeze wages at the November level as a check on inflation. The principal opposition came from union representatives that are Communists and the Communist minister of trade.

A member of the East German politburo said tonight that commercial airliners from the West have no legal right to fly into Berlin. The statement followed by a few hours a charge by East Germany that its air space had been violated by "several" NATO aircraft. The "gross infringement", it said, occurred over the border of East Germany and Bavaria. Chancellor Adenauer flew to West Berlin today to reassure its inhabitants and take part in a political campaign. West Berlin voters will elect a new municipal parliament on Sunday.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons today that the time had come "to have a full discussion with the Soviet Union about the problems of Germany and European security." Lloyd said that as the "first step", he planned to confer with the American, French and West German foreign ministers prior to the NATO meeting in Paris. That meeting is scheduled for December 16.

Israel today asked for an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council to consider yesterday's outbreak on the Israeli-Syrian border. Israel accuses Syria of committing "an act of aggression." It calls yesterday's action---in which an Israeli shepherd was killed and several border settlements were shelled---"the latest and most serious in a number of attacks perpetrated by the Syrian forces against Israel." According to official Israeli sources, the Syrians used artillery supplied by Russia. Syria says a group of armed Israelis began the shooting after "penetrating" Syrian territory.

Paul G. Hoffman today was named managing director of a new United Nations fund for helping under-developed countries. The appointment of Hoffman, who once directed this country's foreign aid program, was made by Secretary General Hammarskjold. The special fund was set up by the General Assembly in October to expand the present technical assistance program through the voluntary contributions of governments.

In Geneva, the conference on nuclear tests decided today to appoint a committee...which will try to draft a treaty, tying in the cessation of tests with an effective system of control. It will attempt to reconcile drafts submitted earlier by both sides. The Moscow radio revealed today that Russia is demanding the right of veto in any control organization.

Democratic Party leaders...members of the national committee and the advisory council...met in Washington today for a four-day strategy conference.

Much of their discussion will concern civil rights. Paul Ziffren, Democratic national commiteeman from California, said that Democrats should keep an eye on Vice President Nixon in drawing up their 1960 campaign plans.

The retiring Senate Republican leader, William Knowland, today made what he called "a farewell call" on President Eisenhower. Knowland said afterward that, in his opinion, Nixon has "very eminent" qualifications for the presidency.

Edward R. Murrow: December 4, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

We and our allies are competing with the Russians in three primary areas -- ideas, economics and weapons. The Russians keep repeating their belief that they will defeat us utterly with the economic weapon.

A classic example of what they can do in this area occurred today. Finland's government collapsed, and it did so because the Russians refused to do business with the Finns. They stopped exporting to Finland, postponed trade talks, refused to discuss a fishing treaty; unemployment increased in Finland, and the Finnish Government, which opposes the Russians politically but can't live without them economically, collapsed.

Just now ~~XXXX~~ world attention is centered on the Berlin question, but we cannot safely ignore the continuing threat of Soviet economic power. They say it's their primary weapon, and we ought to take them seriously. The West isn't very good at thinking about two or three dangers, or planning on two or three fronts at the same time. This is ~~XXXX~~ true, not only of the Western allies but of any single Western government, the United States in particular.

This week in Washington, seven Federal agencies sent experts to tell a House sub-committee about the challenge of the Communist trade policy.

When they had been heard, the Chairman, Hale Boggs of Louisiana, said they "all recognized the danger, but have no policy to equal it."

The Soviet trade monopoly gave a hint of what it can do a couple of years ago, by invading the aluminum market. They cut prices two cents a pound, and stole much of the British market from the Canadians. The Canadians met the lower Soviet price, so the Russians made a further cut of two cents. They also broke the tin market in London. No one is quite sure why they did it. It may have been just a "dry run" of a trade offensive - maybe they needed foreign exchange and had metal surpluses to dispose of. But it is clear that if they can do it with aluminum and tin today, they can do it with other metals tomorrow. Last week the Russians made a deal to supply the Dow Chemical Company with benzine at four to five cents below the market price. This is a thirteen-and-a-half million dollar deal - it's political purpose if any is not clear.

But there is no obscurity at all about Soviet trade policy in Latin America. Russia is selling oil and machinery on a barter basis, taking South American products like coffee and wool in payment.

The Russians have fixed labor costs, can sell at a loss if they deem it politically expedient, and can shuffle raw materials around inside their vast empire.

American businessmen are being encouraged to make foreign investments, to go into business in the so-called under-developed areas. If they are to take the risks involved, they demand Federal tax concessions. This is an indirect way of helping private enterprise meet Soviet competition. Our government is also considering the insurance of foreign investments against such risks as expropriation, inconvertibility of funds, and war. In short, to guarantee that American capital won't be lost if it's invested in countries where the political regime is unstable. This is about as far as the Administration can go.

The Treasury Department doesn't like the idea of tax concessions, because that means reduced revenue at a time when we're already facing a deficit of twelve billion dollars.

So we are trying to compete economically with Russia, which has a foreign trade monopoly. The question is whether this can be done successfully without new legislation, which would horrify many members of Congress, and responsible members of the business community as well. The question can be simply put: Can our traditional methods of free enterprise in the field of foreign trade compete with the Russian foreign trade monopoly.

Evidence is accumulating every day that the Russians are in deadly earnest about waging this economic war, with every weapon in their arsenal. It may be that we cannot continue to do "foreign business as usual." That will depend upon how seriously we take the Russian economic threat. If it were a case of military war, the government would be given a free hand to mobilize all resources for victory. Habits, traditions, familiar methods of doing business, would all go overboard. If the economic war is as serious and decisive as the Russians say it is, then we may have to find new ways to counter it, unless we are prepared to lose it. Above all, we need to become familiar with the idea that this is a new time, with new dangers, requiring new and flexible defenses. Tax exemptions on foreign trade, a slight increase in foreign economic aid, won't do the job.

Back in a moment. -

George Bryan. -

Word for Today

This is a new day...attended by new dangers. [redacted] Khrushchev put it very plainly. "We declare war upon you," he said, "in the peaceful field of trade." In diagnosing the danger...and the challenge to our resourcefulness...Barbara Ward said, "The question is purely a political one. Since we have the means to counter a demonstrable crisis, shall we in fact do so?"

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that recognition of Red China would be "a well-nigh mortal blow" to the non-Communist governments of the Far East. If these governments go under, he said, all our markets in Asia will be lost...and the Pacific Ocean will be dominated in large measure by forces hostile to the United States. Mr. Dulles was speaking in San Francisco at a meeting of the California Chamber of Commerce. The Chinese Communists, he said, are "dumping" goods on the Asian market as part of a trade offensive. And he said studies are being made aimed at assuring that free enterprise "will continue to play its full role as a dynamic and expanding force in developing the economies of the free world nations."

Russia today signed a new trade agreement with Japan. The agreement could result...in the next year...in an increase in trade between the two countries of about 40 percent. Each country would exchange a volume of goods valued at up to 35-million dollars. Japan would export finished products... such as machinery....in exchange for Russian lumber, potassium, and coal.

The government of Finland fell today under Soviet economic pressure. Premier Fagerholm, a moderate Socialist, resigned after five members of the Agrarian Party quit his coalition cabinet. The Agrarians had been demanding a whole new cabinet, and they were supported by the so-called "rebel" Socialists who had been left out of the cabinet and wanted representation. The Communists also lacked representation, although they made up the single largest party in Parliamant. This lack of Communist representation annoyed Moscow, and last month Russia put the economic squeeze on Finland by threatening to cut off trade. Finland tonight is faced with a political and diplomatic crisis. Fagerholm continues as "caretaker" premier until a new government is formed.

The government of Iceland also resigned today because of growing economic difficulties. The resignation of Premier Jonasson and his coalition cabinet came when the Icelandic trades union congress insisted that workers receive more pay. The cabinet was made up of Pregressives, Social Democrats, and Communists, each holding two ministerial posts. Jonasson wanted to freeze wages at the November level as a check on inflation. The principal opposition came from union representatives that are Communists and the Communist minister of trade.

A member of the East German politburo said tonight that commercial airliners from the West have no legal right to fly into Berlin. The statement followed by a few hours a charge by East Germany that its air space had been violated by "several" NATO aircraft. The "gross infringement" it said, occurred over the border of East Germany and Bavaria. Chancellor Adenauer flew to West Berlin today to reassure its inhabitants and take part in a political campaign. West Berlin voters will elect a new municipal parliament on Sunday.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons today that the time had come "to have a full discussion with the Soviet Union about the problems of Germany and European security." Lloyd said that as the "first step" he planned to confer with the American, French and West German foreign ministers prior to the NATO meeting in Paris. That meeting is scheduled for December 16th.

Israel today asked for an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council to consider yesterday's outbreak on the Israeli-Syrian border. Israel accuses Syria of committing "an act of aggression." It calls yesterday's action, in which an Israeli shepherd was killed and several border settlements were shelled---"the latest and most serious in a number of attacks perpetrated by the Syrian forces against Israel." According to official Israeli sources, the Syrians used artillery supplied by Russia. Syria says a group of armed Israelis began the shooting after "penetrating" Syrian territory.

Paul G. Hoffman today was named managing director of a new United Nations fund for helping under-developed countries. The appointment of Hoffman, who once directed this country's foreign aid program, was made by Secretary General Hammarskjold. The special fund was set up by the General Assembly in October to expand the present technical assistance program through the voluntary contributions of governments.

In Geneva, the conference on nuclear tests decided today to appoint a committee...which will try to draft a treaty, tying in the cessation of tests with an effective system of control. It will attempt to reconcile drafts submitted earlier by both sides. The Moscow radio revealed today that Russia is demanding the right of veto in any control organization.

Democratic Party leaders...members of the national committee and the advisory council...met in Washington today for a four-day strategy conference. Much of their discussion will concern civil rights. Paul Ziffren, Democratic national committeeman from California, said that Democrats should keep an eye on Vice President Nixon in drawing up their 1960 campaign plans.

The retiring Senate Republican leader, William Knowland, today made what he called "a farewell call" on President Eisenhower. Knowland said afterward that, in his opinion, Nixon has "very eminent" qualifications for the presidency.

We and our allies are competing with the Russians in three primary areas - ideas, economics and weapons. The Russians keep repeating their belief that they will defeat us utterly with the economic weapon.

A classic example of what they can do in this area occurred today. Finland's government collapsed, and it did so because the Russians refused to do business with the Finns. They stopped exporting to Finland, postponed trade talks, refused to discuss a fishing treaty; unemployment increased in Finland, and the Finnish Government, which opposes the Russians politically but can't live without them economically, collapsed.

Just now world attention is centered on the Berlin question, but we cannot safely ignore the continuing threat of Soviet economic power. They say it's their primary weapon, and we ought to take them seriously. The West isn't very good at thinking about two or three dangers, or planning on two or three fronts at the same time. This is true, not only of the Western allies, but of any single Western government, the United States in particular.

This week in Washington, seven Federal agencies sent experts to tell a House sub-committee about the challenge of the Communist trade policy. When they had been heard, the Chairman, Hale Boggs of Louisiana, said they "all recognized the danger, but have no policy to equal it."

The Soviet trade monopoly gave a hint of what it can do a couple of years ago, by invading the aluminum market. They cut prices two cents a pound, and stole much of the British market from the Canadians. The Canadians met the lower Soviet price, so the Russians made a further cut of two cents. They also broke the tin market in London. No one is quite sure why they did it. It may have been just a "dry run" of a trade offensive - maybe they needed foreign exchange and had metal surpluses to dispose of. But it is clear that if they can do it with aluminum and tin today, they can do it with other metals tomorrow. Last week the Russians made a deal to supply the Dow Chemical Company with benzine at four to five cents below the market price. This is a thirteen-and-a-half million dollar deal - it's political purpose if any is not clear.

But there is no obscurity at all about Soviet trade policy in Latin America. Russia is selling oil and machinery on a barter basis, taking South American products like coffee and wool in payment.

The Russians have fixed labor costs, can sell at a loss if they deem it politically expedient, and can shuffle raw materials around inside their vast empire.

American businessmen are being encouraged to make foreign investments, to go into business in the so-called under-developed areas. If they are to take the risks involved, they demand Federal tax concessions. This is an indirect way of helping private enterprise meet Soviet competition. Our government is also considering the insurance of foreign investments against such risks as expropriation, inconvertibility of funds, and war. In short, to guarantee that American capital won't be lost if it's invested in countries where the political regime is unstable. This is about as far as the Administration can go.

The Treasury Department doesn't like the idea of tax concessions, because that means reduced revenue at a time when we're already facing a deficit of twelve billion dollars.

So we are trying to compete economically with Russia, which has a foreign trade monopoly. The question is whether this can be done successfully without new legislation, which would horrify many members of Congress, and responsible members of the business community as well. The question can be simply put: Can our traditional methods of free enterprise in the field of foreign trade compete with the Russian foreign trade monopoly.

Evidence is accumulating every day that the Russians are in deadly earnest about waging this economic war with every weapon in their arsenal. It may be that we cannot continue to do "foreign business as usual." That will depend upon how seriously we take the Russian economic threat. If it were a case of military war, the government would be given a free hand to mobilize all resources for victory. Habits, traditions, familiar methods of doing business would all go overboard. If the economic war is as serious and decisive as the Russians say it is, then we may have to find new ways to counter it unless we are prepared to lose it. Above all, we need to become familiar with the idea that this is a new time with new dangers, requiring new and flexible defenses. Tax exemptions on foreign trade, a slight increase in foreign economic aid, won't do the job.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: This is a new day...attended by new dangers. Khrushchev put it very plainly. "We declare war upon you," he said, "in the peaceful field of trade." In diagnosing the danger...and the challenge to our resourcefulness...Barbara Ward said, "The question is purely a political one. Since we have the means to counter a demonstrable crisis, shall we in fact do so?"

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Dec. 5, 1958

This is the news:

The East German government announces that it has "in its hands" a U.S. Army pilot who parachuted yesterday into East Germany. It identifies the pilot as First Lieutenant Richard Mackin of Washington, D.C. American authorities say that Mackin disappeared yesterday while flying a courier aircraft near the East German frontier. He had radioed that he was running out of fuel and was bailing out. The East German radio says the aircraft was destroyed on hitting the ground but that Mackin was unharmed. "Youthful bystanders," it says, "apprehended him and turned him over to the German border police." And it adds, "He is now in the hands of organs of the German Democratic Republic." The East German government may try to use Lieutenant Mackin in its effort to gain recognition by the United States. As usual, American authorities made inquiries about Mackin through the Russian army headquarters in East Berlin. On learning of this, a minor East German official said Russia had nothing to do with it. "We are a sovereign nation," he said. "The Americans will have to talk to us." All Soviet authorities will say, so far, is that they know an American aircraft "violated" the East German frontier. American officials in Berlin predict that the State Department will not negotiate with the East Germans but with the Russians as in the past.

Chancellor Adenauer made a tour of West Berlin today and said, "I believe we can be courageous. The Western powers stand firmly on our side." He told factory workers that large government orders would be placed in West Berlin to bolster its economy.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today sent a note to British Prime Minister Macmillan on the Berlin crisis, but the contents of the note HAVE not been divulged. The note is in reply to a message which Macmillan sent on November twenty-second, stating that Russia had no right to break any of the four-power agreement on Berlin. Macmillan said Britain would stand by its obligations.

President Tito of Yugoslavia stopped off in Egypt today on his tour of Asian-African countries and conferred at length with President Nasser. Tito's next official stop will be Indonesia. After that, he will visit India, Burma, Ceylon, Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Direct air service was opened today between Cairo and Moscow.

The United Nations Security Council will meet on Monday to take up Israel's complaint of aggression against Syria. An Israeli shepherd was killed in a border incident two days ago and several Israeli settlements were shelled.

In the United Nations political committee today, both the United States and Russia supported a draft resolution calling for further United Nations study of the effects of atomic radiation.

Communist China today was served notice that United Nations forces---mostly American---will stay in South Korea until the country is reunited through free elections supervised by the U.N. The notice was contained in a British note, delivered in Peiping on behalf of the sixteen countries that fought in Korea under the United Nations flag.

The Nationalist island of Quemoy was hit today with 253 shells.

At Cape Canaveral, Army scientists have begun fueling a rocket for what they hope will turn out to be a flight past the moon. The launching attempt is now expected in a matter of hours. The Air Force had three tries at a lunar probe and failed. This will be the Army's first attempt.

The North-South issue came up today at the meeting of Democratic Party leaders in Washington. The state central committee in Louisiana sought to have its national committeeman, Cammile Gravel, removed because of his moderate views on public school integration. After a four-hour hearing, the national credentials committee voted...7 to 2...not to replace Gravel with a more outspoken advocate of "massive resistance".

An Alabama judge said today that he would "jail" any agent of the Federal Civil Rights Commission who tries to get the voter registration records which he impounded. Circuit Judge George Wallace said he would defy the commission subpoena to turn over the files. But he declined to say what he would do if ordered to produce the records by a Federal Court. The civil rights commission wants the records for a hearing on alleged violation of Negro voting rights, scheduled to open in Montgomery, Alabama, on Monday.

The federal government today allocated 45-thousand dollars to help rebuild the high school dynamited recently in Clinton, Tennessee. The allocation was announced by Arthur S. Fleming, secretary of health, education and welfare. Fleming said that Anderson County in which Clinton is located qualifies for the assistance because of an expected increase of federal workers in the area. Most of the workers will be employed at the atomic energy plant in nearby Oak Ridge.

In Chicago, funeral services were held today for most of the 87 children who died in the school fire on Monday. The largest service was held in a National Guard Armory, where Archbishop Meyer...assisted by Francis

—7

Cardinal Spellman of New York...celebrated a solemn requiem mass.

The three nuns who died in the fire, and five of the children, were buried yesterday.

Edward R. Murrow: December 5, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles's speech yesterday on Far Eastern policy was notable for the crucial importance he attached to the non-recognition of Communist China and his vehemence in saying so. "If we were to grant political recognition to the Chinese Communist regime," he said, "it would be a well-nigh mortal blow to the survival of the non-Communist governments in the Far East." He also said: "It is certain that the diplomatic recognition of the Chinese Communist regime would gravely jeopardize the political, the economic, and the security interests of the United States. The Pacific, instead of being a friendly body of water, would in great part be dominated by hostile forces and our own defense be driven back to or about our continental frontier." That adds up to saying that the maintenance of the free governments in Asia is of utmost importance to this country and that the non-recognition of Red China is essential to save them.

But this speech was also notable for something it did not say. It omitted any reference whatever to India, which is the largest non-Communist country in Asia, and indeed the world, and which is now in dire need of economic aid.

India finds itself under great pressure from Red China, a land of impoverished peasants like itself, which is using the most drastic and despotic methods to raise its standard of living. The methods are repulsive, but if China succeeds by them, and India's own efforts in freedom, and with the freely-offered help of the West, should fail, it appears inevitable that India will fall to the Communists. That would seem to be more decisive for the rest of free Asia - and to the United States - than Mr. Dulles's policy of not recognizing Red China.

Mr. Dulles did not omit India from his speech because he is not concerned about helping that country. The State Department has worked hard to induce the Administration to broaden its program of aid to India. The amount in the Foreign Aid Program earmarked for India this year is 351 million dollars, of which nearly 240 millions is in agricultural surplus commodities. But Mr. Dulles was making a speech about Far Eastern policy, and India may have been overlooked because it is not a Far Eastern country. But it is significant that what Mr. Dulles said about saving the free countries of Asia did not emphasize the rivalry between them and RedChina in achieving prompt economic success. Right now the Red Chinese are getting some striking economic results, as Mr. Dulles admitted. The increase of their agricultural output this year is at least thirty percent. They are spawning small industries all over the country. And they are exploiting their huge labor reserves to create public works on a large scale, thus turning this labor into immediate capital investments.

The contrast with India is striking. The second Five Year Plan has until April 1st, 1960 to run. By next April there will be a shortage of 350 million dollars in foreign exchange ~~What must be met to make up bankruptcy~~. The sum must be borrowed or begged. India is getting this amount from the United States, Britain, West Germany, Canada, Japan and the International Bank. But by April the following year the foreign exchange gap will be another 600 million, and the same crisis recurs. Probably the same countries will find the money again and they are tentatively committed to do so. But they are not firmly pledged. The whole subject must be reviewed first.

After the second Five Year Plan there must be a third, and while the Indians hope that by then the economy will be running so well that the need for outside help will taper off, this is by no means assured. The cost of putting India on its feet is high, nearly a billion dollars just to close two foreign exchange gaps, and perhaps another billion or two billions to make the third Five Year Plan a success. Up to this year, the United States had provided India aid of one kind or another to a total of a billion-and-a-half.

The Western help is incredibly big, compared with what countries ever did for each other in the past. But if the free countries in Asia are not to choose the Communist shortcut, and if, as Mr. Dulles said, we are not to be pushed across the Pacific, this seems to be part of the price.

The nature of the Asian struggle has changed. An old friend of the United States, Ambassador Romulo of the Philippines, spoke out frankly last night. Asians, he warned us, are not interested in our way of life, or our political and economic doctrines. "The struggle which interests Asians," he said, "is the bitter struggle for life itself, the struggle against hunger, poverty, disease and ignorance." / And he added: "The once ingrained belief in the Asian mind, of the invincibility, superiority and invulnerability of the West is gone - finished - forgotten. And what is happening in Asia, when Asia looks at the United States, springs from this fact."

Back in a moment.

George Bryan -

Word for Today

The largest non-Communist country in Asia is India, and the way [redacted] India goes could decide the fate of the Free World. Communist China is putting pressure on India, and to hungry Indian peasants it makes little difference from whence help comes. Ghandi said, "To the millions who have to go without two meals a day, the only acceptable form in which God dare appear is food."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The East German government announces that it has "in its hands" a U.S. Army pilot who parachuted yesterday into East Germany. It identifies the pilot as First Lieutenant Richard Mackin of Washington, D. C. American authorities say that Mackin disappeared yesterday while flying a courier aircraft near the East German frontier. He had radioed that he was running out of fuel and was bailing out. The East German radio says the aircraft was destroyed on hitting the ground but that Mackin was unharmed. "Youthful bystanders," it says, "apprehended him and turned him over to the German border police." And it adds, "He is now in the hands of organs of the German Democratic Republic." The East German government may try to use Lieutenant Mackin in its effort to gain recognition by the United States. As usual, American authorities made inquiries about Mackin through the Russian army headquarters in East Berlin. On learning of this, a minor East German official said Russia had nothing to do with it. "We are a sovereign nation," he said. "The Americans will have to talk to us." All Soviet authorities will say, so far, is that they know an American aircraft "violated" the East German frontier. American officials in Berlin predict that The State Department will not negotiate with the East Germans but with the Russians as in the past.

Chancellor Adenauer made a tour of West Berlin today and said, "I believe we can be courageous. The Western powers stand firmly on our side." He told factory workers that large government orders would be placed in West Berlin to bolster its economy.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today sent a note to British Prime Minister Macmillan on the Berlin crisis, but the contents of the note have not been divulged. The note is in reply to a message which Macmillan sent on November 22nd, stating that Russia had no right to break any of the four-power agreement on Berlin. Macmillan said Britain would stand by its obligations.

President Tito of Yugoslavia stopped off in Egypt today on his tour of Asian-African countries and conferred at length with President Nasser. Tito's next official stop will be Indonesia. After that, he will visit India, Burma, Ceylon, Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Direct air service was opened today between Cairo and Moscow.

The United Nations Security Council will meet on Monday to take up Israel's complaint of aggression against Syria. An Israeli shepherd was killed in a border incident two days ago and several Israeli settlements were shelled.

In the United Nations political committee today, both the United States and Russia supported a draft resolution calling for further United Nations study of the effects of atomic radiation.

Communist China today was served notice that United Nations forces---mostly American---will stay in South Korea until the country is reunited through free elections supervised by the U.N. The notice was contained in a British note, delivered in Peiping on behalf of the sixteen countries that fought in Korea under the United Nations flag.

The Nationalist island of Quemoy was hit today with 253 shells.

At Cape Canaveral, Army scientists have begun fueling a rocket for what they hope will turn out to be a flight past the moon. The launching attempt is expected in a matter of hours. The Air Force had three tries at a lunar probe and failed. This will be the Army's first attempt.

The North-South issue came up today at the meeting of Democratic Party leaders in Washington. The state central committee in Louisiana sought to have its national committeeman, Cammile Gravel, removed because of his moderate views on public school integration. After a four-hour hearing, the national credentials committee voted...7 to 2...not to replace Gravel with a more outspoken advocate of "massive resistance."

An Alabama judge said today that he would "jail" any agent of the Federal Civil Rights Commission who tries to get the voter registration records which he impounded. Circuit Judge George Wallace said he would defy the commission subpoena to turn over the files. But he declined to say what he would do if ordered to produce the records by a Federal Court. The civil rights commission wants the records for a hearing on alleged violation of Negro voting rights, scheduled to open in Montgomery, Alabama, on Monday.

The federal government today allocated 45 thousand dollars to help rebuild the high school dynamited recently in Clinton, Tennessee. The allocation was announced by Arthur S. Fleming, secretary of health, education and welfare. Fleming said that Anderson County in which Clinton is located qualifies for the assistance bacause of an expected increase of federal workers in the area. Most of the workers will be employed at the atomic energy plant in nearby Oak Ridge.

In Chicago, funeral services were held today for most of the 87 children who died in the school fire on Monday. The largest service was held in a National Guard Armory, where Archbishop Meyer...assisted by Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York...celebrated a solemn requiem mass. The three nuns who died in the fire and five of the children were buried yesterday.

Secretary Dulles's speech yesterday on Far Eastern policy was notable for the crucial importance he attached to the non-recognition of Communist China and his vehemence in saying so. "If we were to grant political recognition to the Chinese Communist regime," he said, "it would be a well-nigh mortal blow to the survival of the non-Communist governments in the Far East." He also said: "It is certain that the diplomatic recognition of the Chinese Communist regime would gravely jeopardize the political, the economic, and the security interests of the United States. The Pacific, instead of being a friendly body of water, would in great part be dominated by hostile forces and our own defense be driven back to or about our continental frontier." That adds up to saying that the maintenance of the free governments in Asia is of utmost importance to this country and that the non-recognition of Red China is essential to save them.

But this speech was also notable for something it did not say. It omitted any reference whatever to India, which is the largest non-Communist country in Asia, and indeed the world, and which is now in dire need of economic aid.

India finds itself under great pressure from Red China, a land of impoverished peasants like itself, which is using the most drastic and despotic methods to raise its standard of living. The methods are repulsive, but if China succeeds by them, and India's own efforts in freedom, and with the freely-offered help of the West, should fail, it appears inevitable that India will fall to the Communists. That would seem to be more decisive for the rest of free Asia - and to the United States - that Mr. Dulles's policy of not recognizing Red China.

Mr. Dulles did not omit India from his speech because he is not concerned about helping that country. The State Department has worked hard to induce the Administration to broaden its program of aid to India. The amount in the Foreign Aid Program earmarked for India this year is 351 million dollars, of which nearly 240 millions is in agricultural surplus commodities. But Mr. Dulles was making a speech about Far Eastern policy, and India may have been overlooked because it is not a Far Eastern country. But it is significant that what Mr. Dulles said about saving the free countries of Asia did not emphasize the rivalry between them and Red China in achieving prompt economic success. Right now the Red Chinese are getting some striking economic results, as Mr. Dulles admitted. The increase of their agricultural output this year is at least thirty percent. They are spawning small industries all over the country. And they are exploiting their huge labor reserves to create public works on a large scale, thus turning this labor into immediate capital investments.

The contrast with India is striking. The second Five Year Plan has until April 1st, 1960 to run. By next April there will be a shortage of 350 million dollars in foreign exchange. The sum must be borrowed or begged. India is getting this amount from the United States, Britain, West Germany, Canada, Japan and the International Bank. But by April the following year the foreign exchange gap will be another 600 million and the same crisis recurs. Probably the same countries will find the money again and they are tentatively committed to do so. But they are not firmly pledged. The whole subject must be reviewed first.

After the second Five Year Plan there must be a third, and while the Indians hope that by then the economy will be running so well that the need for outside help will taper off, this is by no means assured. The cost of putting India on its feet is high, nearly a billion dollars just to close too foreign exchange gaps, and perhaps another billion or two billions to make the third Five Year Plan a success. Up to this year the United States had provided India aid of one kind or another to a total of a billion-and-a-half.

The Western help is incredibly big, compared with what countries ever did for each other in the past. But if the free countries in Asia are not to choose the Communist shortcut, and if, as Mr. Dulles said, we are not to be pushed across the Pacific, this seems to be part of the price.

The nature of the Asian struggle has changed. An old friend of the United States, Ambassador Romulo of the Philippines spoke out frankly last night. Asians, he warned us, are not interested in our own way of life, or our political and economic dectrines. "The struggle which interests Asians," he said, "is the bitter struggle for life itself, the struggle against hunger, poverty, disease and ignorance." And he added: "The once ingrained belief in the Asian mind of the invincibility, superiority and invulnerability of the West is gone - finished - forgotten. And what is happening in Asia, when Asia looks at the United States springs from this fact."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The largest non-Communist country in Asia is India, and the way India goes could decide the fate of the Free World. Communist China is putting pressure on India, and to hungry Indian peasants it makes little difference from whence help comes. Ghandi said, "To the millions who have to go without two meals a day, the only acceptable form in which God dare appear is food."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 8, 1958

This is the news:

The Moscow radio announces that Russia's security chief, General Serov, has been removed from his post. The brief announcement says that Serov "is taking up other work." It does not describe the nature of this "other work." As chairman of the committee on state security, Serov directed the activities of the secret police. He took the job in April, 1954, succeeding Lavrenti Beria, who was removed shortly after the death of Stalin. Beria was executed as a traitor. The reason for Serov's removal is not given. It is noted that he was a friend of Malenkov early in his career. Malenkov is now in disgrace.

Final returns in the West Berlin city election show that the Communists got less than 2 percent of the vote. Chancellor Adenauer's Christian Democratic Party got 37 percent of the vote. And the Social Democrats, led by West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt, emerged as the majority party with 52 percent. In Washington, the State Department calls the decisive defeat of the Communists "a clear answer" to Khrushchev's proposal that West Berlin be demilitarized and turned into a "free city". The vote, it says, "should give some idea as to the amount of trust the people of West Berlin are willing to place in Soviet proposals regarding their future." The West German government announces that Mayor Brandt will attend the conference of Western statesmen, due to be held in Paris next week prior to the meeting of NATO foreign ministers.

The United States, Britain and Russia today approved the second article of a draft treaty for prohibiting nuclear weapons tests. This agreement in Geneva follows the approval...on Saturday...of Article One. Article One would oblige the nuclear powers to stop testing. Article Two calls for establishment of a control organization. Both these articles, however, are written in broad, general terms. And the agreements on them, so far, are simply agreements in principle. Details (on which there is wide disagreement) must still be worked out.

The United Nations political committee today took up the Algerian question, and the French delegation promptly walked out. France had announced in advance that it would boycott the debate on grounds that Algeria is a domestic matter. Tunisia said the "logical way" to end the Algerian war was through negotiation. The rebels, it said, had interpreted DeGaulle's bid to them "to raise the white flag of parleys" as a bid to surrender.

The United Nations Security Council today heard Israel's complaint of agression against the United Arab Republic. Israel said that in last week's border incident seven Israeli villages were hit with 800 shells. It said, "Never has such a thing happened without grave repercussions." The United Arab Republic charged that Israel was threatening it with reprisal. It accused Israel of starting the action. Israel says that Syrian border guards were the first to open fire.

Premier Kassem of Iraq says that he has smashed a "serious plot" to overthrow his government. His announcement was made in a communique, broadcast by the Baghdad radio. Leaders of the plot have been placed under arrest. They are not identified.

Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana today called for total liberation of Africa by non-violent means. Nkrumah's speech opened the All-African Peoples Conference in Accra, the Ghana capital. In denouncing colonialism, he warned, "It may come to us yet in a different guise---not necessarily from Europe." The conference is attended by more than 200 delegates from 25 countries, including Nasser's United Arab Republic and the Algerian government-in-exile. Messages from Khrushchev and Chou En-lai were greeted with applause. There was no message from the government of the United States.

An Afro-Asian economic conference opened today in Cairo. The minister of economy of the United Arab Republic said the countries of Asia and Africa must cooperate in order to utilize their natural wealth. "We must prove to the world," he said, "that we are really able to organize our own affairs and improve our living standards." Delegates to the Afro-Asian conference come from both Communist and non-Communist countries but...technically... do not represent their governments.

The Supreme Court ruled today that pipeline companies...supplying natural gas...may raise their prices without waiting for approval by the Federal Power Commission. It was a 5-to-3 decision, with Justice Clark taking no part. Justice Douglas, who was one of the three dissenters, says the decision as far as consumers are concerned "makes a shambles out of the Natural Gas Act." Although the decision allows pipeline companies to use a short-cut procedure in increasing their rates, such increases are subject to refund...if the Federal Power Commission later finds the higher rates unwarranted.

The Supreme Court today declined to review the case of Marie Torre, a New York radio and television columnist. Miss Torre was sentenced in November, 1957, to serve a 10-day jail sentence for refusing to identify the source of a news story. The formal charge was criminal contempt of court. She had argued that a reporter has the privilege of not identifying a news source.

In Montgomery, Alabama, the federal Civil Rights Commission today opened public hearings into complaints of discrimination against prospective Negro voters. The first witness was Walter P. Mitchell, executive secretary of the Tuskeegee Civic Association. Mitchell said that in Macon County, only 32 percent of the Negroes who have ~~applied~~ tried to register as voters in the past eight years have been registered. He said that he was registered himself, only after he had applied three times and had filed suit in court.

Edward R. Murrow: December 8, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The Democratic Advisory Council is no more than that, an advisory council, but the comprehensive policy program it issued in Washington last night cannot be dismissed as just advice. It was a kind of State of the Nation message, drafted and timed to contrast with the President's forthcoming message to Congress. The Advisory Council took a strong liberal line, more liberal than the party's own congressional leaders are going to like and sponsor. But it does not bind those leaders, and its effect is going to be to make President Eisenhower's supposed place in the middle of the road appear to have shifted to the conservative side. This will set the tone of the coming two years in Congress, where the battle will be as much between conservatives and liberals as between Republicans and Democrats. To the extent that the Eisenhower leadership can be made to look conservative, the liberals will gain in power over their own right wing. And this may have been one of the motives that produced so strongly liberal a policy statement. The Council obviously tried to make it as official as possible that voters at the election called for a liberal program, and that this was it.

The program consisted of twenty-four points, twice as many as the twelve-point program of Senator Lyndon Johnson. It differed from it not only in scope but in two particulars. It omitted any reference to legislation about the use of outer space, and it stressed civil liberties which Senator Johnson did not mention. It made two recommendations on civil liberties. It asked for legislation to help re-open the schools closed in the ~~XXXXXXXX~~ resistance to racial integration, as well as to prevent further closing of schools in the same cause. And it advocated the passage of the controversial section of last year's civil liberties bill which was dropped. This would empower the Justice Department to file civil suits against anyone who deprives citizens of their rights to equal protection under the law on account of race, color, religion or national origin. It also advocated change of the Senate rules to make it easier to halt filibusters, and plumped for the right of the Senate to make new rules at the start of each session.

On these issues the council was not unanimous, southern members voting against the majority. But on everything else the eighteen members in attendance were unanimous. They urged the liberalization of the social security program, with increased benefits to many, with higher pensions for widows and the disabled, and the adoption of hospitalization insurance.

In the labor field, they asked for an increase of the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour with a larger number of eligibles, a repeal of the law permitting states to enact right-to-work legislation, the application of federal minimum standards in state unemployment insurance, and the passage of the Kennedy-Ives union reform bill. In the field of agriculture they proposed programs to use surplus food stocks to benefit the needy at home and abroad, also laws to protect the family-size farm and to bring farmers toward income parity with other groups. They urged more economic aid for under-developed countries, and recommended adoption of a billion-dollar Economic Development Fund. They recommended more federal aid for school construction and for federal scholarships. They also backed three spending programs, one for housing, one for urban development and one for assistance for depressed areas. The Democratic majority in Congress may be expected to pass all three, XXXX and the President is pretty well committed to vetoing them.

As can be judged from this brief summary, the Democratic majority is being asked to move somewhat left-of-center. But though the Council carefully included praise for Senator Johnson and Speaker Rayburn for their leadership in Congress, it is being predicted in Washington that these two will feel no obligation to follow the program in all ways.

But the effect on the party of the policy statement is not to be under-estimated. In attendance at yesterday's meeting were former President Truman, Adlai Stevenson, Governor Harriman, Governor Mennen Williams and former Senator Lehman, all of them sure to carry weight with most of the incoming Congressional freshmen. / And whatever President Eisenhower puts forward in his State of the Union message, the proposed program will tend to make his appear negative and over-cautious.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

The Democratic Advisory Committee has advocated new civil rights legislation, ~~and the issue is bound to be debated when Congress reconvenes.~~ ~~Sidney Hyman~~ This is not a subject easily decided. Sidney Hyman once said, "Old lines of discrimination between justice and injustice, liberty and ~~oppression~~ oppression, suddenly seem to be as indistinct as lines ~~drawn~~ DRAWN in water. Somewhere, somehow, new lines will be drawn."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Moscow radio announces that Russia's security chief, General Serov, has been removed from his post. The brief announcement says that Serov "is taking up other work." It does not describe the nature of this "other work." As chairman of the committee on state security, Serov directed the activities of the secret police. He took the job in April, 1954, succeeding Lavrenti Beria, who was removed shortly after the death of Stalin. Beria was executed as a traitor. The reason for Serov's removal is not given. It is noted that he was a friend of Malenkov early in his career. Malenkov is now in disgrace.

Final returns in the West Berlin city election show that the Communists got less than 2 percent of the vote. Chancellor Adenauer's Christian Democratic Party got 37 percent of the vote. And the Social Democrats, led by West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt, emerged as the majority party with 52 percent. In Washington, the State Department calls the decisive defeat of the Communists "a clear answer" to Khrushchev's proposal that West Berlin be demilitarized and turned into a "free city." The vote, it says, "should give some idea as to the amount of trust the people of West Berlin are willing to place in Soviet proposals regarding their future." The West German government announces that Mayor Brandt will attend the conference of Western statesmen, due to be held in Paris next week prior to the meeting of NATO foreign ministers.

The United States, Britain and Russia today approved the second article of a draft treaty for prohibiting nuclear weapons tests. This agreement in Geneva follows the approval...on Saturday...of Article One. Article One would oblige the nuclear powers to stop testing. Article Two calls for establishment of a control organization. Both these articles, however, are written in broad, general terms. And the agreements on them, so far, are simply agreements in principle. Details (on which there is wide disagreement) must still be worked out.

The United Nations political committee today took up the Algerian question, and the French delegation promptly walked out. France had announced in advance that it would boycott the debate on grounds that Algeria is a domestic matter. Tunisia said the "logical way" to end the Algerian war was through negotiation. the rebels, it said, had interpreted DeGaulle's bid to them "to raise the white flag of parleys" as a bid to surrender.

The United Nations Security Council today heard Israel's complaint of aggression against the United Arab Republic. Israel said that in last week's border incident seven Israeli villages were hit with 800 shells. It said, "Never has such a thing happened without grave repercussions." The United Arab Republic charged that Israel was threatening it with reprisal. It accused Israel of starting the action. Israel says that Syrian border guards were the first to open fire.

Premier Kassem of Iraq says that he has smahed a "serious plot" to overthrow his government. His announcement was made in a communique, broadcast by the Baghdad radio. Leaders of the plot have been placed under arrest. They are not identified.

Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana today called for total liberation of Africa by non-violent means. Nkrumah's speech opened the All-African Peoples Conference in Accra, the Ghana capital. In denouncing colonialism, he warned, "It may come to us yet in a different guise---not neceasarily from Europe." The conference is attended by more than 200 delegates from 25 countries, including Nasser's United Arab Republic and the Algerian government-in-exile. Messages from Khrushchev and Chou En-lai were greeted with applause. There was no message from the government of the United States.

An Afro-Asian economic conference opened today in Cairo. The minister of economy of the United Arab Republic said the countries of Asia and Africa must cooperate in order to utilize their natural wealth. "We must prove to the world," he said, "that we are really able to organize our own affairs and improve our living standards." Delegates to the Afro-Asian conference come from both Communist and non-Communist countries, but...technically...do not represent their governments.

The Supreme Court ruled today that pipeline companies supplying natural gas...may raise their prices without waiting for approval by the Federal Power Commission. It was a 5-to-3 decision, with Justice Clark taking no part. Justice Douglas, who was one of the three dissenters, says the decision as far as consumers are concerned "makes a shambles out of the Natural Gas Act." Although the decision allows pipeline companies to use a short-cut procedure in increasing their rates, such increases are subject to refund...if the Federal Power commission later finds the higher rates unwarranted.

The Supreme Court today declined to review the case of Marie Torre, a New York radio and television columnist. Miss Torre was sentenced in November, 1957, to serve a 10-day jail sentence for refusing to identify the source of a news story. The formal charge was criminal contempt of court. She had argued that a reporter has the privilege of not identifying a news source.

In Montgomery, Alabama, the federal Civil Rights Commission today opened public heaiings into complaints of discrimination against prospective Negro voters. The first witness was Walter P. Mitchell, executive secretary of the Tuskeegee Civic Association. Mitchell said that in Macon County, only 32 percent of the Negroes who have tried to register as voters in the past eight years have been registered. He said that he was registered himself, only after he had applied three times and had filed suit in court.

The Democratic Advisory Council is no more than that, an advisory council but the comprehensive policy program it issued in Washington last night cannot be dismissed as just advice. It was a kind of State of the Nation message, drafted and timed to contrast with the President's forthcoming message to Congress. The Advisory Council took a strong liberal line, more liberal than the party's own congressional leaders are going to like and sponsor. But it does not bind those leaders, and its effect is going to be to make President Eisenhower's supposed place in the middle of the road appear to have shifted to the conservative side. This will set the tone of the coming two years in Congress, where the battle will be as much between conservatives and liberals as between Republicans and Democrats. To the extent that the Eisenhower leadership can be made to look conservative, the liberals will gain in power over their own right wing. And this may have been one of the motives that produced so strongly liberal a policy statement. The council obviously tried to make it as official as possible that voters at the election called for a liberal program, and that this was tt.

The program consisted of twenty-four points, twice as many as the twelve-point program of Senator Lyndon Johnson. It differed from it not only in scope but in two particulars. It omitted any reference to legislation about the use of outer space, and it stressed civil liberties which Senator Johnson did not mention. It made two recommendations on civil liberties. It asked for legislation to help re-open the schools closed in the resistance to racial integration, as well as to prevent further closing of schools in the same cause. And it advocated the passage of the controversial section of last year's civil liberties bill which was dropped. This would empower the Justice Department to file civil suits against anyone who deprives citizens of their rights to equal protection under the law on account of race, color, religion or national origin, It also advocated change of the Senate rules to make it easier to halt filibusters, and plumped for the right of the Senate to make new rules at the start of each session.

On these issues the council was not unanimous, southern mergers voting against the majority. But on everything else the eighteen members in attendance were unanimous. They urged the liberalization of the social security program, with increased benefits to many, with higher pensions for widows and the disabled, and the adoption of hospitalization insurance.

In the labor field, they asked for an increase of the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour with a large number of eligibles, a repeal of the law permitting states to enact right-to-work legislation, the application of federal minimum standards in state unemployment insurance, and the passage of the Kennedy-Ives union reform bill. In the field of agriculture they proposed programs to use surplus food stocks to benefit the needy at home and abroad, also laws to protect the family-size farm and to bring farmers toward income parity with other groups. They urged more economic aid for under-developed countries, and recommended adoption of a billion-dollar Economic Development Fund. They recommended more federal aid for school construction and for federal scholarships. They also backed three spending programs, one for housing, one for urban development and one for assistance for depressed areas. The Democratic majority in Congress may be expected to pass all three and the President is pretty well committed to vetoing them.

As can be judged from this brief summary, the Democratic majority is being asked to move somewhat left-of-center. But though the Council carefully included praise for Senator Johnson and Speaker Rayburn, for their leadership in Congress, it is being predicted in Washington that these two will feel no obligation to follow the program in all ways.

But the effect on the party of the policy statement is not to be underestimated. In attendance at yesterday's meeting were former President Truman, Adlai Stevenson, Governor Harriman, Governor Mennen Williams, and former Senator Lehman, all of them sure to carry weight with most of the incoming Congressional freshmen. And whatever President Eisenhower puts forward in his State of the Union message, the proposed program will tend to make his appear negative and over-cautious.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Democratic Advisory Committee has advocated new civil rights legislation. This is not a subject easily decided. Sidney Hyman once said, "Old lines of discrimination between justice and injustice, liberty and oppression, suddenly seem to be as indistinct as lines drawn in water. Somewhere, somehow, new lines will be drawn."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 9, 1958

This is the news:

Democratic Senator Humphrey today gave President Eisenhower a secret message from Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Humphrey did not divulge the contents of the message given to him by Khrushchev in the course of their eight-hour conversation in Moscow a week ago. It was up to the State Department and the Atomic Energy Commission, Humphrey said, to determine whether details of the message should be released. He did say that it involved Soviet atomic weapons or explosions "of a very substantial nature." Tonight, the Associated Press...quoting "Senate sources"...says that Khrushchev boasted of having an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of delivering its warhead more than 8-thousand miles. Such a missile would place almost all of the United States within the range of Soviet rockets. The maximum range achieved so far by an American intercontinental ballistic missile---the Atlas---is 6-thousand, 325 miles.

West German Chancellor Adenauer today cancelled the trip he planned to make to London on Friday because of a bad cold. Arrangements for a meeting with Prime Minister Macmillan had been made at Adenauer's request. Britain and West Germany have been at odds on how to react to Khrushchev's proposal to make West Berlin a "free city". Britain has favored a full discussion with Russia on the whole German problem, while...at the same...rejecting the Khrushchev proposal. Adenauer wants the West to reject Khrushchev's proposal period. He feels that it would weaken the position of the West to link Berlin at this time with the entire German question.

The West German foreign office said tonight that the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France will meet in Paris next Sunday to discuss the Berlin question. This is two days before the scheduled meeting of the NATO Council. The State Department says that Secretary Dulles continues to recover from his intestinal ailment and that he plans to leave for Paris on Friday. He is still in Walter Reed Hospital.

East German party boss Walter Ulbricht arrived in Warsaw today for talks with Polish leaders. Reportedly, they are discussing the latest developments in Berlin. The East German delegation will be in Warsaw for five days.

The Chinese Communists...following their every-other-day bombardment schedule...hit the Quemoy island complex today with more than 3-thousand shells.

In Paris today, the new National Assembly of the Fifth Republic met for the first time. Jacques Chaban-Delmas (SHA-BON DELL-MA), a former defense minister from Bordeaux, was elected Assembly president on the second ballot. He belongs to the powerful Gaullist party headed by Jacques Soustelle.

The United States ~~[illegible]~~ promised today to help set up regional free trade areas in Latin America as a means of stimulating production. The promise was given by Thomas C. Mann, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, at the meeting of 21 American nations in Washington. He said that new machinery for ~~[illegible]~~ developing regional free trade areas would be set up within the Organization of American States. The United States, he said, would give its "material and moral support."

The Justice Department says it will seek a court order, compelling Alabama officials to produce voting records requested by the federal Civil Rights Commission. / It says that if an order is issued...and not obeyed...contempt proceedings will be instituted in Federal Court.

At the civil rights hearing yesterday in Montgomery, Alabama, voter registrars in six counties refused to produce records subpoenaed by the commission. They argued that the commission had no legal right to call for records that had been impounded by state authorities. / Some of the registrars went further and refused to testify. / The commission hearings on alleged violation of Negro voting rights in Alabama ended today. / One of the last witnesses told of two counties in which no Negroes are listed as eligible to vote, although they outnumber the white residents.

A federal grand jury today indicted Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine on 18 counts of contempt of Congress. / The indictment is based on Goldfine's refusal...last summer...to answer questions put to him by the House subcommittee on legislative oversight. / The subcommittee was investigating his troubles with the federal regulatory agencies and his relationship

—INSERT—

We are told that April fifteenth will be observed each year as "Africa Freedom Day." All African nations will celebrate the day with demonstrations and mass meetings. April fifteenth was chosen because that was the date...this year...when a conference of independent African states was held in Accra.

with Sherman Adams. Goldfine will be arraigned on Friday. And his attorney says the case will be fought "to the bitter end." [~~If convicted, Goldfine would face a possible maximum sentence of a year in jail and a fine of one thousand dollars on each count.~~]

Today...in the Security Council...Russia vetoed a United States move to grant United Nations membership to South Korea and South Vietnam. The council...by a vote of 10 to 1...rejected a Soviet counter-proposal for the admission of North Korea. It recommended acceptance of the membership application of the new state of Guinea in West Africa. And the application now goes to the General Assembly, where approval is expected.

In Ghana, the All-African Peoples Conference has got down to business after yesterday's opening formalities. For a direct report on that important meeting and how it is developing we switch to my colleague Charles Collingwood in Accra.

(Tape runs 5:40
Returns on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague Charles Collingwood, reporting on the first All-African Peoples Conference in Accra.

—INSERT—

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The All-African Peoples Conference may be split as to how independence is to be achieved, but there is no disagreement as to the goal. Half a dozen African colonies have gained independence in recent ~~weeks,~~ months and this is only a start. As George Washington observed upon the birth of our country, "Liberty, when it begins to take root, is a plant of rapid growth."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, December 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Ghana, the All People's conference has get down to business, after yesterday's opening formalities. For a direct report on that important meeting, and how it is developing, we switch to my colleague Charles Collingwood in Accra.

COLLINGWOOD: This conference in Accra is undoubtedly the most representative meeting of Africans that has ever been held. You don't have to count noses to have this impressed upon you. The very scene itself is confirmation. There are the togas of Ghana, the flowing robes of Nigeria, a delegate from Kenya in an enormous feathered headdress, the Tunisians in filmy white gowns, there are fezzes, African coiffures, crowns and all manner of exotic headgear and tribal dress from one corner of Africa to the other. In all there are more than 200 official delegates here, from more than twenty-five African countries, representing fifty or sixty organizations. All the organizations are nationalist, dedicated to independence - and that is the purpose of this conference, to coordinate the drive for African independence which is convulsing the continent. The delegations range from the rebel F.L.N. of Algeria, whose grim and bloody war has cost the lives of thousands, to the Nigerians who boast that when they get their freedom, in 1960, it will have been achieved at the cost of not one drop of blood. Nasser's United Arab Republic is here in force, with a corps of articulate, well-heeled and conspiratorial delegates. And, if only because Ghana is the host country, the Ghanians of Prime Minister Nkrumah are (indistinct) of all. Already, a split is developing in the All-African People's conference and in the shifting, evolving pattern of this continent in ferment it is one which may become increasingly important i nthe future. Not only for Africa but for the West as whll.

The split takes many forms but it's the same split. (Indistinct) it's a rivalry between Nkrumah and Nasser. It shows itself in a bn bitter, behind the scene struggle over whether this all-African peoples conference advocates non-violent means to independence or whether it should countinent all acts necessary to gain the overriding goal. It expressed in tension between Arab Africa and Black Africa. Between those who have achieved or are about to achieve their independence and those who are still fighting for it. You can see it in the attitudes toward Communism and attitudes towards the West. The difference crops up in many ways but in almost every case you can translate one side as Nasser and the j other side as Nkrumah. The shortest evidence of the split surrounds the issue of non-violence. Nkrumah, who got his indpendence from the British by non-violent means and to run his country in the tradition of British institution issued the call for the conference on the basis of its advocacy of non-violence but as soon as they got here and started talking about the agenda, they ran into trouble. For one thing, the Algerian FLN is here, and how can a conference which includes and supports the Algerian rebels put itself on record as insisting on non-violent methods. Nasser's people who are busily offering help and facilities to every African independence movement, naturally is opposed to any limitation on the use of force. Only acts count they state contemptously to the apostles of non-violence. Indeed, the delegates at one time are supposed to have decided to bury the non-violence issue here but in his keynote address to the conference, Nkrumah went out of his way to bring it up again and his newspapers here in Ghana are running editorials in favor of non-violence. The United Arab Republic, The Algerians and their adherents and admirers are hopping mad. The issue may be buried yet. But the argument over it is systematic of the struggle of influence, the struggle for influence as this conference inevitably reveals. On the main thing, of course, this all-African conference is united. The achievement of independence, and its most important fruit is the sense of community that is developing here. It hasn't developed in Africa before, if only because of the painful difficulties of communication which have kept Africans from getting together over the centuries. The mountains and rivers and jungles and vast distances and poverty have kept the peoples of Africa apart. This sense of Community they speak of here as developing the African personality. That can be variously defined and the Ghanans would like to define it as something just like Nkrumah, others want it to be something like Nasser. But that something is developing, the feeling of being African as well as national is undeniable. The conference is going to set up a permanent organisation which they hope will be the nerve center of the African revolution or at any rate be the continuing expression of the common purpose. Meanwhile, everything is fluid, shifting and inconclusive, but there's a tremendous potential here in Africa, which sometimes comes in awkward way the delegates here are trying to unleash. That the African continent will, one day, be on one side or the other (indistinct) factor in the world balance cannot be denied at all, and that is why this rather fumbling but deadly earnest conference going on in Accra is so important. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

E.D.TRANS/PO-RC

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Democratic Senator Humphrey today gave President Eisenhower a secret message from Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Humphrey did not divulge the contents of the message given to him by Khrushchev in the course of their eight-hour convergation in Moscow a week ago. It was up to the State Department and the Atomic Energy Commission, Humphrey said, to determine whether details of the message should be released. He did say that it involved Soviet atomic weapons or explosions "of a very substantial nature." Tonight, the Associated Press... quoting "Senate sources"...says that Khrushchev boasted of having an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of delivering its warhead more than 8-thousand miles. Such a missile would place almost all of the United States within the range of Soviet rockets. The maximum range achieved so far by an American intercontinental ballistic missile---the Atlas---is 6-thousand, 325 miles.

West German Chancellor Adenauer today cancelled the trip he planned to make to London on Friday because of a bad cold. Arrangements for a meeting with Prime Minister Macmillan had been made at Adenauer's request. Britain and West Germany have been at odds on how to react to Khrushchev's proposal to make West Berlin a "free city." Britain has favored a full discussion with Russia on the whole German problem, while...at the same...rejecting the Khrushchev proposal. Adenauer wants the West to reject Khrushchev's proposal period. He feels that it would weaken the position of the West to link Berlin at this time with the entire German question.

The West German foreign office said tonight that the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France will meet in Paris next Sunday to discuss the Berlin question. This is two days before the scheduled meeting of the NATO Council.

The State Department says that Secretary Dulles continues to recover from his intestinal ailment and that he plans to leave for Paris on Friday. He is still in Walter Reed Hospital.

East German party boss Walter Ulbricht arrived in Warsaw today for talks with Polish leaders. Reportedly, they are discussing the latest developments in Berlin. The East German delegation will be in Warsaw for five days.

The Chinese Communists...following their every-other-day bombardment schedule...hit the Quemoy island complex today with more than 3 thousand shells.

In Paris today, the new National Assembly of the Fifth Republic met for the first time. Jacques Chaban-Delmas, a former defense minister from Bordeaux, was elected Assembly president on the second ballot. He belongs to the powerful Gaullist party headed by Jacques Soustelle.

The United States promised today to help set up regional free trade areas in Latin America as a means of stimulating production. The promise was given by Thomas C. Mann, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, at the meeting of 21 American nations in Washington. He said that new machinery for developing regional free trade areas would be set up within the Organization of American States. The United States, he said, would give its "material and moral support."

The Justice Department says it will seek a court order, compelling Alabama officials to produce voting records requested by the federal Civil Rights Commission. It says that if an order is issued....and not obeyed... contempt proceedings will be instituted in Federal Court.

A federal grand jury today indicted Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine on 18 counts of contempt of Congress. The indictment is based on Goldfine's refusal...last summer...to answer questions put to him by the House subcommittee on legislative oversight. The subcommittee was investigating his troubles with the federal regulatory agencies and his relationship with Sherman Adams. Goldfine will be arraigned on Friday. And his attorney says the case will be fought "to the bitter end."

Today...in the Security Council...Russia vetoed a United States move to grant United Nations membership to South Korea and South Vietnam. The council...by a vote of 10 to 1...rejected a Soviet counter-proposal for the admission of North Korea. It recommended acceptance of the membership application of the new state of Guinea in West Africa. And the application now goes to the General Assembly, where approval is expected.

In Ghana, the All-African Peoples Conference has got down to business after yesterday's opening formalities. For a direct report on that important meeting and how it is developing, we switch to my colleague Charles Collingwood in Accra.

COLLINGWOOD: This conference in Accra is undoubtedly the most representative meeting of Africans that has ever been held. You don't have to count noses to have this impressed upon you. The very scene itself is confirmation. There are the togas of Ghana, the flowing robes of Nigeria, a delegate from Kenya in an enormous feathered headdress, the Tunisians in filmy white gowns, there are fezzes, African coiffures, crowns and all manner of exotic headgear and tribal dress from one corner of Africa to the other. In all there are more than 200 officaal delegates here, from more than twenty-five African countries, representing fifty or sixty organizations. All the organizations are nationalist, dedicated to independence - and that is the purpose of this conference, to coordinate the drive for African independence which is convulsing the continent. The delegations range from the rebel F.L.N. of Algeria, whose grim and bloody war has cost the lives of thousands, to the Nigerians who boast that when they get their freedom, in 1960, it will have been achieved at the cost of not one drop of blood. Nasser's United Arab Republic is here in force, with a corps of articulate, well-heeled and conspiratorial delegates. And, if only because Ghana is the host country, the Ghanians of Prime Minister Nkrumah are (indistinct) of all. Already, a split is developing in the All-African Peoples conference and in the shifting, evolving pattern of this continent in ferment, it is one which may become increasingly important in the future. Not only for Africa but for the West as well. The split takes many forms, but it's the same split. (Indistinct) it's a rivalry between Nkrumah and Nasser. It shows itself in a bitter, behind the scene struggle over whether this all-African peoples conference advocates non-violent means to independence or whether it should countinent all acts necessary to gain the overriding goal. It's expressed in tension between Arab Africa and Black Africa. Between those who have achieved or are about to achieve their independence and those who are still fighting for it. You can see it in the attitudes toward Communism and attitudes towards the West. The difference crops up in many ways but in almost every case you can translate one side as Nasser and the other side as Nkrumah. The shortest evidence of the split surrounds the issue of non-violence. Nkrumah, who got his independence from the British by non-violent means and to run his country in the tradition of British institution issued the call for the conference on the basis of its advocacy of non-violence but as soon as they got here and started talking about the agenda, they ran into trouble. For one thing, the Algerian FLN is here, and how can a conference which includes and supports the Algerian rebels put itself on record as insisting on non-violent methods. Nasser's people who are busily offering help and facilities to every African independence movement, naturally is opposed to any limitation on the use of force. Only acts count they state contemptously to the apostles of non-violence . Indeed, the delegates at one time are supposed to have decided to bury the non-violence issue here but in his keynote address to the conference, Nkrumah went out of his way to bring it up again and his newspapers here in Ghana are running editorials in favor of non-violence. The United Arab Republic, the Algerians and their adherents and admirers are hopping mad. The issue may be buried yet. But the argument over it is systematic of the struggle of influence, the struggle for influence as this conference inevitably reveals. On the main thing, of course, this all-African conference is united. The achievement of independence, and its most important fruit is the sense of community that is developing here. It hasn't developed in Africa before, if only because of the painful difficulties of communication which have kept Africans from getting together over the centuries. The mountains and rivers and jungles and vast distances and poverty have kept the peoples of Africa apart. This sense of community they speak of here as developing the African personality. That can be variously defined and the Ghanans would like to define it as something just like Nkrumah, others want it to be something like Nasser. But that something is developing, the feeling of being African as well as national is undeniable. The conference is going to set up a permanent organization which they hope will be the nerve center of the African revolution or at any rate be the continuing expression of the common purpose. Meanwhile, everything is fluid, shifting and inconclusive, but there's a tremendous potential here in Africa, which sometimes comes in awkward way the delegates here are trying to unleash. That the African continent will, one day, be on one side or the other (indistinct) factor in the world balance cannot be denied at all, and that is why this rather fumbling but deadly earnest conference going on in Accra is so important. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Charles Collingwood, reporting on the first All-African Peoples Conference in Accra.

We are told that April 15th will be observed each year as "Africa Freedom Day." All African nations will celebrate the day with demonstrations and mass meetings. April 15th was chosen because that was the date...this year... when a conference of independent African states was held in Accra.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The All-African Peoples Conference may be split as to how independence is to be achieved, but there is no disagreement as to the goal. Half a dozen African colonies have gained independence in recent months, and this is only a start. As George Washington observed upon the birth of our country, "Liberty when it begins to take root is a plant of rapid growth."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 10, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today held his first news conference in five weeks. / He said that the United States is "firm" in its resolve to maintain the free existence of West Berlin. / We not only have the right to do this, he said, but the duty. The President said there was nothing "particularly new" in the Berlin proposals made by Soviet Premier Khrushchev, which Democratic Senator Humphrey brought back from Moscow. / He saw no reason to doubt reports that Russia now has an intercontinental ballistic missile, with a range of better than 8-thousand miles, also a hydrogen bomb in the five-megaton range---that is, a bomb with the explosive power of 5-million tons of T.N.T. / He noted that the United States has successfully tested its 6-thousand-mile-range missile. He called this a "sufficient" range. And he said that we, too, have exploded bombs of greater than megaton force. Mr. Eisenhower, however, placed small credence in reports that the Russians have been test-flying an atomic-powered aircraft. There is, he said, "absolutely no intelligence, no reliable evidence of any kind," that this is so.

—)

CBS ~~News~~ White House Correspondent Robert Pierpoint asked the President how he felt about the refusal of public officials in Alabama to cooperate with the federal Civil Rights Commission. Here is Mr. Eisenhower's reply in full:

(Tape runs 5:40
Ends in cue: "---to our government, and that's what we need."

In answer to another question, Mr. Eisenhower said that he would ask Congress to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission. Under present law, it will pass out of existence in November, 1959.

In Atlanta, Georgia, a mistrial was declared today in the effort to convict George Bright on the charge of bombing a Jewish temple. In Georgia, conviction of bombing carries a possible death penalty.

Judge Durwood Pye directed an order of mistrial when the jury was unable to reach a verdict after deliberating for three and a half days. He immediately called the case for retrial. Defense motions to dismiss were overruled.

Nine persons died today when a bomb wrecked the headquarters of a religious cult near Chatsworth, California. Two of the victims were children. All but one of the bodies have been identified, and there is speculation that the unidentified body may be that of the person who placed the bomb. Laboratory facilities for the investigation are being made available by the F.B.I.

The government reports virtually no change in the number of persons unemployed in November. This reflects a general improvement in the ~~[illegible]~~ economy...since unemployment usually goes up in November due to the seasonal lay-off of workers on farms and in the construction industry. Last month, the decline in outdoor employment was less than usual...and some previously unemployed factory workers were called back to their jobs because of the settlement of strikes. The average earnings of factory workers reached a new high.

Distribution of all major New York City newspapers was stopped today by a strike of deliverymen. The only selling done was over the counter at the picketed newspaper plants.

The Associated Press reports...in a Formosa dispatch...that United States air and naval forces in the Formosa area are being "thinned out." Marine Air Group 11 and the 337th fighter-interceptor squadron are still on Formosa. But the F-104A Starfighters have been sent home.

A Regulus II guided missile today was successfully launched from a surface ship for the first time. The launching took place off the Pacific coast. It was landed near Tonopah, Nevada, after flying a prescribed 400-mile course. The Regulus II resembles an advanced jet aircraft and is capable of carrying a nuclear warhead. It is designed for operational use by atomic powered submarines.

In Geneva today, representatives of the United States, Britain and Russia took up Article Three of a draft treaty for ending nuclear weapons tests. Article Three deals with the component parts of a control organization. No agreements were reached.

Secretary of Defense McElroy conferred in Rome today with Italian leaders. The talks are said to concern the installation of American intermediate range ~~ballistic~~ missile bases in Italy, similar to the I.R.B.M. bases already being installed in Britain.

British Prime Minister Macmillan proposed today that the British, Greek and Turkish foreign ministers meet in Paris next week, to try to solve the Cyprus problem. / The Greek foreign minister said tonight that there ~~mm~~ is "no question of a tri-partite conference on Cyprus." / He was not even certain, he said, whether he could attend next week's meeting of NATO foreign ministers.

[In Washington, Democratic Representative Cannon of Missouri said today that he would do "everything in his power" to eliminate unnecessary spending, in the next session of Congress. Cannon...who is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee... said the "spenders" can't spend "what we don't appropriate."] insert

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, a word from George Bryan ~~mmmmmmmm~~ about the weather.

Word for Today

President Eisenhower, by coincidence, made his comment on the Alabama hearings on the 10th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This declaration...approved by the United Nations General Assembly...was referred to today by the president of the Assembly, Dr. Charles Malik, as potentially "a mighty ideological weapon." Alas, he said, it is not used enough.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, December 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... here is Mrs. Eisenhower's reply in full.

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, I don't feel very well about it. This is what I feel. This commission was in its ... its formulation was supported by people from different sections and certainly I took every possible pains I could to get one that would represent every shade of opinion in this field and even to give it a geographical base that I thought would appeal to the common sense and the general opinion of the country. For example, Governor Battle and Mr. Storey, who is President of the American Bar Association and Mr. Grotton are all from the south. And, so we had that kind of a commission. And, it ... merely ... one reason for their slowness in getting started was ... was the difficulty I had in getting exactly the kind of people that I wanted and the time took. Now, that kind of a commission goes down and under the authority of the Congress which has given them the power of subpoena is defied and they've had to ask from the Justice Department to come in to place this case before a Federal Court. I think ... I think this is a rather sad sort of thing because all the way around, we are running into this refusal of complying with the basic laws of the land. Land laws that have been upheld by our courts as legal and proper. Now, I'm not trying to get into the basic question. I'm talking about the procedures and the habits that make this kind of thing so reprehensible. Because, it means as I see it, showing the American public that - and any member of it, at his or their pleasure they can defy the laws of the land when popular opinion in the particular section or locality may support these people. Now, I ... I'm talking about unquestionably some of my good friends. As most of you people know, I lived a great bit of my time in the south and of course this applies I have no doubt that it applies in certain sections of the north. But, the fact is what I'm pleading for and what I would like to ... to get help in pleading for - throughout the country is reppect for law. And, I would say one other thing about this commission, this is to look into the facts, to find the facts about interference with the right of free man to vote. Now, this you remember, was part of the so called Civil Rights Bill of 1956, and during the course of that time, I had a number of my respected southern friends to talk the matter over with them. Now, none of them, of course, was particularly happy to see a Civil Rights bill projected, but every single one of them that I can recall said, the right to vote does belong to any citizen that can qualify for the voting privilege and all of us should stand for that. Now, I think they would rather see us not had a law apparently, but they said just exactly that. And, I believe that responsible people in every section if they will look at this will see the need for complying with the law if we're not going to have a deterioration in this ... in the quality of governmental activity and indeed possibly the quality of our own thinking with reppect xx to our government - and that's what we need.

MURROW: In answer to another question ....

PT/m.m.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

BERNARD R. MERROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, December 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MERROW: In Washington, Democratic representative Cannon of Missouri said today that he would do everything in his power to eliminate unnecessary spending in the next session of Congress. Cannon, who is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said the spenders can't spend what we do not appropriate. So it is quite clear that the major battle in Congress during the coming session will be spending against non-spending and it remains to be seen whether the Democratic Party in Congress that is in the House and the Senate will support the policy resolution prepared by the Advisory Committee of the Democratic Party. The Chinese Communist troops opened fire on farmers who staged a two hour revolt on Lappa Island near Macao. This is according to the English language newspaper Hong Kong Standard. We have no further details on this reported action.

R.D./TRANS/MC

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today held his first news conference in five weeks. He said that the United States is "firm" in its resolve to maintain the free existence of West Berlin. We not only have the right to do this, he said, but the duty. The President said there was nothing "particularly new" in the Berlin proposals made by Soviet Premier Khrushchev, which Democratic Senator Humphrey brought back from Moscow. He saw no reason to doubt reports that Russia now has an intercontinental ballistic missile with a range of better than 8 thousand miles, also a hydrogen bomb in the five-megaton range---that is, a bomb with the explosive power of 5-million tons of T.N.T. He noted that the United States has successfully tested its 6-thousand-mile-range missile. He called this a "sufficient" range. And he said that we, too, have exploded bombs of greater than megaton force. Mr. Eisenhower, however, placed small credence in reports that the Russians have been test-flying an atomic-powered aircraft. There is, he said, "absolutely no intelligence, no reliable evidence of any kind," that this is so.

CBS White House Correspondent Robert Pierpoint asked the President how he felt about the refusal of public officials in Alabama to cooperate with the federal Civil Rights Commission. Here is Mr. Eisenhower's reply in full:

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, I don't feel very well about it. This is what I feel. This commission was in its...its formulation was supported by people from different sections and certainly I took every possible pains I could to get one that would represent every shade of opinion in this field and even to give it a geographical base that I thought would appeal to the common sense and the general opinion of the country. For example, Governor Battle and Mr. Storey, who is President of the American Bar Association and Mr. Crotton are all from the south. And, so we had that kind of a commission. And, it...merely...one reason for their slowness in getting started was...was the difficulty I had in getting exactly the kind of people that I wanted and the time took. Now, that kind of a commission goes down and under the authority of the Congress which has given them the power of subpoena is defied and they've had to ask from the Justice Department to come in to place this case before a Federal Court. I think...I think this is a rather sad sort of thing because all the way around, we are running into this refusal of complying with the basic laws of the land. Land laws that have been upheld by our courts as legal and proper. Now, I'm not trying to get into the basic question. I'm talking about the procedures and the habits that make this kind of thing so reprehensible. Because, it means as I see it, showing the American public that - and any member of it, at his or their pleasure they can defy the laws of the land when popular opinion in the particular section or locality may support these people. Now, I...I'm talking about unquestionably some of my good friends. As most of you people know, I lived a great bit of my time in the south and of course this applies I have no doubt that it applies in certain sections of the north. But, the fact is what I'm pleading for and what I would like to...to get help in pleading for - throughout the country is respect for law. And, I would say one other thing about this commission, this is to look into the facts, to find the facts about interference with the right of free men to vote. Now, this you remember, was part of the so-called Civil Rights Bill of 1956, and during the course of that time, I had a number of my respected southern friends to talk the matter over with them. Now, none of them, of course, was particularly happy to see a Civil Rights bill projected, but every single one of them that I can recall said, the right to vote does belong to any citizen that can qualify for the voting privilege and all of us should stand for that. Now, I think they would rather see us not had a law apparently, but they said just exactly that. And, I believe that responsible people in every section if they will look at this will see the need for complying with the law if we're not going to have a deterioration in this...in the quality of governmental activity and indeed possibly the quality of our own thinking with respect to our government - and that's what we need.

MURROW: In answer to another question, Mr. Eisenhower said that he would ask Congress to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission. Under present law, it will pass out of existence in November, 1959.

In Atlanta, Georgia, a mistrial was declared today in the effort to convict George Bright on the charge of bombing a Jewish temple. In Georgia conviction of bombing carries a possible death penalty. Judge Durwood Pye directed an order of mistrial when the jury was unable to reach a verdict after deliberating for three and a half days. He immediately called the case for retrial. Defense motions to dismiss were overruled.

Nine persons died today when a bomb wrecked the headquarters of a religious cult near Chatsworth, California. Two of the victims were children. All but one of the bodies have been identified, and there is speculation that the unidentified body may be that of the person who placed the bomb. Laboratory facilities for the investigation are being made available by the F.B.I.

The government reports virtually no change in the number of persons unemployed in November. This reflects a general improvement in the economy... since unemployment usually goes up in November due to the seasonal lay-off of workers on farms and in the construction industry. Last month, the decline in outdoor employment was less than usual...and some previously unemployed factory workers were called back to their jobs because of the settlement of strikes. The average earnings of factory workers reached a new high.

Distribution of all major New York city newspapers was stopped today by a strike of deliverymen. The only selling done was over the counter at the picketed newspaper plants.

The Associated Press reports...in a Formosa dispatch...that United States air and naval forces in the Formosa area are being "thinned out." Marine Air Group 11 and the 337th fighter-interceptor squadron are still on Formosa. But the F-104A Starfighters have been sent home.

A Regulus II guided missile today was successfully launched from a surface ship for the first time. The launching took place off the Pacific coast. It was landed near Tonopah, Nevada, after flying a prescribed 400-mile course. The Regulus II resembles an advanced jet aircraft and is capable of carrying a nuclear warhead. It is designed for operational use by atomic powered submarines.

In Geneva today, representatives of the United States, Britain and Russia took up Article Three of a draft treaty for ending nuclear weapons tests. Article Three deals with the component parts of a control organization. No agreements were reached.

Secretary of Defense McElory conferred in Rome today with Italian leaders. The talks are said to concern the installation of American intermediate range missile bases in Italy similar to the I.R.B.M. bases already being installed in Britain.

British Prime Minister Macmillan proposed today that the British, Greek and Turkish foreign ministers meet in Paris next week to try to solve the Cyprus problem. The Greek foreign minister said tonight that there is "no question of a tri-partite conference on Cyprus." He was not even certain, he said, whether he could attend next week's meeting of NATO foreign ministers.

In Washington Democratic Representative Cannon of Missouri said today that he would do "everything in his power" to eliminate unnecessary spending in the next session of Congress. Cannon...who is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee...said the "spenders" can't spend "what we don't appropriate." So it is quite clear that the major battle in Congress during the coming session will be spending against non-spending and it remains to be seen whether the Democratic Party in Congress that is in the House and the Senate will support the policy resolution prepared by the Advisory Committee of the Democratic Party.

The Chinese Communist troops opened fire on farmers who staged a two hour revolt on Lappa Island near Macao. This is according to the English language newspaper Hong Kong Standard. We have no further details on this reported action.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

MURROW: President Eisenhower, by coincidence, made his comment on the Alabama hearings on the 10th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This declaration...approved by the United Nations General Assembly...was referred to today by the president of the Assembly, Dr. Charles Malik, as potentially "a mightyideological weapon." Alas, he said, it is not used enough.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 11, 1958

This is the news:

Russia today appealed to the Western powers to be "realistic" in dealing with its proposals on Berlin. The official Soviet news agency Tass charged that by keeping its troops in West Berlin the United States was creating "a threat to peace." Tass noted President Eisenhower's statement yesterday that the Western powers have a right and a duty to stay in West Berlin to preserve its freedom. Tass said the occupation rights of the Western powers had "long ago ceased to exist." And it claimed that no threat to the freedom of West Berlin exists, either from Russia or from the East German regime. The Soviet news agency again derided the idea of a big power conference on German reunification. That is a question, it said, to be settled by the two German states. Tonight...in a telephone interview with a West German newspaper...Khrushchev said there are some "hotheads" who talk of forcing their way into West Berlin by means of tanks. He suggested that this might mean war...but added that he did not think the West wanted to "pick" a war on the Berlin issue. ~~Khrushchev rejected the idea of a conference at which the Berlin question would be discussed as part of the over-all German problem.~~

The military leaders of NATO are meeting in Paris for two days of talks. And on Saturday, the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France are due in Paris for consultation on the Berlin question. Two days later, they will be joined by the other 11 NATO foreign ministers for the annual NATO Council meeting. It was formally announced today by the State Department that Secretary Dulles will head the American delegation. He has been hospitalized since last Friday with an intestinal disorder. He will leave the hospital late tomorrow morning and fly to Paris tomorrow night.

The United Nations General Assembly today debated the Hungarian question. American Ambassador Lodge charged that a "reign of terror", directed by Moscow, still exists in Hungary...and he called on the Assembly to pass a new resolution, directing Russia and its puppet regime in Hungary "to desist from repressive measures against the Hungarian people." In reply, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin called the Hungarian issue "a cold war concoction." Nothing the United Nations does on the subject, he said, will make any difference."

The rebel radio in Cuba announces what may be the first step in setting up a provisional government. It reports the arrival in what it calls "Free Cuba" of Dr. Manuel ~~Urruthia~~ Urrutia, a man Fidel Castro has referred to as his choice for provisional president. ~~Urruthia~~ Urrutia has been in exile in this country and in Venezuela.

The Afro-Asian economic conference in Cairo decided today to set up a permanent organization for cooperation in the field of trade. The organization would collect, classify and publish information on the economic situation in every Afro-Asian country. It would promote arbitration in commercial disputes...and work for the reduction and elimination of customs barriers.

The United States District Court in Montgomery, Alabama today ordered a state judge...and five county officials...to produce the voting records requested of them by the federal Civil Rights Commission. The Alabama officials had refused to produce the records on grounds that they had been impounded by state authorities. They also refused to testify.

The International Teamsters Union today was ordered to comply with the "clean up" recommendations made by the court-appointed board of monitors. The order was issued in Washington by Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts. It was Letts who...a year ago...set up the board of monitors after a group of rank-and-file members filed suit, challenging the election of James Hoffa as union president. They charged that the election of Hoffa was "rigged". Judge Letts said today that Hoffa and his subordinates had tried to frustrate the monitors in their effort to clean house...and he barred the union from holding another convention in March. (The original court order stipulated that the life of the board of monitors would automatically expire when another union convention was held.) Letts has now ruled that the monitors---not the union---will set the date for the next convention, subject to approval by the court. And he warned of a new legal crackdown if the union fails to comply. "Remedies," he said, "are not lacking in our judicial processes. If the orders of the court are violated, disregarded, or ignored." Hoffa says that Letts' order will be appealed "all the way."

Secretary of Labor Mitchell said today that employes of local and state governments "deserve a better fate" than to be organized by Hoffa. Hoffa said yesterday that the teamsters union would try to organize these workers, including police and firemen. The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes...affiliated with the A.F.L. - C.I.O.... served notice today that it would fight any attempt by the teamsters to infringe on its jurisdiction.

Here in New York City, all major newspapers have suspended publication due to the strike of deliverymen who are demanding higher pay. Yesterday, papers were published...with distribution limited to copies sold at the newspaper plants. Last night, printers at the New York Daily News refused to cross the deliverymen's picket line. And today other papers, including the Times, announced discontinuance of publication for the duration of the strike. Many of the newspaper workers were furloughed without pay. Because of the walkout, New York radio and television stations have expanded their news schedules.

Edward R. Murrow: December 11, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Two views are to be encountered in Washington and other Western capitals about the meaning of Khrushchev's demand that the Western Powers get out of Berlin. One is that he wants nothing more than he says, a surgical operation in Berlin to be rid of what he regards as "a cancer." Once rid of Western forces, he can consolidate the position of the East German Government and thereby greatly strengthen his own empire. Those who hold this view are sure that the only possible answer to Khrushchev is to say No, and sit tight.

The other view is that Khrushchev is trying to thaw out the Western position on Germany and European security, keep Germany from getting nuclear weapons, produce some Western disengagement in Central Europe, and exploit the almost infinite possibilities of Western disunity. Those who hold this view are sure that the West must come up with counter-proposals so as to avoid a hopelessly negative policy. They also want to start with a "No" on Berlin, but would go on to make offers that would put Khrushchev on the defensive.

President Eisenhower's news conference yesterday was eagerly awaited for any hint on which of these positions the United States would take at next week's NATO meeting in Paris. He said nothing to indicate that he favored anything beyond a straight rejection of the Soviet proposal.

One of the tasks of the NATO Foreign Ministers next week will be to decide what they themselves think that Khrushchev is after. If they should agree that he is not trying to re-open broader German and European questions, then NATO can be expected to join as a chorus in saying No. But if some Ministers think Khrushchev wants to talk about more than Berlin they will want to give him a chance to do so. However, the differences over possible Western proposals are much too deep for this NATO meeting to be expected to formulate any counter-proposals.

It may even be difficult to get all the NATO countries to unite on how the Berlin proposals should be rejected. Some will want it done in a spirit of confident defiance. Others will want moderation. The views of Dr. Adenauer, for example, will not be the same as those of the representatives of Norway and Denmark, or of Britain. The German Chancellor has said that no further negotiations should be held with the Soviet Union on Germany and Europe before Khrushchev withdraws the Berlin proposals. Last week British Foreign Secretary Lloyd said that the Berlin question should be handled in context with German unity and European security problems. He went on to suggest three conditions. One was to keep the forces of Western Powers in Germany where they are, if Germany is reunified, that is, not to station any of them on the German-Polish border. This would be a concession to the Kremlin. Then he insisted on safe-guards against surprise attack in Central Europe and a thinning-out of all military forces in this region; in other words, partial disengagement.

President Eisenhower yesterday repeated Secretary Dulles oft-made charge that the Russians repudiated a pledge at the Summit Meeting in 1955 to unite Germany through free elections. A questioner reminded him that the Summit Conference had linked German reunification with a European Security Treaty. That being so, would the United States, he was asked, be ready to link the two together again? This caught the President in doubt about what had been said in the Summit Conference communique. He thought it had treated German unification as a separate issue. If it didn't, he said, he was slightly mistaken.

It may be well to recall just what did happen at the Summit Meeting. The Heads of State instructed their Foreign Ministers to negotiate a European Security Treaty, also a treaty for the limitation, control and inspection of arms in Europe. The communique then said that the Heads of State had agreed - and I quote - "that the settlement of the German question and reunification of Germany by means of free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security."

This can be described as a dangerously ambiguous statement. The Russians say that since the security treaties were not negotiated, they were released from the pledge to unite Germany through free elections. Mr. Dulles says simply that the pledge was repudiated. Mr. Eisenhower repeated this yesterday.

Anyhow, Mr. Eisenhower indicated that he is not now prepared to link a discussion of German unification with talks on European security. Neither is Dr. Adenauer. Presumably the Scandinavians in NATO are. Certainly the British are. They take the line that they will always talk with the other side. And with an election coming up, Prime Minister Macmillan is not likely to say anything else. This is not to suggest that Western unity is impossible. It only is a reminder that it will take work and forbearance to produce and maintain it.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan.

Word for Today

In a struggle where much is uncertain, one thing is certain: Khrushchev will do everything within his power to exploit any disunity that exists in the Allied camp. Through discussion...and forebearance... the Western powers must unite on policy. "There is always victory," Publilius Syrus said, "where there is unity. Discord destroys."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia today appealed to the Western powers to be "realistic" in dealing with its proposals on Berlin. The official news agency Tass charged that by keeping its troops in West Berlin the United States was creating "a threat to peace." Tass noted President Eisenhower's statement yesterday that the Western powers have a right and a duty to stay in West Berlin to preserve its freedom. Tass said the occupation rights of the Western powers had "long ago ceased to exist." And it claimed that no threat to the freedom of West Berlin exists, either from Russia or from the East German regime. The Soviet news agency again derided the idea of a big power conference on German reunification. That is a question, it said, to be settled by the two German states. Tonight...in a telephone interview with a West German newspaper...Khrushchev said there are some "hotheads" who talk of forcing their way into West Berlin by means of tanks. He suggested that this might mean war...but added that he did not think the West wanted to "pick" a war on the Berlin issue.

The United Nations General Assembly today debated the Hungarian question. American Ambassador Lodge charged that a "reign of terror," directed by Moscow, still exists in Hungary...and he called on the Assembly to pass a new resolution directing Russia and its puppet regime in Hungary "to desist from repressive measures against the Hungarian people." In reply, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin called the Hungarian issue "a cold war concoction." Nothing the United Nations does on the subject, he said, will make any difference.

The rebel radio in Cuba announces what may be the first step in setting up a provisional government. It reports the arrival in what it calls "free Cuba" of Dr. Manuel Urruthia, a man Fidel Castro has referred to as his choice for provisional president. Urruthia has been in exile in this country and in Venezuela

The Afro-Asian economic conference in Cairo decided today to set up a permanent organization for cooperation in the field of trade. The organization would collect, classify and publish information on the economic situation in every Afro-Asian country. It would promote arbitration in commercial disputes... and work for the reduction and elimination of customs barriers.

The United States District Court in Montgomery, Alabama today ordered a state judge...and five county officials...to produce the voting records requested of them by the federal Civil Rights Commission. The Alabama officials had refused to produce the records on grounds that they had been impounded by state authorities. They also refused to testify.

The International Teamsters Union today was ordered to comply with the "clean up" recommendations made by the court-appointed board of monitors. The order was issued in Washington by Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts. It was Letts who...a year ago...set up the board of monitors after a group of rank-and-file members filed suit, challenging the election of James Hoffa as union president. They charged that the election of Hoffa was "rigged." Judge Letts said today that Hoffa and his subordinates had tried to frustrate the monitors in their effort to clean house...and he barred the union from holding another convention in March. The original court order stipulated that the life of the board of monitors would automatically expire when another union convention was held. Letts has now ruled that the monitors---not the union---will set the date for the next convention, subject to approval ty the court. And he warned of a new legal crackdown if the union fails to comply. Hoffa says that Letts' order will be appealed "all the way."

Secretary of Labor Mitchell said today that employees of local and state governments "deserve a better fate" than to be organized by Hoffa. Hoffa said yesterday that the teamsters union would try to organize these workers, including police and firemen. The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees...affiliated with the A.F.L.-C.I.O....served notice today that it would fight any attempt by the teamsters to infringe on its jurisdiction.

Here in New York City, all major newspapers have suspended publication due to the strike of deliverymen who are demanding higher pay. Yesterday, papers were published...with distribution limited to copies sold at the newspaper plants. Last night, printers at the New York Daily News refused to cross the deliveryen's picket line. And today other papers, including the Times, announced discontinuance of publication for the duration of the strike. Many of the newspaper workers were furloughed without pay. Because of the walkout, New York radio and television stations have expanded their news schedules.

Two views are to be encountered in Washington and other Western capitals about the meaning of Khrushchev's demand that the Western Powers get out of Berlin. One is that he wants nothing more than he says, a surgical operation in Berlin to be rid of what he regards as a "cancer." Once rid of Western forces, he can consolidate the position of the East German Government and thereby greatly strengthen his own empire. Those who hold this view are sure that the only possible answer to Khrushchev is to say No, and sit tight.

The other view is that Khrushchev is trying to thaw out the Western position on Germany and European security, keep Germany from getting nuclear weapons, produce some Western disengagement in Central Europe, and exploit the almost infinite possibilities of Western disunity. Those who hold this view are sure that the West must come up with counter-proposals so as to avoid a hopelessly negative policy. They also want to start with a "No" on Berlin, but would go on to make offers that would put Khrushchev on the defensive.

President Eisenhower's news conference yesterday was eagerly awaited for any hint on which of these positions the United States would take at next week's NATO meeting in Paris. He said nothing to indicate that he favored anything beyond a straight rejection of the Soviet proposal.

One of the tasks of the NATO Foreign Ministers next week will be to decide what they themselves think that Khrushchev is after. If they should agree that he is not trying to re-open broader German and European questions, then NATO can be expected to join as a chorus in saying No. But if some Ministers think Khrushchev wants to talk about more than Berlin they will want to give him a chance to do so. However, the differences over possible Western proposals are much too deep for this NATO meeting to be expected to formulate any counter-proposals.

It may even be difficult to get all the NATO countries to unite on how the Berlin proposals should be rejected. Some will want it done in a spirit of confident defiance. Others will want moderation. The views of Dr. Adenauer, for example, willnot be the same as those of the representatives of Norway and Denmark, or of Britain. The German Chancellor has said that no further negotiations should be held with the Soviet Union on Germany and Europe before Khrushchev withdraws the Berlin proposals. Last Week British Foreign Secretary Lloyd said that the Berlin question should be handled in context with German unity and European security problems. He went on to suggest three conditions. One was to keep the forces of Western Powers in Germany where they are, if Germany is reunified, that is, not to station any of them on the German-Polish border. This would be a concession to the Kremlin. Then he insisted on safeguards against surprise attack in Central Europe and a thinning-out of all military forces in this region; in other words, partial disengagement.

President Eisenhower yesterday repeated Secretary Dulles oft-made charge that the Russians repudiated a pledge at the Summit Meeting in 1955 to unite Germany through free elections. A questioner reminded him that the Summit Conference had linked German reunification with a European Security Treaty. That being so, would the United States, he was asked, be ready to link the two together again? This caught the President in doubt about what had been said in the Summit Conference communique. He thought it had treated German unification as a separate issue. If it didn't, he said, he was slightly mistaken.

It may be well to recall just what did happen at the Summit Meeting. The Heads of State instructed their Foreign Ministers to negotiate a European Security Treaty, also a treaty for the limitation, control and inspection of arms in Europe. The communique then said that the Heads of State had agreed - and I quote - "that the settlement of the German question and reunification of Germany by means of free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security."

This can be described as a dangerously ambiguous statement. The Russians say that since the security treaties were not negotiated, they were released from the pledge to unite Germany through free elections. Mr. Dulles says simply that the pledge was repudiated. Mr. Eisenhower repeated this yesterday.

Anyhow, Mr. Eisenhower indicated that he is not now prepared to link a discussion of German unification with talks on European security. Neither is Dr. Adenauer. Presumably the Scandinavians in NATO are. Certainly the British are. They take the line that they will always talk with the other side. And with an election coming up, Prime Minister Macmillan is not likely to say anything else. This is not to suggest that Western unity is impossible. It only is a reminder that it will take work and forbearance to produce and maintain it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In a struggle where much is uncertain, one thing is certain: Khrushchev will do everything within his power to exploit any disunity that exists in the Allied camp. Through discussion...and forebearance...the Western powers must unite on policy. "There is always victory," Publilius Syrus said, "where there is unity. Discord destroys."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Dec. 12, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles took off for Paris this afternoon after a 45-minute talk with the President. In Paris, Mr. Dulles will discuss the Berlin situation with the foreign ministers of West Germany, Britain, and France...and then stay for the annual NATO Council meeting that starts on Tuesday. After seeing the President, Dulles said that Soviet leaders in relation to Berlin, are seeking to repudiate "a whole series of agreements." This disregard for agreements, he said, is a "discouraging aspect" of the international situation...an impossible foundation on which to build world order. But he was convinced that if the Western powers stand firm and united, peace will prevail. Dulles has been in Walter Reed Hospital for the past week because of an inflammation of the intestine. He told reporters...on leaving the hospital...that he felt fine. "I am ready," he said, "for the job ahead." It was noted, however, that he is being accompanied to Paris by Colonel Benjamin Sullivan, an Army physician.

The West German ambassador to the United States...Wilhelm Grewe... said today that acceptance of Khrushchev's proposal (to make West Berlin a so-called "free city") would be "tantamount to the final dismemberment of Germany." Reunification, he said, is the only answer to the "monstrosity" of the Berlin situation.

The mayor of West Berlin...Willy Brandt...conferred with Chancellor Adenauer today, and reports from Bonn say that they reconciled their personal differences. An official communique says that they had a frank discussion and that Adenauer briefed the mayor on the position West Germany will take at the Paris meeting. That "position", Brandt said later, is that the Berlin question should not be "mixed up" with other German problems and that Khrushchev should be given a flat "no".

The United Nations General Assembly today approved a new resolution directing Russia "to desist from repressive measures against the Hungarian people." The vote was 54 to 10, with 15 abstentions. Most of the abstaining countries belonged to the neutralist Afro-Asian bloc. Under the resolution, Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand was named to serve as United Nations "watchdog" over the Hungarian situation. He is empowered in this capacity to report directly to member countries...or to the General Assembly...on developments in Hungary. The resolution also denounces the execution of former Premier Nagy, General Maleter, and other leaders of the Hungarian revolt. The only major question remaining before the General Assembly before adjournment is the Algerian problem. Seventeen Asian and African countries have presented a resolution in the Political Committee, calling for recognition of Algeria's "right to independence."

Army rule in Algeria was ended today by French Premier Charles DeGaulle. General Salan, who assumed full civil and military powers after the May 13th uprising, has been named inspector-general of national defense, a position attached to the prime minister's office in Paris. Salan is succeeded as delegate-general in Algeria by a civilian, Paul De Louvrier. LOU-VREE-AY De Louvrier is a financial expert with a reputation for hard work. The appointments were announced by Information Minister Jacques Soustelle after a meeting of the French cabinet.

Further progress was made today in the Geneva conference on ending nuclear weapons tests. Agreement was reached on Article Three of a draft treaty...but as in the case of the two previous articles details are not clearly defined. Article Three deals with the component parts of a control organization. At the conference on prevention of surprise attack, Russia today surprised the West by submitting a proposal on control posts and air inspection. The proposal is still being translated, but a Communist source calls the plan "purely technical". Previous Soviet proposals have been criticized as "too political".

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors met in Warsaw today for the twelfth time. As usual, no announcement was made after the meeting---except that they agreed to confer again in four weeks. The intermittent talks began in September at the height of the crisis in the Formosa Strait.

A group of Russian educators visiting this country held a news conference today in Washington. They praised the American desire "to provide better education for a larger number of children." But they thought that high school teaching of science and mathematics was "inadequate". They saw no need to effect "basic changes" in Russian education as a result of what they had seen.

[Republican Senator Case of New Jersey predicted today that President Eisenhower will ask Congress to pass new civil rights legislation. Case made the prediction after a talk with the President. He did not say...specifically...what Mr. Eisenhower might recommend.]

The Federal Reserve Board tonight reported an appreciable increase in industrial production in November.

And here in New York, a Federal judge has lifted a temporary injunction, which prohibited the Airline Pilots Association from striking against American Airlines. So far, however, no walkout against the airline has been scheduled.

Negotiations were resumed today in the deliverymen's strike which has closed down New York City's major newspapers. But no progress is reported.

The first All-African Peoples Conference is running an extra day. For a direct report on that meeting, we switch to my colleague, Charles Collingwood, in Accra.

[Tape runs 5:10
Ends on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Charles Collingwood, reporting from Accra Ghana on the first All-African Peoples Conference.

This is Ed. Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause* But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The tide is moving fast in Africa toward independence. Sometimes we forget our own revolutionary origin. One hundred and ten years ago, in the House of Representatives, Abraham Lincoln said, "Any people anywhere, being inclined and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing government and form a new one that suits them better."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, December 12, 1958

MURROW: The first all-African Peoples conference is running an extra day. For direct report on that meeting we switch to my colleague Charles Collingwood in Accra.

COLLINGWOOD: It is not surprising that the delegates to the all-African Peoples Conference were not able to finish their sessions today as they had originally planned. They had a lot to talk about. They had come from all over Africa. The leaders of the Independence Movements which operate in every African country with varying degrees of success from embattled Algeria to the tip of South Africa. Freedom Fighters!, they call themselves and (indistinct) in Accra say, Welcome Freedom Fighters. Many of these people have never met each other before. So difficult are communications in Africa both for geographical and political reasons. Some of them came to Accra at considerable personal risk. There is a man from South Africa who,is one of the defendants in the treason trial there and must have skipped bail to come. The delegates from Portuguese Angola wan't even give his right name and had his speech read for him by the chairman. The Portuguese are very harsh with those who challenge their rule. There are delegates from Kenya here who live outside their country because they are sure they'd be detained if they would go back. There's a man from one of the French West African territories who has almost openly climbed (indistinct) on. These people have much to talk about. Not only to concert a common policy and profess a common philosophy but in the simple business of making friendships,exchanging experience, learning about each other's problems and discussing tactics. In fact, the most important accomplishment of this All-African Conference is that it was held at all. It was able to bring so many together from so far. Anyone who has ever traveled in Africa, knows how hard it is even with all the modern apparatus of travel agencies, airlines and the rest to get from one place to another. For most of these people, it was even more difficult. They got here and they talked. There will be a lot of flamboyant resolutions coming out of this conference which won't mean a great deal more than most of the resolutions which come out of most conferences. The important thing is the conference itself. All these people coming together and in order not to lose this sense of contact that they have established theyare setting up a permanent organization here in Accra to be a central liason point for all the struggles for independence which are being unfolded throughout Africa. There is also talk of establishing a so-called freedom fund through which the better healed African countries will contribute to the efforts toward independence of the others. These will be first steps toward what is hoped to approve an acceleration of what is sometimes called here .. the decolonialization of Africa. There will be much language in the resolutions of the conference as there has been in the speeches which will sound spalling to Western ears. I don't mean for stylistic reasons, although there's been much to marvel at there. Because the (indistinct) seem excited and inflamatory with more than one phrase borrowed from the (indistinct) of Marxism but you have to look at these things in their context and the fact is that for a conference of such kind, of men drunk with the idea and the prospect of freedom, the tone has been remarkably moderate. Themasters of the conference and those who have exercised the greatest way of upon it are responsible men committed to work in the present phase by constitutional and political means. Most of them recognize the necessity for ties with the West, they just don't want to be ruled by the West. Manymof them look to the U. S. for both help and inspiration. One gets the strong impression that much of the future orientation of Africa is going to depend upon the policy which we in the United States call follow toward the newly independent states of Africa. Many of the soberer and more responsible personalities here think rightly or wrongly that American policy is determined in its last analysis by our relations with the colonial powers themselves. Principally, Britain and France. They'll take Americans aside and urge with great earnestness that if Africa is to remain oriented toward the West, we must develop and persue and a new dependent policy toward the newly independent countries as they emerge. They all (indistinct) with gratitude and appreciation the prompt American recognition of Guinea as the kind of thing that they think we ought to do if it's followed up by economic and technical help as well. But behind this moderation, there is a visible and audible sense of desperation as well. Things are moving fast in Africa. They could well move faster than we would like. There is, one suspects, not a great deal of time left. And if the pull of Western influence is not maintained and strengthened there are plenty of people at this conference and throughout Africa who stand ready to offer an alternative influence. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

ED TRANS/rc

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles took off for Paris this afternoon after a 45-minute talk with the President. In Paris, Mr. Dulles will discuss the Berlin situation with the foreign ministers of West Germany, Britain, and France...and then stay for the annual NATO Council meeting that starts on Tuesday. After seeing the President, Dulles said that Soviet leaders in relation to Berlin, are seeking to repudiate "a whole series of agreements." This disregard for agreements, he said, is a "discouraging aspect" of the international situation...an impossible foundation onwhich to build world order. But he was convinced that if the Western powers stand firm and united, peace will prevail. Dulles has been in Walter Redd Hospital for the past week because of an inflamation of the intestine. He told reporters...on leaving the hospital...that he felt fine. "I am ready," he said, "for the job ahead." It was noted, however, that he is being accompanied to Paris By Colonel Benjamin Sullivan, an Army physician.

The West German ambassador to the United States...Wilhelm Grewe... said today that acceptance of Khrushchev's proposal (to make West Berlin a so-called "free city") would be "tantamount to the final dismemberment of Germany." Reunification, he said, is the only answer to the "monstrosity" of the Berlin situation.

The mayor of West Berlin...Willy Brandt...conferred with Chancellor Adenauer today, and reports from Bonn say that they reconciled their personal differences. An official communique says that they had a frank discussion and that Adenauer briefed the mayor on the position West Germany will take at the Paris meeting. That "position," Brandt said later, is that the Berlin question should not be "mixed up" with other German problems and that Khrushchev should be given a flat "no."

The United Nations General Assembly today approved a new resolution directing Russia "to desist from repressive measures against the Hungarian people." The vote was 54 to 10, with 15 abstentions. Most of the abstaining countries belonged to the neutralist Afro-Asian bloc. Under the resolution, Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand was named to serve as United Nations "watchdog" over the Hungarian situation. He is empowered in this capacity to report directly to member countries...or to the General Assembly...on developments in Hungary. The resolution also denounces the execution of former Premier Nagy, General Maleter, and other leaders of the Hungarian revolt. The only major question remaining before the General Assembly before adjournment is the Algerian problem. Seventeen Asian and African countries have presented a resolution in the Political Committee, calling for recognition of Algeria's "right to independence."

Army rule in Algeria was ended today by French Premier Charles DeGaulle. General Salan, who assumed full civil and military powers after the May 13th uprising, has been named inspector-general of national defense, a position attached to the prime minister's office Paris. Salan is succeeded as delegate-general in Algeria by a civilian, Paul De Louvrier. DeLouvrier is a financial expert with a reputation for hard work. The appointments were announced by Information Minister Jacques Soustelle after a meeting of the French cabinet.

Further progress was made today in the Geneva conference on ending nuclear weapons tests. Agreement was reached on Article Three of a draft treaty... but as in the case of the two previous articles, details are not clearly defined. Article Three deals with the component parts of a control organization. At the conference on prevention of surprise attack, Russia today surprised the West by submitting a proposal on control posts and air inspection. The proposal is still being translated, but a Communist source calls the plan "purely technical." Previous Soviet proposals have been criticized as "too political."

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors met in Moscow today

for the twelfth time. As usual, no announcement was made after the meeting---except that they agreed to confer again in four weeks. The intermittent talks began in September at the height of the crisis in the Formosa Strait.

A group of Russian educators visiting this country held a news conference today in Washington. They praised the American desire "to provide better education of a larger number of children." But they thought that high school teaching of science and mathematics was "inadequate." They saw no need to effect "basic changes" on Russian education as a result of what they had seen.

Republican Senator Case of New Jersey predicted today that President Eisenhower will ask Congress to pass new civil rights legislation. Case made the prediction after a talk with the President. He did not say...specifically...what Mr. Eisenhower might recommend.

The Federal Reserve Board tonight reported an appreciable increase in industrial production in November.

And here in New York, a Federal judge has lifted a temporary injunction, which prohibited the Airline Pilots Association from striking against American Airlines. So far, however, no walkout against the airline has been scheduled.

Negotiations were resumed today in the deliverymen's strike which has closed down New York City's major newspapers. But no progress is reported.

The first All-African Peoples Conference is running an extra day. For a direct report on that meeting, we switch to my colleague, Charles Collingwood in Accra.

COLLINGWOOD: It is not surprising that the delegates to the All-African Peoples Conference were not able to finish their sessions today as they had originally planned. They had a lot to talk about. They had come from all over Africa. The leaders of the Independence movements which operate in every African country with varying degrees of success from embattled Algeria to the tip of South Africa.

Freedom Fighters!, they call themselves and in Accra say, Welcome Freedom Fighters. Many of these people have never met each other before. So difficult are communications in Africa both for geographical and political reasons. Some of them came to Accra at considerable personal risk. There is a man from South Africa, who is one of the defendants in the treason trial there and must have skipped bail to come. The delegates from Portuguese Angola won't even give his right name and had his speech read for him by the chairman. The Portuguese are very harsh with those who challenge their rule. There are delegates from Kenya here who live outside their country because they are sure they'd be detained if they would go back. There's a man from one of the French West African territories who almost openly climed (indistinct) on. These people have much to talk about. Not only to concert a common policy and profess a common philosophy, but in the simple business of making friendships, exchanging experience, learning about each other's problems and discussing tactics. In fact, the most impor/tant accomplishment of this All-African Conference is that it was held at all. It was able to bring so many together from so far. Anyone who has ever traveled in Africa, knows how hard it is even with all the modern apparatus of travel agencies, airlines and the rest to get from one place to another. For most of these people, it was even more difficult. They got here and they talked. There will be a lot of flamboyant resolutions coming out of this conference which won't mean a great deal more than most of the resolutions which come out of most conferences. The important thing is the conference itself. All these people coming together and in order not to lose this sense of contact that they have established, they are setting up a permanent organization here in Accra to be a central liaison point for all the struggles for independence which are being unfolded throughout Africa. There is also talk of establishing a so-called freedom fund through which the better heeled African countries will contribute to the efforts toward independence of the others. These will be first steps toward what is hoped to improve an acceleration of what is sometimes called here...the decolonialization of Africa. There will be much language in the resolutions of the conference as there has been in the speeches which will sound apalling to Western ears. I don't mean for stylistic reasons, although there's been much to marvel at there. Because the (indistinct) seem excited and inflamatory with more than one phrase borrowed from the (indistinct) of Marxism but you have to look at these things in their context and the fact is that for a conference of such kind, of men drunk with the idea and the prospect of freedom, the tone has been remarkably moderate. The meeters of the conference and those who have exercised the greatest way upon it are responsible men committed to work in the present phase by constitutional and political means. Most of them recognize the necessity for ties with the West, they just don't want to be ruled by the West. Many of them look to the United States for both help and inspiration. One gets the strong impression that much of the future orientation of Africa is going to depend upon thepolicy which we in the United States will follow toward the newly independent states of Africa. Many of the soberer and more responsible personalities here think rightly or wrongly that American policy is determined in its last analysis by our relations with the colonial powers themselves. Principally, Britain and France. They'll take Americans aside and urge with great earnestness that if Africa is to remain oriented toward the West, we must develop and pursue a new independent policy toward the newly independent countries as they emerge. They all (indistinct) with gratitude and appreciation the prompt American recognition of Guinea as the kind of thing that they think we ought to do if it's followed up by economic and technical help as well. But behind this moderation, there is a visible and audible sense of desperation as well. Things are moving fast in Africa. They could well move faster than we would like. There is, one suspects,. not a great deal of time left. And if the pull of Western influence is not maintained and strengthened there are plenty of people at this conference and throughout Africa who stand ready to offer an alternative influence. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Charles Collingwood, reporting from Accra, Ghana on the first All-African Peoples Conference.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The tide is moving fast in Africa toward independence. Sometimes we forget our own revolutionary origin. One hundred and ten years ago, in the House of Representatives, Abraham Lincoln said, "Any people anywhere, being inclined and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing government and form a new one that suits them better."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 15, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in Paris today with French Premier Charles DeGaulle. An American spokesman said the meeting...that lasted an hour and a half...was cordial. He said that DeGaulle and Dulles agreed on the necessity of showing "great firmness" in the Berlin situation...and that they discussed DeGaulle's demand for closer coordination among the United States, Britain and France. According to reliable sources, they also discussed the installation of intermediate range ballistic missile bases on French soil. (DeGaulle has not yet agreed that they shall be installed). And a French source says DeGaulle wanted to know why the United States had abstained in the United Nations vote to consider the Algerian question, instead of voting against consideration.

—7

Mr. Dulles did not attend a diplomatic dinner tonight. But he is described as doing well after last week's illness. Tomorrow, he will join the foreign ministers of the other 14 NATO countries in their annual meeting. The secretary-general of NATO, Paul-Henri Spaak, said today that the Berlin question undoubtedly will dominate the talks...which will last for three days.

The party leaders of East Germany and Poland today issued a communique, climaxing a six-day meeting in Warsaw. The communique parrots Khrushchev's demand for an end to the four-power occupation of Berlin. It claims that the "main danger" to peace is West Germany's membership in NATO...and it says that any attack on the territory of East Germany, or Poland, will meet with "firm reprisal" by all signatories of the Warsaw Pact. The communique... signed by Gomulka of Poland and Ulbright of East Germany...also promises "an uncompromising battle against revisionism."

The central committee of the Soviet Communist Party met today in Moscow. The Moscow radio says Premier Khrushchev spoke on the development of Soviet agriculture. He is also said to have renewed his attack on the "anti-party group." This is the group of former Soviet leaders, including Bulganin, Malenkov and Molotov, who have fallen in disgrace.

[Russia has protested to the United States over what it calls the "unprovoked shooting" by American military aircraft of a Soviet fighter plane near Latvia. Neither the United States Air Force, nor the State Department, had knowledge of the incident.]

In Vatican City, Pope John said today that persecutions had "unhappily opened the way" to a schism in the Catholic Church in Communist China. The schism was threatened, he said, by priests who...through oppression or enticement...had taken over the places of sacred pastors by unlawful means. The Pope spoke on the occasion of the elevation to the College of Cardinals of 23 prelates of the Church. Among those elevated to the sacred college were Archbishop John O'Hara of Philadelphia and Archbishop Richard Cushing of Boston.

President Eisenhower today outlined his new legislative program with Republican congressional leaders. Vice President Nixon also attended the White House meeting. Senator Bridges of New Hampshire said afterward that the Administration was aiming at a balanced budget in the neighborhood of 80-billion dollars. That would be an increase of about 800-million dollars over this year's budget. But it was emphasized by those who attended today's meeting that...so far...no figures are final.

A group of House Democrats met today to plan strategy for cutting down the control of the House Rules Committee over new legislation. They want to limit to 21 days the time the rules committee can hold up a bill approved by other committees. Representative Frank Thompson of New Jersey... spokesman for the group...told reporters afterward that although there is considerable sentiment in favor of the change, the success of the campaign is dependent on the approval of House Speaker Sam Rayburn. Thompson said, "This is absolutely not a revolt against the leadership."

Here in New York, the strike of deliverymen against the major daily newspapers has gone through its sixth day. FURTHER Negotiations (WILL BE HELD TOMORROW) ~~are in progress~~, but prospects for an early settlement are described as "not bright."

[~~The major New York papers are still not publishing.~~]

United States Assistant Secretary of State, William Rountree, arrived in Iraq today on his tour of the Middle East. At the Baghdad airport, a crowd of about a thousand demonstrators shouted to him to "go home." He was protected by Iraqi troops. Yesterday, Rountree had a three-hour talk with President Nasser in Cairo. He called the meeting "very useful".

The United Arab Republic today signed a three-year trade agreement with Red China. The pact calls for an annual exchange of goods valued at 84-million dollars.

The annual NATO meeting...that starts tomorrow in Paris...will seek military solidarity. But Western Europe also is endangered by a lack of economic solidarity. I have asked my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, to spell out the economic problem. And since Britain is much involved in this, we go to London for his report.

(Tape runs 5:10
Ends on cue, "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, reporting on the highly technical and important question of West European trade.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

INSERT

Late tonight it was announced in Paris that both Britain and France have produced compromise plans - no details were given. A final decision has been postponed until January 15th, but the six-nation common market will go into effect as scheduled on January 1st.

Word for Today

Western Europe is threatened with a trade war, due to a bad relationship between two organizations founded with the best of economic motives. Something Sir Winston Churchill said almost ten years ago on this subject of unity would still seem to hold true. "If we are to achieve our supreme reward," he said, "we must lay aside every impediment and conquor ourselves."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, December 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: The Annual NATO meeting that starts tomorrow in Paris will seek military solidarity, but Western Europe also is endangered by lack of economic solidarity. I have asked my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, to spell out the economic problem and since Britain is much involved in this, we go to London for his report.

KENDRICK: London's Financial Times, a journal not given to sensationalism reported this morning that Europe is forced on the brink of a trade war. The reason is the European common market which goes into effect January 1st. With the new year, six European nations, the three (indistinct) countries, France, West Germany and Italy add another step toward economic integration will reduce their tariffs to one another by 10% and will raise their import quotas to one another. Britain and ten other countries are not in the common market, though like the other six they are all members of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation. Both the OEEC and the common market are outgrowths of the quest for European political and economic unity under the auspices of the Council of Europe and the common market itself is the direct descendant of the European Coal and Steel Community made up of the same six nations. This island kingdom which lives by and on trade also happens to be the capital of a worldwide community to which it is bound by what used to be called empire preference and is now called commonwealth preference. Goods from other commonwealth countries like India and New Zealand arrive in this country and goods from Britain are sent to the commonwealth without tariff restrictions. Now, this is not really free trade. The British, in fact, admit that they have a system which discriminates against non-commonwealth countries. But their European trade is only a fraction of their commonwealth trade. They do not want to give up the greater for the smaller and they say they do not believe the answer to discrimination lies in more discrimination. This is why Britain has taken th e lead among the 11 non-members against the European common market. The British argument is that the common market, while it may further the unity of six nations, in a larger picture is really a move to European disunity by setting up barriers around these six against the other 11. For more than a year, the British have tried to stave off the common market by proposing instead a European free trade area embracing all 17 OEEC nations. In the free trade area, all the countries with lower tariffs and raised quotas as against one another but would have their own separate tariff and quota relations with the rest of the world. Britain has thus been accused of trying to gain the benefits of the common market without any of the responsibilities. This European intra-mural conflict came to a head when the common market countries broke off further negotiations a few weeks ago and decided no free trade area. They agreed however, that some minimum benefits which go into effect January 1st for themselves could be extended to the other eleven nations as an interim measure. The one-day meeting of the OEEC Council in Paris today, which incidentally was headed by Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, Derek Heckert Amory has been trying to find a compromise and there is the probability of renewed negotiations not for a free trade area but for some other form of multi-lateral association between the 6 and the 11. As a last resort, the British in Paris today offered to open up their home markets to the commonmarkets industrial goods in return for equal privileges. But if no compromise is arrived at, what the British call discrimination against them and the European markets goes into effect January 1st. It lies not so much in the field of tariffs as in that of quotas. The favorite British example is automobiles. France is to allow a much increased quota of German and Italian cars but a smaller increased quota of British cars. Whereupon the British forgetting their argument that the answer to discrimination is not more discrimination, threatened to impose quotas on French wines perfumes and other goods. For in British eyes, it is France that is the villian of the peace. The cross channel the Entente Cordial seems in abeyance tonight as the British charged the French with fomenting European disunity and trying to protect their high priced industry against normal competition. So far as OEEC is concerned, the British accuse the French of failing to honor their committment to it by not liberalizing their general quota system enough. The British say, France's obligations to 17 nation Europe come before her obligations to six nation Europe. Theywarn of the political and even military deterioration that might result at a time when all Western Europe should be unified against a common threat from outside. More editorials entitled Britain and Europe have been printed here in the past week and from ~~xxxx~~ ~~xxxx~~ months before. They all say the same thing, that Western solidarity in such matters as Berlin is imperiled by lack of Western solidarity ~~xx~~ in such matters as motor cars and (indistinct.) Now back to ~~Mr~~ Murrow in New York.

ED TRANS/BS

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in Paris today with French Premier Charles DeGaulle. An American spokesman said the meeting...that lasted an hour a a half ...was cordial. He said the DeGaulle and Dulles agreed on the necessity of showing "great firmness" in the Berlin situation...and that they discussed DeGaulle's demand for closer coordination among the United States, Britain and France. According to reliable sources, they also discussed the installation of intermediate range ballistic missile bases on French soil. (DeGaulle has not yet agreed that they shall be installed.) And a French source says DeGaulle wanted to know why the United States had abstained in the United Nations vote to consider the Algerian question, instead of voting against consideration.

Mr. Dulles did not attend a diplomatic dinner tonight. But he is described as doing well after last week's illness. Tomorrow, he will join the foreign ministers of the other 14 NATO countries in their annual meeting. The secretary-general of NATO, Paul-Henri Spaak, said today that the Berlin question undoubtedly will dominate the talks...which will last for three days.

The party leaders of East Germany and Poland today issued a communique, climaxing a six-day meeting in Warsaw. The communique parrots Khrushchev's demand for an end to the four-power occupation of Berlin. It claims that the "main danger" to peace is West Germany's member ship in NATO...and it says that any attack on the territory of East Germany, or Poland, will meet with "firm reprisal" by all signatories of the Warsaw Pact. The communique... signed by Gomulka of Poland and Ulbricht of East Germany...also promises "an uncompromising battle bgainst revisionism."

The central committee of the Soviet Communist Party met today in Moscow. The Moscow radio says Premier Khrushchev spoke on the development of Soviet agriculture. Ee is also said to have renewed his attack on the "anti-party group." This is the group of former Soviet leaders, including Bulganin, Malenkov and Molotov, who have fallen in disgrace.

Russia has protested to the United States over what it calls the "unprovoked shooting" by American military aircraft of a Soviet fighter plane near Latvia. Neither the United States Air Force, nor the State Department, had knowledge of the incident.

In Vatican City, Pope John said today that persecutions had "unhappily opened the way" to a schism in the Catholic Church in Communist China. The schism was threatened, he said, by priests who...through oppression or enticement...had taken over the places of sacred pastors by unlawful means. The Pope spoke on the occasion of the elevation to the College of Cardinals of 23 prelates of the Church. Among those elevated to the sacred college were Arehbishop John O'Hara of Philadelphia and Archbishop Richard Chushingof Boston.

President Eisenhower today outlined his new legislative program with Republican congressional leaders. Vice President Nixon also attended the White House meeting. Senator Bridges of New Hampshire said afterward that the Administration was aiming at a balanced budget in the neighborhood of 80-billion dollars. That would be an increase of about 800-million dollars over this year's budget. But it was emphasized by those who attended today's meeting that...so far..no figures are final.

A group of House Democrats met today to plan strategy for cutting down the control of the House Rules Committee over new legislation. They want to limit to 21 days the time the rules committee can hold up a bill approved by other committees. Representative Frank Thompson of New Jersey... spokesman for the group...told reporters afterward that although there is considerable sentiment in favor of the change, the success of the campaign is dependent on the approval of House Speaker Sam Rayburn. Thompson said, "This is absolutely not a revolt against the leadership."

Here in New York, the strike of deliverymen against the major daily newspapers has gone through its sixth day. Further negotiations will be held tomorrow, but prospects for an early settlement are described as "not bright."

United States Assistant Secretary of State, William Rountree, arrived in Iraq today on his tour of the Middle East. At the Baghdad airport, a crowd of about a thousand demonstrators shouted to him to "go home." He was protected by Iraqi troops. Yesterday, Rountree had a three-hour talk with President Nasser in Cairo. He called the meeting "very useful."

The United Arab Republic today signed a three-year trade agreement with Red China. The pact calls for an annual exchange of goods valued at 84-million dollars.

The annual NATO meeting...that starts tomorrow in Paris...will seek military solidarity. But Western Europe also is endangered by a lack of economic solidarity. I have asked my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, to spell out the economic problem. And since Britain is much involved in this, we go to London for his report.

KENDRICK: London's Financial Times, a journal not given to sensationalism reported this morning that Europe is forced on the brink of a trade war. The reason is the European common market which goes into effect January 1st. With the new year, six European nations, the three (indistinct) countries, France, West Germany and Italy add another step toward economic integration will reduce their tariffs to one another by 10% and will raise their import quotas to one another. Britain and ten other countries are not in the common market, though like the other six they are all members of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation. Both the OEEC and the common market are outgrowths of the quest for European political and economic unity under the auspices of the Council of Europe and the common market are outgrowths of the quest for European political and economic unity under the auspices of the Council of Europe and the common market itself is the direct descendant of the European Coal and Steel Community made up of the same six nations. This island kingdom which lives by and on trade also happens to be the capital of a worldwide community to which it is bound by what used to be called empire preference and is now called commonwealth preference. Goods from other commonwealth countries like India and New Zealand arrive in this country and goods from Britain are sent to the commonwealth without tariff restrictions. Now, this is not really free trade. The British, in fact, admit that they have a system which discriminates against non-commonwealth countries. But their European trade is only a fraction of their commonwealth trade. They do not want to give up the greater for the smaller and they say they do not believe the answer to discrimination lies in more discrimination. This is why Britain has taken the lead among the 11 non-members against the European common market. The British argument is that the common market, while it may further the unity of six nations, in a larger picture, is really a move to European disunity by setting up barriers around those six against the other 11. for more than a year, the British have tried to stave off the common market by proposing instead a European free trade area embracing all 17 OEEC nations. In the free trade area, all the countries with lower tariffs and raised quotas as against one another but would have their own separate tariff and quota relations with the rest of the world. Britain has thus been accused of trying to gain the benefits of the common market without any of the responsibilities. This European intra-mural conflict came to a head when the common market countries broke off further negotiations a few weeks ago and decided no free trade area. They agreed however, that some minimum benefits which go into effect January 1st for themselves could be extended to the other eleven nations as an interim measure. The one-day meeting of the OEEC Council in Paris today, which incidentally was headed by Britain's chancellor of the Exchecquer, Derek Heathcoat Amory has been trying to find a compromise and there is the probability of renewed negotiations not for a free trade area but for some other form of multi-lateral association between the 6 and the 11. As a last resort, the British in Paris today offered to open up their home markets to the commonmarkets industrial goods in return for equal privileges. But if no compromise is arrived at, what the British call discrimination against them and the European markets goes into effect January 1st. It lies not so much in the field of tariffs as in that of quotas. The favorite British example is automobiles. France is to allow a much increased quota of German and Italian cars but a smaller increased quota of British cars. Whereupon the British forgetting their argument that the answer to discrimination is not more discrimination, threatened to impose quotas on French wines, perfumes and other goods. For in British eyes, it is France that is the villain of the peace. The cross channel the Entente Cordial seems in abeyance tonight as the British charged the French with formenting European disunity and trying to protect their high priced industry against normal competition. So far as OEEC is concerned, the British accuse the French of failing to honor their commitment to it by not liberalizing their general quota system enough. The British say, France's obligations to 17 nation Europe come before her obligations to six nation Europe. They were warned of the political and even military deterioration that might result at a time when all Western Europe should be unified against a common threat from outside. More editorials entitled Britain and Europe have been printed here in the past week and months before. They all say the same thing, that Western solidarity in such matters as Berlin is imperiled by lack of Western solidarity in such matters as motor cars and (indistinct.) Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, reporting on the highly technical and important question of West European trade.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the Weather.

(Insert) Late tonight it was announced in Paris that both Britain and France have produced compromise plans - no details were given. A final decision has been postponed until January 15th, but the six-nation common market will go into effect as scheduled on January 1st.

Word for Today: Western Europe is threatened with a trade war, due to a bad relationship between two organizations founded with the best of economic motives. Something Sir Winston Churchill said almost ten years ago on this subject of unity would still seem to hold true. "If we are to achieve our supreme reward," he said, "we must lay aside every impediment and conquer ourselves."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 16, 1958

This is the news:

The NATO foreign ministers today rejected Khrushchev's proposal for ending the four-power occupation of Berlin. They said...in a communique... that no state has the right to withdraw unilaterally from its international engagements. The member states of NATO, they said, cannot approve a solution which jeopardizes the right of the three Western powers to remain in Berlin so long as their responsibilities require and which does not assure freedom of communication between that city and the free world. The communique states that the Soviet Union will be held responsible for "any action which has the effect of hampering this free communication or endangering this freedom." And it points out that the two million inhabitants of West Berlin...in a free vote...have reaffirmed their support of this position upheld by the Western powers. / The communique says that the Berlin question can only be settled in the framework of an agreement with Russia on Germany "as a whole." / It recalls that the Western powers "have repeatedly declared themselves ready to examine this problem, as well as those of European security and disarmament." And, it says, the Western powers are still ready to discuss all these problems.

The communique was issued at the end of the first day of the three-day NATO Council meeting in Paris. Secretary of State Dulles told a morning session that the West "cannot agree to negotiate under threats." / He also thought Russia would be unwilling to risk war over Berlin. "Therefore," he said, "we can proceed with confidence." / British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd...while advocating a firm attitude...also called for a constructive approach. "The rightful position of Berlin," he said, "is as capital of a free and united Germany."

The Moscow radio says that the rejection of Khrushchev's proposal on Berlin "shows once more that NATO is an instrument of cold war."

Assistant Secretary of State William Rountree conferred in Baghdad today with Premier Kassem of Iraq. There was no repetition of yesterday's violence...in which Rountree's automobile was splattered with mudballs and eggs. / The car also was struck by at least one rock. / The American diplomat saw Kassem for an hour...and we are told only that the "full-range of American-Iraqi relations must have been discussed."

In Washington, the State Department says that yesterday's demonstration against Rountree was staged by "irresponsible and apparently subversive elements." / The department spokesman, Lincoln White, said it was his personal opinion that the demonstrators were Communist-inspired.

The Baghdad radio said today that the Iraqi government has decided to close its border with Iran. / The broadcast gave no details, except to say that tele-communications with Iran would also be shut off.

Russia warned Turkey tonight not to sign a new military agreement with the United States. / Such an agreement, it said, would increase international tension.

The United Nations Command announced today that Matador guided missiles have been brought into South Korea...and are in the possession of American troops. The Matador is a weapon of atomic capability.

Reports from Peiping confirm that Mao Tse-tung has decided to give up the chairmanship of the Peoples Republic of China. /Mao will remain chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, which...as in Russia...is the position of real power. The duties he is relinquishing are mostly routine. Chen Yi (YEE), the foreign minister of Communist China, is quoted as saying that Mao wants "to conserve himself for more important tasks." /Chen himself... besides being foreign minister...is vice-chairman of the government, and he is regarded as a likely successor to Mao as chairman. /According to the constitution of Communist China, a government chairman is elected by the Peoples Congress once every four years. /Mao was "elected" in September, 1954. And the question of choosing his successor probably will come up when the Congress meets next month. /It is the view of diplomatic observers...both in Washington and London...that Mao is acting voluntarily. They point out that the party governs China and that Mao will still be head of the party. However...on Formosa...the Chinese Nationalists disagree and say that Mao is being down-graded because of internal pressures, including discontent over the new system of communes.

The Air Force today launched a 10-thousand-mile-an-hour Thor missile from the Vandenberg test center in California. Distance and destination of the shot were not disclosed because the Thor is an operational weapon. Its nominal range is 15-hundred miles. This is the first time that a ballistic missile has been launched on the West Coast.

The Supreme Court today agreed to pass on the validity of a North Carolina literacy test for voters. Validity of the state law had been challenged by a Negro woman who had refused to take the test and was then denied permission to register.

Bill Corum...the sports columnist who was also president of Churchill Downs...died tonight at the age of 63. Bill Corum contracted pneumonia during the World Series and had been in failing health ever since. He died in St. Luke's Hospital, here in New York.

The New York newspaper strike has taken a new turn. The deliverymen... who walked out in support of their demand for higher pay...have now decided to vote again on the same wage offer they rejected a week ago. The new vote will not be taken, however, until Thursday. In the original offer, the publishers agreed to a seven-dollar a week increase, spread out over a period of two years. The publishers also agreed to reduce the weight of newspaper bundles from 53 pounds to 50 pounds.

Edward R. Murrow: December 16, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

It is no secret that the landing of American troops in Lebanon and British troops in Jordan was meant principally as a warning to Nasser to keep hands off Iraq. The uprising that had cost King Feisal and Prime Minister Nuri their lives was assumed to have been plotted by Nasser. So he was being ordered to leave Jordan alone and not to incorporate Iraq in the United Arab Republic. But we and the British could not have been more wrong. The Bagdad uprising was not Nasser's doing. The regime of General Kassim not only has cleansed itself of all its pro-Nasser elements, it is getting rid too of ~~XXX~~ some of the Nationalists who helped make the revolution. And their places are going to Communists. Presumably Kassim is not completely under Moscow domination. But he already has accepted arms from the Kremlin, increased trade from the Satellite countries and received aid from the Soviet Treasury. He has put pro-Communists in charge of the police and in other key posts. And Moscow is in command of the Bagdad street mobs, which is a big political factor in an Arab state. The mobs have been obediently demonstrating for Kassim and against his foes. So that he owes much of his domestic security to the Kremlin.

When our troops landed in Lebanon we received a stern warning from Moscow not to cross into Iraq. That should have tipped us off to the fact that Moscow already had its eyes on Kassim. We were delighted to discover that Kassim was not Nasser's man, and hoped he was going to turn out a strong and independent Nationalist. So we recognized him with all possible speed. It may be said, as an afterthought, that if we hadn't, his submission to Moscow would have been even surer. But our doing so did not deter him from sending a mission to Moscow to accept Soviet arms. We and the British had been supplying Iraq's army as a member of the Bagdad Pact. We offered arms to Kassim. We even had Air Force crews near Bagdad, waiting to train Iraqi pilots to fly our planes. Some of these men are still there, still waiting. In the meantime planes have arrived, but they came from Russia, and the training of pilots is being done by Soviet instructors flown in from Egypt.

If there were only two choices for Kassim, to throw in his lot with Nasser or to throw it in with the Kremlin, the Kremlin already would have won, for the break with Nasser is complete. But there is a third choice. Kassim might decide to become an independent Nationalist, independent not only of Nasser, but of all foreign controls - our own, British and Russian. We see no likelihood of Kassim remaining a working member of the Bagdad Pact. But he might dedicate himself to the improvement of his country. For Iraq is intrinsically the strongest of all Arab states. It is economically stronger than Egypt because of its oil. It has a better army. Socially it is on the way to modernization, thanks to the investment of oil revenues under Feisal and Nuri. The rich were benefitting more from this program than the poor, which is one reason the overthrow of Feisal was popular. Now Kassim could broaden the base of the social reforms and consolidate his position.

Presumably Assistant Secretary of the State Rountree went to Bagdad to argue for this third choice of independence and to offer American co-operation so long as the Communists are kept out of power. He had a bad reception from the Bagdad mob. But in a sense that was an admission that the Russians haven't won everything yet, for if they had, the Communists would not find it necessary to whip up sentiment against an American visitor.

But if that is what Mr. Rountree has been saying, American diplomacy admittedly has its back to the wall. All we now can hope for is that Kassim will be incorruptible and strong and will keep the Communists from running him and his country. He was strong in his resistance to Nasserism. But he had to enlist Communist help to drive out Nasser's men. Now many Communists are in power and there is no one but Kassim to drive them out, assuming that he wants to.

If he does not want to, or is unable to do so, the Soviet Union will at long last have its foothold in the Middle East and may well expect to draw one Arab state after another into its orbit. How Kassim will decide, or can decide, is admittedly touch and go. At best, this means that the Soviet Union is close to a victory, a victory which, if won, would be its greatest since the war.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.

Word for Today

Premier Kassem has accepted aid from Soviet Russia, both in the form of armaments and money. Whether he will be able to be in Russia's debt and still keep Iraq free of Soviet domination remains to be seen. He might well take heed of Demosthenes, who said more than two thousand years ago, "Close alliances with despots are never safe for free states."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The NATO foreign ministers today rejected Khrushchev's proposal for ending the four-power occupation of Berlin. They said,..in a communique... that no state has the right to withdraw unilaterally from its international engagements. The member states of NATO, they said, cannot approve a solution which jeopardizes the right of the three Western powers to remain in Berlin so long as their responsibilities require and which does not assure freedom of communication between that city and the free world. The communique states that the Soviet Union will be held responsible for "any action which has the effect of hampering this free communication or endangering this freedom." And it points out that the two million inhabitants of West Berlin...in a free vote...have reaffirmed their support of this position upheld by the Western powers. The communique says that the Berlin question can only be settled in the framework of an agreement with Russia on Germany "as a whole." It recalls that the Western powers "have repeatedly declared themselves ready to examine this problem, as well as those of European security and disarmament." And, it says, the Western powers are still ready to discuss all these problems.

The communique was issued at the end of the first day of the three-day NATO Council meeting in Paris. Secretary of State Dulles told a morning session that the West "cannot agree to negotiate under threats." He also thought Russia would be unwilling to risk war over Berlin. "Therefore," he said, "we can proceed with confidence." British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd...while advocating a firm attitude...also called for a constructive approach. "The rightful position of Berlin," he said, "is as capital of a free and united Germany."

The Moscow radio says that the rejection of Khrushchev's proposal on Berlin "shows once more that NATO is an instrument of cold war."

Assistant Secretary of State William Rountree conferred in Baghdad today with Premier Kassem of Iraq. There was no repetition of yesterday's violence...in which Rountree's automobile was splattered with mudballs and eggs. The car also was struck by at least one rock. The American diplomat saw Kassem for an hour...and we are told only that the "full-range of American-Iraqi relations must have been discussed."

In Washington, the State Department says that yesterday's demonstration against Rountree was staged by "irresponsible and apparently subversive elements." The department spokesman, Lincoln White, said it was his personal opinion that the demonstrators were Communist-inspired.

The Baghdad radio said today that the Iraqi government has decided to close its border with Iran. The broadcast gave no details, except to say that tele-communications with Iran would also be shut off.

Russia warned Turkey tonight not to sign a new military agreement with the United States. Such an agreement, it said, would increase international tension.

The United Nations Command announced today that Matador guided missiles have been brought into South Korea...and are in the possession of American troops. The Matador is a weapon of atomic capability.

Reports from Peiping confirm that Mao-Tse-tung has decided to give up the chairmanship of the Peoples Republic of China. Mao will remain chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, which...as in Russia...is the position of real power. The duties he is relinquishing are mostly routine. Chen Yi, the foreign minister of Communist China, is quoted as saying that Mao wants "to conserve himself for more important tasks." Chen himself...besides being foreign minister is vice-chairman of the government, and he is regarded as a likely successor to Mao as chairman. According to the constitution of Communist China, a government chairman is elected by the Peoples Congress once every four years. Mao was "elected" in September, 1954. And the question of choosing his successor probably will come up when the Congress meets next month. It is the view of diplomatic obeervers...both in Washington and London,...that Mao is acting voluntarily. They point out that the party governs China and that Mao will still be head of the party. However...on Formosa...the Chinese Nationalists disagree and say that Mao is being down-graded because of internal pressures, including discontent over the new system of communes.

The Air Force today launched a 10-thousand-mile-an-hour Thor missile from the Vandenberg test center in California. Distance and destination of the shot were not disclosed because the Thor is an operational weapon. Its nominal range is 15-hundred miles. This is the first time that a ballistic missile has been launched on the West Coast.

The Supreme Court today agreed to pass on the validity of a North Carolina literacy test for voters. Validity of the state law had been challenged by a Negro woman who had refused to take the test and was then denied permission to register.

Bill Corum...the sports columnist who was also president of Churchill Downs...died tonight at the age of 63. Bill Corum contracted pneumonia during the World Series and had been in failing health ever since. He died in St. Luke's Hospital here in New York.

The New York newspaper strike has taken a new turn. The delivermen who walked out in support of their demand for high pay...have now decided to vote again on the same wage offer they rejected a week ago. The new vote willnot be taken, however, until Thursday. In the original offer, the publishers agreed to a seven-dollar a week increase, spread out over a period of two years. The publishers also agreed to reduce the weight of newspaper bundles from 53 to 50 pounds.

It is no secret that the landing of American troops in Lebanon and British troops in Jordan was meant principally as a warning to Nasser to keep hands off Iraq. The uprising that has cost King Feisal and Prime Minister Nuri their lives was assumed to have been plotted by Nasser. So he was being ordered to leave Jordan alone and not to incorporate Iraq in the United Arab Republic. But we and the British could not have been more wrong. The Baghdad uprising was not Nasser's doing. The regime of General Kassim not only has cleansed itself of all its pro-Nasser elements, it is getting rid too of some of the Nationalists who helped make the revolution. And their places are going to Communists. Presumably Kassim is not completely under Moscow domination. But he already has accpeted arms from the Kremlin, increased trade from the satellite countries and received aid from the Soviet treasury. He has put pro-Communists in charge of the police and in other key posts. And Moscow is in command of the Baghdad street mobs, which is a big political factor in an Arab state. The mobs have been obediently demonstrating for Kassim and against his foes. So that he owes much of his domestic security to the Kremlin.

When our troops landed in Lebanon we received a stern warning from Moscow not to cross into Iraq. That should have tipped us off to the fact that Moscow already had its eyes on Kassim. We were delighted to discover that Kassim was not Nasser's man, and hoped he was going to turn out a strong and independent Nationalist. So we recognized him with all possible speed. It may be said, as an afterthought, that if we hadn't, his submission to Moscow would have been even surer. But our doing so did not deter him from sending a mission to Moscow to accept Soviet arms. We and the British had been supplying Iraq's army as a member of the Baghdad Pact. We offered arms to Kassim. We even had Air Force crews near Baghdad, waiting to train Iraqi pilots to fly our planes. Some of the men are still there, still waiting. In the meantime planes have arrived, but they came from Russia, and the training of pilots is being done by Soviet instructors flown in from Egypt.

If there were only two choices for Kassim, to throw in his lot with Nasser or to throw it in with the Kremlin, the Kremlin already would have won, for the break with Nasser is complete. But there is a third choice. Kassim might decide to become an independent Nationalist, independent not only of Nasser, but of all foreign controls - our own, British and Russian. We see no likelihood of Kassim remaining a working member of the Baghdad Pact. But he might dedicate himself to the improvement of his country. For Iraq is intrinsically the strongest of all Arab states. It is economically stronger than Egypt because of its oil. It has a better army. Socially it is on the way to modernization, thanks to the investment of ail revenues under Feisal and Nuri. The rich were benefitting more from this program than the poor, which is one reason the overthrow of Feisal was popular. Now Kassim could broaden the base of the social reforms and consolidate his position.

Presumably Assistant Secretary of the State Rountree went to Baghdad to argue for this third choice of independence and to offer American co-operation so long as the Communists are kept out of power. He had a bad reception from the Baghdad mob. But in a sense that was an admission that the Russians havent won everything yet, for if they had, the Communists would not find it necessary to whip up sentiment against an American visitor.

But if that is what Mr. Rountree has been saying, American diplomacy admittedly has its back to the wall. All we now can hope for is that Kassim will be incorruptible and strong and will keep the Communists from running him and his country. He was strong in his resistance to Nasserism. But he had to enlist Communist help to drive out Nasser's men. Not many Communists are in power and there is no one but Kassim to drive them out, assuming that he wants to.

If he does not want to, or is unable to do so, the Soviet Union will at long last have its foothold in the Middle East and may well expect to draw one Arab state after another into its orbit. How Kassim will decide, or can decide, is admittedly touch and go. At best, this means that the Soviet Union is close to a victory, a victory which, if won, would be its greatest since the war.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Premier Kassem has accepted aid from Soviet Russia, both in the form of armaments and money. Whether he will be able to be in Russia's debt and still keep Iraq free of Soviet domination remains to be seen. He might well take heed of Demosthenes, who said more than two thousand years ago, "Close alliances with despots are never safe for free states."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 17, 1958

This is the news:

The fifteen NATO countries voted today to "beef up" their common defense. The formal resolution...approved at the NATO Council meeting in Paris... does not mean that troop quotas and quotas in aircraft and missiles will be fulfilled. / The defense ministers said only that they would "try" to meet these quotas. / They were warned by General Norstad, the commander of Allied forces in Europe, that NATO is still nine divisions short of the goal of thirty divisions and that the Soviet military threat is in no way diminished. Secretary of Defense McElroy said the Communist threat to the NATO area "remains the central danger." / And he repeated the pledge...made by President Eisenhower...that the United States "will come at once and with all appropriate force to the assistance of any NATO country subjected to armed attack."

The NATO ministers also discussed a secret report on the military strength of Russia and the satellite states. And Secretary of State Dulles submitted a report on the Far East...warning that any United States withdrawal from the Western Pacific meant that the entire area would fall under Communist control. "This," he said, "would give great reward to the Communists in the form of the utilization of the industrial power of Japan."

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd called on Premier DeGaulle during the day...and had what was termed "a most frank discussion" of the rift between Britain and France over European trade. No details of this private meeting have been disclosed.

In Moscow today, the government newspaper Izvestia devoted half a page to a story...challenging the right of the Western powers to remain in West Berlin. No soldier of the United States, Britain, or France, it claimed, ever fired a shot in the Battle of Berlin during World War Two. Consequently...according to Izvestia...the three Western powers have no right to occupy the city as conquerors.

In Geneva today, the United States, Britain and Russia agreed on the fourth article of a draft treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests. The article provides for establishment of a seven-member commission for controling any test ban. There would be three permanent members--- the United States, Britain and Russia. / The other four members would be elected by a conference of all the powers making up the control organization. / There is still no agreement on a final treaty, and many differences remain to be resolved. Russia, for example, said again today that it will insist...as a member of the control commission...on exercising a veto power.

The new edition of "Jane's All the World's Aircraft"...released tonight...includes space satellites for the first time. / It lists the satellites launched thus far by Russia and the United States. It also says that Russia has...in service...a secret long-range jet bomber twice as fast as any operational heavy bomber possessed by the United States.

The United States government has assigned the task of designing and developing a rocket engine capable of putting up manned satellites to Rocketdyne, a division of the North American Aviation Corporation. This was announced today by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The program...to perfect an engine of up to one and a half million pounds of thrust...may take four to six years. The cost is expected to be around 200-million dollars.

Communist China today officially announced the decision of Mao Tse-tung to give up the chairmanship of the government. (I should like to try to examine the meaning of this in a few minutes).

President Eisenhower does not intend to take sides in the party fight between conservatives and liberals for Republican leadership in the Senate. Senator Bridges, chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, said today that this was his impression after talking with the President. Mr. Eisenhower, he said, does hope that the Republican Party will be united as it starts the new year. A liberal Republican group---led by Senator Aiken of Vermont---is fighting the election of Senator Dirksen of Illinois as MINORITY leader. Bridges says he already has suggested a compromise under which the liberals would get the post of Republican whip, or assistant minority leader. He promised they would also have "adequate" representation on the various legislative committees. He suggested that it would be wise for the liberals to accept this compromise...because, he said, "we have the votes."

A special committee recommended today that the House refuse to seat Dr. Dale Alford, the Little Rock segregationist who defeated Representative Brooks Hays in November. The House committee vote against seating Alford...pending a thorough investigation...was 3 to 2. Alford won the election as a write-in candidate against Hays, who advocated moderation on the school integration issue. John Wells, publisher of a weekly newspaper in Little Rock, has charged that the number of voters casting ballots exceeded the number of persons registered to vote.

A special House elections committee decided today not to make a formal investigation of the complaint of Mrs. Coya Knutson of Minnesota that she failed to win re-election because of a "malicious conspiracy." The decision of the five-man committee was unanimous.

The Agriculture Department today made its final prediction of this year's corn crop...and estimated that it would total a record 3-billion, 799-million bushels. A record harvest also was predicted for wheat.

The Commerce Department reports that total personal income in November climbed to an annual rate of 360-billion dollars. This is an increase over last year, despite the recession. But higher prices more than off-set the gain in income, so that consumer buying power this year has not increased.

Here in New York, directors of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company today recommended a three-for-one split in stock. The recommendation will not be voted on by the stockholders until April, but A. T. and T. stock immediately went up 21 points, to 223 dollars a share.

Negotiations in the New York newspaper strike remain deadlocked. Representatives of the deliverymen's union and the publishers met briefly today on procedural matters...then adjourned without scheduling another meeting. The federal mediator says talks may be resumed tomorrow. Rank-and-file members of the union rejected the proposal of their leaders that they vote again on the latest offer made by the publishers association.

Edward R. Murrow: December 17, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

When the largest nation in the world is in the agony of a basic social upheaval, and its dictator ~~relinquishes~~ gives up one of his two top posts, the first inference is that he is in personal trouble, and fresh blood is being sought for the leadership. Mao Tse-Tung, in giving up the administrative chairmanship of the Chinese People's Republic, is turning over the task of carrying through the communization program to someone else. / If all were going well with that program, one could doubt that Mao would give up this portion of his duties. For the talk of down-grading the dictator, even if it is not true, can do great damage to a totalitarian regime. It upsets the people, affects relations with allies, and gives heart to foreign and home opponents. / So it is probably more than coincidence that Mao is giving up administrative control of his country just as the communization program faces its hardest going.

However, there are plausible reasons to believe that Mao's decision was not the result of personal troubles. He is aging - he is sixty-five - and not in good health. / His job, as boss of the Communist Party, which he keeps, is enough for one man to do. In giving up his administrative post he is shedding duties, but not much power. The power in a Communist dictatorship lies far more with the Party than with the Government.

Nor is the change unscheduled. Mao was government Chairman for a four-year term which expires this month. He has simply decided not to accept another term. So he is not being pushed or shouldered out. One will get a clearer view of what has happened when his successor is named. If he turns out to be a fresh face and not a tested Mao follower, that will point to Mao having been in personal trouble. But if the new man is a loyal Mao adherent, his choice might be quite significant. Mao might be building him up as his eventual successor, and to say this rules out General Chu Teh, now mentioned as possibly the next Government Chairman. Chu Teh is seventy-two, and would only be a transition chairman.

Mao may have decided to cut down his administrative work to have more time for his chosen role as the senior Communist theorist in the world. For he considers himself the foremost in that line since Lenin. In that role his influence may rise rather than decline. And this is something that can affect non-Communists as much as Communists. For what the two dictators - Mao and Khrushchev - do touches all lives involved in the power conflict and the war of ideas.

It may even be said that the present crisis over Berlin is Mao's doing, as well as Khrushchev's. For it was Mao who put a sudden end to the soft policy in his own country too, reversing his celebrated admonition "to let a hundred flowers bloom". He reversed also his encouragement to Poland and Yugoslavia to find their own kinds of socialism. After the Hungarian revolt he turned almost savagely on Polish and Hungarian Communists seeking a little independence from ironclad Moscow control. And he is credited with having insisted on Khrushchev becoming tough with Tito as well as the West.

What produced this violent change in Mao's thinking we do not know. But it came after he was convinced he could expect no conciliation from Washington. It followed a report to him from Prime Minister Nehru of his talks with President Eisenhower, which indicated no change from America's policy of non-recognition.

Since then Mao has taken his own tough line with the United States, with the attack on Quemoy, and Khrushchev has not wavered from a strong anti-Western policy.

It would be an over-simplification to say that Mao Tse-Tung by himself steered the course of international events toward the approaching Berlin crisis. But he had his full share in it. And if a Chinese leader can have so much effect already, we have an inkling what to expect from a future successor of Mao's, say in two to three decades. By that time China may have a billion population and be thoroughly regimented, militarized, industrialized and even modernized. Undoubtedly Mao looks ahead to this time and China's destiny in it. And what he is doing today can be best understood as his way of preparing for it.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

Whatever the reason for the resignation of Mao Tse-tung from his titular position in the government, the action will have to be explained to the masses of Chinese people...lest there be repercussions.

Will Rogers was a keen observer. More than twenty years ago, he said, "Communism to me is one-third practice and two-thirds explanation."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The fifteen NATO countries voted today to "beef up" their common defense. The formal resolution...approved at the NATO Council meeting in Paris... does not mean that troop quotas and quotas in aircraft and missiles will be fulfilled. The defense ministers said only that they would "try" to meet these quotas. They were warned by General Norstad, the commander of Allied forces in Europe, that NATO is still nine divisions short of the goal of thirty divisions and that the Soviet military threat is in no way diminished. Secretary of Defense McElroy said the Communist threat to the NATO area "remains the central danger." And he repeated the pledge...made by President Eisenhower...that the United States "will come at once and with all appropriate force to the assistance of any NATO country subjected to armed attack."

The NATO ministers also discussed a secret report on the military strength of Russia and the satellite states. And Secretary of State Dulles submitted a report on the Far East...warning that any United States withdrawal from the Western Pacific meant that the entire area would fall under Communist control. "This," he said, "would give great reward to the Communists in the form of the utilization of the industrial power of Japan."

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd called on Premier DeGaulle during the day...and had what was termed "a most frank discussion" of the rift between Britain and France over European trade. No details of this private meeting have been disclosed.

In Moscow today, the government newspaper Izvestia devoted half a page to a story...challenging the right of the Western powers to remain in West Berlin. No soldier of the United States, Britain or France, it claimed over fired a shot in the Battle of Berlin during World War Two. Consequently, according to Izvestia...the three Western powers have no right to accupy the city as conquerors.

In Geneva today, the United States, Britain and Russia agreed on the fourth article of a draft treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests. The article provides for establishment of a seven-member commission for controling any test ban. There would be three permanent members---the United States, Britain and Russia. The other four members would be elected by a conference of all the powers making up the control organization. There is still no agreement on a final treaty, and many differences remain to be resolved. Russia, for example, said again today that it will insist...as a member of the control commission...on exercising a veto power.

The new edition of "Jane's All the World's Aircraft"...released tonight...includes space satellites for the first time. It lists the satellites launched thus far by Russia and the United States. It also says that Russia has...in service...a secret long-range jet bomber twice as fast as any operational heavy bomber possessed by the United States.

The United States governmnet has assigned the task of designing and developing a rocket engine capable of putting up manned satellites to Rocketdyne, a division of the North American Aviation Corporation. This was announced today by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The program...to perfect an engine of up to one and a half million pounds of thrust...may take four to six years. The cost is expected to be around 200-million dollars.

Communist China today officially announced the decision of Mao Tse-tung to give up the chairmanship of the government. (I should like to try to examine the meaning of this in a few minutes.)

President Eisenhower does not intend to take sides in the party fight between conservatives and liberals for Republican leadership in the Senate. Senator Bridges, chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, said today that this was his impression after talking with the President. Mr. Eisenhower, he said, does hope, that the Republican Party will be united as it starts the new year. A liberal Republican group---led by Senator Aiken of Vermont--is fighting the election of Senator Dirksen of Illinois as minority leader. Bridges says he already has suggested a compromise under which the liberal would get the post of Republican whip, or assistant minority leader. He promised they would also have "adequate" representation on the various legislative committees. He suggested that it would be wise for the liberals to accept this compromise because, he said, "we have the votes."

A special committee recommended today that the House refuse to seat Dr. Dale Alford, the Little Rock segrationist who defeated Representative Brooks Hays in November. The House committee vote against seating Alford...pending a thorough investigation...was 3 to 2. Alford won the election as a write-in candidate against Hays, who advocated moderation on the school integration issue. John Wells, publisher of a weekly newspaper in Little Rock, has charged that the number of voters casting ballots exceeded the number of persons registered to vote.

A special House elections committee decided today not to make a formal investigation of the complaint of Mrs. Coya Knutson of Minnesota that she failed to win re-election because of a "malicious conspiracy." The decision of the five-man committee was unanimous.

The Agriculture Department today made its final prediction of this year's corn crop...and estimated that it would total a record 3-billion, 799-million bushels. A record harvest also was predicted for wheat.

The Commerce Department reports that total personal income in November climbed to an annual rate of 360 billion dollars. This is an increase over last year, despite the recession. But higher prices more than off-set the gain in income, so that consumer buying power this year has not increased.

Here in New York, directors of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company today recommended a three-for-one split in stock. The recommendation will not be voted on by the stockholders until April, but A.T. andT. stock immediately went up 21 points, to 223 dollars a share.

Negotiations in the New York newspaper strike remain deadlocked. Representatives of the deliverymen's union and the publishers met briefly today on procedural matters...then adjourned without scheduling another meeting. The federal mediator says talks may be resumed tomorrow. Rank-and-file members of the union rejected the proposal of their leaders that they vote again on the latest offer made by the publishers association.

When the largest nation in the world is in the agony of a basic social upheaval, and its dictator gives up one of his two top posts, the first inference is that he is in personal trouble, and fresh blood is being sought for the leadership. Mao Tse-tung, in giving up the administrative chairmanship of the Chinese People's Republic, is turning over the task of carrying through the communization program to someone else. If all were going well with that program, one could doubt that Mao would give up this portion of his duties. For the talk of down-grading the dictator, even if it is not true, can do great damage to a totalitorian regime. It upsets the people, affects relations with allies and gives heart to foreign and home opponents. So it is probably more than coincidence that Mao is giving up administrative control of his country just as the communization program faces its hardest going.

However, there are plausible reasons to believe that Mao's decision was not the result of personal troubles. He is aging - he is sixty-five and not in good health. His job as boss of the Communist Party, which he keeps, is enough for one man to do. In giving up his administrative post, he is shedding duties. but not much power. The power in a Communist dictatorship lies far more with the Party than with the Government.

Nor is the change unscheduled. Mao was government Chairman for a four-year term which expires this month. He has simply decided not to accept another term. So he is not being pushed or shouldered out. One will get a clearer view of what has happened when his successor is named. If he turns out to be a fresh face and not a tested Mao follower, that will point to Mao having been in personal trouble. But if the new man is a loyal Mao adherent, his choice might be quite significant. Mao might be building him up as his eventual successor, and to say this rules out General Chu Teh, now mentioned as possibly the next Government Chairman. Chu Teh is seventy-two, and would only be a transition chairman.

Mao may have decided to cut down his administrative work to have more time for his chosen role as the senior Communist theorist in the world. For he considers himself the foremost in that line since Lenin. In that role his influence may rise rather than decline. And this is something that can affect non-Communists as much as Communists. For what the two dictators - Mao and Khrushchev - do touches all lives involved in the power conflict and the war of ideas.

It may even be said that the present crisis over Berlin is Mao's doing as well as Khrushchev's. For it was Mao who put a sudden end to the soft policy in his own country too, reversing his celebrated admonition "to let a hundred flowers bloom." He reversed also his encouragement to Poland and Yugoslavia to find their own kinds of socialism. After the Hungarian revolt he turned almost savagely on Polish and Hungarian Communists seeking a little independence from ironclad Moscow control. And he is credited with having insisted on Khrushchev becoming tough with Tito as well as the West.

What produced this violent change in Mao's thinking we do not know. But it came after he was convinced he could expect no conciliation from Washington. It followed a report to him from Prime Minister Nehru of his talks with President Eisenhower, which indicated no change from America's policy of non-recognition.

Since then Mao has taken his own tough line with the United States, with the attack on Quemoy, and Khrushchev has not wavered from a strong anti-Western policy.

It would be an over-simplification to say that Mao-Tse-tung by himself steered the course of international events toward the approaching Berlin crisis. But he had his full share in it. And if a Chinese leader can have so much effect already, we have an inkling what to expect from a future successor of Mao's, say in two to three decades. By that time China may have a billion population and be thoroughly regimented, militarized, industrialized and even modernized. Undoubtedly Mao looks ahead to this time and China's destiny in it. And what he is doing today can be best understood as his way of preparing for it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Whatever the reason for the resignation of Mao Tse-tung from his titular position in the government, the action will have to be explained to the masses of Chinese people...lest there be repercussions. Will Rogers was a keen observer. More than twenty years ago, he said, "Communism to me is one-third practice and two-thirds explanation."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 18, 1958

This is the news:

The NATO ministers today issued a communique saying that they would never yield to Soviet threats against Berlin. The NATO countries, it said, believe that a solution of the German question...linked with European security arrangements and controlled disarmament...is essential. The Western powers will ~~[illegible]~~ seek equitable solutions to these problems. But NATO defense strategy "continues to be based on effective shield forces and on the manifest will to use nuclear retaliatory forces to repel aggression." The communique recognized that procedures for political consultation among NATO members could be improved. And it advocated that "a multi-lateral association" to improve cooperation in the economic field be set up at the earliest possible date.

The communique was issued in Paris...at the end of three days of talks attended by the foreign, finance and defense ministers of the fifteen NATO countries. Secretary of State Dulles said he thought the meeting was "successful and significant." He left Paris by plane tonight for a vacation in Jamaica of about one week.

The State Department today announced that Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan is being granted a visa to visit this country next month. Mikoyan is Russia's chief expert on trade. In applying for his visa, the Soviet Foreign Ministry said that Mikoyan wished to come to Washington as the guest of Soviet Ambassador Menshikov. So far, he has not asked to see any high official of the United States government.

The official announcement that Mikoyan is coming to Washington created wide interest at the NATO meeting in Paris. In a few minutes, we will have a first-hand report on the Paris reaction and on the NATO meeting itself.

In Geneva today, the East-West talks on prevention of surprise attack ended in total disagreement. After five weeks of fruitless argument, it was decided to adjourn the conference indefinitely. The United States accused Russia of "sabotaging" the talks...which were supposed to be technical... by injecting political issues. Russia accused the United States of trying to learn its military secrets. The other Geneva conference, trying to draft a treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests, is still meeting...and is still making progress.

~~The Moscow radio says that~~ Former Premier Bulganin was a speaker at today's session of the Communist Party Central Committee. Moscow says that he "confessed his crimes." Only two days ago, Premier Khrushchev denounced Bulganin before the committee, as a member of the "anti-party group".

Today, Bulganin agreed with that criticism. He said, "When in 1957, the anti-party activities of Malenkov, Kaganovich, Molotov and Shepilov developed, I joined them." These people, he said, "persistently opposed" the course proclaimed by the 20th Party Congress.

The leaders of Communist China have decided to slow down their program of communization. The decision was revealed today by Peiping Radio...which broadcast the text of a 10-thousand-word resolution passed last week by the Chinese party central committee. This is the same committee which approved the decision of Mao Tse-tung not to seek another four-year term as chairman of the government. Mao remains chairman of the Communist Party in China, which is the position of real power. The resolution says that the extension of communes in large urban areas should be postponed, except for what it calls "necessary preparatory measures." "Peoples communes should be established on a large scale in cities," it says, "only after rich experience has been gained, and skeptics and doubters convinced." The resolution goes on to demand improvement in the 26-thousand communes already established in rural areas. Communal mess halls and nurseries, it says, must be well run. And fears that all private property...such as clothing, furniture and bank deposits...will be surrendered to the commune, must be dispelled. The resolution warned that the transition to absolute communism---ownership by the whole people---will take many years. "Over eager" comrades, it said, must not get "dizzy with success."

An Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile was fired tonight at Cape Canaveral, Florida. Operations concerning the shoot were cloaked in more than usual secrecy. The Air Force says the launching was one of a continuing series of advanced research and development tests."

The Navy today cancelled its program for developing the Regulus Two guided missile. The program is being dropped, it said, "to provide the best balance in over-all Navy weapons systems within the resources available at present and for the foreseeable future." The cancellation, it estimated, would save in the neighborhood of a hundred million dollars.

The Civil Aeronautics Board today reaffirmed its rule that the new jet airliners must be manned by two pilots and a flight engineer. There was no immediate indication of how this will affect the strike of flight engineers against Eastern Airlines, a walkout now in its 25th day. One reason the flight engineers walked out is that Eastern wanted all three crewmen to be qualified pilots, as recommended by a presidential emergency board.

Here in New York, there was no break today in the strike of deliverymen against the major daily newspapers.

Now, for that report on the annual NATO meeting...we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 5:40
Ends in cue: "Now back to Edw R. Murrow in N.Y."

Deputy Premier Mikoyan-

That was Daniel Schorr and David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris.

Back in a moment.-

George Bryan

Word for Today

Another NATO meeting has ended and defense programs formalized. Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court once said, "We can keep our freedom through the increasing crisis of history only if we are self-reliant enough to be free---dollars, guns, and all the wondrous products of science will not be enough. 'This night thy soul shall be required of thee'."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, December 18, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Now for that report on the annual NATO meeting we switch to Paris and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The Russians have done it again as they do at almost every NATO meeting with an extraordinary sense of timing and a knowledge of how the Western press functions. They waited carefully for the ministers of the 15 Atlantic nations to gather together here in Paris for their annual review to unite themselves against the Soviet threat which is the main (indistinct) of NATO and then just as the (indistinct) the public were ready for the happy ending to the successful NATO meeting, the Russians stole the story from NATO when leading presidium personality, Deputy Premier A. I. Mikoyan applied for a visa to America. Mikoyan was in Washington, the first top Soviet leader to come to America since Molotov attended the U. N. Conference in San Francisco in 1945. This news bomb exploded today over the Palais de Chaillot and it's dust just about obscured the NATO final communique. Almost every reporter here is writing the Mikoyan story, describing the man and his position in Russia. Speculating about the reason for his visit to Washington, wondering whether it's time into the Soviet ultimatum about Berlin. We will hear about the man and the official in just a moment from my colleague Daniel Schorr, former CBS News Moscow correspondent, who's been here in Paris covering the NATO meeting. Before Dan Schorr gives us his report, perhaps you might bear with me for just a few moments to hear what happened at NATO for there has been a NATO meeting and an interesting one in many respects.

The most interesting aspect of this meeting was the reaction of the Atlantic allies to the Soviet ultimatum in Berlin. Exactly ten years ago tonight, Berlin was living desperately under a Soviet blockade. The life of that city hung on the slender thread of the airlift.

There was something dangerously near panic in Europe. Tonight, ten years later, the Soviets are again threatening Berlin but there are no signs of panic in Paris. The Western nations seem more solemnly united than ever against Russian aggression. As NATO enters its tenth year of life, it seems fair to give this organization due credit for a remarkable job in the past decade in building European defenses and courage. It also seems logical however, to challenge NATO to revise its policies for the future to meet the very different conditions of today with the Soviet threat extending to the middle East and greatly stronger than ever. It is also necessary to note that the allies do not seem much more united today than they were ten years ago in areas other than resistance to Russia. In some ways they're less united, quarrelling more among themselves. The British are fighting with Iceland over fishing rights. Greece and Turkey over Cyprus. The French over free trade in Europe. Some progress was made at this conference in solving or easing these disputes but they remain dangerously (indistinct) whose strains might be even greater if the Russians didn't keep forcing NATO to work together. If Russia were ever to become peaceful and reasonable, NATO might have a hard time surviving. And that's one reason why reporters here were so excited when news broke that Mikoyan was going to Washington. And now for that Mikoyan story, here is Dan Schorr.

SCHORR: American Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson in Moscow was surprised today to receive from the Soviet Ministry a routine request for a visa for a most unroutine person. Anastasi Mikoyan, Deputy Prime Minister, member of the Communist Party Praesidium, one of the few old Bolsheviks still in power. Consul cabled on the request to Washington with a recommendation that the visa be granted. There was no indication why Mikoyan wanted to come, whom he wanted to see or about what. But, last February, President Eisenhower had written, then Premier Bulganin that we would welcome visits by leading Russians to have them understand America. And unofficially the State Department made it clear that it did not apply to Khrushchev but it did apply to anyone from Mikoyan down. Mikoyan now in Warsaw expected to come to the United States early next month. His visit is welcomed by the United States Government. He will have an opportunity to see Secretary Dulles, probably Vice-President Nixon, if not President Eisenhower. It is so Mikoyan will want to talk about trade which is his specialty. There's high level speculation that he may also want to talk about Berlin and it is hoped that this is true for this could mean a possible way out of the deepening Berlin deadlock, but in any event Secretary Dulles is understood to feel such informal meetings are more useful than a show in Summit conference and Dulles is looking forward to seeing Mikoyan. The last Western country that Mikoyan visited was West Germany last April and West German officials now in Paris say that Mikoyan then appeared basically to be a glad-hander, a salesman of trade and co-existence but unable to deliver on the same political promises he made to Chancellor Adenauer. To that, this correspondent, who has often seen Mikoyan in Moscow, would add a comment. Mikoyan is valued in the Kremlin for his knowledge of international commerce and western ways. He is not a very hard political policy maker and it would be premature to expect that he can alter Khrushchev's tough terms on Berlin. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

ED TRANS/RC

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The NATO ministers today issued a communique saying that they would never yield to Soviet threats against Berlin. The NATO countries, it said, believe that a solution of the German question...linked with European security arrangements and controlled disarmament...is essential. The Western powers will seek equitable solutions to these problems. But NATO defense strategy "continues to be based on effective shield forces and on the manifest will to use nuclear retaliatory forces to repel aggression." The communique recognized that procedures for political consultation among NATO members could be improved. And it advocated that "a multi-lateral association" to improve cooperation in the economic field be set up at the earliest possible date.

The State Department today announced that Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan is being granted a visa to visit this country next month. Mikoyan is Russia's chief expert on trade. In applying for his visa, the Soviet Foreign Ministry said that Mikoyan wished to come to Washington as the guest of Soviet Ambassador Menshikov. So far, he has not asked to see any high official of the United States government.

The official announcement that Mikoyan is coming to Washington created wide interest at the NATO meeting in Paris. In a few mnnutes, we will have a first-hand report on the Paris reaction and on the NATO meeting itself.

In Geneva today, the East-West talks on prevention of surprise attack ended in total disagreement. After five weeks of fruitless argument, it was decided to adjourn the conference indefinitely. The United States accused Russia of "sabotaging" the talks...which were supposed to be technical...by injecting political issues. Russia accused the United States of trying to learn its military secrets. The other Geneva conference trying to draft a treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests is still meeting...and is still making progress.

Former Premier Bulganin was a speaker at today's session of the Communist Party Central Committee. Moscow says that he "confessed his crimes." Only two days ago, Premier Khrushchev denounced Bulganin before the committee as a member of the "anti-party group." Today, Bulganin agreed with that criticism. He said, "When in 1957, the anti-party activities of Malenkov, Kaganovich, Molotov and Shepilov developed, I joined them." These people, he said, "persistently opposed" the course proclaimed by the 20th Party Congress.

The leaders of Communist China have decided to slow down their program of communization. The decision was revealed today by Peiping Radio...which broadcast the text of a 10-thousand-word resolution passed last week by the Chinese party central committee. This is the same committee which approved the decision of Mao-Tse-tung not to seek another four-year term as chairman of the government. Mao remains chairman of the Communist Party in China, which is the position of real power. The resolution says that the extension of communes in large urban areas should be postponed, except for what it calls "necessary preparatory measures." "Peoples communes should be established on a large scale in cities," it says, "only after rich experience has been gained, and skeptics and doubters convinced." The resolution goes on to demand improvement in the 26-thousand communes already established in rural areas. Communal mess halls and nurseries, it says, must be well run. And fears that all private property... such as clothing, furniture and bank deposits...will be surrendered to the commune must be dispelled. The resolution warned that the transition to absolute communism, ownership by the whole people---will take many years. "Over eager "comrades, it said, must not get "dizzy with success."

An Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile was fired tonight at Cape Canaveral, Florida. Operations concerning the shoot were cloaked in more than usual secrecy. The Air Force says the launching was one of a continuing series of advanced research and development tests."

The Navy today cancelled its program for developing the Regulus Two guided missile. The program is being dropped, it said, "to provide the best balance in over-all Navy weapons systems within the resources available at present and for the foreseeable future." The cancellation, it estimated, would save in the neighborhood of a hundred million dollars.

Here in New York, there was no break today in the strike of deliverymen against the major daily newspapers.

Now, for that report on the annual NATO meeting...we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The Russians have done it again as they do at almost every NATO meeting with an extraordinary sense of timing and a knowledge of how the Western press functions. They waited carefully for the ministers of the 15-Atlantic nations to gather together here in Paris for their annual review to unite themselves against the Soviet threat which is the main (indistinct) of NATO and then just as the (indistinct) the public were ready for the happy ending to the successful NATO meeting, the Russians stole the story from NATO when leading praesidium personality, Deputy Premier N.A. Mikoyan applied for a visa to America. Mikoyan in Washington, the first top Soviet leader to come to America since Molotov attended the U.N. Conference in San Francisco in 1945. This news bomb exploded today over the Palais de Chaillot and its dust just about obscured the NATO final communique. Almost every reporter here is writing the Mikoyan story, describing the man and his position in Russia. Speculating about the reason for his visit to Washington, wondering whether it's tied into the Soviet ultimatum about Berlin. We will hear about the man and the official in just a moment from my colleague, Daniel Schorr, former CBS News Moscow correspondent, who's been here in Paris covering the NATO meeting. Before Dan Schorr gives us his report, perhaps you might bear with me for just a few moments to hear what happened at NATO for there has been a NATO meeting and an interesting one in many respects.

The most interesting aspect of this meeting was the reaction of the Atlantic allies to the Soviet ultimatum in Berlin. Exactly ten years ago tonight, Berlin was living desperately under a Soviet blockade. The life of that city hung on the slender thread of the airlift. There was something dangerously near panic in Europe. Tonight, ten years later, the Soviets are again threatening Berlin but there are no signs of panic in Paris. The Western nations seem more solemnly united than ever against Russian aggression. As NATO enters its tenth year of life, it seems fair to give this organization due credit for a remarkable job in the past decade in building European defenses and courage. It also seems logical however, to challenge NATO to revise its policies for the future to meet the very different conditions of today with the Soviet extending to the middle East and greatly stronger than ever. It is also necessary to note that the allies do not seem much more united today than they were ten years ago in areas other than resistance to Russia. In some ways they're less united, quarrelling more among themselves. The British are fighting with Iceland over fishing rights, Greece and Turkey over Cyprus, the French over free trade in Europe. Some progress was made at this conference in solving or easing these disputes but they remain dangerously (indistinct) whose strains might be even greater if the Russians didn't keep forcing NATO to work together. If Russia were ever to become peaceful and reasonable, NATO might have a hard time surviving. And that's one reason why reporters were were so excited when news broke that Mikoyan was going to Washington. And now for that Mikoyan story, hare is Dan Schorr.

SCHORR: American Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson in Moscow was surprised today to receive from the Soviet Ministry a routine request for a visa for a most unroutine person. Anastasi Mikoyan, Deputy Prime Minister, member of the Communist Party Presidium, one of the few old Bolsheviks still in power. Consul cabled on the request to Washington with a recommendation that the visa be granted. There was no indication why Mikoyan wanted to come, whom he wanted to see or about what. But, last February, President Eisenhower had written, then Premier Bulganin that we would welcome visits by leading Russians to have them understand America. And unofficially the State Department made it clear that it did not apply to Khrushchev but it did apply to anyone from Mikoyan down. Mikoyan now in Warsaw expected to come to the United States early next month. His visit is welcomed by the United States Government. He will have an opportunity to see Secretary Dulles, probably Vice-President Nixon, if not President Eisenhower. It is sure Mikoyan will want to talk about trade which is his specialty. There's high level speculation that he may also want to talk about Berlin and it is hoped that this is true for this could mean a possible way out of the deepening Berlin deadlock, but in any event Secretary Dulles is understood to feel such informal meetings are more useful than a show in Summit conference and Dulles is looking forward to seeing Mikoyan. The last Western country that Mikoyan visited was West Germany last April and West German officials now in Paris say that Mikoyan then appeared basically to be a glad-hander, a salesman of trade and co-existence but unable to deliver on the same political promises he made to Chancellor Adenauer To that, this correspondent, who has often seen Mikoyan in Moscow, would add a comment. Mikoyan is valued in the Kremlin for his knowledge of international commerce and western ways. He is not a very hard political policy maker and it would be premature to expect that he can alter Khrushchev's tough terms on Berlin.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Daniel Schorr and David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Another NATO meeting has ended and defense programs formalized. Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court once said, "We can keep our freedom through the increasing crisis of history only if we are self-reliant enough to be free---dollars, guns, and all the wondrous products of science will not be enough. 'This night thy soul shall be required of thee.'"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Dec. 19, 1958

This is the news:

The Atlas satellite, has just made its fifteenth pass over the United States...carrying a recorded message by President Eisenhower. For a direct report on this experiment in space communication, we switch to George Herman in Washington.

(Herman runs approx 3 mins
Returns on cue, "to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, George Herman, reporting from Washington on the four and a half ton Atlas missile...placed in orbit by the Air Force last night.

The Atlas achievement is being applauded by newspapers throughout Western Europe. France-Soir...in Paris...carries the headline: "Biggest Satellite in the World Launched by U.S.A." The London Evening Standard in an editorial calls the satellite "a symbol of a new world of boundless opportunity opening for mankind," and goes on to say that Britain should have one, too. Kenneth Gatland...of the British Inter-planetary Society... says the Atlas shows how satellites may be used as relay stations for world-wide radio and television coverage. And West Germany's rocket scientist, Dr. Eugene Saenger, says the Atlas is...in the first instance... the prelude to a manned rocket. He says, "Only then will the real probing of the universe begin."

Moscow radio broadcast the news without comment.

The Geneva conference on nuclear weapons tests has recessed until after the Christmas and New Year's holidays. The talks have made some progress...but today all three delegations...American, British and Russian... warned that long and arduous negotiations lie ahead. The talks will resume on January 5.

General Zakharov...commander of Soviet troops in East Germany...said today that the Red Army will give "a devastating answer" to any violation of the East German frontier. / He made the statement to the East German news agency, in connection with the Berlin crisis. / "Such a war conflict," he said, "would not be restrained to one locality, but would inevitably embrace many peoples and states."

In Moscow, the central committee of the Communist Party today issued a decree...endorsing Khrushchev's agricultural program, and denouncing the "ignominious failures" of the anti-party group. / Khrushchev said in a report last weekend that this group...made up of former leaders like Bulganin, Malenkov and Kaganovich...had obstructed the farm program. And yesterday, appearing before the committee, Bulganin confessed his "crimes." The decree,,,issued today...calls for stepped up production of grain and livestock / Rapid development of agriculture, it says, is Russia's greatest need.

A federal judge in Boston today convicted Bernard Goldfine of criminal contempt. His secretary, Mildren Paperman, was convicted on the same charge. The verdicts climaxed a two-day trial...growing out of the refusal of both defendants to produce records called for by the government in an income tax investigation. Sentences will be pronounced on Monday. The law in this matter prescribes no set penalty.

In Washington today, Goldfine pleaded "not guilty" to charges of contempt of Congress. This other case stems from Goldfine's refusal to answer certain questions put to him last summer by House investigators. Trial on this other charge has been set for March 16.

[The Senate Rackets Committee voted unanimously today to cite Ohio teamster boss William Presser for contempt of Congress. The Justice Department will decide whether to present the charge to a grand jury. Presser declined to answer many questions put to him by the committee on grounds of possible self-incrimination.]

An 18-day strike...that had idled 44-thousand Chrysler workers across the country...was settled today in Detroit. The dispute over work-loads had shut down Dodge Main, a key supplier of Chrysler parts. The settlement calls for a compromise in the daily relief time, workers are to be allowed.

In Chicago, negotiations are in progress...aimed at averting a pilots' strike against American Airlines at midnight tonight. At issue are working rules, and the demand of the Air Line Pilots Association for higher pay.

The Eastern Airlines strike continues. And so does the newspaper strike, here in New York.

Edward R. Murrow: December 19, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

News of the coming visit of Anastas Mikoyan, Soviet trade boss and Number Two in the Kremlin hierarchy, looked like a smartly planned surprise, sprung at the close of the NATO Conference. It seemed time to divert attention from the united stand by the NATO Ministers on the Berlin issue. Maybe Mikoyan's mission will have a bearing on the Berlin crisis. But it probably has more to do with two other objectives. One is to get an invitation to Washington for Khrushchev himself. The other is to make as big a deal as possible to buy American industrial products on credit. That seems to be the main aim.

One of the most striking letters Khrushchev wrote to President Eisenhower earlier this year was the one of June 3 asking for large quantities of consumer goods and the machinery to produce consumers goods, to be financed by long-term credits. Khrushchev spoke of building up Soviet-American trade to a volume of several billion dollars a year. In 1957, the volume was twenty million, of which three-and-a-half million was exports to this country from Russia.

The President waited nearly six weeks to answer this letter and then sent a discouraging reply. He was all for the benefits of more trade, but he reminded Khrushchev that this is a land of private enterprise, and advised him to approach businessmen rather than the Government. Long-term credits, he said, would raise complex legal and political questions.

In an earlier letter the President had criticized the Russians for developing their huge armament program at the expense of Russian consumers and their standard of living. The letter asking for consumer goods followed in due course. The President may not have realized the connection, but the Russians did. Mikoyan went up and down the Soviet Union quoting the two Eisenhower letters. The Americans, he said, find fault with us for not supplying consumer goods to our people, and when we ask them for such goods, and the machinery to turn them out, they refuse to help us. That shows, he said, that the Americans don't mean it. They don't care for the Russian people.

Khrushchev's argument for long-term credits was that Soviet purchases would start out being so much larger than American purchases of Soviet raw materials that the balance of trade would be seriously upset. Hence credits would be essential. He proposed buying nothing on the present embargo list. What he wanted was machinery for making synthetic fibers and plastics, machinery for rolling non-ferrous metals and for making pipe and gas lines, medical equipment and unspecified finished products. Since Mikoyan must have told Khrushchev what to ask for, he can be expected to follow up precisely the same program when he comes here.

He will not be in a bad bargaining position for a suppliant. He will be holding out the lure of a large volume of steady business. And if he gets nothing, he can go on telling the Russian people that we don't care anything about their welfare. [The success of the mission probably will depend - so far as trade is concerned - on finding some way to balance unequal trade by credits supplied privately or semi-privately. But it also will depend on assurances being given that Soviet trade is not to become a weapon against us in the cold war. Neither seems very likely - vast credits to finance Soviet purchases, or a Soviet renunciation of unfair practices in a trade war. [But Mikoyan has little to lose. If he gets anything at all, it is a plus for the Soviet Union. If he gets nothing, the Russians will not lose face. This is another initiative, and in foreign affairs the initiative usually pays.]

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan. —

Word for Today

By wondrous contrivance, the voice of Man has now been heard from outer space. Isaac Newton...250 years ago...felt humble in the presence of the Universe. He said, "I feel like a child who, playing by the seashore, has found a few bright colored shells...while the whole vast ocean of truth stretches out almost untouched and unruffled before my eager fingers."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, December 19, 1958
7:45-8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: For a direct report on this experiment in space communication, we switch to George Herman in Washington.

HERMAN: The first part of the communications experiment in our new Atlas satellite has been carried out successfully. A Christmas message recorded by Pres. Eisenhower on Tuesday, has been successfully received and recorded. Although not of the best listening quality, much of his message can be made out. He said, "This is the President of the United States speaking. Through the marvels of scientific advance, my voice is coming to you from a satellite circling in outer space. My message is a simple one. Through this unique means I convey to you and to all mankind America's wish for peace on earth and good will toward men everywhere." Those are the words, here is how they sounded coming back from space: (SOUND)

PRES. EISENHOWER: This is the President of the United States. Through the marvels of scientific advance, my voice is coming to you from a satellite circling in outer space. My Through this unique means I convey to you and to all mankind America's wishes for peace on earth and good will toward men everywhere.

HERMAN: With this pre-recorded message safely received, the scientists will go on tomorrow to the second part of the experiment and that is, an attempt to send a second signal which is another recording of the same Presidential message to have it recorded by equipment inside the Atlas satellite and then sent back to earth. At the White House, the message from outer space was received over special lines today and the President came into the Press Office to listen to his ownvoice returning from outer space. CBS News White House correspondent Bob Pierpoint reports that the President listened with a bemused air and commented that despite the buzzing and fading, the gist of his message gotthrough all right. Two other tests of the Atlas equipment are already considered imminently successful. One was a test of the missile itself under conditions of maximum stress. It must be remembered that the shell of the huge Atlas is such thin steel that it can be moved by truck only when filled with air under pressure to support the skin. In this experiment, Atlas was made to curve its flight path while inside the buffeting atmosphere. And, this maximum stress flight path is one reason why the orbit was not higher and better and why less weight was carried than could be. The guidance experiment also is considered a major success. As a power demonstration of course the experiment itself is still incomplete since this Atlas carried only 150 pounds of instruments as opposed for example to the more than 2000 pounds of instruments in Russia's Sputnik #3. But, (indistinct) tell officials tell CBS News that using the Atlas as a first stage booster we could now put a five ton satellite into an orbit.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague George Herman reporting ...

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Atlas satellite has just made its fifteenth pass over the United States, carrying a recorded message by President Eisenhower. For a direct report on this experiment in space communication, we switch to George Herman in Washington.

HERMAN: The first part of the communications experiment in our new Atlas satellite has been carried out seccessfully. A Christmas message recorded by President Eisenhower on Tuesday has been successfully received and recorded. Although not of the best listening quality, much of his message can be made out. He said, "This is the President of the United States speaking. Through the marvels of the scientific advance, my voice is coming to you from a satellite circling in outer space. My message is a simple one. Through this unique means I convey to you and to all mankind America's wish for peace on earth and good will toward men everywhere." Those are the words, here is how they sounded coming back from space:

PRES. EISENHOWER: This is the President of the United States. Through the marvels of scientific advance, my voice is coming to you from a satellite circling in outer space. Through this unique means I convey to you and to all mankind America's wishes for peace on earth and good will toward men everywhere.

HERMAN: With this pre-recorded message safely received, the scientists will go on tomorrow to the second part of the experiment and that is, an attempt to send a second signal which is another recording of the same Presidential message to have it recorded by equipment inside the Atlas satellite and then sent back to earth. At the White House, the message from outer space was received over special lines today and the President came into the Press Office to listen to his own voice returning from outer space. CBS News White House correspondent Bob Pierpoint reports that the President listened with a bemused air and commented that despite the buzzing and fading, the gist of his message got through all right. Two other tests of the Atlas equipment are already considered imminently successful. One was a test of the missile itself under conditions of maximum stress. It must be remembered that the shell of the huge Atlas is such thin steel that it can be moved by truck only when filled with air under pressure to support the skin. In this experiment, Atlas was made to curve its flight path while inside the buffeting atmosphere. And, this maximum stress flight path is one reason why the orbit was not higher and better and why less weight was carried then could be. The guidance experiment also is considered a major success. As a power demonstration of course the experiment itself is still incomplete since this Atlas carried only 150 pounds of instruments as opposed for example to the more than 2,000 pounds of instruments in Russia's Sputnik #3. But, (indistinct) officials tell CBS News that using the Atlas as a first stage booster we could now put a five ton satellite into orbit.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Geroge Herman, reporting from Washington on the four and a half ton Atlas missile...placed in orbit by the Air Force last night.

The Atlas achievement is being applauded by newspapers throughout Western Europe. France-Soir...in Paris...carries the headline: "Biggest Satellite in the World launched by U.S.A." The London Evening Standard in an editorial calls the satellite "a symbol of a new world of boundless opportunity opening for mankind," and goes on to say that Britain should have one, too. Kenneth Gatland... of the British Inter-planetary Society says the Atlas shows how satellites may be used as relay stations for world-wide radio and television coverage. And West Germany's rocket scientist, Dr. Eugene Saenger, says the Atlas is...in the first instance...the prelude to a manned rocket. He says, "Only then will the real probing of the universe begin."

Moscow radio broadcast the news without comment.

The Geneva conference on nuclear weapons tests has recessed until after the Christmas and New Year's holidays. The talks have made some progress...but today all three delegations...American, British and Russian...warned that long and arduous negotiations lie ahead. The talks will resume on January 5th.

General Zakharov...commander of Soviet troops in East Germany...said today that the Red Army will give "a devastating answer" to any violation of the East German frontier. He made the statement to the East German news agency in connection with the Berlin crisis. "Such a war conflict," he said, "would not be restrained to one locality but would inevitably embrace many peoples and states."

In Moscow, the central committee of the Communist Party today issued a decree, endorsing Khrushchev's agricultural program and denouncing the "ignominious failures" of the anti-party group. Khrushchev said in a report last week-end that this group...made up of former leaders like Bulganin, Malenkov and Kaganovich had obstructed the farm program. And yesterday appearing before the committee Bulganin confessedhis "crimes." The decree...issued today...calls for stepped up production of grain and livestock. Rapid development of agriculture, it says, is Russia's greatest need.

A federal judge in Boston today convicted Bernard Goldfine of criminal contempt. His secretary, Mildred Paperman, was convicted on the same charge. The verdicts climaxed a two-day trial...growing out of the refusal of both defendants to produce records called for by the government in an income tax investigation. Sentences will be pronounced on Monday. The law in this matter prescribes no set penalty.

In Washington today, Goldfine pleaded "not guilty" to charges of contempt of Congress. This other case stems from Goldfine's refusal to answer certain questions put to him last summer by House investigators. Trial on this other charge has been set for March 16.

An 18-day strike...that had idled 44-thousand Chrysler workers across the country...was settled today in Detroit. The dispute over work-loads had shut down Dodge Main, a key supplier of Chrysler parts. The settlement calls for a compromise in the daily relief time workers are to be allowed.

In Chicago, negotiations are in progress...aimed at averting a pilots' strike against American Airlines at midnight tonight. At issue are working rules and the demand of the Air Line Pilots Association for higher pay.

The Eastern Airlines strike continues. And so does the newspaper strike here in New York.

News of the coming visit of Anastas Mikoyan, Soviet trade boss and Number Two in the Kremlin hierarchy, looked like a smartly planned surprise, sprung at the close of the NATO Conference. It seemed time to divert attention from the united stand by the NATO Ministers on the Berlin issue. Maybe Mikoyan's mission will have a bearing on the Berlin crisis. But it probably has more to do with two other objectives. One is to get an invitation to Washington for Khrushchev himself. The other is to make as big a deal as possible to buy American industrial products on credit. That seems to be the main aim.

One of the most striking letters Khrushchev wrote to President Eisenhower earlier this year was the one of June 3 asking for large quantities of consumer goods and the machinery to produce consumers goods, to be financed by long-term credits. Khrushchev spoke of building up Soviet-American trade to a volume of several billion dollars a year. In 1957, the volume was twenty million, of which three-and-a-half million was exports to this country from Russia.

The President waited nearly six weeks to answer this letter and then sent a discouraging rep,y. He was all for the benefits of more trade, but he reminded Khrushchev that this is a land of private enterprise, and advised him to approach businessmen rather than the Government. Long-term credits, he said, would raise complex legal and political questions.

In an earlier letter the President had criticized the Russians for developing their huge armament program at the expense of Russian consumers and their standard of living. The letter asking for consumer goods followed in due course. The President may not have realized the connection, but the Russiand did. Mikoyan went up and down the Soviet Union quoting the two Eisenhower letters. The Americans, he said, find fault with us for not supplying consumer goods to our people, and when we ask them for such goods, and the machinery to turn them out, they refuse to help us. That shows, he said, that the Americans don't mean it. They don't care for the Russian people.

Khrushchev's argument for long-term credits was that Soviet purchases would start out being so much larger than American purchases of Soviet raw materials that the balance of trade would be seriously upset. Hence credits would be essential. He proposed buying nothing on the present embargo list. What he wanted was machinery for making synthetic fibers and plastics, machinery for rolling non-ferrous metals and for making pipe and gas lines, medical equipment and unspecified finished products. Since Mikoyan must have told Khrushchev what to ask for, he can be expected to follow up precisely the same program when he comes here.

He will not be in a bad bargaining position for a suppliant. He will be holding out the lure of a large volume of steady business. And if he gets nothing, he can go on telling the Russian people that we don't care anything about their welfare. The success of the mission probably will depend - so far as trade is concerned - on finding some way to balance unequal trade by credits supplied privately or semi-privately. But it also will depend on assurances being given that Soviet trade is not to become a weapon against us in the cold war. Neither seems very likely - vast credits to finance Soviet purchases, or a Soviet renunciation of unfair practices in a trade war. But Mikoyan has little to lose. If he gets anything at all, it is a plus for the Soviet Union. If he get nothing, the Russians will not lose face. This is another initiative, and in foreign affiars ihe initiative usually pays.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: By wondrous contrivance, the voice of Man has now been heard from outer space. Isaac Newton...250 years ago...felt humble in the presence of the Universe. He said, "I feel like a child who, playing by the seashore, has found a few bright colored shells...whilethe whole vast ocean of truth stretches out almost untouched and unruffled before my eager fingers."

Goodnight and good luck!

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., Dec. 22, 1958

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower issued an UNUSUAL statement...revealing in bold outline the budget he will submit for the next fiscal year. Normally, budget figures are kept secret until the President sends a message to Congress around the middle of January. Many details are STILL secret, but this afternoon...in a special announcement...Mr. Eisenhower said: "The budget for fiscal 1960 has now been decided. It will be a BALANCED budget in the general area of 77-billion dollars." This is about 2-billion, 200-million dollars LESS than is expected to be spent during The CURRENT fiscal year, ending June 30th. Nevertheless, in Mr. Eisenhower's phrase, the new budget "will provide higher expenditures than ever before in time of peace for national defense." Some domestic programs having nothing to do with defense also will continue at a record high level. The President explains the OVER-ALL lower budget figure by noting that "temporary programs" in agriculture, unemployment insurance and housing are being discontinued. The White House news secretary, JAMES Hagerty, added a political note, recalling President Eisenhower's attack on Democratic "spenders" during the November campaign. Said Hagerty: "The President and the Administration hope that the Congress of the United States will ALSO do its best to keep the budget in balance."

Russia announced its new budget today...calling for expenditure of more than 700-billion rubles in 1959. Translated into dollars...at the official rate of exchange...the Soviet budget would run just under 177-billion dollars. But this is a most inaccurate measure since the exchange rate is entirely artificial. In fact, the budget announced by the Kremlin is misleading in all respects. It calls...again...for less expenditures for defense. But many military items are concealed in hidden categories. For example, the biggest money hike of all is for the expansion of industrial production. And...obviously...much of this expansion will be devoted to improving the Soviet military machine. A Washington official, who deals with fiscal problems, made this wry comment:

"If you had a good-sized staff," he said, "you MIGHT work out a fair comparison between the Russian budget and our budget in a few years...IF you had full access to all intelligence reports."

That four and a half ton Atlas satellite...launched last Thursday night... is still going strong, orbiting around the Earth. And today it was the subject of a new experiment...following up the Christmas message by President Eisenhower that was broadcast from it on Friday. This afternoon, while the Atlas was making its 54th pass over the United States, an engineer "spoke" to it by radio from the Signal Corps Communications Center at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey. The satellite dutifully recorded the engineer's instructions...~~dum~~, even, to his introduction: "Ladies and gentlemen, may I present the voice of the United States." Later, the the Atlas was commanded by Fort Sam Houston, Texas, to re-broadcast the President's message WITH the new introduction. And the re-broadcast was heard on a good signal in California, Georgia, Arizona and Texas. ~~In the face of this success, a word of warning today from Senate Democratic Leader~~ Lyndon Johnson. ~~We must not, he said, let the Atlas become the basis for~~ "an exaggerated opinion of our capabilities." We must not "diminish" our efforts ~~in the exploration of outer space, said Senator Johnson.~~

The Walkouts continued today against Eastern and American Airlines... placing a heavy load of holiday travel on the other air carriers. There were no negotiations between the Air Line Pilots Association and representatives of American Airlines...altho federal mediators spent a lot of time on the phone, trying to lay the basis for new talks. Eastern's flight engineers and mechanics have been on strike since before Thanksgiving.

Here in New York today, representatives of the newspapers and the deliverymen's union DID resume negotiations...but no settlement so far.

Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine was sentenced to three months in federal prison for contempt of court because of his refusal to produce certain tax records demanded by the Government. His secretary, Miss Mildred Paperman, sentenced to serve 10 days for the same offense. Sentences to be served, starting January seventh, but both defendants released in the meantime on personal recognizance bonds of one thousand dollars. Goldfine told the court before sentence was passed that he was "very sorry" and had meant no disrespect. Miss Paperman made a similar statement. But Federal Judge Charles Wyzanski Junior said they were both "intimate" with tribunal proceedings and were "well aware of the penalties for flouting the authority of his court." On hearing sentence, Goldfine...surrounded by his battery of six defense attorneys...looked dismayed. His confidential secretary wept. Judge Wyzanski said he had not ordered immediate imprisonment, because he had "no wish" for the defendants to spend this holiday season behind bars. Also, he said the delay would give them "adequate opportunity" to prepare an appeal. There is almost no doubt an appeal WILL be filed. Goldfine, of course, must still go on trial in Washington on charges of contempt of Congress...growing out of those House committee hearings last summer. The date for THAT trial---March 16th.

The United States today signed an agreement...granting Yugoslavia nearly 95-million dollars in economic aid. The aid is spread-out over the next fiscal year...and includes 900-thousand tons of wheat and 27-thousand tons of cotton---all in the form of farm surpluses.

Yugoslavia will pay for the grain in dinars, its local currency. And this money will be placed in a special fund. From this fund, money will in turn be made available to Yugoslavia in the form of a 30-year loan for the development of its industry and agriculture.

In Cairo today, Russia signed also an agreement...under which it will build five new airfields for Nasser's United Arab Republic. Russia also agreed to help with the construction of several factories "in the Egyptian region." ~~According to Cairo radio, these projects "are in accordance with the agreement of cooperation concluded between the U.S.S.R. and the U.A.R. in January, 1958."~~

A group of West German industrialists today also offered to help Nasser build the Aswan High Dam. The West German Foreign Office said the OFFER amounted to about 48-million dollars. (Russia recently offered a hundred million dollars to help DAM THE NILE.

Disarmament policy has long been a step-child of the administration .. Not because its unrelated to foreign policy and weapons-making, [redacted] OBVIOUSLY IT WOULD [redacted] closely affect them [redacted] perhaps because ITS of the very fruitlessness of our efforts to reach any adequately-safeguarded agreement with the soviet union.. In the past, [redacted] p[redacted]n, Disarmament policy was made by a small White House staff, [redacted] in consultation with the State Department. Recently it has come under the state department itself..

While the fruits of disarmament or [redacted] arms-limitation may seem as far away as ever, nevertheless for the first time, [redacted] no less than TWO international conferences on that vital [redacted] but elusive subject, were [redacted] running concurrently in Geneva.. And the withdrawal of of our troops from Berlin, WITHIN SIX MONTHS is now demanded by Russia, WITHIN 6 MO

[redacted] The Senate, which has a constitutional role to advise on foreign policy, does most of its ADVISING in the form of [redacted] criticism, after the act.. It learns about most of the important decisions after they are made, when it may be too late to modify them...A few of its leaders, of course, are kept abreast of what's going on, but the importance of congress in forming foreign policy, has been, to say the least, negligible.

Senator Hubert Humphrey proposes to change this.. [redacted] The Minnesota Democrat wants to assert the role of congress, to shape policy in all three directions..weapons, disarmament and foreign affairs.. as chairman of the disarmament sub-committee of the foreign relations committee, he has scheduled an investigation for the middle of January, that will cover all three fields. He hopes to find out to what extent they're inter-related, something NOBODY [redacted] seems exactly sure about, and he will ask where this inter-relation IS leading us, and OUGHT to lead us. He will not limit his interrogration to administration officials, but will call-in outsiders.. Thus Washington will hear its first serious discussion of such great questions as disengagement in Europe, how to proceed with nuclear weapons control, and whether to continue to make [redacted] NO distinction between large and small weapons in any [redacted] discussion of [redacted] ban on nuclear testing.

Senator Humphrey has listed five areas for the senate inquiry.. His first question IS: what SHOULD ~~our~~ disarmament policy BE [redacted] if the Geneva conference on nuclear testing succeeds, and what [redacted] should IT BE [redacted] if the conference fails.?

His second question may be the most important.. "To what extent, Humphrey will ask, should arms control measures, such as those to guard against surprise attacks, OR withdrawal of troops, be linked to political measures to achieve greater security and stability in Europe? including the reunification of Germany.. "Withdrawal of troops" is, of course another way of saying that contraversial word "Dis-enegagement" And he'll be asking how wise it would be to link disengagement, with our attempt to re-unify Germany. This will be going much further than the State Department's exploration, THUS FAR, it has [redacted] turned thumbs-down on "disengagement."

The third question also explores forbidden ground...it asks, how important it is to have communist china a party to any agreement in the field of nuclear weapons control.. And the fourth will ask if it has been wise for the United States to base so much of its defense plans and efforts upon a reliance on nuclear weapons. He will ask whether we should make a distinction in the size of nuclear weapons, in discussing a control plan. AND THIS [redacted] raises the question of the use OF tactical nuclear weapons, upon which so much of our defense now rests.

Humphrey's final question deals with outer space..He'll ask whether there are ways to make progress toward the preservation of outer-space for peaceful purposes. This may be a gesture in the direction of Majority leader Lynden Johnson, who has annexed outer space as his particular hobby..

The other Senators on the Humphrey sub-committee are Kennedy, Long, Wiley, Hickenlooper and Langer. The armed services committee also had a disarmament sub-committee this year, and its members are expected to sit in with the Humphrey committee. This would bring-in Symington, Pastore, Byrd, Bridges and Saltenstall. That means that three of the leading democratic presidential possibilities will take part in the hearings. Humphrey, Kennedy and Symington. However, the initiative is Senator Humphrey's and as chairman, he stands to gain the most prestige..

Coming after his Moscow visit, and his eight hour interview with Premier Kruschev. The hearings, if they develop as he intends.. might move Humphrey close to the top, among the democratic candidates in 1960..

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News...(Pause) 2secs

—o—

First, here's George Bryan with a word about the Weather.

The chief U.S. delegate to the Geneva Conference on suspension of nuclear tests says everyting is going as well as expected. Ambassador James J. Wadsworth, home for the Holidays, says he's neither optimistic nor pessimistic... In Moscow Anastas Mikoyyan was equally non-committal... said the soviet Deputy Premier, he's really coming to America on a vacation... But he added that if his trip were a success, it would produce great good for all the world"

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower issued an unusual statement...revealing in bold outline the budget he will submit for the next fiscal year. Normally, budget figures are kept secret until the President sends a message to Congress around the middle of January. Many details are still secret, but this afternoon...in a special announcement...Mr. Eisenhower said: "The budget for fiscal 1960 has now been decided. It will be a balanced budget in the general area of 77-billion dollars." This is about 2-billion, 200-million dollars less than is expected to be spent during the current fiscal year, ending June 30th. Nevertheless, in Mr. Eisenhower's phrase, the new budget "will provide higher expenditures than ever before in time of peace for national defense." Some domestic programs having nothing to do with defense also will continue at a record high level. The President explains the over-all lower budget figure by noting that "temporary programs" in agriculture, unemployment insurance and housing are being discontinued. The White House news secretary, James Hagerty, added a political note, recalling President Eisenhower's attack on Democratic "spenders" during the November campaign. Said Hagerty: "The President and the Administration hope that the Congress of the United States will also to its best to keep the budget in balance."

Russia announced its new budget today...calling for expenditure of more than 700-billion rubles in 1959. Translated into dollars...at the official rate of exchange...the Soviet budget would run just under 177-billion dollars. But this is a most inaccurate measure since the exchange rate is entirely artificial. If fact, the budget announced by the Kremlin is misleading in all respects. It calls...again...for less expenditures for defense. But many military items are concealed in hidden categories. For example, the biggest money hike of all is for the expansion of industrial production. And...obviously...much of this expansion will be devoted to improving the Soviet military machine. A Washington official, who deals with fiscal problems, made this wry comment: "If you had a good-sized staff," he said, "you might work out a fair comparison between the Russian budget and our budget in a few years...if you had full access to all intelligence reports."

That four and a half ton Atlas satellite...launched last Thursday night... is still going strong, orbiting around the Earth. And today it was the subject of a new experiment...following up the Christmas message by President Eisenhower that was broadcast from it on Friday. This afternoon, while the Atlas was making its 54th pass over the United States, an engineer "spoke" to it by radio from the Signal Corps Communications Center at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey. The satellite dutifully recorded the engineer's instructions...even, to his introduction: "Ladies and gentlemen, may I present the voice of the United States." Later, the Atlas was commanded by Fort Sam Houston, Texas, to re-broadcast the President's message with the new introduction. And the re-broadcast was heard on a good signal in California, Georgia, Arizona and Texas.

The walkouts continued today against Eastern and American Airlines... placing a heavy load of holiday travel on the other air carriers. There were no negoitations between the Air Line Pilots Association and representatives of American Airlines...although federal mediators spent a lot of time on the phone, trying to lay the basis for new talks. Eastern's flight engineers and mechanics have been on strike since before Thanksgiving.

Here in New York today, representatives of the newspapers and the delivery-men's union did resume negotiations...but no settlement so far.

Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine was sentenced to three months in federal prison for contempt of court because of his refusal to produce certain tax records demanded by the Government.. His secretary, Miss Mildred Paperman, sentenced to serve 10 days for the same offense. Sentences to be served, starting

January 7th, but both defendants released in the meantime on personal recognizance bonds of one thousand dollars. Goldfine told the court before sentence was passed that he was "very sorry" and had meant no disrespect. Miss Paperman made a similar statement. But Federal Judge Charles Wyzanski Junior said they were both "intimate" with tribunal proceedings and were "well aware of the penalties for flouting the authority of his court." On hearing sentence, Goldfine..surrounded by his battery of six defense attorneys..looked dismayed. His confidential secretary wept. Judge Wyzanski said he had not ordered immediate imprisonment, because he had "no wish" for the defendants to spend this holiday season behind bars. Also, he said, the delay would give them adequate opportunity to prepare an appeal. There is almost no doubt an appeal will be filed. Goldfine of course must still go on trial in Washington on charges of contempt of Congress.. growing out of those House committee hearings last summer. The date for that trial---March 16th.

The United States today signed an agreement...granting Yugoslavia nearly 95-million dollars in economic aid. The aid is spread out over the next fiscal year...and includes 900 thousand tons of wheat and 27 thousand tons of cotton--- all in the form of farm surpluses. Yugoslavia will pay for tht grain in dinars, its local currency. And this money will be placed in a special fund. From this fund, money will in turn be made available to Yugoslavia in the form of a 30-year loan for the development of its industry and agriculture.

In Cairo today, Russia signed also an agreement...under which it will build five new airfields for Nasser's United Arab Republic. Russia also agreed to help with the construction of several factories "in the Egyptian region."

A group of West German industrialists today also offered to h.lp Nasser build the Aswan High Dam. The West German Foreign Office said the offer amounted to about 48-million dollars. (Russia recently offered a hundred million dollars to help dam the Nile."

Disarmament policy has long been a step-child of the administration...not because it's unrelated to foreign policy and weapons-making. Obviously it would closely affect them. Perhaps it's because of the very fruitlessness of our efforts to reach any adequately-safeguarded agreement with the Soviet Union. In the past, disarmament policy was made by a small White House staff, in consultation with the State Department. Recently it has come under the State Department itself.

While the fruits of disarmament or arms-limitation may seem as far away as ever, nevertheless for the first time, no less than two international conferences on that vital but elusive subject were running concurrently in Geneva..and the withdrawal of our troops from Berlin within six months is nowdemanded by Russia.

The Senate, which has a constitutional role to advise on foreign policy, does most of its advising in the form of criticism, after the act. It learns about most of the important decisions after they are made, when it may be too late to modify them. A few of its leaders, of course are kept abreast of what's going on. But the importance of congress in forming foreign policy, has been to say the least, negligible.

Senator Hubert Humphrey proposes to change this. The Minnesota Democrat wants to assert the role of congress to shape policy in all three directions... weapons, disarmament and foreign affairs....as chairman of the disarmament subcommittee of the foreign relations committee, he has scheduled an investigation for the middle of January that will cover all three fields. He hopes to find out to what extent they're inter-related, something nobody seems exactly sure about, and he will ask where this inter-relation is leading us, and ought to lead us. He will not limit his interrogation to administration officials, but will call in outsiders...thus Washington will hear its first serious discussion of such great questions as disengagement in Europe, how to proceed with nuclear weapons control, and whether to continue to make no distinction between large and small weapons in any discussion of a ban on nuclear testing.

Senator Humphrey has listed five areas for the senate inquiry...His first question is: what should our disarmament policy be if the Geneva conference on nuclear testing succeeds, and what should it be if the conference fails?

His second question may be the most important. "To what extent," Humphrey will ask, "should arms control measures, such as those to guard against surprise attacks, or withdrawal of troops, be linked to political measures to achieve greater security and stability in Europe including the reunification of Germany." "Withdrawal of troops" is, of course another way of saying that contraversial word "Dis-engagement." And he'll be asking how wise it would be to link dis-engagement with our attempt to re-unify Germany. This will be going much further than the State Department's exploration. Thus far, it has turned thumbs-down on "disengagement."

The third question also explores forbidden ground...it asks, how important it is to have communist China a party to any agreement in the field of nuclear weapons control. And the fourth will ask if it has been wise for the United States to base so much of its defense plans and efforts upon a reliance on nuclear weapons. He will ask whether we should make a distinction in the size of nuclear weapons, in discussing a control plan. And this raises the question of the use of tactical nuclear weapons upon which so much of our defense now rests.

Humphrey's final question deals with outer space. He'll ask whether there are ways to make progress toward the preservation of outer-space for peaceful purposes. This may be a gesture in the direction of majority leader Lyndon Johnson, who has annexed outer space as his particular hobby.

The other senators on the Humphrey sub-committee are Kennedy, Long, Wiley, Hickenlooper and Langer. The armed services committee also had a disarmament sub-committee this year, and its members are expected to sit in with the Humphrey committee. This would bring in Symington, Pastore, Byrd, Bridges and Saltenstall.

That means that three of the leading democratic presidential possibilities will take part in the hearings, Humphrey, Kennedy and Symington. However, the initiative is Senator Humphrey's and as chairman, he stands to gain the most prestige.

Coming after his Moscow visit and his eight hour interview with Premier Khrushchev, the hearings, if they develop as he intends, might move Humphrey close to the top among the democratic candidates in 1960.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First, here's George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The chief U.S. delegate to the Geneva Conference on suspension of nuclear tests says everything is going as well as expected. Ambassador James J. Wadsworth, home for the holidays, says he's neither "optimistic nor pessimistic." In Moscow Anastas Mikoyan was equally non-committal, said the Soviet Deputy Premier, he's really coming to America on a vacation. But he added that "if his trip were a success, it would produce great good for all the world."

This is Larry LeSueur....Goodnight.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 23, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that the people of the United States and their government want to make "peace on earth, good will toward men" "a reality for all human kind." He said that although the United States will never retreat in the face of force...or the threat of force..."it will always welcome and accept serious and honest proposals to negotiate international differences." The United States, he said, will remain strong because that is the only way in today's world that the peace can be protected. But it will never use its strength to break the peace.

Mr. Eisenhower spoke at the annual lighting of the national Christmas tree in Washington, which...this year...is a 75-foot Montana spruce.

In his first Christmas broadcast...in Rome...Pope John called for the defense of Christian principles against those whom he described as "the enemies of God." Christian principles, he said, "are the bulwark of true justice, now and always." The Pope also invited the Orthodox churches of Eastern Europe to return to the Church of Rome.

Russia said today that it is ready to discuss European security, if the West will not insist that the German problem be settled first. The statement was issued by the official Soviet news agency Tass in reaction to last week's meeting of NATO ministers in Paris. Tass said the NATO meeting was unproductive in the way of easing international tension. Nevertheless, it said, the members of NATO do not appear on the basis of their communique to link settlement of the European security problem with a previous settlement of the German question. Tass says that if this is true, then talks on the broad question of European security might bear fruit.

Sppeches praising Khrushchev's new education program were heard today by the Supreme Soviet, [redacted] Russia's version of Parliament. Under the program, all Russian students...after eight years of schooling...must work parttime in factories and on farms. The product (according to the Russian educators who spoke today) will be a new type of person, "a builder of Communist society." Overwhelming approval of the program is expected to be voted tomorrow or Thursday.

→

President Nasser of the United Arab Republic today denounced the Communist Party in Syria as "an enemy of Arab nationalism." Some Communists, he said, have even suggested that Syria secede from the U.A.R. Nasser spoke at a mass rally in Port Said...celebrating the second anniversary of the withdrawal of British and French troops. He said, "We shall smite down anybody who is opposed to Arab nationalism. We will fight reaction and opportunism to set up a free, democratic and cooperative community."

In Tunisia today, nine men were sentenced to death on charges of plotting to assassinate President Bourguiba. The accused were said to be followers of Ben Youssef, a bitter opponent of Bourguiba now living in Egypt. Ben Youssef already has been sentenced to death in absentia.

Secretary General Hammarskjold arrived in Egypt today to spend Christmas with United Nations forces in the Gaza Strip. He stopped on the way at Beirut for a conference with President Chehab of Lebanon. After Christmas, Hammarskjold will visit Jordan, Egypt and the Sudan.

The Arab refugee problem is said to be one of the questions being discussed.

Assistant Secretary of State Rountree reported to President Eisenhower today on his two-week fact-finding tour of the Middle East. Rountree was in the White House for half an hour and then slipped out a side door.

Reports from Paris say that Premier DeGaulle has begun making arrangements to come to the United States early next year. President Eisenhower has invited DeGaulle to visit Washington, but the invitation has not been formally accepted. Apparently there will be no formal acceptance until DeGaulle's election as president of the Fifth Republic becomes official next month.

Chiang Kai-shek today announced that he will not seek re-election as president of Nationalist China after his present term expires in 1960. He will then have served two six-year terms. Presumably, Chiang would continue as head of the ruling Kuomintang Party.

The Chinese Communists are keeping up their alternate-day bombardment of the Quemoy complex. The islands today were hit by more than four thousand shells.

Here in New York, American Airline officials have accepted a National Mediation Board proposal for settling the strike called last Friday by the Air Line Pilots Association. The pilots have not announced whether they will accept. The arbitration proposal calls for a pay increase and covers working conditions...such as benefits relating to flying time and time away from home...but details have not been announced.

Federal mediators say that "some progress" has been made toward settling the deliverymen's strike against New York City's major daily newspapers. Another negotiating session has been scheduled for tomorrow.

Sales in New York City department and specialty stores are reported down 7 percent, compared to a year ago, because of the absence of newspaper advertising. In two weeks, New York newspapers are reported to have lost 20-million dollars in advertising revenue.

In Washington, the government reports an increase of two-tenths of one percent in the cost of living in November. The increase after two months in which the consumer price index remained steady is attributed principally to the higher cost of new cars.

Edward R. Murrow: December 23, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Only a financial wizard can say just what a budget means, or will do, to a country. But budgets are ~~not~~ Not drawn up for wizards, they are compiled to convey a message to the public. Two budgets burst into the news yesterday, President Eisenhower's, and that of the Soviet Minister of Finance. They brought quite different messages. The keynote of the Eisenhower budget was balance. It was a promise to stop inflation. The keynote of the Soviet budget was progress. It was a promise to expand.

The difference is striking, for the United States and the Soviet Union are engaged in the greatest economic rivalry of all time, and the coming year will see that rivalry at its highest pitch so far. The American budget in effect decrees, that our expansion is to be sternly limited, because of the danger of inflation. The Soviet budget welcomes the growth of population, and undertakes to finance still greater growth in production.

Quite apart from what the Soviet budget really does, which only the wizard knows, is the fact that the Soviet public is promised more industrial activity than ever before, more education, more scientific research, and higher wages. That was the message the Kremlin wanted to get to the people. It wanted it understood, that spending on defense would go down next year, and spending on the "good things of life" would go up. The message probably isn't true. So much military expense in the Soviet Union is hidden under other budget items that it is hardly likely that military outlays can go down, in a time of building the vast weapons of this era. But that is what the Kremlin wanted the public to believe. Mr. Eisenhower said the opposite, military expenditure will go up somewhat, and spending on social objectives will go down.

It is impossible to draw close comparisons between countries from their budgets. For instance, Soviet schools this next year are to cost ninety-four billion rubles. A ruble is probably worth around ten cents, so the cost of Soviet education comes to just under ten billion dollars. This is a huge outlay, much bigger than anything our Federal Government has to spend. But our schools are financed mostly locally or privately, and the total annual cost is nearer sixteen billion dollars.

The Soviet spending on scientific research is to be just under three billion dollars next year. This is far more than our Federal Government spends. But it isn't so much more than the total spent here by the Government, private foundations, schools and corporations.

Our economy still towers above the Soviet economy. This may give us comfort this year, but the disturbing thought is not this year but the years to come. The Soviet Union can overtake us productively, educationally and scientifically. For the Russians budget for growth. We don't. What the Russians spend on industrial expansion, education, research and the like, is a greater share of their gross national product than ours. President Eisenhower proposes to spend for public purposes a smaller share of the gross national product, than in any year since 1950.

The Eisenhower budget is brought down from eighty billions in the current year to seventy-seven billions. With military costs up perhaps a billion, other services will have to be drastically reduced. The President says that savings will be made in the programs for agriculture, unemployment ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ and housing. [Any savings in unemployment insurance will disregard the advice of economists who are sure that we would not have weathered the recession so well without unemployment insurance. But not only will there be cutbacks, the Administration will disregard many vital national needs of a growing country. It will have to neglect education, health, urban renewal and aid to distressed areas.]

The President says that balance in the budget will be planned without a general tax increase. This seems to be contradicted by the proposal to increase postal rates and gasoline taxes. For these will hit about as many people as a rise in the income tax. Many in this country will fervently agree with the President that a balanced budget is the first essential in our economy. The Washington Post says today: "The President had the alternative of acquainting the people of the national needs as well as the danger of inflation, and then of proposing both the programs and the taxes to meet the problem. What he has chosen instead seems to us to reflect a lack of faith in the good sense of the country." It calls the budget "a sad mistake, the tired budget of a tired Administration."

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

Even when it comes to announcing a budget, the leaders of Russia are mindful of the propaganda values. The new Soviet budget gives the impression that Russia is more interested in education and scientific research than in spending for military hardware. Our budget reflects no expansion for social improvement. One recalls Bernard Shaw's question: "What price salvation?"

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that the people of the United States and their government want to make "peace on earth, good will toward men" "a reality for all human kind." He said that although the United States will never retreat in the face of force...or the threat of force...."it will always welcome and accept serious and honest proposals to negotiate international differences." The United States, he said, will remain strong because that is the only way in today's world that the peace can be protected. But it will never use its strength to break the peace. Mr. Eisenhower spoke at the annual lighting of the national Christmas tree in Washington, which...this year...is a 75-foot Montana spruce.

In his first Christmas broadcast...in Rome...Pope John called for the defense of Christian principles against those whom he described as "the enemies of God." Christian principles, he said, "are the bulwark of true justice, now and always." The Pope also invited the Orthodox churches of Eastern Europe to return to the Church of Rome.

Russia said today that it is ready to discuss European security, if the West will not insist that the German problem be settled first. The statement was issued by the official Soviet news agency Tass in reaction to last week's meeting of NATO ministers in Paris. Tass said the NATO meeting was unproductive in the way of easing international tension. Nevertheless, it said, the members of NATO do not appear on the basis of their communique to link settlement of the European security problem with a previous settlement of the German question. Tass says that if this is true, then talks on the broad question of European security might bear fruit.

Speeches praising Khrushchev's new education program were heard today by the Supreme Soviet, Russia's version of parliament. Under the program, all Russian students...after eight years of schooling, must work part-time in factories and on farms. The product (according to the Russian educators who spoke today) will be a new type of person, "a builder of Communist society." Overwhelming approval of the program is expected to be voted tomorrow or Thursday.

President Nasser of the United Arab Republic today denounced the Communist Party in Syria as "an enemy of Arab nationalism." Some Communists, he said, have even suggested that Syria secede from the U.A.R. Nasser spoke at a mass rally in Port Said...celebrating the second anniversary of the withdrawal of British and French troops. He said, "We shall smite down anybody who is opposed to Arab nationalism. We will fight reaction and opportunism to set up a free, democratic and cooperative community."

In Tunisia today, nine men were sentenced to death on charges of plotting to assassinate President Bourguiba. The accused were said to be followers of Ben Youssef, a bitter opponent of Bourguiba now living in Egypt. Ben Youssef already has been sentenced to death in absentia.

Secretary General Hammarskjold arrived in Egypt today to spend Christmas with United Nations forces in the Gaza Strip. He stopped on the way at Beirut for a conference with President Chehab of Lebanon. After Christmas, Hammarskjold will visit Jordan, Egypt and the Sudan. The Arab refugee problem is said to be one of the questions being discussed.

Assistant Secretary of State Rountree reported to President Eisenhower today on his two-week fact-finding tour of the Middle East. Rountree was in the White House for half an hour and then slipped out a side door.

Reports from Paris say that Premier DeGaulle has begun making arrangements to come to the United States early next year. President Eisenhower has invited DeGaulle to visit Washington, but the invitation has not been formally accepted. Apparently there will be no formal acceptance until DeGaulle's election as president of the Fifth Republic becomes official next month.

Chiang Kai-shek today announced that he will not seek re-election as president of Nationalist China after his present term expires in 1960. He will then have served two six-year terms. Presumably, Chiang would continue as head of the ruling Kuomintang Party.

The Chinese Communists are keeping up their alternate-day bombardment of the Quemoy complex. The islands today were hit by more than four thousand shells.

Here in New York, American Airline officials have accepted a National Mediation board proposal for settling the strike called last Friday by the Air Line Pilots Association. The pilots have not announced whether they will accept. The arbitration proposal calls for a pay increase and covers working conditions... such as benefits relating to flying time and time away from home...but details have not been announced.

Federal mediators say that "some progress" has been made toward settling the deliverymen's strike against New York City's major daily newspapers. Another negotiating session has been scheduled for tomorrow.

Sales in New York City department and specialty stores are reported down seven percent compared to a year ago, becuuse of the absence of newspaper advertising. In two weeks, New York newspapers are reported to have lost 20-million dollars in advertising revenue.

In Washington, the government reports an increase of two-tenths of one percent in the cost of living in November. The increase after two months in which the consumer price index remained steady is attiibuted principally to the higher cost of new cars.

Only a financial wizard can say just what a budget means or will do to a country. But budgets are not drawn up for wizards, they are compiled to convey a message to the public. Two budgets burst into the news yesterday, President Eisenhower's and that of the Soviet Minister of Finance. They brought quite different messages. The keynote of the Eisenhower budget was balance. It was a promise to stop inflation. The keynote of the Soviet budget was progress. It was a promise to expand.

The difference is striking, for the United States and the Soviet Union are engaged in the greatest economic rivalry of all time, and the coming year will see that rivalry at its highest pitch so far. The American budget in effect decrees that our expansion is to be sternly limited because of the danger of inflation. The Soviet budget welcomes the growth of population and undertakes to finance still greater growth in production.

Quite apart from what the Soviet budget really does, which only the wizard knows, is the fact that the Soviet public is promised more industrial activity than ever before, more education, more scientific research and higher wages. That was the message the Kremlin wanted to get to the people. It wanted it understood that spending on defense would go down next year, and spending on the "good things of life" would go up. The message probably isn't ture. So much military expense in the Soviet Union is hidden under other budget items that it is hardly likely that military outlays can go down, in a time of building the vast weapons of this era. But that is what the Kremlin wanted the public to believe. Mr. Eisenhower said the opposite, military expenditure will go up somewhat, and spending on social objectives will go down.

It is impossible to draw close comparisons between countries from their budgets. For instance, Soviet schools this next year are to cost ninety-four billion rubles. A ruble is probably worth around ten cents, so the cost of Soviet education comes to just under ten billion dollars. This is a huge outlay, much bigger than anything our Federal Government has to spend. But our schools are financed mostly locally or privately, and the total annual cost is nearer sixteen billion dollars.

The Soviet spending on scientific research is to be just under three billion dollars next year. This is far more than our Federal Government spends.

But it isn't so much more than the total spent here by the Government, private foundations, schools and corporations.

Our economy still towers above the Soviet economy. This may give us comfort this year, but the disturbing thought is not this year but the years to come. The Soviet Union can overtake us productively, educationally and scientifically. For the Russians budget for growth. We don't. What the Russians spend on industrial expansion, education, research and the like, is a greater share of their gross national product than ours. President Eisenhower proposes to spend for public purposes a smaller share of the gross national product, than in any year since 1950.

The Eisenhower budget is brought down from eighty billions in the current year to seventy-seven billions. With military costs up perhaps a billion other services will have to be drastically reduced. The President says that savings will be made in the programs for agriculture, unemployment, and housing. Any savings in unemployment insurance will disregard the advice of economists who are sure that we would not have weathered the recession so well without unemployment insurance. But not only will there be cutbacks, the Administration will disregard many vital national needs of a growing country. It will have to neglect education, health, urban renewal and aid to distressed areas.

The President says that balance in the budget will be planned without a general tax increase. This seems to be contradicted by the proposals to increase postal rates and gasoline taxes. For these will hit about as many people as a rise in the income tax. Many in this country will fervently agree with the President that a balanced budget is the first essential in our economy. The Washington Post says today: "The President had the alternative of acquainting the people of the national needs as well as the danger of inflation, and then of proposing both the programs and the taxes to meet the problem. What he has chosen instead seems to us to reflect a lack of faith in the good sense of the country." It calls the budget "a sad mistake, the tired budget of a tired Administration."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with a word for today. Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Even when it comes to announcing a budget, the leaders of Russia are mindful of the propaganda values. The new Soviet budget gives the impression that Russia is more interested in education and scientific research than in spending for military hardware. Our budget reflects no expansion for social improvement. One recalls Bernard Shaw's question: "What price salvation?"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 24, 1958

This is the news:

The rank-and-file machinists...striking against Eastern Airlines... have voted to accept a new contract. But the walkout of flight engineers against the airline continues. Details of the machinists settlement were not immediately available. A spokesman for the machinists says they will not be asked to cross picket lines. The pilots' strike against American Airlines also continues. But the pre-Christmas travel rush has begun to level off.

Negotiations were resumed today in the newspaper deliverymen's strike, here in New York. Both sides met for three and a half hours...then recessed until after the Christmas holiday. Federal mediators say that more progress toward a settlement was made.

It is already Christmas in the Middle East...and traditional Christmas services are being held in Bethlehem. Seventeen hundred pilgrims...mostly Israeli Arabs...were allowed to cross the frontier into Jordan to attend the religious ceremonies.

On Cyprus...EOKA, the Greek Cypriot underground, offered the British a conditional Christmas Eve truce. The underground scattered leaflets... saying that it would cease hostilities, if Britain would do the same.

The State Department today rejected Russia's suggestion that talks be held on the broad question of European security---apart from the problem of German reunification. The official Soviet news agency Tass said last night that Russia would be willing to discuss the security question, if the West would not insist that the problem of reunification be settled first. Tass claimed that the NATO ministers...meeting last week in Paris...did not link the question of European security with a previous settlement of the German problem. In Washington today, the State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, said that this was a distortion. The fifteen NATO countries, he said, made plain that the problem of European security is closely related to German reunification. The NATO communique said: A solution of the German question...linked with European security arrangements and an agreement on controlled disarmament...remained essential in the view of the NATO foreign and defense ministers. White said that a formal answer to Russia's proposal...of last month...that West Berlin be disarmed and turned into a "free city" is in preparation..."and will be delivered to the Soviet Government following consultations in NATO."

In Moscow, the Supreme Soviet...or Parliament...today unanimously approved Khrushchev's new education program. Under the program, all Russian students after eight years of schooling must work partime in factories and on farms. Persons attending institutions of higher learning...as well as teachers...must also devote part of their time to physical labor. The new law says this will bring the school "closer to life." Actual reorganization of the Soviet educational system will start next year and be completed in three to five years.

Today, the United Arab Republic signed an agreement with Russia... whereby the U.A.R. will get 200-thousand tons of Russian wheat early in 1959. The U.A.R. also signed an agreement with the United States today for an idential amount of wheat from this country. The United States will also supply President Nasser with 100-thousand tons of flour. Nasser is to pay for this in Egyptian pounds. And it is the first sale of American wheat to his government since the Suez crisis of 1956.

India received a 100-million-dollar loan today from the United States...making a total of 175-million dollars loaned to India this year by the American fund for India's economic development. The loans are repayable in Indian currency.

Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana arrived in India today for a 14-day visit...and immediately conferred with Prime Minister Nehru. An Indian spokesman says they discussed "matters of mutual interest, including the recent all-Africa peoples conference in Accra." Nehru said...in welcoming Nkrumah..."You represent a big thing. You are the living symbol of African freedom."

The government crisis in Morocco ended today...when King Mohammed named a new cabinet. Mohammed said he had named a non-partisan cabinet "because Morocco has no institutions...or systems...enabling one to know the real size of tendencies in public opinion." As premier and foreign minister, the king appointed Abdullah Ibrahim, a leader of the dominant left-wing party. One of the primary aims of the new government is the elimination from Moroccan soil of foreign military personnel...including the five American air bases in Morocco.

President Eisenhower today appointed Dr. Herbert Frank York director of ~~defense~~ research and engineering in the Defense Department. This is a new position...set up under the Reorganization Act...and replaces the old job of assistant secretary of defense for research and engineering.

Dr. York has currently been serving as director of research for the Defense Department's advanced research projects agency. Subject to Senate confirmation, he will now supervise all research and engineering within the defense establishment.

MURROW- SCHOENBRUN: December 24, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

At about this time of year the foreign correspondents of C.B.S. News come home for a whole series of round-table sessions, some in public, more in private. / David Schoenbrun is our bureau chief in Paris, and has contributed much to this report over many years. / He also wrote a fine book last year, called AS FRANCE GOES. Welcome home, David, and where is France going?

2) What are the prospects for a settlement in Algeria?

3) Do you think there will be a trade war between France and Britain?

4) In your view is the present close and cordial relationship between France and Germany solidly based? or is it more a personal relationship between Adenauer and De Gaulle?

Back in a moment -
George Bryan

Word for Today

A long time ago, Benjamin Franklin made an observation...expressed a hope...which may be appropriate this Christmas Eve. "Providence," he said, "seems by every means intent on making us a great people. May our virtues public and private grow with us and be durable...that liberty, civil and religious, may be secured to posterity."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, December 24, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: At about this time of year, the foreign correspondents of CBS News come home for a whole series of roundtable sessions. Some in public, many more in private. David Schoenbrun is our bureau chief in Paris and has contributed much to this report overmany many years. He also wrote a fine book last year called As France Goes. Welcome home David, and where is France going?

SCHOENBRUN: And a very Merry Christmas to you Ed Murrow. That's a fine curve to throw at an old comrade on Christmas Eve. I don't know where France is going. France may be going to paradise, possibly to perdition. At the moment, France is in purgatory paying for her sins which have been many in the postwar period. The major sin - the sin of refusing to understand the change that came about as a part of the war of liberation and freedom, the change in the old colonial territories. The French Republic this year died as a result of that sin - was killed in North Africa. If France solves the Algerian problem, France may still go to paradise, if not, perdition will be the answer.

MURROW: Well David, what are the prospects for a settlement in Algeria?

SCHOENBRUN: Not very good Ed. Not good at all. De Gaulle on his lasttrip down there admitted this himself and said that a political solution - which is most desirable is no longer immediately possible. What has to be done in Algeria said De Gaulle is to change the atmosphere of the climate conditions, to permit a political solution to come later. To do this, he has called upon the French people to give one hundred billion francs a year for five years, that's over a billion dollars to a program for schools and housing in Algeria. They are going to give schools to Algerian children when they don't have enough for French children. This is a tremendous gamble with France's future. He's hoping by that to improve conditions so that he can bring peace and the prospects for that are simply not very good.

MURROW: David, do you think they'll be a trade war between France and Britain?

SCHOENBRUN: I think there certainly will be trade skirmishing, there will be battles. I har ... it's hard to believe that there can be a war between these two allies which have so much in common now against another enemy. The British are in a tough position, about 50% of their trade is with the Commonwealth, but 14% with Europe itself. If they're squeezed out of the European market - particularly in automobiles and hard goods that's ... it's gonna put a tremendous bite on Britain. You can't lose 14% of your trade or suffer a decline without a cutback in living standards. And so, the British are torn by this thing. The French are too. They're risking a common market lifting their trade barriers, going into a market place with the Germans who are strong and powerful. The French are not competitive and they may get hurt, but the union of France and Germany is the union of a clay pitcher in an iron pot and they can't bring Britain in on it too, so there's going to be a lot of trouble, Ed, but I don't believe that in the world in which we live, that there really can be a long war between France and Britain. I think we're going to live in 1959 through a very difficult period, I can't foresee how we're going to come out of it. I think it will be tough but no war - not really.

MURROW: David, in your view, is the present close and cordial relationship between France and Germany solidly based or is it more a personal relationship between two old men - Adenauer and De Gaulle?

SCHOENBRUN: Yes and no. Yes and yes - if you like. The way you phrased your question Ed, I've got to take it one by one. There's a close relationship between France and Germany certainly, it's going to continue, it's not really a cordial relationship. They don't understand each other too well, there's been a tough past between them and it's hard to be cordial with the French who are difficult people living in a rather neurotic stage in their history. Personal relationship between Adenauer and De Gaulle - Yes, Ed, that's so important. These are two very great old men. Adenauer, 83 years old I think now, and De Gaulle and up and coming promising youngster of 68, they have enormous admiration for each other. They're cut out of the same stock. You know, the French and Germans are really almost the same race, they're both Teutonic. De Gaulle above all is a man from the north of France, he's much closer to the Germans then he is to the southern French himself in character, he's strong, he's honest, he's tough as steel and so is Konrad Adenauer. The personal relationship of these two giants is a very remarkable wonderful and lucky thing for the Western world at the present moment.

MURROW: But, will the relationship between these two men survive when they have departed the scene or rather will the relationship between the two countries survive?

SCHOENBRUN: I think it will because of the facts of life. The history of Europe is such now that there must be a reconciliation between the French and German people, they understand this, there's no choice, there will be deviations from the path - human progress is one of zigs and zags and we'll see more of these in the future, but Ed, there's ... I think that really the dye has been cast, the mold is ready now. France and Germany are going to work together in the future and I think it's going to build a new power unit in Europe - a European union.

MURROW: Thank you very much Dave Schoenbrun for working with me tonight. Pleasant to have you back again.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The rank-and-file machinists...striking against Eastern Airlines have voted to accept a new contract. But the walkout of flight engineers against the airline continues. Details of the machinists settlement were not immediately available. A spokesman for the machinists says thay will not be asked to cross picket lines. The pilots' strike against American Airlines also continues. But the pre-Christmas travel rush has begun to level off.

Negotiations were resumed today in the newspaper deliverymen's strike, here in New York. Both sides met for three and a half hours...then recessed until after the Christmas holiday. Federal mediators say that more progress toward a settlement was made.

It is already Christmas in the Middle East...and traditional Christmas services are being held in Bethlehem. Seventeen hundred pilgrims...mostly Israeli Arabs...were allowed to cross the frontier into Jordan to attend the religious ceremonies.

On Cyprus...EOKA, the Greek Cypriot underground, offered the British a conditional Christmas Eve truce. The underground scattered leaflets...saying that it would cease hostilities, if Britain would do the same.

The State Department today rejected Russia's suggestion that talks be held on the broad question of European security---apart from the problem of German reunification. The official Soviet news agency Tass said last night that Russia would be willing to discuss the security question, if the West would not insist that the problem of reunification be settled first. Tass claimed that the NATO ministers...meeting last week in Paris...did not link the question of European security with a previous settlement of the German problem. In Washington today, the State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, said that this was a distortion.

The fifteen NATO countries, he said, made plain that the problem of European security is closely related to German reunification. The NATO communique said: A solution of the German question...linked with European security arrangements and an agreement on controlled disarmament...remained essential in the view of the NATO foreign and defense ministers. White said that a formal answer to Russia's proposal...of last month...that West Berlin be disarmed and turned into a "free city" is in preparation..."and will be delivered to the Soviet Government following consultations in NATO."

In Moscow, the Supreme Soviet...or Parliament...today unanimously approved Khrushchev's new education program. Under the program, all Russian students after eight years of schooling must work parttime in factories and on farms. Persons attending institutions of higher learning...as well as teachers...must also devote part of their time to physical labor. The new law says this will bring the school "closer to life." Actual organization of the Soviet educational system will start next year and be completed in three to five years.

Today, the United Arab Republic signed an agreement with Russia...whereby the U.A.R. will get 200-thousand tons of Russian wheat early in 1959. The U.A.R. also signed an agreement with the United States today for an identical amount of wheat from this country. The United States will also supply President Nasser with 100-thousand tons of flour. Nasser is to pay for this in Egyptian pounds. And it is the first sale of American wheat to his government since the Suez crisis of 1956.

India received a 100-million-dollar loan today from the United States... making a total of 175-million dollars loaned to India this year by the American fund for India's economic development. The loans are repayable in Indian currency.

Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana arrived in India today for a 14-day visit... and immediately conferred with Prime Minister Nehru. An Indian spokesman says they discussed "matters of mutual interest, including the recent all-Africa Peoples Conference in Accra." Nehru said...in welcoming Nkrumah..."You represent a big thing. You are the living symbol of African freedom."

The government crisis in Morocco ended today...when King Mohammed named a new cabinet. Mohammed said he had named a non-partisan cabinet "because Morocco has no institutions...or systems...enabling one to know the real size of tendencies in public opinion." As premier and foreign minister, the king appointed Abdullah Ibrahim, a leader of the dominant left-wing party. One of the primary aims of the new government is the elimination from Moroccan soil of foreign military personnel...including the five American air bases in Morocco.

President Eisenhower today appointed Dr. Herbert Frank York director of research and engineering in the Defense Department. This is a new position... set up under the Reorganization Act...and replaces the old job of assistant secretary of defense for research and engineering. Dr. York has currently been serving as director of research for the Defense Department's advanced research projects agency. Subject to Senate confirmation, he will now supervise all research and engineering within the defense establishment.

At about this time of year, the foreign correspondents of CBS News come home for a whole series of roundtable sessions. Some in public, many more in private. David Schoenbrun is our bureau chief in Paris and has contributed much to this report over many many years. He also wrote a fine book last year called As France Goes. Welcome home David. And where is France going?

SCHOENBRUN: And a very Merry Christmas to you Ed Murrow. That's a fine curve to throw at an old comrade on Christmas Eve. I don't know where France is going. France may be going to paradise, possibly to perdition. At the moment, France is in purgatory paying for her sins which have been many in the postwar period. The major sin - the sin of refusing to understand the change that came about as a part of the war of liberation and freedom, the change in the old colonial territories. The French Republic this year died as a result of that sin - was killed in North Africa. If France solves the Algerian problem, France may still go to paradise, if not, perdition will be the answer.

MURROW: Well, David, what are the prospects for a settlement in Algeria?

SCHOENBRUN: Not very good Ed. Not good at all. DeGaulle on his last trip down there admitted this himself and said that a political solution - which is most desirable is no longer immediately possible. What has to be done in Algeria said DeGaulle is to change the atmosphere of the climate conditions, to permit a political solution to come later. To do this, he has called upon the French people to give one hundred billion francs a year for five years, that's over a billion dollars to a program for schools and housing in Algeria. They are going to give schools to Algerian children when dhey don't have enough for French children. This is a tremendous gamble with France's future. He's hoping by that to improve conditions so that he can bring peace and the prospects for that are simply not very good.

MURROW: David, do you think there'll be a trade war between France and Britain?

SCHOENBRUN: I think there certainly will be trade skirmishing, there will be battles. It's hard to believe that there can be a war between these two allies which have so much in common now against another enemy. The British are in a tough position, about fifty percent of their trade is with the Commonwealth, but fourteen percent with Europe itself. If they're squeezed out of the European market - particularly in automobiles and hard goods, it's going to put a tremendous bite on Britain. You can't lose fourteen percent of your trade or suffer a decline without a cutback in living standards. And so, the British are torn by this thing. The French are too. They're risking a common market lifting their trade barriers going into a market place with the Germans who are strong and powerful. The French are not competitive and they may get hurt, but the union of France and Germany is the union of a clay pitcher in an iron pot and they can't bring Britain in on it too, so there's going to be a lot of trouble Ed, but I don't believe that in the the world in which we live, that there really can be a long war between France and Britain. I think we're going to live in 1959 through a very difficult period; I can't foresee how we're going to come out of it. I think it will be tough but no war - not really.

MURROW: David, in your view, is the present close and cordial relationship between France and Germany soldily based or is it more a personal relationship between two old men - Adenauer and DeGaulle?

SCHOENBRUN: Yes and no. Yes and yes - if you like. The way you phrased your question Ed, I've got to take it one by one. There's a close relationship between France and Germany certainly. It's going to continue. It's not really a cordial relationship. They don't understand each other too well, there's been a tough past between them and it's hard to be cordial with the French who are difficult people living in a rather neurotic stage in their history. Personal relationship between Adenauer and DeGaulle - Yes, Ed, that's so important. These are two very great old men. Adenauer, 83 years old I think now, and DeGaulle, an up and coming promising youngster of 68, they have enormous admiration for each other. They're cut out of the same stock. You know, the French and Germans are really almost the same race, they're both Teutonic. DeGaulle above all is a man from the north of France, he's much closer to the Germans than he is to the southern French himself in character, he's strong, he's honest, he's tough as steel and so is Konrad Adenauer. The personal relationship of these two giants is a very remarakable, wonderful and lucky thing for the Western world at the present moment.

MURROW: But, will the relationship between these two men survive when they have departed the scene or rather will the rllationship between the two countries survive?

SCHOENBRUN: I think it will because of the facts of life. The history of Europe is such now that there must be a reconciliation between the French and German people, they understand this, there's no choice, there will be deviations from the path - human progress is one of zigs and zags and we'll see more of those in the future, but Ed, there's...I think that really the dye has been cast, the mold is ready now. France and Germany are going to work together in the future and I think it's going to build a new power unit in Europe - A European union.

MURROW: Thank you very much Dave Schoenbrun for working with me tonight. Pleasant to have you back again.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: A long time ago, Benjamin Franklin made an observation...expressed a hope...which may be appropriate this Christmas Eve. "Providence," he said, "seems by every means intent on making us a great people. May our virtues public and private, grow with us and be durable...that liberty, civil and religious, may be secured to posterity."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 25, 1958

This is the news:

Christmas was not immune to threats from Moscow. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko called on the West...again...to accept Russia's proposals on Berlin. And he repeated that if no agreement is reached in the next five months, Russia will proceed...unilaterally...to turn its occupation functions in Berlin over to the East German regime. He emphasized that this would include control of communications. Gromyko said Russia is willing to listen to counter-proposals. But he gave no sign that it would settle for anything less than the disarming of West Berlin and its conversion into a "free city". Any provocation, he warned...any attempt at aggression against East Germany...might start a war in which millions of persons would die. He said, "The flame of that war would inevitably spread to the North American continent because of today's military techniques."

(more)

Gromyko spoke before Russia's Supreme Soviet, or Parliament. He said no "substantial" progress has been made in the Geneva conference, looking toward a possible agreement for ending nuclear weapons tests. He placed blame for this on the United States and Britain...which have been insisting on an adequate system of inspection and control. Russia, he said, will agree to end nuclear weapons tests anytime---even tomorrow--without reservations or preconditions." He said the motives of the Soviet government are "misunderstood".

As its last business...before adjournment...the Supreme Soviet approved a new penal code...abolishing the law by which the government can punish a person by deporting him and depriving him of Soviet citizenship. The maximum prison sentence for "ordinary" crimes is reduced from 25 years to 10 years. But the death penalty for "crimes against the state"...such as high treason and subversion...remains. And for the first time, the promulgation of "war propaganda" is made a crime. The penalties for making "war propaganda" were not spelled out.

Moscow today announced a successor to General Serov as head of the state security system...which includes the secret police. The new security boss is Alexander Shelepin ~~pronounced with accent on second syllable Shee-lep-in~~, who...at the age of forty...is a member of the central committee of the party and a former secretary of the Communist Youth organization. Serov's resignation was announced early this month, but...so far..there has been no official word as to his fate. A rumor is that he now holds a high army post.

(more)

(more)

Chancellor Adenauer said...in a Christmas Day broadcast...that the German people have not known peace since before the first World War. He recalled the Nazi despotism which followed that war...oppression, unbridled nationalism and love of power...and the death and destruction of World War Two. Since then, he said, there has been reconstruction, "but fear has remained. Security and peace have vanished from the lives of men."

In her annual Christmas message, Queen Elizabeth praised the "great cooperative effort" countries of the British Commonwealth have been making to raise living standards. And she paid tribute to those who contribute to the formulation of ideas and the arts. "It seems to me," she said, "that Christmas is just the time to be grateful to those who add fullness to our lives---the prophets and dreamers, philosophers, men of ideas, artists in paint, sculpture and music." The queen spoke to the Commonwealth by radio and television from Sandringham House, the royal family's traditional Christmas residence. She told of visits she will make abroad in the coming year...ranging from Canada to Australia and India. She added with a smile, "We have no plans for space travel---at the moment." And she said, "I hope that this next year proves to be a year of progress and happiness for us all."

In Vatican City, Pope John resumed a papal custom...interrupted for fourteen years...when he officiated at Christmas masses for diplomats accredited to the Holy See and for the people of Rome. A mass for the diplomatic corps was last celebrated by the late Pope Pius in 1943. The last Christmas mass in St. Peter's Basilica was celebrated in 1944 for the Allied troops who had liberated Rome. Today, after celebrating mass, Pope John visited the sick in two hospitals. Tomorrow, he will visit Rome's largest jail. The last papal visit to a hospital in Rome was in 1870. And the visit to the prison is believed unprecedented.

In Paris, the government announces that TOMORROW all financial markets in France will be closed. This has increased speculation that devaluation of the franc is imminent. The government said the markets ARE BEING closed tomorrow "with a view to avoiding any inopportune reaction." No announcement as to what steps the French government will take.

At midnight...as soon as it was Christmas Day, and because it was an odd-numbered day...Chinese Communist artillery began shelling the off-shore island of Quemoy. The guns of the Nationalist garrison remained silent, in response to orders not to return the Communist fire on Christmas. Then...after firing only 31 shells...the Communist guns also fell silent.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower observed Christmas quietly at the White House...exchanging gifts and sharing turkey with their son, Major John Eisenhower, and his family. Tomorrow, Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower will drive to their Gettysburg farm...where they are expected to stay for about a week.

The National Safety Council warns that traffic deaths this Christmas are exceeding predictions...and that they could set a new record for the holiday. (Since 6 o'clock) Dec 24 ~~Sunday~~ last evening, more than 140 persons have died in (highway) ~~accidents~~ accidents.

Charles Collingwood

Word for Today....

Gamaliel Bradford said, "The legend of St. Nick is the last living relic of the vanishing world of dreams. The fairies are gone, the witches and ghosts are gone. Santa Claus alone lingers with us. Let us keep him as long as we can. Children learn to see soon enough, too clearly, too well. After all, in this universe of ignorance anything may be true---even our dreams." Goodnight and good luck.

Note...Since you have used the above quotation before, you may prefer this by Raymond B. Fosdick. "However far in practice we may have wandered from our age-old ideal, we are at last aware that peace on earth and good will toward men are not mere slogans. They are formulas for survival." The Fosdick quote could be set up with some line [redacted] such as...The story of Christ's birth is old but always new. Raymond B. Fosdick said, etc....

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, December 25, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... Tonight, Charles Collingwood, our bureau chief in London, who has recently been reporting on this program from Africa, is here in the studio with me. Welcome home, Charles.

COLLINGWOOD: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: What was the most interesting thing you discovered in Africa?

COLLINGWOOD: I think that the strongest impression that I got in Africa was o f the inevitability of the independence of most of the countries of that continent. That is probably due to my own ignorance, that is that the impression was so strong, because much of the independence has already been scheduled, that is on the time-schedule...Nigeria in 1960, the Cameroon same time, Somali and Togaland and so forth. But even those countries whose independence has not been scheduled are pressing so hard that it's bound to come. Most of the rest of the world is ignorant of this and to a surprising extent the Africans themselves haven't awakened to the fact that their independence and autonomy are coming. The reason I was in Africa as you remember was because of the All African People's Conference, the nationalist leaders of twenty-five or thirty countries all gathered together there. And most of what they said was ringing the familiary changes of the demand for independence. Down with colonialism and imperialism. But that battle is really won and the problem now is, what is going to happen next?

MURROW: Well, is it your feeling that in the future Africa will represent an area of conflict between East and West?

COLLINGWOOD: I think it must do, because it's the last great vacuum left in the world. It's enormous. It's bigger than India, China, the United States put together. There are only 200 million people there which means that it's underpopulated in terms of the old world. It's a storehouse of vast mineral and agricultural riches, and moreover the ties of historical association between Africa and the colonial powers, if you will, mean that there are interests, not only material interests, but sympathetic interests as well. Russia had a considerable delegation at this conference. The Russians aren't pressing on Africa the way they are pressing on the Middle East, but one day they may, at any rate.

MURROW: Charles, let's return for a moment to London, which is your base. Britain is staying outside the European common market. Does this mean that there will eventually be a trade war between Britain and France?

COLLINGWOOD: I think that there undoubtedly will be a trade war. How long it will last and how intense it will be remains to be seen and will certainly be the subject of negotiations. But with the beginning of the new year the special privileges which the six nations of the common market, that's France, Germany, Italy, all big trading nations and the Benelux countries give each other are going to be denied to the rest of Europe, to Britain and to ten other countries of Western Europe. The British have threatened discrimination. Whether or not they will carry that out I don't know. But undoubtedly there is going to be a considerable difference in the terms of trade and it's going to be quite a battle.

MURROW: Of course, the British are tied to their Commonwealth preference, aren't they, and after all only about 14 per cent of their trade is with the Continent as compared to about 50 per cent with the Commonwealth, isn't it?

COLLINGWOOD: That's right and they're tied to the Commonwealth both by economic ties and of course by historical and sentimental ones as well. But the British aren't the only ones that are in this. The Swedes, the Danes, 30 per cent of their trade is with the six. They're just as upset. The Swiss...as the British are. And the British are the spokesmen, and the French on the other side are the spokesmen 'cause the French are really the ones who are dragging their feet on this. And not all the arguments are with the British. But it's going to be a very difficult time. Negotiations start again on the 15th...they'll be technical...difficult. But a lot of people's livelihood and economies depend on this.

MURROW: Well, Charles, the Suez invasion of two years ago put a big strain on the Anglo-American alliance and then our policy in connection with the off-shore islands didn't help it any. How does the alliance look to you now?

COLLINGWOOD: Never better, Ed. It's been Prime Minister MacMillan's intention, his guiding policy, to restore the close relationship between Britain and this country and it's worked. Not only militarily. It's worked economically as well. One of the reasons why the British economy is still so strong is that in spite of the American recession, the strains on our policy that we've nonetheless continued to pursue an enlightened economic policy toward them. They are very grateful.

MURROW: And the really believe in the matter of inter-dependence?

COLLINGWOOD: They really do.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Charles Collingwood, for sitting in with me tonight. That was Charles Collingwood, the chief of our London bureau. And he's going to be here enjoying himself for the next few days, we hope. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with a word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

END

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Christmas was not immune to threats from Moscow. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko called on the West...again...to accept Russia's proposals on Berlin. And he repeated that if no agreement is reached in the next five months, Russia will proceed...unilaterally...to turn its occupation functions in Berlin over to the East German regime. He emphasized that this would include control of communications. Gromyko said Russia is willing to listen to counter-proposals. But he gave no sign that it would settle for anything less than the disarming of West Berlin and its conversion into a "free city." Any provocation, he warned...any attempt at aggression against East Germany...might start a war in which millions of persons would die. He said, "The flame of that war would inevitably spread to the North American continent because of today's military techniques."

Gromyko spoke before Russia's Supreme Soviet, or Parliament. He said no "substantial" progress has been made in the Geneva conference looking toward a possible agreement for ending nuclear weapons tests. He placed blame for this on the United States and Britain...which have been insisting on an adequate system of inspection and control. Russia, he said, will agree to end nuclear weapons tests anytime---even tomorrow---"without reservations or preconditions." He said the motives of the Soviet government are "misunderstood".

As its last business....before adjournment...the Supreme Soviet approved a new penal code...abolishing the law by which the government can punish a person by deporting him and depriving him of Soviet citizenship. The maximum prison sentence for "ordinary" crimes is reduced from 25 years to 10 years. But the death penalty for "crimes against the state"...such as high treason and subversion... remains. And for the frrst time, the promulgation of "war propaganda" is made a crime. The penalties for making "war propaganda" were not spelled out.

Moscow today announced a successor to General Serov as head of the state security system..which includes the secret police. The new security boss is Alexander Shelepin who at the age of forty...is a member of the central committee of the party and a former secretary of the Communist organization. Serov's resignation was announced early this month, but so far, there has been no official word as to his fate. A rumor is that he now holds a high army post.

Chancellor Adenauer said... in a Christmas Day broadcast...that the German people have not known peace since before the first World War. He recalled the Nazi despotism which followed that war...oppression, unbridled nationalism and love of power...and the death and destruction of World War Two. Since then, he said, there has been reconstruction, "but fear has remained. Security and peace have vanished from the lives of men."

In her annual Christmas message, Queen Elizabeth praised the "great cooperative effort" countries of the British Commonwealth have been making to raise living standards. And she paid tribute to those who contribute to the formulation of ideas and the arts. "It seems to me," she said, "that Christmas is just the time to be grateful to those who add fullness to our lives---the prophets and dreamers, philosophers, men of ideas, artists in paint, sculpture and music." The queen spoke to the Commonwealth by radio and television fron Sandringham House, the royal family's traditional Christmas residence. She told of visits she will make abroad in the coming year...ranging from Canada to Australia and India. She added with a smile, "We have no plans for space travel---at the moment." And she said, "I hope that this next year proves to ba a year of progress and happiness for us all."

In Vatican City, Pope John resumed a papal custom...interrupted for fourteen years...when he officiated at Christmas masses for diplomats accredited to the Holy See and for the people of Rome. A mass for the diplomatic corps was last celebrated by the late Pope Pius in 1943. The last Christmas mass in St. Peter's Basilica was celebrated in 1944 for the Allied troops who had liberated Rome. Today, after celebrating mass, Pope John visited the sick in two hospitals. Tomorrow, he will visit Rome's largest jail. The last papal visit to a hospital in Rome was in 1870. And the visit to the prison is believed unprecedented.

In Paris, the government announces that tomorrow all financial markets in France will be closed. This has increased speculation that devaluation of the franc is imminent. The government said the markets are being closed tomorrow "with a view to avoiding any inopportune reaction." No announcement as to what steps the French government will take.

At midnight...as soon as it was Christmas Day, and because it was an odd-numbered day...Chinese Communist artillery began shelling the off-shore island of Quemoy. The guns of the Nationalist garrison remained silent, in response to orders not to return the Communist fire on Christmas. Then...after firing only 31 shells...the Communist guns also fell silent.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower observed Christmas quietly at the White House exchanging gifts and sharing turkey with their son, Major John Eisenhower and his family. Tomorrow, Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower will drive to their Gettysburg farm where they are expected to stay for about a week.

The National Safety Council warns that traffic deaths this Christmas are exceeding predictions...and that they could set a new record for the holiday. Since 6 o'clock last evening, more than 140 persons have died in highway accidents.

Tonight, Charles Collingwood, our bureau chief in London, who has recently been reporting on this program from Africa, is here in the studio with me. Welcome home, Charles.

COLLINGWOOD: Thank you Ed.

MURROW: What was the most interesting thing you discovered in Africa?

COLLINGWOOD: I think that the strongest impression that I got in Africa was of the inevitability of the independence of most of the countries of that continent.

That is probably due to my own ignorance, that is that the impression was so strong, because much of the independence has already been scheduled, that is on the time schedule...Nigeria in 1960, the Cameroon same time, Somali and Togaland and so forth. But even those countries whose independence has not been scheduled are pressing so hard that it's bound to come. Most of the rest of the world is ignorant of this and to a surprising extent the Africans themselves haven't awakened to the fact that their independence and autonomy are coming. The reason I was in Africa as you remember was because of the All African Peoples Conference, the nationalist leaders of twenty-five or thirty countries all gathered together there. And most of what they said was ring the familiar charges of the demand for independence. Down with colonialism and imperialism. But that battle is really won and the problem now is, what is going to happen next?

MURROW: Well, is it your feeling that in the future Africa will represent an area of conflict wetween East and West?

COLLINGWOOD: I think it must do, because it's the last great vacuum left in the world. It's enormous. It's bigger than India, China, the United States put together. There are only 200 million people there which means that it's underpopulated in terms of the old world. It's a storehouse of vast mineral and agricultural riches, and moreover the ties of historical association between Africa and the colonial powers, if you will, mean that there are interests, not only material interests, but sympathetic interests as well. Russia had a considerable delegation at this conference. The Russians aren't pressing on Africa the way they are pressing on the Middle East, but one day they may, at any rate.

MURROW: Charles, let's return for a moment to London, which is your base. Britain is staying outside the European common market. Does this mean that there will eventually be a trade war between Britain and France?

COLLINGWOOD: I think that there undoubtedly will be a trade war. How long it will last and how intense it will be remains to be seen and will certainly be the subject of negotiations. But with the beginning of the new year the special privileges which the six nations of the common market, that's France, Germany, Italy, all big trading nations and the Benelux countries give each other are going to be denied to the rest of Europe, to Britain and to ten other countries of Western Europe. The British have threatened discrimination. Whether or not they will carry that out I don't know. But undoubtedly there is going to be a considerable difference in the terms of trade and it's going to be quite a battle.

MURROW: Of course, the British are tied to their Commonwealth preference, aren't they, and after all only about 14 percent of their trade is with the Continent as compared to about 50 percent with the Commonwealth, isn't it?

COLLINGWOOD: That's right and they're tied to the Commonwealth both by economic ties and of course by historical and sentimental ones as well. But the British aren't the only ones that are in this. The Swedes, the Danes, 30 percent of their trade is with the six. They're just as upset. The Swiss...as the British are. And the British are the spokesmen, and the French on the other side are the spokesmen 'cause the French are really the ones who are dragging their feet on this. And not all the arguments are with the British. But it's going to be a very difficult time. Negotiations start again on the 15th...they'll be technical... difficult. But a lot of people's livelihood and economies depend on this.

MURROW: Well, Charles, the Suez invasion of two years ago put a big strain on the Anglo-American alliance and then our policy in connection with the off-shore islands didn't help any. How does the alliance look to you now?

COLLINGWOOD: Never better, Ed. It's been Prime Minister MacMillan's intention, his guiding policy, to restore the close relationship between Britain and this country and it's worked. Not only militarily. It's worked economically as well. One of the reasons why the British economy is still so strong is that in spite of the American recession, the strains on our policy that we've nonetheless continued to pursue an enlightened economic policy toward them. They are very grateful.

MURROW: And they really believe in the matter of inter-dependence?

COLLINGWOOD: They really do.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Charles Collingwood for sitting in with me tonight. That was Charles Collingwood, the chief of our London Bureau. And he's going to be here enjoying himself for the next few days, we hope. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with a word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Gamaliel Bradford said, "The legend of St. Nick is the last living relic of the vanishing world of dreams. The fairies are gone, the witches and ghosts are gone. Santa Claus alone lingers with us. Let us keep him as long as we can. Children learn to see soon enough, too clearly, too well, After all, in this universe of ignorance anything may be true---even our dreams."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Friday, Dec. 26th, 1958

This is the news ...

France tonight halted foreign currency transactions until Monday -- except for tourists on their way in or out of the country. The move came as premier Charles De Gaulle met with financial experts and some of his cabinet -- to discuss currency reform -- including possible de-valuation of the franc. Devaluation of the franc would lower prices for French products, so they can compete in the European common market. Tomorrow De Gaulle will meet with the full cabinet ... and the country's new financial policy is expected to be announced by finance minister Antoine Pinay. .. The Paris financial exchange and all exchanges throughout France had been ordered closed after the Christmas holiday --while monetary decisions were taken. The government followed through late today by suspending, until Monday morning, all operations in foreign currencies by banks or money exchange offices. [redacted]

The moves obviously were taken to avoid speculation which could ruin the franc. In the last week, the franc has lost ground on the basis of devaluation rumors. ... Unofficial predictions on the extent of any devaluation -- range from 12 to about 20 per cent. This could bring the franc close to 500 to the dollar. The rate has been 420 to the dollar since the last devaluation in August of 1957. ... [redacted]

[redacted]

There also are rumors in various european centers today -- that government approval of strictly limited conversion of British pounds into foreign currencies is expected soon. Convertibility of sterling -- according to the reports -- would be confined to non-residents, people living outside Britain, and the other parts of the sterling area. The British treasury would make no comment.

The United States embassy in Moscow today issued a diplomatic visa to Russia's first deputy premier Anastas Mikoyan -- valid for three months. Mikoyan -- the Soviet union's top trade official -- is expected to fly to Washington early in January. ... The United States ambassador to Moscow -- Llewellyn Thompson -- will leave for Washington January fourth for a brief home leave and consultations. Thompson's trip will co-incide with Mikoyan's.

Today Russia legalized imprisonment of up to ten years for United States or other foreign fliers who violate Soviet air space. The provision is included in a new criminal code approved by the Supreme Soviet. ..... The United States believes Russia still holds eleven crewmen of a United States air force transport plane that crashed in Soviet Territory September second. ... Russia turned over the bodies of six crewmen recovered from the wreckage, but has denied repeatedly any knowledge of the other eleven. The plane became lost in bad weather and flew over Soviet soil.

The Soviet Union says it will sign in Cairo tomorrow -- its agreement to help build the first stage of the Aswan High Dam. Russia announced in October it would lend the United Arab Republic 400 million rubles .. (100-million dollars at the official exchange rate) ... to build the first stage of the dam. ... The Soviet offer is little more than a starter for the great [redacted] Aswan dam project -- expected to cost two billion dollars or more. In 1956, the United States withdrew an offer to finance a share of the [redacted] project. Britain did the same. The withdrawal prompted President Nasser to seize the [redacted] Suez canal ...

Today Nasser's government renewed its attack on the communists in the Syrian province of the United Arab Republic. One of the most influential of the Syrian officials -- interior minister Abdul Hamid Serraj -- said the communists have become mouthpieces for the enemies of [redacted] Arab nationalism.. Nasser denounced the Syrian communists in a speech Tuesday. He said they had opposed the union of Egypt and Syria to form the U.A.R.

United Nations secretary general Hammarskjold ended his three-day visit to the Gaza strip today -- by calling at two Arab refugee camps. Thousands of Arab refugees greeted him with shouts of : "We want to return to our homes."

The Yugoslav parliament today unanimously accepted a law on the nationalization of houses and building sites. The law is designed "to liquidate capitalistic social relations." It nationalizes apartment and business houses, and all building sites. ... In the future, Yugoslav citizens will be permitted to own only two unlimited-size apartments, or three small apartments containing not more than two rooms each. Church property will be exempt.

A French airliner -- bound for Paris with seventy persons aboard -- crashed on take-off in a driving rainstorm in Southern Rhodesia today. At least three persons were killed ... one passenger is reported un-accounted for ... and fifty persons were injured. Ten of the injured are in serious condition. The three dead were South Africans, believed to be from Johnnesburg .

In this country, the holiday traffic toll has been climbing at an unprecedented rate. At last report, about 300 persons had been killed in highway accidents since early Christmas eve. The National Safety council had estimated 620 persons would be killed in traffic over the long holiday period. ..... There also has been an unusual number of fire deaths. At least 62 persons -- many of them children -- have died in fires in the past two days. Near Auburn, Washington, when their farm home burned, mother and eight of her nine children died. Today, five of six members of a family perished when flames swept a mansion outside Richmond, Virginia.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower -- accompanied by their ten-year-old grandson David -- have gone to their farm at Gettysburg, for a stay of a week or more. The president has with him .. drafts of the State of the Union and Budget messages -- which he will submit to congress after it convenes January seventh. He plans to confer with administration officials on his legislative program throughout his stay in Gettysburg.

The chairman of the national mediation board met with leaders of ~~the~~ 15-hundred striking American Airlines pilots today -- and said he is hopeful the walkout might end within a few days. ~~[redacted]~~ Mediation head ~~[redacted]~~ Leverett Edwards ~~[redacted]~~ made the statement ~~after the Air Lines Pilots association asked for a clarification of a proposed settlement offered by Edwards. American airlines officials accepted the mediator's proposal for a settlement Tuesday, but the union has not yet replied.~~

Eastern Airlines remains in a stalemate with its striking flight engineers. Eastern has been closed down for more than a month.

In New york, the strike of newspaper delivery men continues. The newspapers suspended publication 15 days ago.

Ernest Leisch - Germany. -

Q. What is the general atmosphere in Berlin?

There's no sign of panic -- or anything like it -- in West Berlin, Ed. There's no flight of people from the city to the West, and refugees from East Germany are coming in at about the same rate as usual -- three or four hundred of them every day. If the Berliners were scared, it would have shown up in the West Berlin election of December Seventh -- and you know what happened then. The Communists took a real licking: the election had been billed, by both sides, a week before as a vote for or against the Soviet plan for the West Berlin "free city". Fewer than two percent of the people voted for -- and an affirmative vote would have been pretty good insurance in the event the Russians have their way with the city.

But the threat hanging over West Berlin has had some effects. Some people -- so far a fairly small minority -- have transferred their bank accounts to West Germany. I've talked to businessmen who are moving their shops out -- again only a few. A good many West German firms are demanding cash-in-advance before they deliver goods to Berlin. Other West German firms have been leary about placing new orders with Berlin manufacturers. All this, I suppose, is inevitable -- and it points up the fact that life in West Berlin can't really be normal again unless and until the Soviet pressure is off. But the great mass of people -- the real Berliners -- are willing to stand up to the pressure.

1-1-1

Q. Is reunification the main political issue in Germany?

A. It is -- if you judge by the number of lines in the newspapers, and the words on the radio, devoted to the subject. It's a sort of unspoken ground rule in West Germany that you never make a political speech without mentioning it, preferably often. "Reunification" has replaced "God" and "Family" for the German politician as his cliche.

But, if you measure by the real interest of the ordinary West German, it's not the main issue, by any means. A couple of weeks ago, old Chancellor Adenauer put out a yearly progress report of his regime; and he said its two guiding principles of the last decade had been "Order" and "Continuity". And I think that's what the average German wants wants more than anything else. Order, so he can think about his own-day-to-day problems and work with that industriousness that's almost obsessively German. Continuity, so he can get the rewards of order; so he can graddate from a motorcycle to a Goggomobil to a Volkswagen -- and maybe someday to a Mercedes.

Of course, almost all Germans would like to see their country put together again. But there aren't many of them willing to risk giving up what they have now in order to get reunification.

Q. Anything new [redacted] in Gromyko's speech before the Supreme Soviet?

You have to look very closely, Ed, to find even a hint of anything new. There were the same demands we accept the Soviet proposals for the undefended West Berlin "free city" and the same insistence we pull out. And there were the same threats of big war if we tried to hold our position in Berlin by force. Gromyko did, however, say a little more positively than any other Russian leader that the Soviets were ready to listen to any Western counterproposals on Berlin. But, frankly, nobody on our side has come up with any counterproposals on Berlin that wouldn't weaken our position there -- and this we have said over and over again we're not ready to do. I think, Ed, we'll have to wait until Anastas Mikoyan -- the Soviet Deputy Premier and Khrushchev's Number Two man -- comes to Washington next month to see whether the Russians do have any basically new thoughts about Berlin.

Q. At that same Supreme Soviet meeting, Defense Minister Sokolovsky warned that if the West unleashed a war over Berlin, Russia was "capable of delivering crushing blows" in reply. Do you think the Russians would go to war over Berlin?

Ed, I haven't talked to anyone who knows that answer. We may have a better idea after the Mikoyan visit to Washington -- if the Soviets have made up their own minds how far to go, which is by no means certain.

But when the Russians warn us against "unleashing a war" over the Berlin issue, I think it should be pointed out that we don't want to unleash anything. All we want is to hold a position that we have maintained, as a matter of right, ever since the war and to which we have committed our full prestige. For years now in Berlin, we have been as careful as possible to avoid any incident which could be considered a "provocation" by the Russians -- because we have known our position there is precarious. This year alone there have been at least a half dozen harassing actions directed against our traffic in and out of the city; we have played them down rather than make issues of them. But obviously we cannot play down a direct threat to our position in Berlin. And I think we can't let it be forgotten that we didn't create the crisis in Berlin. Khrushchev did -- without even an immediate and visible excuse.

Q. The Western powers are getting ready to send off their answers to Russia -- and it looks as if we'll say that while we're not ready to talk about Berlin on the Soviet terms, we will talk about all Germany. Will this get us anywhere?

The Russians have very definitely said that they won't let their demands on Berlin get "torpedoed", as they put it, by diverting the discussions to all Germany. They've said, anyway, that the Berlin issue must be settled as "a sort of litmus paper" -- in Khrushchev's words, a test of Western intentions. But the Soviets have been known to change their minds before. And it is the most promising avenue visible leading out of the very touchy situation in Berlin.

Back in a moment.—
George Bryan—

WORD FOR TODAY: DECEMBER 26, 1958.

The present status of Berlin was established by men who were of course fallible, and in retrospect rather careless. The present argument over the city is a test of diplomacy and power. Emerson once wrote: "The imbecility of men is always inviting the impudence of power".

Goodnight and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, December 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Tonight another of our foreign correspondents is home, Ernest Leiser, who is stationed in Germany and spends a certain amount of time wandering about amongst the satellite countries. Ernie, what is the general atmosphere in Berlin these days?

LEISER: Ed, there's no sign of panic or anything like it in West Berlin. There's no flight of people from the city to the West, and refugees from East Germany are coming in at about the same rate as usual; three or four hundred of them every day. If the Berliners were scared, it would have shown up in the West Berlin election of December 7th. And you know what happened then. The Communists took a real licking. The election had been billed by both sides as a vote for or against the Soviet plan for the West Berlin "free city." Fewer than 2% of the people voted for; and an affirmative vote would have been pretty good insurance in the event the Russians have their way with the city. But the threat hanging over West Berlin has had some effects. Some people - so far a fairly small minority - have transferred their bank accounts to West Germany. I've talked to businessmen who were moving their shops out; again - only a few of them. A good many West German firms, however, are demanding cash-in-advance before they deliver goods in Berlin. Other West German companies have been leery about placing new orders with Berlin manufacturers. All this, I suppose, is inevitable, and it points up the fact that life in West Berlin cannot be really normal again unless and until the Soviet pressure is off. But the great mass of people, the real Berliners, are willing to stand up to the pressure.

MURROW: Ernie, is re-unification still the main political issue in West Germany?

LEISER: Well, it is if you judge by the number of lines in the newspapers and the words on the radio devoted to the subject. It's a sort of unspoken ground rule in West Germany, Ed, that you never make a political speech without mentioning re-unification, preferably often. It's replaced God and family for the German politician as his cliche. But if you measure it by the real interest of the ordinary West German, it's not the main issue by any means.

A couple of weeks ago, old Chancellor Adenauer put out a yearly progress report on his regime, and he said that its two guiding principles during the last decade had been order and continuity. And I think that that's what the average German wants more than anything else. Order, so that he can think about his own day-to-day problems and plod away with that industriousness that's almost obsessively German; and continuity, so that he can get the rewards of order - so he can graduate from a motorcycle to a Goggomobile, to a Volkswagen, and maybe some day even to a Mercedes. Of course, almost all Germans would like to see their country put together again - but there aren't many of them willing to risk giving up what they have now in order to get re-unification.

MURROW: Ernie, Leiser, you fellow, in Germany, very closely all Russian pronouncements, did you find anything new in Gromyko's speech before the Supreme Soviet?

LEISER: You have to read very closely, Ed, to find even a hint of anything new. The speech contained the same demands that we accept the Soviet proposals for the West Berlin free city and the same insistence that we get out of Berlin. And there were the same threats of big war if we tried to hold our position in Berlin by force. Gromyko did, however, say a little more positively than any other Russian leader that the Soviets were ready to listen to any Western counter-proposals on Berlin. But, frankly, nobody on our side has come up with any counter-proposals on Berlin that wouldn't weaken our position there. And this we've said over-and-over again we're not ready to do. I think, Ed, we'll have to wait until Mikoyan, Khrushchev's No. 2 man, comes to Washington next month to see whether the Russians do have any basically new thoughts about Berlin.

MURROW: Well, Ernie, at that same Supreme Soviet meeting, the Defense Minister, Sokolovsky, warned that if the West unleashed a war over Berlin, Russia was capable of delivering crushing blows in reply. But, do you think the Russians would go to war over Berlin?

LEISER: Ed, I haven't talked to anyone who knows that answer. We may have a better idea after the Mikoyan visit to Washington, if the Soviets have made up their own minds how far to go, which is by no means certain. But when the Russians warn us against unleashing a war over the Berlin issue, I should think it would be pointed out that we don't want to unleash anything. All we want is to hold the position that we've maintained as a matter of right ever since the war, and to which we've committed our full prestige. For years now in Berlin we've been as careful as possible to avoid any incident which could be considered a provocation by the Russians, because we've known our position there is precarious. This year alone there've been at least half a dozen Soviet harassing actions directed against our traffic in and out of the city. We've played them down rather than make issues of them.

MURROW: Well, Ernie, the Western powers are getting ready to send off their answers to Russia and it looks as if we'll say that while we're not ready to talk about Berlin on the Soviet terms, we will talk about all Germany. Will this get us anywhere?

LEISER: The Russians have very definitely said, Ed, that they won't let their demands on Berlin get torpedoed, as they put it, by diverting the discussions to all Germany. So, I'm afraid we'll have to wait and see on that.

MURROW: Well, they've said that they were going to regard

Berlin as a sort of testing ground for the Allied policy on all of Germany, haven't they?

LEISER: Yes, and I think a conference on these broader problems is the most promising avenue visible out of the very, very touchy situation in Berlin.

MURROW: Well, Ernest Leiser, thank you very much for coming along tonight - and I hope that when you get back to Berlin and to West Germany, you'll have some good news to report. Thanks very much, Ernie. This is Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

France tonight halted foreign currency transactions until Monday except for tourists on their way in or out of the country. The move came as Premier Charles DeGaulle met with financial experts and some of his cabinet -- to discuss currency reform -- including possible de-valuation of the franc. Devaluation of the franc would lower prices for French products so they can compete in the European common market. Tomorrow DeGaulle will meet with the full cabinet....and the country's new financial policy is expected to be announced by finance minister Antoine Pinay. The Paris financial exchange and all exchanges throughout France had been ordered closed after the Christmas holiday---while monetary decisions were taken. The government followed through late today by suspending until Monday morning all operations in foreign currencies by banks or money exchange offices. The moves obviously were taken to avoid speculation which could ruin the franc. In the last week, the franc has lost ground on the basis of devaluation rumors...Unofficial predictions on the extent of any devalution -- range from 12 to 20 percent. This could bring the franc close to 500 to the dollar. The rate has been 420 to the dollar since the last devaluation in August of 1957.

There also are rumors in various European centers today---that government approval of strictly limited conversion of British pounds into foreign currencies is expected soon. Convertibility of sterling --- according to the reports -- would be confined to non-residents, people living outside Britain, and the other parts of the sterling area. The British treasury would make no comment.

The United States embassy in Moscow today issued a diplomatic visa to Russia's first deputy premier Anastas Mikoyan -- valid for three months. Mikoyan -- the Soviet Union's top trade official -- is expected to fly to Washington early in January. The United States ambassador to Moscow, Llewellyn Thompson will leave for Washington January fourth for a brief home leave and consultations. Thompson's trip will co-incide with Mikoyan's.

Today Russia legalized imprisonment of up to ten years for United States or other foreign fliers who violate Soviet air space. The provision is included in a new criminal code approved by the Supreme Soviet. The United States believes Russia still holds eleven crewmen of a United States air force transport plane that crashed in Soviet territory September second. Russia turned over the bodies of six crewmenrecovered from the wreckage, but has denied repeatedly any knowledge of the other eleven. The plane became lost in bad weather and flew over Soviet soil.

The Soviet Union says it will sign in Cairo tomorrow---its agreement to help build the first stage of the Aswan High Dam. Russia announced in October it would lend the United Arab Republic 400 million rubles (100 million dollars at the official exchange rate) to build the first stage of the dam. The Soviet offer is little more than a starter for the great Aswan dam project expected to cost two billion dollars or more. In 1956, the United States withdrew an offer to finance a share of the project, Britain did the same. The withdrawal prompted President Nasser to seize the Suez Canal.

Today Nasser's government renewed its attack on the communists in the Syrian province of the United Arab Republic. One of the most influential of the Syrian officials---interior minister Abdul Hamid Serraj, said the communists have become mouthpieces for the enemies of Arab nationalism. Nasser denounced the Syrian communists in a speech Tuesday. He said they had opposed the union of Egypt and Syria to form the U.A.R.

United Nations secretary general Hammarskjold ended his three-day visit to the Gaza strip today by calling at two Arab refugee camps. Thousands of Arab refugees greeted him with shouts of: "We want to return to our homes."

The Yugoslav parliament today unanimously accepted a law on the nationalization of houses and building sites. The law is designed "to liquidate capitalistic social relations." It nationalizes apartment and business houses, and all building sites...In the future Yugoslav citizens will be permitted to own only two unlimited-size apartments, or three small apartments containing not more than two rooms each. Church property will be exempt.

In this country, the holiday traffic toll has been climbing at an unprecedented rate. At last report, about 300 persons had been killed in highway accidents since early Christmas eve. There also has been an unusual number of fire deaths. At least 62 persons, many of them children have died in fires in the past two days.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower accompanied by their ten-year old grandson David have gone to their farm at Gettysburg for a stay of a week or more. The president has with him drafts of the State of the Union and Budget messages, which he will submit to congress after it convenes January seventh. He plans to confer with administration officials on his legislative program throughout his stay in Gettysburg.

The chairman of the national mediation board met with leaders of 15-hundred striking American Airlines pilots today, and said he is hopeful the walkout might end within a few days.

Eastern Airlines remains in a stalemate with its striking flight engineers. Eastern has been closed down for more than a month.

In New York, the strike of newspaper delivery men continues. The newspapers suspended publication 15 days ago.

Tonight another of our foreign correspondents is home, Ernest Leiser, who is stationed in Germany and spends a certain amount of time wandering about amongst the satellite countries. Ernie, what is the general atmosphere in Berlin these days?

LEISER: Ed, there's no sign of panic or anything like it in West Berlin. There's no flight of people from the city to the West, and refugees from East Germany are coming in at about the same rate as usual; three or four hundred of them every day. If the Berliners were scared, it would have shown up in the West Berlin election of December 7th. And you know what happened then. The Communists took a real licking. The election had been billed by both sides as a vote for or against the Soviet plan for the West Berlin "free city." Fewer than 2 percent of the people voted for; and an affirmative vote would have been pretty good insurance in the event the Russians have their way with the city. But the threat hanging over West Berlin has had some effects. Some people - so far a fairly small minority - have transferred their bank accounts to West Germany. I've talked to businessmen who were moving their shops out; again - only a few of them. A good many West German firms, however, are demanding cash-in-advance before they deliver goods to Berlin. Other West German companies have been leery about placing new orders with Berlin manufacturers. All this, I suppose is inevitable, and it points up the fact that life in West Berlin cannot be really normal again unless and until the Soviet pressure is off. But the great mass of people, the real Berliners, are willing to stand up to the pressure.

MURROW: Ernie, is re-unification still the main political issue in West Germany?

LEISER: Well, it is if you judge by the number of lines in the newspapers and the words on the radio devoted to the subject. It's a sort of unspoken ground rule in West Germany, Ed, that you never make a political speech without mentioning re-unification, preferably often. It's replaced God and family for the German politician as his cliche. But if you measure it by the real interest of the ordinary West German, it's not the main issue by any means.

A couple of weeks ago, old Chancellor Adenauer put out a yearly progress report on his regime, and he said that its two guiding principles during the last decade had been order and continuity. And I think that that's what the average German wants more than anything else. Order, so that he can think about his own day-to-day problems and plod away with that industriousness that's almost obsessively German; and continuity, so that he can get the rewards of order - so he can graduate from a motorcycle to a GoGomobile, to a Volkswagen, and maybe some day even to a Mercedes. Of course, almost all Germans would like to see their country put together again - but there aren't many of them willing to risk giving up what they have now in order to get re-unification.

MURROW: Ernie Leiser, you follow in Germany very closely all Russian pronouncements, did you find anything new in Gromyko's speech before the Supreme Soviet?

LEISER: You have to read very closely, Ed, to find even a hint of anything new. The speech contained the same demands that we accept the Soviet proposals for the West Berlin free city and the same insistence that we get out of Berlin. And there were the same threats of big war if we tried to hold our position in Berlin by force. Gromyko did, however, say a little more positively than any other Russian leader that the Soviets were ready to listen to any Western counter-proposals on Berlin. But, frankly, nobody on our side has come up with any counter-proposals on Berlin that wouldn't weaken our position there. And this we've said over-and-over again we're not ready to do. I think Ed, we'll have to wait until Mikoyan, Khrushchev's No. 2 man comes to Washington next month to see whether the Russians do have any basically new thoughts about Berlin.

MURROW: Well, Ernie, at that same Supreme Soviet meeting, the Defense Minister, Sokolovsky, warned that if the West unleashed a war over Berlin, Russia was capable of delivering crushing blows in reply. But, do you think the Russians would go to war over Berlin?

LEISER: Ed, I haven't talked to anyone who knows that answer. We may have a better idea after the Mikoyan visit to Washington, if the Soviets have made up their own minds how far to go, which is by no means certain. But when the Russians warn us against unleashing a war over the Berlin issue, I should think it would be pointed out that we don't want to unleash anything. All we want is to hold the position that we've maintained as a matter of right ever since the war, and to which we've committed our full prestige. For years now in Berlin we've been as careful as possible to avoid any incident which could be considered a provocation by the Russians, because we've known our position there is precarious. This year alone there've been at least half a dozen Soviet harassing actions directed against our traffic in and out of the city. We've played them down rather than make issues of them.

MURROW: Well, Ernie, the Western powers are getting ready to send off their answers to Russia and it looks as if we'll say that while we're not ready to talk about Berlin on the Soviet terms, we will talk about all Germany. Will this get us anywhere?

LEISER: The Russians have very definitely said, Ed, that they won't let their demands on Berlin get torpedoed, as they put it, by diverting the discussions to all Germany. So, I'm afraid we'll have to wait and see on that.

MURROW: Well, they've said that they were going to regard Berlin as a sort of testing ground for the Allied policy on all of Germany, haven't they?

LEISER: Yes, and I think a conference on these broader problems is the most promising avenue visible out of the very, very touchy situation in Berlin.

MURROW: Well, Ernest Leiser, thank you very much for coming along tonight - and I hope that when you get back to Berlin and to West Germany, you'll have some good news to report. Thanks very much Ernie, This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word fortoday. But first, here is George Brynn, with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The present status of Berlin was established by men who were of course fallible, and in retrospect rather careless. The present argument over the city is a test of diplomacy and power. Emerson once wrote: "The imbecility of men is always inviting the impudence of power."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 29, 1958

This is the news:

The World Bank...and the International Monetary Fund...today announced plans to expand their resources for development of the free world. The authorized capital of the World Bank would be increased more than 100 percent, to 21-billion dollars...and the resources of the Monetary Fund by more than 50 percent to 14-billion dollars. The plans...drafted by directors of the two institutions...must still be approved by the 68 member countries. Increasing the capital of the World Bank would not involve the putting up of any new cash on the part of members. Member countries, however, would have to guarantee loans obtained by the bank from private financial markets. These loans, in turn, would be used to finance projects for developing the free world economy. For example, bonds issued by the World Bank are now guaranteed by the United States up to two and a half billion dollars. The American guarantee under the new plan would be raised to five billion dollars. This procedure would apply to the World Bank. To expand the resources of the International Monetary Fund, member countries would have to increase their contributions under a quota system.

The currency changes that went in effect today in ten European countries have caused a reaction in financial markets throughout the free world. None of the reaction, however, has been extreme. In London, the action making the British pound convertible into dollars, caused prices on the stock exchange to boom. Government issues led the advance...reflecting confidence. In Paris, the market was steady. Only heavy transactions in gold marked the initial uncertainty following devaluation of the franc. The dollar was quoted a 492 francs against the new official value of 493 francs to the dollar. Here in New York, the Stock Exchange advanced to a new record high in heavy trading. There was very little activity in French bank notes. And, as a whole, Wall Street found the currency reforms encouraging...since they are expected to improve world trade. In Tokyo, the finance minister decided that Japan should import more goods...particularly from countries in the sterling area.

In North Africa, the government of Morocco decided not to devalue its franc. And the Moroccan franc is no longer pegged ~~with~~ to the currency of France. Tunisia suspended all financial exchange operations until Thursday...to give it time to decide what steps it will take, following devaluation of the French franc.

It was announced today in Washington that Argentina will receive a 329-million-dollar loan to help it put through an economic reform program. The money will come from the International Monetary Fund, the United States government and from eleven private banks.

In Cuba, heavy fighting is reported tonight in the streets of Santa Clara. Santa Clara is the capital of Las Villas Province, and rebel forces are trying to capture it...so as to cut off Havana from the rich sugar-producing provinces of Southeast Cuba. Reports are confused as to whether government troops or the rebels under Fidel Castro are gaining the upper hand in the fighting in Santa Clara. The Bastista government is reported using aircraft, artillery and tanks in a new counter-attack.

In Paris, the NATO Council today approved the notes that will be sent to Moscow...rejecting Khrushchev's proposal for disarming West Berlin and turning it into a "free city". The formal notes from the United States, Britain, France and West Germany are expected to be delivered in Moscow within 48 hours. The language used in turning down Khrushchev's plan is reported similar in substance but not identical in wording. All four notes leave the door open for negotiation on the German problem as a whole.

This is an odd-numbered day...December 29th...and the Chinese Communists, true to the calendar, hit Quemoy with one thousand, 796 shells.

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will formally proclaim Alaska to be the 49th state before the end of this week. The President will also reveal the design of the new American flag. The way was cleared for issuance of the proclamation when the White House received a certified copy of last month's election in Alaska, endorsing statehood.

All New York City newspapers were published today...after settlement of the longest and most costly newspaper strike in the city's history. New Yorkers went without their nine major papers for 18 days, due to a walkout of deliverymen. The strike officially ended last night, when the deliverymen voted...4 to 1...to ratify a new two-year contract. They settled for a seven-dollar-a-week "package"...in most respects the same package they rejected twice before.

5:20 flub 30 secs in

The new French devaluation means everything and it means nothing. This sound paradoxical but France is the country of paradox where nothing is what it seems to be. For example today France is de Gaulle and de Gaulle is France. Rarely has any democratic modern nation been so dominated by one man as France is by de Gaulle. This is true on the surface but it is not necessarily true in depth. If you look under the surface you find that de Gaulle is facing clandestine opposition, mainly from the Gaullists. ~~De Gaulle versus the Gaullists is one of the paradoxes of modern France~~. The people who call themselves Gaullists have ridden into office by carrying de Gaulles banner and announcing they were his real supporters ~~and almost direct friends~~. De Gaulle himself denied this, telling the French people in a news conference that he subscribed to no party and endorsed none. He said: "I belong to no one because I belong to everyone." Well, the French people were somewhat confused by this contrasting image of a de Gaulle party not endorsed by de Gaulle and they thought it was a bit of political subtlety---that de Gaulle was kind of winking his eyes, saying Im not in favor of this party....BUT. So they voted for the socalled Gaullists. These Gaullists are dedicated to a colonial policy in Algeria, for example, which is very different from the liberal policy de Gaulle himself has in mind. Thats one of the contradictions of present France that is not immediately apparent but which will become more and more apparent in 1959. Another of these ~~now you see~~ now you dont tricks of French life is the curious paradox of the French Army and its relations to General de Gaulle. De Gaulle is the man who gave french soldiers the most magnificent example of patriotic insubordination ever given to an Army. ~~The French Army has not obeyed the French government since June 18 1940~~. It was de Gaulle who on June 18 1940 ~~on their historic day~~ told French soldiers to follow him instead of obeying the orders of the defeatist Marshal Petain who surrendered to to Germans. Ever since de Gaulle's dissidence of 1940 French soldiers have been asking themselves whether it was their duty to obey their superiors or to disobey in the national interests.Now,in one of the most ironic twsists of history it is Ch rles de Gaulle,who taught the Army to disobey, who is trying to teach the Army to follow orders once again...to do as it is told in Algeria.[redacted]

T is is a somewhat long and indrect introduction to the question of the devaluation of the franc...but it is very important background,to an understanding, in terms of pepple and their ambition and desires,an understanding of the human reaction to what seems to be on the surface an abstract ecnomic and financial move.

Devaluation is not abtract.It has some very powerful effects on people.Ysterday 420 francs bought one dollar.Today to buy a dollar a Frenchman needs 493 francs....that means the dollar,and what it buys costs 17.55 percent more to Frenchmen...and thats a big boost.Since France buys hard coal,oil and cotten from dollar or other hard currency areas, this means a boost in prices inside France for go ds manufactured out of those raw materials.

But Frande cannot afford to allow prices to rise.The workers of France are already pinched by taxation and inflation and ripe for social revolt. There has not been a major strike wave in France for about six years and one is long overdue.Another boostof prices could break the dam.And France cannot allow prices to rise on its manufactories...French goods are already over price ,noncompetitive in the world market...thats a majoreason for the devaluation: to reduce French prices.. a cask of wine which cost 42000 francs yesterday ,represented $100 on the exchange rate of 420 to the $. But at 493 to the dollar that $100 cask of wine will only cost about$85....Th hope is that moreAmericans will buy French wines at th t bargain discount rate.And thats a good hope on condition that the French can hold the line on wages and other home costs that might force the price of wine up again, thus canceling out devaluation. The key to the success of ~~xxxxx~~ this operation therefore is: discipline at home: austerity in France...something that no one had been able to accomplisy in France since Julius Caesar and the tax collectors of Rome tried and failed. Charles de Gaulle, who is a modern version of a noble Roman, is about to make the attempt. If he succeeds it will be his and Frances finest hour..... but its a big IF...noone has ever pulled the trick of disciplining the French....

Premier DeGaulle has told the French people that devaluation of the franc is part of the price they must pay for greatness. / David Schoenbrun, our bureau chief in Paris, is still here in New York, performing sundry year-end chores. / David, for France and for the rest of us, what does devaluation mean?

(Schoenbrun runs 5:20
Ends on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow."

Insert Schoenbrun script

Thank you, ~~[illegible]~~ Dave Schoenbrun, for shedding some valuable light on a subject of great complexity, and no small importance [for France and the rest of the Free World.]

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Certainly the egotism of DeGaulle is monumental. Alexander Smith, the Scottish essayist, once said, "If the egotist is weak, his egotism is worthless. But if the egotist is strong, acute, full of distinctive character, his egotism is precious...and remains a possession of the race." And Nietzsche called egoism "the very essence of a noble soul."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, December 29, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 p.m.

MURROW: David Schoenbrun, our bureau chief in Paris, is still here in New York, performing sundry year-end chores. It's a very good thing and very agreeable for this correspondent to have his colleagues home in such numbers at this time of year because whenever a big story breaks abroad it's possible to just call in an expert and have him tell you about it. David, for France and the rest of us, what does devaluation mean?

SCHOENBRUN: The new French devaluation means everything and it means nothing. I know this sounds paradoxical but France is the country of paradoxes, where nothing is quite what it seems to be. For example, today France is de Gaulle and de Gaulle is France. Rarely has any democratic modern nation been so dominated by one man as France is by the General. Now this is true on the surface, but it is not necessarily true in depth. If you look under the surface you'll find that de Gaulle is facing clandestine opposition, mainly from the Gaulleists. The people who call themselves Gaulleists have ridden into office carrying the General's banner, assuming they're his real supporters while de Gaulle himself has denied this, telling the French people at a news conference that he subscribed to no party and endorsed none. He said, "I belong to no one because I belong to everyone." Well, the French people were somewhat confused by this contrasting image of a de Gaulle party no endorsed by de Gaulle. They thought it was a bit of political subtlety, that de Gaulle was kind of winking his eye, saying I am not in favor of this party but... so they voted for the so-called Gaulleists. Now these Gaulleists are dedicated to a colonial policy in Algeria which is very different from the liberal policy that de Gaulle himself has in mind. That's one of the contradictions of present France which is not immediately apparent but which will become more and more apparent in 1959. Another one of the-now-you-see-it-now-you-don't tricks of French life is the curious paradox of the French Army and its relations to Gen. de Gaulle. De Gaulle was the man who gave French soldiers the most magnificent example of patriotic insubordination ever given to an army. It was Charles de Gaulle, who on June 18, 1940, told French soldiers to follow him, instead of obeying the orders of the defeatist Marshall Petain, who had surrendered to the Germans. And ever since de Gaulle's patriotic dissidence of 1940, French soldiers have been asking themselves whether it was their duty to obey their superiors or disobey in the national interest. And now, in one of the most ironic twists of history, it is Charles de Gaulle who taught the army to disobey, who's trying to teach the army to follow orders once again, to do as it is told in Algeria. Now this is a very long and indirect introduction to the question of devaluation of the franc. But it is, I suggest, a very important background to an understanding in terms of peoples and their ambitions and desires, an understanding of the human reaction to what seems to be on the surface an abstract economic financial move. In fact, devaluation is not abstract. It has some very powerful effects on people. Yesterday, for example, a Frenchman with 420 francs could buy one dollar. Today to buy a dollar that same Frenchman would NEED 493 francs. That means the dollar and what it buys costs 17.5 percent more to Frenchmen and that's a big boost. Now since France buys hard coal and oil and cotton from dollar and other hard currency areas, this means a boost in prices inside France for goods manufactured out of these raw materials. But France cannot afford to allow prices to rise. The workers of France are already pinched by taxation, inflation and they're ripe for social revolt. There has not been a major strike wave in France for about six years and one is long overdue. Another boost of prices could break the dam and if it does another bout of inflation could strengthen the extreme left in France which is still very strong among the people even if it has been eliminated as a parliamentary force. France also cannot allow prices to rise for French goods are already overpriced, noncompetitive in the world market. And that's a major reason for the devaluation to reduce French prices. Now, let's take an example: a cask of wine which costs 42,000 francs yesterday represented one hundred dollars on the exchange rate of 420 to the dollar. But at 493 to the dollar today, that same one hundred dollar cask of wine will only cost Americans about eighty-five dollars. And the hope is that more Americans will thus buy French wines at a bargain discount rate. That's a good hope, on condition that the French can hold the line on wages and other home costs which might force the price of wine up again later on, thus cancelling out devaluation. Thus the key to the success of this new French operation is discipline at home, austerity in France, something that no one has been able to accomplish in France since Julius Caesar and the tax collectors of Rome tried and failed 2000 years ago. Charles de Gaulle who's a modern version of a noble Roman is about to make another attempt. If he succeeds it will be his and France's finest hour. But it's a big if. No one yet has ever pulled the trick of disciplining the French. And now, back to Ed Murrow.

SBM

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The World Bank...and the International Monetary Fund...today announced plans to expand their resources for development of the free world. The authorized capital of the World Bank would be increased more than 100 percent to 21-billion dollars...and the resources of the Monetary Fund by more than 50 percent to 14-billion dollars. The plans...drafted by directors of the two institutions... must still be approved by the 68 member countries. Increasing the capital of the World Bank would not involve the putting up of any new cash on the part of members. Member countries, however, would have to guarantee loans obtained by the bank from private financial markets. These loans, in turn, would be used to finance projects for developing the free world economy. For example, bonds issued by the World Bank are now guaranteed by the United States up to two and a half billion dollars. The American guarantee under the new plan would be raised to five billion dollars. This procedure would apply to the World Bank. To expand the resources of the International Monetary Fund, member countries would have to increase their contributions under a quota system.

The currency changes that went in effect today in ten European countries have caused a reaction in financial markets throughout the free world. None of the reaction, however, has been extreme. In London, the action making the British pound convertible into dollars, caused prices on the stock exchange to boom. Government issues led the advance...reflecting confidence. In Paris, the market was steady. Only heavy transactions in gold marked the initial uncertainty following devalutaion of the franc. The dollar was quoted a 492 francs against the new official value of 493 francs to the dollar. Here in New York, the Stock Exchange advanced to a new record high in heavy trading. There was very little activity in French bank notes. And, as a whole, Wall Street found the currency reforms encouraging...since they are expected to improve world trade. In Tokyo, the finance minister decided that Japan should import more goods...particularly from countries in the sterling area.

In North Africa, the government of Morocco decided not to devalue its franc. And the Moroccan franc is no longer pegged to the currency of France. Tunisia suspended all financial exchange operations until Thursday..to give it time to decide what steps it will take, following devaluation of the French franc.

It was announced today in Washington that Argentina will receive a 329-million-dollar loan to help it put through an economic reform program. The money will come from the International Monetary Fund, the United States government and from eleven private banks.

In Cuba, heavy fighting is reported tonight in the streets of Santa Clara. Santa Clara is the capital of Las Villas Province, and rebel forces are trying to capture it...so as to cut off Havana from the rich sugar-producing provinces of Southeast Cuba. Reports are confused as to whether government troops or the rebels under Fidel Castro are gaining the upper hand in the fighting in Santa Clara. The Batista government is reported using aircraft, artillery and tanks in a new counter-attack.

In Paris, the NATO Council today approved the notes that will be sent to Moscow...rejecting Khrushchev's proposal for disarming West Berlin and turning it into a "free city." The formal notes from the United States, Britain, France, and West Germany are expected to be delivered in Moscow within 48 horrs. The language used in turning down Khrushchev's plan is reported similar in substance but not identical in wording. All four notes leave the door open for negotiation on the German problem as a whole.

This is an odd-numbered day...December 29th...and the Ghinese Communists true to the calendar, hit Quemoy with one thousand, 796 shells.

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will formally proclaim

Alaska to be the 49th state before the end of this week. The President will also reveal the design of the new American flag. The way was cleared for issuance of the proclamation when the White House received a certified copy of last month's election in Alaska, endorsing statehood.

All New York City newspapers were published today...after settlement of the longest and most costly newspaper strike in the city's history. New Yorkers went without their nine major papers for 18 days, due to a walkout of deliverymen. The strike officially ended last night, when the deliverymen voted 4 to 1 to ratify a new two-year cotnract. They settled for a seven-dollar-a-week "package" in most respects the same package they rejected twice before.

Premier DeGaulle has told the French people that devaluation of the franc is part of the price they must pay for greatness. David Schoenbrun, our bureau chief in Paris, is still here in New York performing sundry year-end chores. David, for France and for the rest of us, what does devaluation mean?

SCHOENBRUN: The new French devaluation means everying and it means nothing. This sounds paradoxical but France is the country of paradoxes where nothing is what it seems to be. For example today France is DeGaulle and DeGaulle is France. Rarely has any democratic, modern nation been so dominated by one man as France is by DeGaulle. This is true on the surface but it is not necessarily true in depth. If you look under the surface you find that DeGaulle is facing clandestine opposition, mainly from the Gaullists. The people who call themselves Gaullists have ridden into office by carrying DeGaulle's banner and announcing they were his real supporters. DeGaulle himslef denied this, telling the French people in a news conference that he subscribed to no party and endorsed none. He said: "I belong to no one because I belong to everyone." Well, the French people are somewhat confused by this contrasting image of a DeGaulle party not endorsed by DeGaulle and they thought it was a bit of political subtlety---that DeGaulle was kind of winking his eyes, saying I'm not in favor of this party...but. So they voted for the so-called Gaullists. These Gaullists are dedicated to a colonial policy in Algeria, for example, which is very different from the liberal policy DeGaulle himself has in mind. That's one of the contradictions of present France that is not immediately apparent but which will become more and more apparent in 1959.

Another of these now-you-see-it, now-you don't tricks of French life is the curious paradox of the French Army and its relations to General DeGaulle. DeGaulle is the man who gave French soldiers the most magnificent example of patriotic insubordination ever given to any Army. It was DeGaulle who on June 18, 1940 told French soldiers to follow him instead of obeying the orders of the defeatist Marshal Petain who surrendered to Germans. Ever since DeGaulle's dissidence of 1940, French soldiers have been asking themselves whether it was their duty to obey their superiors or to disobey in the national interests. Now, in one of the most ironic twists of history, it is Charles DeGaulle, who taught the Army to disobey who is trying to teach the Army to follow orders once again... to do as it is told in Algeria. This is a somewhat long and indirect introduction to the question of the devaluation of the franc. But it is very important background to an understanding, in terms of people and their ambitions and desires, and understanding of the human reaction to what seems to be on the surface an abstract economic and financial move. Devaluaiion is not abstract. It has some very powerful effects on people. Yesterday 420 francs bought one dollar. Today to buy a dollar a Frenchman needs 493 francs..that means the dollar, and what it buys costs 17.55 percent more to Frenchmen...and that's a big boost. Since France buys hard coal, oil and cotton from dollar or other hard currency areas, this means a boost in prices inside France for goods manufactured out of those raw materials. But France cannot afford to allow prices to rise. The workers of France are already pinched by taxation and inflation and ripe for social revolt. There has not been a major strike wave in France for about six years and one is long overdue. Another boost of prices could break the dam. If it does, another round of inflation could strengthen the extreme left in France which is still very strong among the people even if it has been eliminated as a parliamentary force. And France cannot allow prices to rise on its manufacturers. French goods are already over priced, non-competitive in the world market... that's a major reason for the devaluation to reduce French prices. A cask of wine which cost 42,000 francs yesterday, represented $100 on the exchange of 420 to the dollar. But at 493 to the dollar that $100 cask of wine will only cost about $85. The hope is that more Americans will buy French wines at that bargain discount rate. And that's a good hope on condition that the French can hold the line on wages and other home costs that might force the price of wine up again, thus canceling out devaluation. The key to the success of this operation therefore is: discipline at home: austerity in France...something that no one had been able to accomplish in France since Julius Caesar and the tax collectors of Rome tried and failed. Charles DeGaulle, who is a modern version of a noble Roman, is about to make the attempt. If he succeeds it will be his and France's finest hour, but it's a big if...noone has ever pulled the trick of disciplin the French.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you, Dave Schoenbrun, for shedding some valuable light on a subject of great complexity and no small importance for France and the rest of the Free World.

This is Ed Murrow; I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Certainly the egotism of DeGaulle is monumental. Alexander Smith, the Scottish essayist, once said, "If the egotist is weak, his egotism is worthless. But if the egotist is strong, acute, full of distinctive character, he egotism is precious...and remains a possession of the race." And Nietzsche called egoism "the very essence of a noble soul."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 30, 1958

1

This is the news:

Cuba's rebel leader, Fidel Castro, said today that the overthrow of the Batista government is "imminent". Castro urged all Cubans to cooperate in maintaining order in rebel-controlled areas, and promised swift punishment for looting and destruction of property. He said, "No one should take vengeance against anyone." Two sons of President Batista, and their grandfather, arrived at New York's Idlewild Airport today from Havana. Batista has eight children in all. The passenger list also included one of Batista's close friends...and six other persons, believed to be servants in the Batista household. In Cuba, both the government and the rebels are maintaining silence on the battle for Santa Clara, capital of Las Villas Province. In that city, house-to-house street fighting is said to be continuing... with the government airlifting in reinforcements. And government aircraft have been bombing rebel-held centers in Eastern and Central Cuba. According to the rebel radio, Castro's forces today captured the town of Trinidad also in Las Villas Province. Early this morning, revolutionary agents drove a truck up to a munitions warehouse in a suburb of Havana, overwhelmed the armed guard, and went off with a truckload of explosives. What they were unable to load on the truck they blew up.

→

The United States Embassy in Havana has OBTAINED THE RELEASE ~~taken steps to obtain the release~~ of two Americans, seized by Cuban police at the Havana airport. ~~[illegible]~~ Both are high school teachers...who were stopping over briefly in Havana on a flight from Jamaica...in the British West Indies...to New Orleans. They are identified as James W. Reid and Louis Brantley, both of Louisville, Kentucky. They were hustled off a Delta Airlines plane late yesterday in Havana shortly before the aircraft was to depart. Cuban authorities claimed that the two school teachers "shouted remarks favoring the insurrection," while they were in the air terminal. ~~The United States Embassy says it is "continuing its investigation of the facts."~~

In Washington, the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Latin American Affairs has scheduled a closed hearing tomorrow on the Cuban crisis.

It was announced today that President Eisenhower will deliver his annual State of the Union message to Congress...in person...on January 9./ That is two days after the new Congress meets./ News Secretary Hagerty made the announcement in Gettysburg, where Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower have been spending the holidays./ Hagerty said the President will speak for about 40 minutes...and that it will be "not only a review or summation of the state of the union (as the President sees it), but also of the state of the world." And, as usual, the speech will be broadcast./ Specific recommendations for new legislation...including the budget message...will be sent to Congress later.

Secretary Flemming of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare commented on the new budget today...and said that expenditures by his department in fiscal 1960 "will be higher than in any previous year." This, despite the fact that Mr. Eisenhower will advocate a cut in total federal spending./ Dr. Flemming gave no figures but said that more money will have to be paid out for public assistance programs (operated by the states) and for new federal aid under the National Defense Education Act. He declined to say whether money would be budgeted for the construction of public schools.

Liberal Republican senators decided today...at a two and a half hour caucus...to "run" Senator Cooper of Kentucky for party leader in the Senate. Cooper's competitor will be Senator Dirksen of Illinois. The Republican liberals also agreed to support Senator ~~Kuchel~~ Keeker of California for party whip, the post now held by Dirksen. A leader of the liberal bloc...Aiken of Vermont...said that in his opinion both Cooper and Keeker had "an excellent chance to win." He said, "We have assurances of the President's neutrality and respect his desire to be left out of this debate." The liberal group decided not to oppose the re-election of Senator Bridges as chairman of the Republican Policy Committee and Senator Saltonstall as chairman of the Republican Senate Conference. Aiken said he had been offered the nomination for party leader in the Senate but that he felt New England already well represented by Bridges and Saltonstall. The final choice will be made at a caucus of all Republican senators when Congress reconvenes.

~~President Eisenhower will sign a formal proclamation on Saturday, admitting Alaska as the 49th state. At the same time, the President will sign an order...setting forth the design of a new flag with 49 stars.~~

Here in New York, the newspaper columnist...Marie Torre...declined today to purge herself of contempt of court...and was ordered to surrender next Monday to serve a 10-day jail sentence. Miss Torre has refused to identify the source of a news story, arguing that a reporter has the privilege of not identifying a news source. She was convicted in New York Federal Court of criminal contempt, and the conviction was upheld by the United States Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court...early this month... refused to review the case.

Ogden Reid today announced his resignation as president and editor of the New York Herald-Tribune. The board of directors of the paper named Howard D. Brundage to succeed him as president. John Hay Whitney, the American ambassador to Britain, acquired control of the Herald-Tribune last summer.

The National Mediation Board today called for an end to the strike of flight engineers against Eastern Airlines. The Mediation Board directed its appeal to both the union and the airline...saying that the "economic tug of war must come to an end." The board submitted a settlement formula, which the company immediately said it accepted. The formula calls for continued negotiations and the reinstatement of the striking flight engineers without penalty.

My colleague Winston Burdett is home from Rome. Many of you will remember his reporting from the Vatican during the past year. He also spent a great deal of time in the Middle East.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan. —

The Middle East is an area of the world, full of skull-duggery and intrigue. There is poverty and want...a strong tide of nationalism... and emotions which can easily be inflamed. (The Mob is always dangerous.) As Secretary Dulles once remarked, "These problems have deep roots. They are explosive aspects which can surprise us at any time."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, December 30, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 p.m.

MURROW: My colleague Winston Burdett is home from Rome. Many of you will remember his reporting from the Vatican during the past year. Many of these reports were heard on this program. He is one of the considerable number of CBS correspondents who have come home at the end of the year. Winston Burdett has also spent a great deal of time in the Middle East. Winston, obviously the most important single area in the Middle East right now is Iraq. How near are the Russians or the communists to taking over there?

MURROW: That is a very tricky question and I don't think the best informed of us...uh...uh...either newspaperjournalists or in government really know the answer to that question. It's a big question. It's a very critical one. Uh ... the Russians right now are very busy in Iraq opposing Nasser, that's to say opposing Nasserism and opposing the Nasserist forces inside Iraq who would like to see an early unification of--of--Iraq and Nasser's United Republic or a close alignment of Iraq with the United Arab Republic. Iraqi communists are fighting that. Uh, they are fighting it effectively. They are fighting it effectively because it so happens uh--that the--uh--the leader of the Iraqi revolution, the head of the Iraqi state today, Brigadier Kassem, wants to maintain Iraqi independence of Egypt. He does not want an Iraq which is controlled by a dictator in the Nile Valley. The Iraqi communists want the same thing. So what has happened there is that Kassem has had to strike down and fling into prison the leading Nasserists who were with him in the revolution last July. And in...in alienating them, he's had to rely on communist support and he's getting it.

MURROW: But of course if the communists win in Iraq then the Soviet Union has not just influence in the Middle East but a base of operations, doesn't it?

BUNDERT: Tremendous. A tremendous base of operations, and this is the unquestionably the story of the coming year if the Russians get direct or indirect political control of Iraq. That means that their effective influence also--that--their--their power to dispose extends all the way to the Persian Gulf which is something which the Russians have always been after, which the Russian Czars were after, an outlet to the Persian Gulf; which the communists have always been after, which they were under Stalin and which they are today. We have always thought of Iran, of neighboring Iran, as being the--the--the most likely passage s--s--of Russian influence toward the Gulf. But now undoubtedly the pressure is concentrated on Iraq, where the Iraqi communists though small are highly organized and given this tricky position, this tricky balance of forces within the nationalist camp, they occupy a very strategic post.

MURROW: Winston, any chance for improvement in Arab-Israeli relations?

BUNDERT: In the long term, I think yes. Ah, as a matter of fact I think there already has been a tacit improvement in Arab-Israeli relations uh--which no one talks about. That's to say, which the Arabs do not talk about because politically they don't feel that they can admit that they are ever going to come to a final settlement with Israel. That's something which in the Arab countries is politically taboo, whether it's under a King or under a new nationalist leader. But, talking to Arabs from year to year, for example, talking even to the most embittered of Arabs, the refugees from Palestine, Arab refugees from Palestine, who are now living in the misery of their camps in the Desert of Jordan, even these refugees realize now particularly since the Sinai campaign, Israel is a power, Israel is so much more advanced than they, Israel is a solid state...it's there to stay, and therefore, although politicians can't say, "Let's re-settle the refugees elsewhere," nevertheless the refugees themselves are thinking now in terms of resettlement elsewhere, of seeking a..uh..uh livelihood in Arab countries and there-- are thinking less and less in terms of returning to their original properties in Palestine. And this makes a big difference, th--this--this psychological--I think the psychological conditions are being slowly created through the years, through habit, through the accomplished fact, for a -- a piece-meal, a gradual piece-meal settlement of the various problems that divide Israel from the Arab world. This is all, of course, barring some major explosion or some terrible unpredictable f--in which inthebMiddle East can't be barred or excluded ever entirely

MURROW: Then it's your feeling that the Arab leaders, although they won't say so publicly are coming more and more to recognize in their own minds that Israel is there to stay and that eventually some kind of accommodation must be reached?

BURDETT: I believe so, and I believe that that goes for Nasser too.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Winston Burdett.

SW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Cuba's rebel leader, Fidel Castro said today that the overthrow of the Batista government is "imminent." Castro urged all Cubans to cooperate in maintaining order in rebel-controlled areas and promised swift punishment for looting and destruction of property. He said, "No one should take vengeance against anyone." Two sons of President Batista and their grandfather arrived at New York's Idlewild Airport today from Havana. Batista has eight children in all. The passenger list also included one of Batista's close friends...and six other persons believed to be servants in the Batista house-hold. In Cuba, both the government and the rebels are maintaining silence on the battle for Santa Clara, capital of Las Villas Province. In that city, house to house street fighting is said to be continuing...with the government airlifting in reinforcements. And government aircraft have been bombing rebel-held centers in Eastern and Central Cuba. According to the rebel radio, Castro's forces today captured the town of Trinidad also in Las Villas Province. Early this morning, revolutionary agents drove a truck tp to a munitions warehouse in a suburb of Havana, overwhelmed the armed guard, and went off with a truckload of explosives. What they wree unable to load on the truck they blew up.

The United States Embassy in Havana has obtained the release of two Americans, seized by Cuban police at the Havana airport. Both are high school teachers... who were stopping over briefly in Havana on a flight from Jamaica...in the British West Indies...to New Orleans. They are identified as James W. Reid and Louis Brantley, both of Louisville, Kentucky. They were hustled off a Delta Airlines plane late yesterday in Havana shortly before the aircraft was to depart. Cuban authorities claimed that the two school teachers "shouted remarks favoring the insurrection," while they were in the air terminal.

In Washington, the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Latin American Affairs has scheduled a closed hearing tomorrow on the Cuban crisis.

It was announced today that President Eisenhower will deliver his annual State of the Union message to Congress...in person...on January 9th. That is two days after the new Congress meets. News Secretary Hagerty made the announcement in Gettysburg, where Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower have been spending the holidays. Hagerty said the President will speak for about 40 minutes...and that it will be "not only a review or summation of the state of the union (as the President sees it,) but also of the state of the world." And, as usual, the speech will be broadcast. Specific recommendations for new legislation...including the budget message...will be sent to Congress later.

Secretary Flemming of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, commented on the new budget today...and said that expenditures by his department in fiscal 1960 "will be higher than in any previous year." This, despite the fact that Mr. Eisenhower will advocate a cut in total federal spending. Dr. Flemming gave no figures but said that more money will have to be paid out for public assistance programs operated by the states and for new federal aid under the National Defense Education Act. He declined to say whether money would be budgeted for the construction of public schools.

Liberal Republican senators decided today...at a two and a half hour caucus... to "run" Senator Cooper of Kentucky for party leader in the Senate. Cooper's competitor will be Senator Dirksen of Illinois. The Republican liberals also agreed to support Senator Kuchel of California for party whip, the post now held by Dirksen. A leader of the liberal bloc...Aiken of Vermont...said that in his opinion both Cooper and Kuchel had "an excellent chance to win." He said, "We have assurances of the President's neutrality and respect his desire to be left out of this debate." The liberal group decided not to oppose the re-election of Senator Bridges as chairman of the Republican Policy Committee and Senator

Saltonstall as chairman of the Republican Senate Conference. Aiken said he had been offered the nomination for party leader in the Senate, but that he felt New England already well represented by Bridges and Saltonstall. The final choice will be made at a caucus of all Republican senators when Congress reconvenes.

Here in New York, the newspaper columnist...Marie Torre...declined today to purge herself of contempt of court...and was ordered to surrender next Monday to serve a 10-day jail sentence. Miss Torre has refused to identify the source of a news story, arguing that a reporter has the privilege of not identifying a news source. She was convicted in New York Federal Court of criminal contempt, and the conviction was upheld by the United States Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court...early this month...refused to review the case.

Ogden Reid today announced his resignation as president and editor of the New York Herald-Tribune. The board of directors of the paper named Howard D. Brundage to succeed him as president. John Hay Whitney, the American ambassador to Britain, acquired control of the Herald-Tribune last summer.

The National Mediation Board today called for an end to the strike of flight engineers against Eastern Airlines. The Mediation Board directed its appeal to both the union and the airline...saying that the "economic tug of war must come to an end." The board submitted a settlement formula, which the company immediately said it accepted. The formula calls for continued negotiations and the reinstatement of the striking flight engineers without penalty.

My colleague Winston Burdett is home from Rome. Many of you will remember his reporting from the Vatican during the past year. He also spent a great deal of time in the Middle East. Winston, obviously the most important single area in the Middle East right now is Iraq. How near are the Russians or the communists to taking over there?

BURDETT: That is a very tricky question and I don't think the best informed of us...either among journalists or in government really know the answer to that question. It's a big question. It's a very critical one. The Russians right now are very busy in Iraq opposing Nasser, that's to say opposing Nasserism and opposing the Nasserist forces inside Iraq who would like to see an early unification of Iraq and Nasser's United Republic or a close alignment of Iraq with the United Arab Republic. Iraqi communists are fighting that. They are fighting it effectively. They are fighting it effectively because it so happens that the leader of the Iraqi revolution, the the head of the Iraqi state today, Brigadier Kassem, wants to maintain Iraqi independence of Egypt. He does not want an Iraq which is controllld by a dictator in the Nile Valley. The Iraqi communists want the same thing. So what has happened there is that Kassem has had to strike down and fling into prison the leading Nasserists who were with him in the revolution last July. And in...in alienating them, he's had to rely on communist support and he's getting it.

MURROW: But of course if the communists win in Iraq then the Soviet Union has not just influence in the Middle East but a base of operations, doesn't it?

BURDETT: Tremendous. A tremendous base of operations, and this is the unquestionably the story of the coming year if the Russians get direct or indirect political control of Iraq. That means that their effective influence, their power to dispose extends all the way to the Persian Gulf, which the communists have always been after, which they were under Stalin and which they are today. We have always thought of Iran, of neighboring Iran, as being the most likely passage of Russian influence toward the Gulf. But now undoubtedly tha pressure is concentrated on Iraq, where the Iraqi communists though small are highly organized and given this tricky position, this tricky balance of forces within the nationalist camp, they occupy a very strategic post.

MURROW: Winston, any chance for improvement in Arab-Israeli relations?

BURDETT: In the long term, I think yes. Ah, as a matter of fact I think there already has been a tacit improvement in Arab-Israeli relations which no one talks about. That's to say, which the Arabs do not talk about ever politically they don't feel that they can admit that they are ever going to come to a final settlement with Israel. That's something which in the Arab countries is politically taboo, whether it's under a King or under a new nationalist leader. But, talking to Arabs from year to year, for example, talking even to the most embittered of Arabs, the refugees from Palestine, Arab refugees from Palestine, who are now living in the misery of their camps in the Desert of Jordan, even those refugees realize now particularly since the Sinai Campaign, Israel is a power, Israel is so much more advanced than they, Israel is a solid state...it's there to stay, and therefore, although politicians can't say, "Let's re-settle the refugees elsewhere," nevertheless, the refugees themselves are thinking now in terms of resettlement elsewhere, of seeking a livelihood in Arab countries and they are thinking less and less in terms of returning to their original properties in Palestine. And this makes a big difference, this psychological---. I think the psychological conditions are being slowly created through the years, through habit, through the accomplished fact, for a piece-meal, a gradual piece-meal settlement of the various problems that divide Israel from the Arab world. This is all, of course, barring some major explosion or some terrible unpredictable ---in which the Middle East can't be barred or excluded over entirely.

MURROW: Then it's your feeling that the Arab leaders, although they won't say so publicly are coming more and more to recognize in their own minds that Israel is there to stay and that eventually some kind of accommodation must be reached?

BURDETT: I believe so, and I believe that that goes for Nasser too.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Winston Burdett.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Middle East is an area of the world, full of skull-duggery and intrigue. There is poverty and want...a strong tide of nationalism...and emotions which can easily be inflamed. The mob is always dangerous. As Secretary Dulles once remarked, "These problems have deep roots. They are explosive aspects which can surprise us at any time."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 31, 1958

This is the news:

A communique...issued by the Cuban Army...says that government troops in Santa Clara have been reinforced and that they have gained the upper hand. The battle for Santa Clara, capital of Las Villas Province, is now in its third day...with Fidel Castro's forces reported fighting a desperate rear-guard action. The rebels claimed...early today...to have captured the city of Guantanamo, 27 miles from the United States naval base of the same name in Oriente Province.

A Senate foreign relations subcommittee discussed the Cuban situation for two hours today behind closed doors. The assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, Roy Rubottom, outlined the Administration position. Subcommittee Chairman Morse said afterward that any report...that the United States contemplates intervening in Cuba in support of either side...is without foundation in fact. ~~The subcommittee, Morse said, is satisfied that the Department of State is carrying out its responsibilities in a satisfactory manner.~~ There was no discussion ~~of how close~~ the Batista government may be to being overthrown. ~~Nor did the subcommittee inquire whether the United States would recognize the revolutionary movement, if it should succeed.~~ Rubottom assured the senators ~~that...so far~~ Americans living in Cuba ~~are not in danger.~~

(more)

The United States, Britain and France today formally rejected Russia's proposal to disarm West Berlin...and make it a so-called "free city". On Thanksgiving Day, Khrushchev gave the West six months to consider the Soviet proposal. He said if no agreement were reached after six months, then Russia would turn its control functions in Berlin over to the East German regime. In separate but similar notes, the three western powers flatly rejected Khrushchev's proposition. They are in West Berlin, they said, as "occupying powers". They are not prepared to relinquish their rights...just as they "assume" Russia would not want to restore Allied occupancy of territory once held by American, British and French troops in what is now East Germany. The United States note reminds Moscow that...after the war...this territory was transferred to Soviet occupation through agreements, and it says we expect Russia to keep its agreements on Berlin...including the guarantee of free access to the city. The Western notes say that Berlin is only one aspect of the German problem. We are ready to join Russia in a discussion of the German question as a whole, along with the still broader question of European security. But we will not embark on a discussion of these questions "under menace or ultimatum". The American note said it was assumed that Khrushchev's proposal, with its six-month deadline, was not intended as an ultimatum...and that Russia is ready, like us, "to enter into discussions in an atmosphere devoid of coercion or threats." /

(more)

35

~~The Western powers asked Russia for an early reply.~~

~~The West German government will send a separate note to Moscow next week. West German officials today expressed complete accord with the action taken by the United States, Britain and France.~~

~~Premier Khrushchev said tonight...in a New Year's message...that it was his "conviction" that the prospects for preserving peace in 1959 are "good". And British Prime Minister Macmillan said that his government enters the New Year in a spirit of confidence, resolution and hope.~~

~~Communist China issued a year-end summary...claiming that production in all its major industries had been doubled in 1958.~~

~~President Eisenhower spent much of the day working on a new draft of his State of the Union message. And, here in New York, the stock market ended the year by rising to new high ground for the fourth session in a row.~~

(more)

~~In Washington, the Agriculture Department reports that the prices farmers received for their products dropped by two percent in the month ending November fifteenth. It was estimated, however, that for the year...farm prices averaged about five percent above [illegible]~~

The House (Subcommittee) on Legislative Oversight said today that ~~[illegible]~~ the (next) Congress should carry on a new, broader investigation of the federal regulatory agencies. It also called for the passage of new legislation that would send to prison anyone (exerting) improper pressure on such agencies. The legislation would include a code of ethics. And it would become mandatory that all communications (between) members of Congress and agency officials be put in the public record. The (tentative) subcommittee report makes no mention of either Sherman Adams or Bernard Goldfine.

The Navy today ordered construction of the first of a new class of atomic submarines...designed especially for launching the Polaris ballistic missile. The prototype is to be built by General Dynamics at a cost of 105-million dollars.

4/6

(more)

Mayor Wagner of New York said today that his administration will take "every step necessary" to keep the Teamsters Union from trying to organize the New York City police department. [redacted] The statement followed a teamsters announcement that the union would start picketing the Police Department for organizing purposes on January twelve. One of Hoffa's aides insisted today that the picket line would be set up in order to "advertise" the organization campaign, not to cut off deliveries of supplies needed by the department.

53

Among the few certainties of the year to come is the continuation of the German problem. For a story on that...at year's end...we switch to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Berlin. [redacted] That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting the Berlin crisis as it appears this New Year's Eve. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

56

(more)

Word for Today

Again these words by Heinrich Heine, "The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, December 31, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Among the perhaps very few certainties of the year to come is the continuation of the German problem. And especially dealing with Berlin. For a story on that at the year's end we switch to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Berlin.

SCHORR: In Berlin 1959 is almost two hours old now and the greatest worry of the Berliners on this New Year's seems to be the gray, foggy weather. The people are combatting the climate with huge doses of schnapps and beer in bars like the Revi, the El Dorado, and The Golden Hufeisen. American officers are holding forth in dress uniform at Harnig Haus, the U.S. Mission Club. And at the gay, crowded party at the Maison de France, the French Club. 1959 has brought rockets over Berlin but they're just fireworks, a traditional Berlin way of seeing in the New Year. If Berlin is beleaguered, it isn't acting that way. The newspapers have saluted the Russians with mocking cartoons. One cartoon shows a Moscow clock at midnight while it's 11 p.m. in Bonn and 4 p.m. in Washington. In front of the Moscow clocks stands a weaving Nikita Khrushchev, champagne glass in one hand, swivel stick in the other, saying, "We were the first to discover the New Year." Another cartoon shows a festive lady mixing a cocktail called "1959," shunning a bottle of vodka with the words, "Thank you, that doesn't belong in it." Actually, vodka is being drunk tonight in West Berlin, especially at the Bayar Cafe on the Kurfurstendamm, where nostalgic White Russian emigrés, refugees from the East of another day, gather and weep into their glasses over the old times in Moscow and St. Petersburg. They don't seem to fear the new times in Berlin. If 1959 is to be the year of grim decision for Berlin, no one is acting that way early this morning. Moscow Radio has been heard here almost plaintively, it seems, asking for "common sense and fair play from the West." And the conviction has spread although the East German regime says it isn't so, the conviction has spread that the Kremlin is trying to back off the limb onto which it allowed itself to be pushed by Walter Ulbricht's shaky East German regime. The allied notes to the Kremlin have confirmed that the West will stand firm. Deposits in Berlin savings banks have risen since Christmas, an unusual phenomenon, a sign of returning confidence. And the big headline in all the East Berlin papers is the assurance of Mayor Willie Brandt: "No War over Berlin." Well for a night of New Year's revelry, that's news enough. But when sobriety returns there are those who will look beyond the immediate triumph of stubbornness and unity to what lies ahead. And among those is the vigorous, fast-rising Willie Brandt, the Socialist head of West Berlin's coalition administration, a possible West German Chancellor in some future Socialist government. American officials will be hearing from Brandt when he visits the United States in February after they've had a chance to go over the ground with Russia's Anastas Mikoyan in January. Brandt is possibly the world's most internationally-minded mayor for the fate of this city is an international matter. Brandt believes that stubbornness must be combined with flexibility. The Russians have not given up on Berlin; they've turned from public threat to private maneuver. Around Europe Soviet diplomats are hinting at new concessions, a possible willingness to place a unified Berlin, that is, including the communist sector, under United Nations administration. And Soviet diplomats are trying to spread the impression that some deal over Germany may be made over the heads of the Germans. Brandt, while rejecting any of the Soviet gimmicks, believes that the Russians must be engaged in talks and kept talking. He won't publicly discuss his own ideas for he thinks there must first be a common Western position lest the Russians exploit differences within the Western camp. But he believes, and he will try to persuade Secretary Dulles their proposal for this engagement like the Polish Rapacky Plan for an atom-free zone in Central Europe should at least be explored with the Soviet bloc. Brandt thinks that in a dawning age of the inter-continental missile, the need for the intermediate missile bases in Germany may be dwindling. And he has heard that even from American generals the advantages in this engagement. But while arguing that this engagement should be explored in 1959, Brandt will not push too hard for he believes the most important thing is Western unity. And he refuses to get worked up about May 27, the six-month deadline set by the Russians for a Berlin settlement. His policy is simply to ignore that date. He is projecting for Berlin public works long past May. He's inviting the mayors of the Western world to hold their Congress in Berlin in June. If May passes without an agreement, Brandt thinks the Russians may turn over some functions to the East German regime and that a Chinese Wall may be built along the sector border to stem the flow of refugees from East to West Berlin. But he foresees no situation that the West cannot handle. The West, he thinks, is not without means for a counter-offensive. He thinks a call from the West for passive resistance would rally East Germans workers in a spontaneous general strike that would cripple the Communist regime. But after the experience of Hungary, he would think twice about trying to foment unrest behind the Iron Curtain. On this New Year Brandt seems confident although not carefree. Now this would appear to reflect the mood of all West Berlin. Few would have thought a month ago that January 1st would be a bigger day on Berlin's 1959 calendar than May 27, Khrushchev's day of reckoning; but in the early hours of New Year morning effect of schnapps, the year New Year doesn't seem so grim for this Western outpost behind the Iron Curtain. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, re

Sw

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A communique...issued by the Cuban Army...says that government troops in Santa Clara have been reinforced and that they have gained the upper hand. The battle for Santa Clara, capital of Las Villas Province, is now in its third day...with Fidel Castro's forces reported fighting a desperate rear-guard action. The rebels claimed...early today...to have captured the city of Guantanamo, 27 miles from the United States naval base of the same name in Oriente Province.

A Senate foreign relations subcommittee discussed the Cuban situation for two hours today behind closed doors. The assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, Roy Rubottom, outlined the Administration position. Subcommittee Chairman Morse said afterward that any report...that the United States contemplates intervening in Cuba in support of either side...is without foundation in fact.

The United States, Britain and France today formally rejected Russia's proposal to disarm West Berlin...and make it a so-called "free city." On Thanksgiving Day, Khrushchev gave the West six months to consider the Soviet proposal. He said if no agreement were reached after six months, then Russia would turn its control functions in Berlin over to the East German regime. In separate but similar notes, the three western powers flatly rejected Khrushchev's proposition. They are in West Berlin, they said, as "occupying powers." They are not prepared to relinquish their rights...just as they "assume" Russia would not want to restore Allied occupancy of territory once held by American, British and Freech troops in what is now East Germany. The United States note reminds Moscow that...after the war...this territory was transferred to Soviet occupation through agreements, and it says we expect Russia to keep its agreements on Berlin...including the guarantee of free access to the city. The Western notes say that Berlin is only one aspect of the German problem. We are ready to join Russia in a discussion of the German question as a whole, along with the still broader question of European security. But we will not embark on a discussion of these questions "under menace or ultimatum." The American note said it was assumed that Khrushchev's proposal, with its six-month deadline was not intended as an ultimatum...and that Russia is ready, like us, "to enter into discussions in an atmosphere devoid of coercion or threats."

The House Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight said today that the next Congress should carry on a new, broader investigation of the federal regulatory agencies. It also called for the passage of new legislation that would send to prison anyone exerting improper pressure on such agencies. The legislation would include a code of ethics. And it would become mandatory that all communications between members of Congress and agency officials be put in the public record. The tentative subcommittee report makes no mention of either Sherman Adams or Bernard Goldfine.

The Navy today ordered construction of the first of a new class of atomic submarines...designed especially for launching the Polaris ballistic missile. The prototype is to be built by General Dynamics at a cost of 105-million dollars.

Mayor Wagner of New York said today that his administration will take "every step necessary" to keep the Teamsters Union from trying to organize the New York City police department. The statement followed a teamsters announcement that the union would start picketing the Police Department for organizing purposes on January twelve. One of Hoffa's aides insisted today that the picket line would be set up in order to "advertise" the organization campaign, not to cut off deliveries of supplies needed by the department.

Among the few certainties of the year to come is the continuation of the German problem. For a story on that...at year's end...we switch to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Berlin.

SCHORR: In Berlin,1959 is almost two hours old now and the greatest worry of the Berliners on this New Year's seems to be the gray, soggy weather. The people are combatting the climate with huge doses of schnapps and beer in bars like the Revi, the El Dorado, and The Golden Horseshoe. American officers are holding forth in dress uniform at Harnig Hause, the U.S. Mission Club. And at the gay, crowded party at the Maison de France, the French Club. 1959 has brought rockets over Berlin but they're just fireworks, a traditional Berlin way of seeing in the New Year. If Berlin is beleaguered, it isn't acting that way. The newspapers have saluted the Russians with nocking cartoons. One cartoon shows a Moscow clock at midnight while it's 11 PM in Bonn and 4 PM in Washington. In front of the Moscow clock stands a weaving Nikita Khrushchev, champagne glass in one hand, swivel stick in the other, saying, "We were the first to dsicover the New Year." Another cartoon shows a festive lady mixing a cocktail called "1959" shunning a bottle of vodka with the words, "Thank you, that doesn't belong in it." Actually, vodka is being drunk in West Berlin, especially at the Boyar Cafe on the Kurfurstendamm, whre nostalgic White Russian emigres, refugees from the East of another day, gather and weep into their glasses over the old times in Moscow and St. Petersburg. They don't seem to fear the new times in Berlin. If 1959 is to be the year of grim decision for Berlin, no one is acting that way early this morning. Moscow Radio has been heard here almost plaintively, it seems, asking for "common sense and fair play from the West." And the conviction has spread although the East German regime says it isn't so, the conviction has spread that the Kremlin is trying to back off the limb onto which it allowed itself to be pushed by Walter Ulbricht's shaky East German regime. The allied notes to the Kremlin have confirmed that the West will stand firm. Deposits in Berlin savings banks have risen since Christmas, an unusual phenomenon, a sign of returning confidence. And the big headline in all the West Berlin papers is the assurance of Mayor Willie Brandt: "No War over Berlin." Well, for a night of New Year's revelry, that's news enough. But when sobriety returns there are those who will look beyond the immediate triumph of stubborness and unity to what lies ahead. And among those is the vigorous, fast-rising Willie Brandt, the Socialist head of West Berlin's coalition administration, a possible West German Chancellor in some Future Socialist government. American officials will be hearing from Brandt when he visits the United States in February after they've had a chance to go over the ground with Russia's Anastas Mikoyan in January. Brandt is possibly the world's most internationally-minded mayor for the fate of this city is an international matter. Brandt believes that stubborness must be combined with flexibility. The Russians have not given up on Berlin; they've turned from public threat to private maneuver. Around Europe Soviet diplomats are hinting at new concessions, a possible willingness to place a unified Berlin, that is, including the communist sector, under United Nations administration. And Soviet diplomats are trying to spread the impression that some deal over Germany may be made over the heads of the Germans. Brandt, while rejecting any of the Soviet gimmicks, believes that the Russians must be engaged in talks and kept talking. He won't publicly discuss his own ideas for he thinks there must first be a common Western position lest the Russians exploit differences within the Western camp. But he believes, and he will try to persuade Secretary Dulles their proposal for this engagement like the Polish Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone in Central Europe should at least be explored with the Soviet bloc. Brandt thinks that in a dawning age of the inter-continental missile, the need for the intermediate missile bases in Germany may be dwindling. And he has heard that even from American generals the advantages in this engagement. But while arguing that this engagement should be explored in 1959, Brandt will not push too hard for he believes the most important thing is Western unity. And he refuses to get worked up about May 27th, the six-month deadline set by the Russians for a Berlin settlement. His policy is simply to ignore that date. He is projecting for Berlin public works long past May. He's inviting the mayors of the Western world to hold their Congress in Berlin in June. If May passes without an agreement, Brandt thinks the Russians may turn over some functions to the East German regime and that a Chinese Wall may be built along the sector border to stem the flow of refugees from East to West Berlin. But he foresees no situation that the West cannot handle. The West, he thinks, is not without means for a counter-offensive, He thinks a call from the West for passive resistence would rally East German workers in a spontaneous general strike that would cripple the Communist regime. But after the experience of Hungary, he would think twice about trying to foment unrest behind the Iron Curtain. On this New Year Brandt seems confident although not carefree. Now this would appear to reflect the mood of all West Berlin. Few would have thought a month ago that Jnnuary 1st would be a bigger day on Berlin's 1959 calendar than May 27, Khrushchev's day of reckoning; but in the early hours of New Year morning effect of schnapps, the year New Year doesn't seem so grim for this Western outpost behind the Iron Curtain. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr reporting the Berlin crisis as it appears this New Year's Eve.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Again these words by Heinrich Heine, "The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 1, 1959

This is the news....

President Batista of Cuba fled into exile, but the revolt continues. Before flying to the Dominican Republic, Batista turned his powers over to a military junta which...in turn...announced that a justice of the Cuban Supreme Court, Carlos Piedra, had been appointed provisional president. Piedra sought to bring order out of chaos. He ordered a cease-fire in government operations against the rebels on all fronts and appealed for the nation to remain calm. The answer given by Fidel Castro is that the "triumph of the revolution" must be absolute. The war operation, he said, will continue. Castro's choice for provisional president, pending free elections, is the former Santiago judge, Manuel Urrutia, who flew to Cuba last month after a year of exile in the United States. Urrutia has the support---not only of the July 26th

12

(more)

Movement---but of all revolutionary groups. Pandemonium broke out in Havana this afternoon, as soon as it was learned that the Batista dictatorship had collapsed. Crowds began roaming the streets, peacefully at first, shouting pro-Castro slogans and waving the red and black flags of the revolutionary movement. Later they started knocking down parking meters and smashing windows, and some elements began looting stores. Rebel broadcasts called for order. The radio stations in Havana...now in rebel hands... also warned people not to accept orders from the military junta. Castro, they said, will lay down his own terms. The rebels are said to have called a general strike.

In Washington, the ambassador appointed by Batista has resigned. He has been succeeded by Dr. Emilio Pando, the embassy's economic counsellor...who was Castro's choice. A State Department spokesman says the United States will not consider recognition of a new provisional Cuban government until order has been restored. Standby plans for the evacuation of United States citizens were "dusted off" a few days ago. But no reports of harm to Americans have been received so far. Americans in Cuba have been advised to exert "appropriate caution".

29

All flights to Havana have been cancelled by Pan American World Airways and National Airlines. The Holland-America Line announces that the liner New Amsterdam...which was due to stop in Havana today on a cruise...has been diverted to Nassau, in the Bahamas. The ship, carrying 760 passengers, will leave Nassau tomorrow afternoon for New York.

34

40 (4)

The important pwople who surrounded Batista are following him into exile. Many of them are coming to the United States. A Cubana Airlines plane landed at New York's Idlewild Airport this afternoon with 92 persons seeking asylum. 37 Other planeloads of refugees landed in Miami, Jacksonville and West Palm Beach. One of the arrivals in Jacksonville was Ruben Batista, the ex-dictator's eldest son who is 25. He said his father only wanted peace for the Cuban people. The Cubans arriving at West Palm Beach were described as "higher echelons of the Batista government." At Miami International Airport, other Cubans seeking asylum were threatened by a crowd of about 500 rebel sympathizers...who were held back by police. A Cuban airliner...carrying fifty-four refugees...landed at the international airport in New Orleans. They included two more of Batista's children and at least four military officers. The Cuban officers were armed---one of them carried a sub-machinegun---and the weapons, consisting mostly of automatic pistols, were turned over to immigration authorities. All had obviously left Cuba in haste, with only small handbags and the clothes they wore.

50

A Reuters dispatch from Cairo says that President Nasser has launched a massive crack-down on Egyptian Communists. Reuters says...on the basis of "authoritative reports"...that more than a hundred persons were arrested in Cairo tonight and that three left-wing publishing houses have been pad-locked.

54

The Moscow radio says that Russia will TEST an atomic-powered airplane in 1959.

55

(5)

Secretary of Commerce Strauss said today that...economically...we start the New Year "from a position of increasing strength." He predicted that the peak rate of income and production, achieved in late 1958, will be bettered in 1959...ushering in, in 1960, a decade of prosperity "which should surpass anything we have experienced." Strauss said that with the number of unemployed still above normal, a "prime objective" in the New Year will be more work for more people.

62

With this date---January first---the European Common Market went into effect. The six common market countries are France, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg...representing a total population of 180-million. Each of these countries has now cut its tariffs against the other by 10 percent. And each will open its frontiers to the importation of 20 percent more goods from other members. Also, simultaneously, the six nations are pooling their atomic resources for the peaceful production of nuclear energy.

70

Note... bowl game scores to come.

I have written full script because of uncertainty of a pickup from Havana. If a piece materializes in time, we can cut.

Bliss

In the "bowl" games... in the Rose Bowl, IOWA 38, CALIFORNIA 12.

In the Orange Bowl, Oklahoma defeated Syracuse, 21 to 6.

Louisiana State shut out Clemson, 7 to nothing in the Sugar Bowl.

And in the Cotton Bowl, the Air Force battled Texas Christian to a scoreless tie.

Word for Today

After twenty-five years as strongman of Cuba, the dictator Batista has been deposed. The revolt has been in progress for more than five years of that time, but as Wendell Phillips once observed, revolutions are not made. They come. "A revolution," he said, "is as natural a growth as an oak. It comes out of the past. Its foundations are laid far back." Goodnight and good luck.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, January 1, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... With this date, January 1st, the European Common Market went into effect. The six Common Market countries are: France, West Germany, Italy, The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxemburg, representing a total population of 180 million. Each of these countries has now cut its tariffs against the other by 10%, and each will open its frontiers to the importation of 20% more goods from other members. Also, simultaneously, the six nations are pooling their atomic resources for the peaceful production of nuclear energy.

Premier Khrushchev and President Voroshilov today cabled New Year's greetings to President Eisenhower, expressing hope that decisive action would be taken in the New Year toward removing the danger of war. Mr. Eisenhower sent a reply, saying that he appreciated their message but, in his view, their declaration of intentions toward West Berlin was "not in accord with your expressed aspirations and hope."

In the ~~Rose~~ "Bowl" games played today - in the Rose Bowl, Iowa, 38; California,12. In the Orange Bowl, Oklahoma, 21; Syracuse, 6. In the Sugar Bowl, Louisiana State, 7; Clemson, 0. In the Cotton Bowl, the Air Force, 0; Texas Christian, 0.

There was nothing new or unexpected in the notes the Western powers sent to Moscow on the Berlin issue. The NATO Council, meeting in Paris, had decided to reject the Soviet demand that the occupying powers withdraw from West Berlin. It also had decided to renew proposals to discuss the question of German unification, along with European security. This was announced at the time. The notes were actually drafted and coordinated in Paris. What was unexpected about them was their timing. In Paris, it had been decided to send them considerably later. Then came word of the intended visit to Washington of Deputy Premier Mikoyan. The three Western governments at once seized the opportunity for a good maneuver, and that maneuver was to send the notes right away, to have them in Moscow before Mikoyan's departure.

Khrushchev, in his note of November 21st, had made his maximum demand; but he did so expecting counter-proposals, as he told visitors and strongly hinted in a subsequent news conference. But all he got yesterday was the West's maximum terms; an absolute no on Berlin, and an offer to discuss unification of Germany on the basis of free elections along with European security.

The Khrushchev strategy was to force the West to make the first modification of its maximum terms. But in sending the notes, at this time, the West has put Khrushchev in a position where he must modify his own maximum terms first, for he would not send Mikoyan to Washington simply to repeat the demands of the November 21st note. He must bring assurances that the Berlin issue is negotiable. He must say, or at least hint, to what extent and on what terms Khrushchev would be willing to meet the West part way.

So perhaps the West can expect to get a glimpse of at least some of the unplayed cards in Khrushchev's hand before it has to show its own. This is no major victory, but it is smart maneuvering and this time the Western governments were able to act quickly.

Now, the important paragraph in the United States note is the final one, in which we say we would like to know whether the Soviet government is ready to enter into Four Power discussions. In that case, the note says, our object would be to discuss Berlin in a wider framework of the entire German problem, as well as European security. The United States Government, the note concludes, would welcome the views of the Soviet Government at an early date. The early date, obviously, would be when Mikoyan meets Washington officials sometime next week. So the Mikoyan visit takes on even more importance than when it was first proposed. And it is noteworthy that Khrushchev seems to be trying to create an impression of reasonableness, in contrast with that possible threat of war voiced in Gromyko's Christmas Day speech.

As toastmaster at the gala Kremlin New Year's dinner and dance, Khrushchev reaffirmed his belief that communism would triumph peacefully and not by force. And in a toast on the Seven Year Plan, which he said was of particular importance, because of the competition with the United States, he leaned in the direction of Ambassador Thompson, at a nearby table, and he added, "Mr. Thompson, we are going to overtake you." He did not mention the Berlin crisis, or the Western notes in his toast. Nor did he refer to the notes in a private conversation with the American ambassador. But he did openly refer to the Mikoyan visit, a fact which may or may not be noted in the Soviet press. So far, the Russian public has not been told anything about Mikoyan's visit. When he goes his departure will be announced in a few lines in the newspapers. Which would be standard practice. The Soviet public is not encouraged to speculate about or to criticize the actions of its top men. It may be that a start will be made to find some middle ground between the East and the West during Mikoyan's visit. But if so, it will only be a start. What matters first of all is that the deadline of May 21st, when we have been told we will have to deal in Berlin with the East German regime, is quietly forgotten. The chances for that are now rated as pretty good. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Batista of Cuba fled into exile, but the revolt continues. Before flying to the Dominican Republic, Batista turned his powers over to a military junta which...in turn...announced that a justice of the Cuban Supreme Coutt, Carlos Piedra, had been appointed provisional president. Piedra sought to bring order out of chaos. He ordered a cease-fire in government operations against the rebels on all fronts and appealed for the nation to remain calm. The answer given by Fidel Castro is that the "triumph of the revolution" must be absolute. The war operation, he said, will continue. Castro's choice for provisional president, pending free elections, is the former Santiago judge, Manuel Urrutia, who flew to Cuba last month after a year of exile in the United States. Urrutia has the support---not only of the July 26th Movement---but of all revolutionary groups. Pandemonium broke out in Havana this afternoon, as soon as it was learned that the Batista dictatorship had collapsed. Crowds began roaming the streets, peacefully at first, shouting pro-Castro slogans and waving the red and black flags of the revolutionary movement. Later, they started knocking down parking meters and smashing windows, and some elements began looting stores. Rebel broadcasts called for order. The radio stations in Havana...now in rebel hands...also warned people not to accept orders from the military junta. Castro, they said, will lay down his own terms. The rebels are said to have called a general strike.

In Washington, the ambassador appointed by Batista has resigned. He has been succeeded by Dr. Emilio Pando, the embassy's economic counsellor... who was Castro's choice. A State Department spokesman says the United States will not consider recognition of a new provisional Cuban government until order has been restored. Standby plans for the evacuation of United States citizens were "dusted off" a few days ago. But no reports of harm to Americans have been received so far. Americans in Cuba have been advised to exert "appropriate caution."

All flights to Havana have baen cancelled by Pan American World Airways and National Airlines. The Holland-America Line announces that the liner New Amsterdam...which was due to stop in Havana today on a cruise...has been diverted to Nassau, in the Bahamas. The ship, carrying 760 passengers will leave Nassau tomorrow afternoon for New York.

The important people who surrounded Batista are following him into exile. Many of them are coming to the United States. A Cubana Airlines plane landed at New York's Idlewild Airport this afternoon with 92 persons seeking asylum. Other planeloads of refugees landed in Miami, Jacksonville and West Palm Beach. One of the arrivals in Jacksonville Was Ruben Batista, the ex-dictator's eldest son who is 25. He said his father only wanted peace for the Cuban people. The Cubans arriving at West Palm Beach were described as "higher echelons of the Batista government." At Miami International Airport, other Cubans seeking asylum were threatened by a crowd of about 500 rebel sympathizers...who were held by by police. A Cuban airliner...carrying fifty-four refugees...landed at the international airport in New Orleans. They included two more of Batista's children and at least four military officers. The Cuban officers were armed---one of them carried a sub-machinegun---and the weapons, consisting mostly of automatic pistols, were turned over to immigration authorities. All had obviously left Cuba in haste, with only small handbags and the clothes they wore.

A Reuters dispatch from Cairo says that President Nasser has launched a massive crack-down on Egyptian Communists. Reuters says...on the basis of "authoritative reports"...that more than a hundred persons were arrested in Cairo tonight and that three left-wing publishing houses have been pad-locked.

The Moscow radio says that Russia will test an atomic-powered airplane in 1959.

Secretary of Commerce Strauss said today that...economically, we start the New Year "from a position of increasing strength." He predicted that the peak rate of income and production, achieved in late 1958, will be bettered in 1959...ushering in, in 1960, a decade of prosperity "which should surpass anything we have experienced." Strauss said that with the number of unemployed still above normal, a "prime objective" in the New Year will be more work for more people.

With this date, January 1st, the European Common Market went into effect. The six Common Market countries are: France, West Germany, Italy, The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg, representing a total population of 180-million. Each of these countries has now cut its tariffs against the other by 10%, and each will open its frontiers to the importation of 20% more goods from other members. Also, simultaneously, the six nations are pooling their atomic resources for the peaceful production of nuclear energy.

Premier Khrushchev and President Voroshilov today cabled New Year's greetings to President Eisenhower, expressing hope that decisive action would be taken in the New Year toward removing the danger of war. Mr. Eisenhower sent a reply, saying that he appreciated their message, but in his view, their declaration of intentions toward West Berlin was "not in accord with your expressed aspirations and hope."

In the "bowl" games played today - in the Rose Bowl, Iowa 38; California 12. In the Orange Bowl, Oklahoma 21; Syracuse 6. In the Sugar Bowl, Louisiana State 7; Clemson 0. In the Cotton Bowl, the Air Force 0; Texas Christian 0.

There was nothing new or unexpected in the notes the Western powers sent to Moscow on the Berlin issue. The NATO Council, meeting in Paris had decided to reject the Soviet demand that the occupying powers withdraw from West Berlin. It also had decided to renew proposals to discuss the question of German unification, along with European security. This was announced at the time. The notes were actually drafted and coordinated in Paris. What was unexpected about them was their timing. In Paris, it had been decided to send them considerably later. Then came word of the intended visit to Washington of Deputy Premier Mikoyan. The three Western governments at once seized the opportunity for a good maneuver, and that maneuver was to send the notes right away, to have them in Moscow before Mikoyan's departure.

Khrushchev, in his note of November 21st, had made his maximum demand, but he did so expecting counter-proposals, as he told visitors and strongly hinted in a subsequent news conference. But all he got yesterday was the West's maximum terms, an absolute no on Berlin and an offer to discuss unification of Germany on the basis of free elections along with European security.

The Khrushchev strategy was to force the West to make the first modification of its maximum terms. But in sending the notes, at this time, the West has put Khrushchev in a position where he must modify his own maximum terms first, for he would not send Mikoyan to Washington simply to repeat the demands of the November 21st note. He must bring assurances that the Berlin issue is negotiable. He must say, or at least hint, to what extent and on what terms Khrushchev would be willing to meet the West part way.

So perhaps the West can expect to get a glimpse of at least some of the unplayed cards in Khrushchev's hand before it has to show its own. This is no major victory, but it is smart maneuvering and this time the Western governments were able to act quickly.

Now, the important paragraph in the United States note is the final one, in which we say we would like to know whether the Soviet government is ready to enter into Four Power discussions. In that case, the note says, our object would be to discuss Berlin in a wider framework of the entire German problem, as well as European security. The United States Government, the note concludes, would welcome the views of the Soviet Government at an early date. The early date, obviously, would be when Mikoyan meets Washington officials sometime next week. So the Mikoyan visit takes on even more importance than when it was first proposed. And it is noteworthy that Khrushchev seems to be trying to create an impression of reasonableness, in contrast with that possible threat of war voiced in Gromyko's Christmas Day speech.

As toastmaster of the gala Kremlin New Year's dinner and dance, Khrushchev reaffirmed his belief that communism would triumph peacefully and not by force. And in a toast on the Seven Year Plan, which he said was of particular importance, because of the competition with the United States, he leaned in the direction of Ambassador Thompson, at a nearly table, and he added, "Mr.Thompson, we are going to overtake you." He did not mention the Berlin crisis, or the Western notes in his toast. Nor did he refer to the notes in a private conversation with the American ambassador. But he did openly refer to the Mikoyan visit, a fact which may or may not be noted in the Soviet press. So far, the Russian public has not been told anything about Mikoyan's visit. When he goes his departure will be announced in a few lines in the newspapers, which would be standard practice. The Soviet public is not encouraged to speculate about or to criticize the actions of its top men. It may be that a start will be made to find some middle ground between the East and the West during Mikoyan's visit. But if so, it will only be a start. What matters first of all is that the deadline of May 21st, when we have been told we will have to deal in Berlin with the East German regime, is quietly forgotten. The chances for that are nowrated as pretty good.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: After twenty-five years as strongman of Cuba, the dictator Batista has been deposed. The revolt has been in progress for more than five years of that time, but as Wendell Phillips once observed, revolutions are not made. They come. "A revolution," he said, "is as natural a growth as an oak. It comes out of the past. Its foundations are laid far back."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 2, 1959

This is the news:

Russia announces that it has launched a rocket toward the moon. The announcement...broadcast by Moscow radio...says the launching took place today and that according to preliminary data, the last stage of the rocket "received the requisite cosmic speed." It says the rocket has crossed the eastern border of the Soviet Union, passed over the Hawaiian Islands, "and is rapidly moving away from the earth." The rocket, according to Moscow radio, is expected to reach the "area" of the moon late tomorrow night. Moscow promises to keep the world advised. This is the first time that Russia has announced an attempted probe of the moon. The United States already has made four such attempts, which failed...although in two instances the rocket entered outer space and radioed valuable scientific data back to earth./ Russia says the launching today was made to commemorate the 21st Party Congress later this month./ The weight of the last stage of the rocket---without fuel---is given as 3-thousand, 248 pounds. It carries special instruments designed to create a sodium "cloud"...that for a few minutes tonite will give the rocket the appearance of a comet. It also carries radio transmitters which have already been heard. And in the nose-cone, there is a Soviet flag. Here is the Sound of the Rocket as Received a few minutes ago x

In Washington, the Defense Department said it knew about the Russian "moon shot" before the Moscow announcement./ It did not elaborate.

In Congress, the House Space Committee today urged the Administration to try at once to reach the moon with two rockets, now available at Cape Canaveral. / The committee made its recommendation just before the Russian announcement.

The situation in Cuba tonight is confused. / The rebel leader, Fidel Castro, has made a broadcast from the seat of his provisional government in Santiago...declaring that he had been betrayed. "Now," he said, "is when the revolution starts." Castro accused General Cantillo (CAN-TEE-YO), who took over as head of a military junta when Batista fled, of breaking his word. / Castro said he had made a deal with Cantillo...whereby the government would be turned over to him from Batista on Wednesday, and this was not done. Castro also accuses Cantillo of allowing Batista to escape the country.

Earlier today, Castro proclaimed Dr. Manuel Urrutia (OO-ROO'-TEE-AH) as provisional president. The military junta had declared a Supreme Court justice, Carlos Piedra (PEE-AID'-DRA), as provisional president. But today the Cuban armed forces gave their allegiance to Castro's candidate. / The new leader of the armed forces is a Castro man.

—>

There are signs---nothing more at this point---that not all the revolutionary factions are in agreement. Castro has called repeatedly for order, but Havana was the scene today of a three-hour pitched battle with Batista die-hards...holed up in a building in the center of town. Reports which cannot immediately be confirmed say that in this action at least 40 men are dead.

Castro has not entered Havana. Speculation is that he will come in sometime tomorrow.

The United States Navy has sent three destroyer escorts and two submarine tenders into Cuban waters at the request of the State Department. At last report, they were standing by at sea off the Cuban coast. They are to evacuate Americans, if that becomes necessary. An ocean-going ferry, The City of Havana, has arrived in Havana Harbor from Key West to pick up about 500 stranded American tourists.

A supporter of Fidel Castro today took over the Cuban consulate in Chicago. All records were impounded for possible use as evidence against followers of Batista who fled to the United States. A similar transfer of authority has taken place in the consul-general's office, here in New York. And the pattern is expected to be followed in Cuban consulates elsewhere.

General Motors has agreed to return to the government, another 4-million, 900-thousand dollars, on a contract for the production of F-84-F jet fighters. This is in addition to a rebate of 5-million dollars on the contract, paid back a year ago. The Justice Department contends that G.M. was overpaid, because of accounting errors made by the company. Frederic Donner, chairman of G.M., said today that the settlement is based on a proposal it initiated. G.M., he said, "does not wish to profit through a misunderstanding."

Secretary of Labor Mitchell today denounced the efforts of the teamsters union, to organize the New York City police. Mitchell referred to the threat by Henry Feinstein, president of teamsters local 237, to set up a picket line that would cut off the delivery of supplies to police headquarters. Mitchell said this kind of "blackmail" should be prohibited by federal law. James Hoffa, head of the teamsters union, has lifted the threat made by Feinstein...saying that the pickets would not stop deliveries, but only "advertise" the union's drive to organize policemen across the country.

Edward R. Murrow: January 2, 1959. 7:45 p.m.

The astonishment caused by Fidel Castro's rise in Cuba is a reminder that people still do not properly evaluate the power of guerilla warfare. If skillfully used, it can be the greatest material force in the modern world next to nuclear energy. Perhaps it has changed things even more than atomic energy. ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ For guerilla warfare won China and thus was able to commit a nation of six hundred million to Communism. It smashed the French Empire, first in Southeast Asia, then in North Africa. It won its first great modern victory in Yugoslavia under Tito, and it has since revolutionized the basic concepts of military power. The up-to-date army of planes, tanks and highly-drilled infantry men is helpless before guerilla fighting ~~in open country,~~ if the guerillas have support of the local population and the will ~~XXXX~~X to win. As Batista, the fallen Cuban dictator put it, an army needs a hundred men for every single guerilla fighter.

The most significant thing about Fidel Castro may be that he grasped the potential power of guerilla warfare while in his early phase. The young law school graduate and son of a plantation owner, did not embark on his career of rebellion with any highly developed plan, or even much strategic knowledge. His first adventure - which has given his movement its name, "The Twenty-Sixth of July Movement" - was a commando-like raid by two hundred students on an army post in Santiago, made in 1953. It turned into a tragic failure. A hundred students were killed, and when the Catholic Archbishop intervened, Castro, who is a devout Catholic, surrendered. He got a fifteen-year jail sentence, but came out of prison in 1955 through an amnesty. He went to Mexico to make a fresh start. There he recruited and trained a small band of guerilla fighters, and two years ago he landed with eighty-one followers in Cuba. The boat they were in was spotted by Batista agents and attacked. All but twelve of the band were killed. Castro with these survivors escaped to the mountains in eastern Cuba. But in two years the twelve in the mountains became six thousand in the mountains, and Batista's army of forty thousand, with its planes and tanks, could not crush it.

The Castro story has been told many times in the last two years. But it was picturesque, and not made out to have much significance. And of course it was always written without the surprise ending of the last two days. Scores of American newsmen visited Castro in his mountain hide-out. They liked him. They found him a fighter, an athletic six-footer with a short hobo's beard, and a half-burned cigar in his teeth, who talked confidently but not convincingly of the certainty of his victory. The newsmen also reported his political views, which were mildly radical. At first Castro was going to nationalize American utilities and estates. Later he said he wouldn't, and denied that he was anti-American, (even when he was kidnapping workers from American enterprises.) Asked about being a Communist, Castro pointed to the fact that he and his guerillas were Roman Catholics. There was one exception, a leftist Captain, but Castro did not probe into his views so long as he was a good Captain. Castro's brother, in command of one of his columns, is reported to be more radical than Fidel, but no one seems to know how much. The newsmen were never able to uncover a well-thought-through political or economic program in the movement. It was democratic, it wanted to restore constitutional rights, it was angered over the brutality of the police and army. It wanted better labor conditions. But what it thought about was chiefly the art and practice of guerilla warfare.

No doubt this sketchy reporting did not do justice to the extent of the movement. It had followers in the cities, among professional classes, students and even business men. Without this support the guerilla victories by themselves might not have put Batista to flight. The Castro organization appears to be more widespread than was realized. He had many agents abroad who feverishly recruited fighters and arms. We do not know who supplied the arms or the money, and whoever did is sure to have a lot to say about policy in the next regime. The arms were smuggled through the blockade, until Batista complained that Castro had more than he, that is, of arms useful in guerilla fighting. The United States refused to supply either side, but Batista did get some arms from Trujillo and from the British.

Castro at thirty-one is too young to be a constitutional President. His future -- if he has not already had it -- could be distinguished. For the present he can rest on his laurels. He has confounded the incredulous and done the well-nigh impossible. Washington had a chance to send an informal envoy into the mountains to size him up and rejected it. Now it can take comfort from the fact that it did not try to bolster up Batista, so that his defeat in no way is ours. But for that matter, neither is Castro's victory.

Word for Today

Fidel Castro has won the military phase of the revolution, despite repeated setbacks. He conducted guerrilla war in the classic pattern. And believing in himself, and his cause, he persevered. William Jennings Bryan said, "Destiny is not a matter of chance, it is a matter of choice. It is not a thing to be waited for, it is a thing to be achieved."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia announces that it has launched a rocket toward the moon. The announcement...broadcast by Moscow radio...says the launching took place today and that according to preliminary data, the last stage of the rocket "received the requisite cosmic speed." It says the rocket has crossed the eastern border of the Soviet Union, passed over the Hawaiian Islands, "and is rapidly moving away from the earth." The rocket, according to Moscow radio, is expected to reach the "area" of the moon late tomorrow night. Moscow promises to keep the world advised. This is the first time that Russia has announced an attempted probe of the moon. The United States already has made four such attempts which failed... although in two instances the rocket entered outer space and radioed valuable scientific data back to earth. Russia says the launching today was made to commemorate the 21st Party Congress later this month. The weight of the last stage of the rocket---without fuel---is given as 3-thousand, 248 pounds. It carries special instruments designed to create a sodium "cloud"...that for a few minutes tonight will give the rocket the appearance of a comet. It also carries radio transmitters which have already been heard. And in the nose-cone, there is a Soviet flag. Here is the sound of the rocket as received a few minutes ago.

In Washington, the Defense Department said it knew about the Russian "moon shot" before the Moscow announcement. It did not elaborate.

In Congress, the House Space Committee today urged the Administration to try at once to reach the moon with two rockets, now available at Cape Canaveral. The committee made its recommendation just before the Russian announcement.

The situation in Cuba tonight is confused. The rebel leader, Fidel Castro, has made a broadcast from the seat of his provisional government in Santiago...declaring that he had been betrayed. "Now," he said, "is when the revolution starts." Castro accused General Cantillo, who took over as head of a military junta when Batista fled, of breaking his word. Castro said he had made a deal with Cantillo...whereby the government would be turned over to him from Batista on Wednesday, and this was not done. Castro also accuses Cantillo of allowing Batista to escape the country.

Earlier today, Castro proclaimed Dr. Manuel Urrutia as provisional president. The military junta had declared a Supreme Court justice, Carlos Piedra, as provisional president. But today the Cuban armed forces gave their allegiance to Castro's candidate. The new leader of the armed forces is a Castro man.

There are signs---nothing more at this point---that not all the revolutionary factions are in agreement. Casyro has called repeatedly for order, but Havana was the scene today of a three-hour pitched battle with Batista die-hards... holed up in a building in the center of town. Reports which cannot immediately be confirmed say that in this action at least 40 men are dead.

Castro has not entered Havana. Speculation is that he will come in sometime tomorrow.

The United States Navy has sent three destroyer escorts and two submarine tenders into Cuban waters at the request of the State Department. At last report, they were standing by at sea off the Cuban coast. They are to evacuate Americans, if that becomes necessary. An ocean-going ferry, the City of Havana, has arrived in Havana Harbor from Key West to pick up about 500 stranded American tourists.

A supporter of Fidel Castro today took over the Cuban consulate in Chicago. All records were impounded for possible use as evidence against followers of Batista who fled to the United States. A similar transfer of authority has taken place in the consul-general's office,here in New York. And the pattern is expected to be followed in Cuban consulates elsewhere.

General Motors has agreed to return to the government another 4-million, 900-thousand dollars on a contract for the production of F-84-F jet fighters. This is in addition to a rebate of 5-million dollars on the contract paid back a year ago. The Justice Department contends that G.M. was overpaid because of accounting errors made by the company. Frederic Donner, Chairman of G.M. said today that the settlement is based on a proposal it initiated. G.M., he said, "does not wish to profit through a misunderstanding."

Secretary of Labor Mitchell today denounced the efforts of the teamsters union to organize the New York City police. Mitchell referred to the threat by Henry Feinstein, president of teamsters local 237, to set up a picket line that would cut off the delivery of supplies to police headquarters. Mitchell said this kind of "blackmail" should be prohibited by federal law. James Hoffa, head of the teamsters union, has lifted the threat made by Feinstein...saying that the pickets would not stop deliveries but only "advertise" the union's drive to organize policemen across the country.

The astonishment caused by Fidel Castro's rise in Cuba is a reminder that people still do not properly evaluate the power of guerilla warfare. If skillfully used, it can be the greatest material force in the modern world next to nuclear energy. Perhaps it has changed things even more than atomic energy. For guerilla warfare won China and thus was able to commit a nation of six hundred million to Communism. It smashed the French Empire, first in Southeast Asia, then in North Africa. It won its first great modern victory in Yugoslavia under Tito, and it has since revolutionized the basic concepts of military power. The up-tp-date army of planes, tanks and highly-drilled infantry men is helpless before guerilla fighting if the guerillas have support of the local population and the will to win. As Batista, the fallen Cuban dictator put it, an army needs a hundred men for every single guerilla fighter.

The most significant thing about Fidel Castro may be that he grasped the potential power of guerilla warfare while in his early phase. The young law school graduate and son of a plantation owner, did not embark on his career of rebellion with any highly developed plan, or even much strategic knowledge. His first adventure - which has given his movement its name, "The Twenty-Sixth of July Movement" - was a commando-like raid by two hundred students on an army post in Santiago,made in 1953. It turned into a tragic failure. A hundred students were killed, and when the Catholic Archbishop intervened, Castro, who is a devout Catholic, surrendered. He got a fifteen-year jail sentence, but came out of prison in 1955 through an amnesty. He went to Mexico to make a fresh start. There he recruited and trained a small band of guerilla fighters, and two years ago he landed with eighty-one followers in Cuba. The boat they were in was spotted by Batista agents and attacked. All but twelve of the band were killed. Castro with these survivors escaped to the mountains in eastern Cuba. But in two years the twelve in the mountains became six thousand in the mountains, and Batista's army of forty thousand, with its planes and tanks, could not crush it.

The Castro story has been told many times in the last two years. But it was picturesque, and not made out to have much significance. And of course it was always written without the surprise ending of the last two days. Scores of American newsmen visited Castro in his mountain hide-out. They liked him. They found him a fighter, an athletic six-footer with a short hobo's beard, and a half-burned cigar in his teeth, who talked confidently but not convincingly of the certainty of his victory. The newsmen also reported his political views, which were mildly radical. At first Castro was going to nationalize American utilities and estates. Later he said he wouldn't, and denied that he was anti-American, even when he was kidnapping workers from American enterprises. Asked about being a Communist, Castro pointed to the fact that he and his guerillas were Roman Catholics. There was one exception, a leftist captain, but Castro did not probe into his views so long as he was a good captain. Castro's brother, in command of one of his columns, is reported to be more radical than Fidel, but no one seems to know how much. The newsmen were never able to uncover a well-thought-through political or economic program in the movement. It was democratic, it wanted to restore constitutional rights, it was angered over the brutality of the police and army. It wanted better labor conditions. But what it thought about was chiefly the art and practice of guerilla warfare.

No doubt this sketchy reporting did not do justice to the extent of the movement. It had followers in the cities, among professional classes, students and even business men. Without this support the guerilla victories by themselves might not have put Batista to flight. The Castro organization appears to be more widespread than was realized. He had many agents abroad who feverishly recruited fighters and arms. We do not know who supplied the arms or the money, and whoever did is sure to have a lot to say about policy in the next regime. The arms were smuggled through the blockade, until Batista complained that Castro had more than he, that is, of arms useful in guerilla fighting. The United States refused to supply either side, but Batista did get some arms from Trujillo and from the British.

Castro at thirty-one is too young to be a constitutional President. His future - if he has not already had it - could be distinguished. For the present he can rest on his laurels. He has confounded the incredulous and done the well-nigh impossible. Washington had a chance to send an informal envoy into the mountains to size him up and rejected it. Now it can take comfort from the fact that it did not try to bolster up Batista, so that his defeat in no way is ours. But for that matter, neither is Castro's victory.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Fidel Castro has won the military phase of the revolution, despite repeated setbacks. He conducted guerrilla war in the classic pattern. And believing in himself and his cause he persevered. Willing Jennings Bryan said, "Destiny is not a matter of chance, it is a matter of choice. It is not a thing to be waited for, it is a thing to be achieved."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 5, 1959

This is the news:

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan called on Secretary Dulles today at the State Department for what Mikoyan described as "a preliminary exchange of views." The meeting lasted for an hour and 35 minutes. Mikoyan told reporters it was a "useful" talk and that questions of disarmament and trade, as well as Germany and the Berlin crisis, had been discussed. He emphasized that the discussion had been in general terms. They plan to meet again after Mikoyan makes a trip of about 10 days to the West Coast. The Russian leader said he also plans on his return to Washington to see the President.

~~Rickets, representing former political prisoners of Hungary, appeared across the street from the State Department today, carrying placards...and shouting...for Mikoyan to "go home".~~

Mr. Dulles had planned to fly to Ottawa this afternoon to confer with Canadian officials on trade problems. He cancelled the trip because of a virus infection, and Secretary of the Treasury Anderson went in his place. Dulles picked up the virus infection yesterday. Although he is reported recovering, doctors advised him to forego the trip and curtail his working schedule for the next few days.

President Eisenhower today outlined his new spending proposals to congressional leaders of both parties. According to Republican Senator Wiley, who attended the White House briefing, the Administration will call for a defense budget of nearly 41-billion dollars...or about a hundred million dollars more than it asked for last year. Republican Senator Dirksen said the space program will be accelerated. But Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said he was "disappointed" in the program. "In the field of military policy," he said, "we are programming as if we were living in a static world and not in an exploding and expanding world." Johnson said there was no discussion ~~by members of Congress~~ at the White House meeting---"we listened and learned." Mr. Eisenhower thanked the Democrats for their support of Administration policy last year in the Middle East and in the Formosa Strait. "True" bipartisanship, he said, is still essential in the conduct of foreign policy.

More than thirty House Republicans met secretly today in a move aimed at unseating Representative Joseph Martin as House Republican leader. Martin has been Republican leader in the House since 1939. The insurgents say they "like" Martin but that he has "lost his effectiveness." They claim they have the votes necessary to replace him with Representative Halleck of Indiana, when House Republicans caucus tomorrow. Halleck has formally declared his candidacy. ~~Martin reacted by calling a strategy huddle of his own. Among those meeting in his office was Representative Allen of Illinois, senior Republican on the House Rules Committee.~~

President Meany of the AFL-CIO said today that his organization favors a change in Senate rules that will make it easier to stop filibusters. It has been suggested that debate be cut off by a simple majority of members present, rather than by a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate.

A compromise agreement was reached today in the investigation of voting procedures by the Federal Civil Rights Commission in Alabama. Federal agents may inspect the registration records in Barbour, Bullock and Macon Counties "relevant to the inquiry." The commission, in turn, will not require the oral testimony of registration officials who have refused to appear.

Marie Torre, syndicated columnist for the New York Herald-Tribune, today began serving a 10-day jail sentence for contempt of court. Miss Torre had refused to disclose the source of a news item, pleading the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of the press.

The new provisional president of Cuba...Dr. Manual Urrutia...arrived in Havana late today to take over as head of the government. His arrival from Camaguey Province (KAH-MAH-GWAY') had been scheduled for this morning, but a rebel splinter group...made up mostly of students...still occupied the presidential palace and refused to get out. Martial law was declared, and late this afternoon spokesmen for Fidel Castro persuaded the students to leave. The students...reportedly...were demanding to know Urrutia's program.

After four days, the radio signals from Russia's cosmic rocket have ceased. Russian scientists predict that ~~the~~ Lunik will go into orbit around the sun on Wednesday or Thursday...swinging along an elliptical path with a maximum diameter of 214-million miles. It will complete the orbit once every 15 months...becoming an artificial planet...and Pravda said today that it will have its own winter and summer like the earth. The Soviet news agency Tass says that ~~the~~ scientific information obtained by the rocket will be published. ~~as it is gradually processed.~~

The conference on discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests resumed in Geneva today after a two-week Christmas recess. The United States presented new data ~~[illegible]~~ concerning underground nuclear blasts. Details were not disclosed in Geneva. But the White House has issued a statement... saying that it is more difficult to distinguish between such explosions and earthquakes than was originally thought. News Secretary Hagerty said this "probably" would call for more inspection.

The four balloonists...who set out across the Atlantic in the "Small World" more than three weeks ago...were rescued by a fisherman today in the British West Indies. They were found floating in the gondola after cutting ~~[illegible]~~ loose from the balloon for reasons they would not divulge. All are reported in good health.

Edward R. Murrow: January 5, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Back in 1946 Molotov, then Soviet Foreign Minister, bitterly complained that the United States was "brandishing the atomic bomb". Americans may recall being astonished about it, for they didn't realize that the United States was brandishing anything whatever. Even when Winston Churchill made his Fulton, Missouri, speech in March 1946, most Americans did not recognize that he was brandishing the bomb when he voiced his thanks that the United States had monopoly of the bomb and proclaimed that it was keeping the peace of the world. But Molotov knew what he meant. For in 1946 the Russians found it advisable, under American insistence, to withdraw their troops from Iran, and thus spare that country the loss of a substantial sector of its territory. That same summer they launched a diplomatic offensive against Turkey aimed at the annexation of two Turkish frontier provinces, and again under American pressure decided to reverse themselves. The Russians had a vast superiority in ground forces, but we had the atomic bomb. Nuclear science had given us the balance of power, and our diplomacy knew how to use it.

The balance of power changed when the Russians made their own atomic bombs. Now it is changing again. Now another weapon is being brandished. It is not the atomic bomb of the late 40's, it is the missile bomb. And this time the brandishing is being done by the Russians. The Mikoyan visit is part of the act. In fact, the launching of Lunik, the Soviet satellite, and the Mikoyan visit, are parts of one of the most shrewdly calculated pieces of diplomatic strategy ever seen.

When Mikoyan's visit was first announced, the West presumed that it was linked with the Berlin crisis, which unquestionably it is. But our observers thought Khrushchev was looking for a way out of the dead-end his Berlin policy seemed to be heading for. Our Atlas satellite was proudly orbiting around the planet, receiving messages, and spraying the earth with recorded speech. We thought we were about equal to the Soviet Union in missile power.

But Moscow was preparing us for a painful surprise. The Russians were ready to launch Lunik, a satellite far heavier, and sent into space with far greater power, than anything we could produce. ~~The Russians had studied their almanacs, and they found when the moon would be closest to the earth. They applied for Mikoyan's visa for a time to land him in this country just as Lunik was closest to the moon.~~ They were confident of their technology, and they knew that Lunik passing the moon, or circling it, would monopolize public attention here and all over the world. And that would give Mikoyan unbounded prestige. As for Mikoyan, he need not say anything about Lunik being a weapon. ~~He need not say anything about Lunik being a weapon.~~ He need not "brandish" it. In fact he could say, as he has done, that he is only here on a kind of vacation. He could conduct himself like a happy tourist. But the White House, the State Department and the Pentagon know that Lunik, whatever it is as a prelude to space travel, is the demonstration of the inter-continental ballistic missile, and that it shows the Soviet Union ahead of us in the ability to launch and guide a missile of its formidable size. And they know that this ability affects the balance of power. How much it changes it may not be calculable to the last decimal point, or even approximately. We still have vast and terrible powers of deterrence on which, fortunately, we still can rely. But diplomatically we are not sitting as comfortably as we did two weeks ago. And this basic comment needs to be made about both the new Soviet satellite and the Mikoyan visit.

I am not suggesting that Khrushchev and his deputy expect to frighten the West into surrender on the Berlin issue. The evacuation of Berlin is not an end the Russians expect to gain, but the means to an end. They want a broader bargain, one in which the West makes concessions it has not been ready for. After the NATO meeting, the Western alliance seemed confident, determined and well-entrenched. It looked as though the concessions had to come mostly from Khrushchev. Our big Atlas satellite set fire to our expectations. It was a joy to us and to all in the West. Unfortunately we exaggerated it a little. Now we can pretend no longer. We still are behind in ballistic missiles. And here is Mikoyan to take advantage of our knowing it.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

Mikoyan has come to the United States with bland assurances. He told reporters several times today, "There will be peace." But his arrival was timed to coincide with another demonstration of Soviet power. Richard Brinsley Sheridan said, "When you meet your antagonist, do everything in a mild and agreeable manner. But let your courage be as keen...and as polished...as your sword."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan called on Secretary Dulles today at the State Department for what Mikoyan described as "a preliminary exchange of views." The meeting lasted for an hour and 35 minutes. Mikoyan told reporters it was a "useful" talk and that questions of disarmament and trade, as well as Germany and the Berlin crisis, had been discussed. He emphasized that the discussion had been in general terms. They plan to meet again after Mikoyan makes a trip of about 10 days to the West Coast. The Russian leader said he also plans on his return to Washington to see the President.

Mr. Dulles had planned to fly to Ottawa this afternoon to confer with Canadian officials on trade problems. He cancelled the trip because of a virus infection, and Secretary of the Treasury Anderson went in his place. Dulles picked up the virus infection yesterday. Although he is reported recovering, doctors advised him to forego the trip and curtail his working schedule for the next few days.

President Eisenhower today outlined his new spending proposals to congressional leaders of both parties. According to Republican Senator Wiley, who attended the White House briefing, the Administration will call for a defense budget of nearly 41-billion dollars...or about a hundred million dollars more than it asked for last year. Republican Senator Dirksen said the space program will be accelerated. But Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said he was "disappointed" in the program. "In the field of military policy," he said, "we are programming as if we were living in a static world and not in an exploding and expanding world." Johnson said there was no discussion at the White House meeting---"we listened and learned." Mr. Eisenhower thanked the Democrats for their support of Administration policy last year in the Middle East and in the Formosa Strait.

"True" bipartisanship, he said, is still essential in the conduct of foreign policy.

More than thirty House Republicans met secretly today in a move aimed at unseating Representative Joseph Martin as House Republican leader. Martin has been Republican leader in the House since 1939. The insurgents say thay "like" Mertin but that he has "lost his effectiveness." They claim they have the votes necessary to replace him with Representative Halleck of Indiana, when House Republicans caucus tomorrow. Halleck has formally declared his candidacy.

President Meany of the AFL-CIO said today that his organization favors a change in Senate rules that will make it easier to stop filibusters. It has been suggested that debate be cut off by a simple majority of members present, rather than by a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate.

A compromise agreement was reached today in the investigation of voting procedures by the Federal Civil rights Commission in Alabama. Federal agents may inspect the registration records in Barbour, Bullock and Macon Counties "relevant to the inquiry." The commission, in turn, will not require the oral testimony of registration officials who have refused to appear.

Marie Torre, syndicated columnist for the New York Herald-Tribune, today began serving a 10-day jail sentence for contempt of court. Miss Torre had refused to disclose the source of a news item, pleading the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of the press.

The new provisional president of Cuba...Dr. Manual Urrutia...arrived in Havana late today to take over as head of the government. His arrival from Camaguey Province had been scheduled for this morning, but a rebel splinter group...made up mostly of students...still occupied the presidential palace and refused to get out. Martial law was declared, and late this afternoon spokesmen for Fidel Castro persuaded the students to leave. The students...reportedly... were demanding to know Urrutia's program.

After four days, the radio signals from Russia's cosmic rocket have ceased. Russian scientists predict that Lunik will go into orbit around the sun on Wednesday or Thursday...swinging along an elliptical path with a maximum diameter of 214-million miles. It will complete the orbit once every 15 months becoming an artificial planet...and Pravda said today that it will have its own winter and summer like the earth. The Soviet news agency Tass says that scientific information obtained by the rocket will be published.

The conference on discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests resumed in Geneva today after a two-week Christmas recess. The United States presented new data concerning underground nuclear blasts. Details were not disclosed in Geneva. But the White House has issued a statement...saying that it is more difficult to distinguish between such explosions and earthquakes than was originally thought. News Secretary Hagerty said this "probably" would call for more inspection.

The four balloonists...who set out across the Atlantic in the "Small World" more than three weeks ago...were rescued by a fisherman today in the British West Indies. They were found floating in the gondola after cutting loose from the balloon for reasons they would not divulge. All are reported in good health.

Back in 1946 Molotov, then Soviet Foreign Minister, bitterly complained th that the United States was "brandishing the atomic bomb." Americans may recall being astonished about it, for they didn't realize that the United States was brandishing anything whatever. Even when Winston Churchill made his Fulton, Missouri speech in March 1946, most Americans did not recognize that he was brandishing the bomb when he voiced his thanks that the United States had monopoly of the bomb and proclaimed that it was keeping the peace of the world. But Molotov knew what he meant. For in 1946, the Russians found it advisable, under American insistence to withdraw their troops from Iran, and thus spare that country the loss of a substantial sector of its territory. That same summer they launched a diplomatic offensive against Turkey aimed at the annexation of two Turkish frontier provinces, and again under American pressure decided to reverse themselves. The Russians had a vast superiority in ground forces, but we had the atomic bomb. Nuclear science had given us the balance of power, and our diplomacy knew how to use it.

The balance of power changed when the Russians made their own atomic bombs. Now it is changing again. Now another weapon is being brandished. It is not the atomic bomb of the late 40's, it is the missile bomb. And this time the brandishing is being done by the Russians. The Mikoyan visit is part of the act. In fact, the launching of Lunik, the Soviet satellite, and the Mikoyan visit, are parts of one of the most shrewdly calculated pieces of diplomatic strategy ever seen.

When Mikoyan's visit was first announced, the West presumed that it was linked with the Berlin crisis, which unquestionably it is. But our observers thought Khrushchev was looking for a way out of the dead-end his Berlin policy seemed to be heading for. Our Atlas satellite was proudly orbitting around the planet receiving messages and spraying the earth with recorded speech. We thought we were about equal to the Soviet Union in missile power.

But Moscow was preparing us for a painful surprise. The Russians were ready to launch Lunik, a satellite far heavier, and sent into space with far greater power, than anything we could produce. They were confident of their technology and they knew that Lunik passing the moon or circling it, would monopolize public attention here and all over the world. And that would give Mikoyan unbounded prestige. As for Mikoyan, he need not say anything about Lunik being a weapon. He need not "brandish" it. In fact he could say, as he has done, that he is only here on a kind of vacation. He could conduct himself like a happy tourist. But the White House, the State Department and the Pentagon know that Lunik, whatever it is as a prelude to space travel, is the demonstration of the inter-continental ballistic missile, and that it shows the Soviet Union ahead of us in the ability to launch and guide a missile of its formidable size. And they know that this ability affects the balance of power. How much it changes it may not be calculable to the last decimal point, or even approximately. We still have vast and terrible powers of deterrence on which, fortunately, we still can rely. But diplomatically we are not sitting as comfortably as we did two weeks ago. And this basic comment needs to be made about both the new Soviet satellite and the Nikoyan visit.

I am not suggesting that Khrushchev and his deputy expect to frighten the West into surrender on the Berlin issue. The evacuation of Berlin is not an end the Rusiians expect to gain, but the means to an end. They want a broader bargain, one in which the West makes concessions it has not been ready for. After the NATO meeting, the Western alliance seemed confident, determined and well-entrenched. It looked as though the concessions had to come mostly from Khrushchev. Our big Atlas satellite set fire to our expectations. It was a joy to us and to all the West. Unfortunately we exaggerated it a little. Now we can pretend no longer. We still are behind in ballistic missiles. And here is Mikoyan to take advantage of our knowing it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW:Mikoyan has come to the United States with bland assurances. He told reporters several times today, "There will be peace." But his arrival was timed to coincide with another demonstration of Soviet power. Richard Brinsley Sheridan said, "When you meet your antagonist, do everything in a mild and agreeable manner. But let your courage be as keen...and as polished...as your sword."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow: January 6, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Mr. Mikoyan did not wait long to lay some of his cards on the table on the purpose of his mission to this country. He did it with an air of such candor at the Eric Johnston dinner in Washington last night, that an onlooker might have thought he was showing all the cards he had come with. Many of those he showed were unobjectionable, and he sounded straightforward, reasonable and friendly.

For the most interesting impression he left was that the Soviet Union wants to settle outstanding cold war problems with the United States direct. This is not new. Senator Humphrey and others who have talked with Khrushchev have stressed that this is what Khrushchev wants and considers the best and quickest way to reduce world tensions. But Khrushchev also knows that if the United States starts negotiating on its own, our allies will go into a near panic. They will be quite sure that if we agree with the Russians it is bound to be at their expense. Since one of the basic drives of the Kremlin is to destroy or weaken the alliance, one can well believe that the Russians are in earnest about wishing to negotiate with us by ourselves. Mikoyan last night disclaimed any desire to cause trouble between us and our allies. He said, as if to prove it, that Russia had to get along with these nations too. He did not add that Russia could get along with them to greater advantage if the Western alliance was coming apart.

His disclaimer was on a par with a disclaimer that Lunik, the new Soviet satellite, is a military threat to anybody. By itself, now on its way to orbit the sun, it is, as Mikoyan said, no more than an achievement in science. But the fact that it could be sent on its course, and sent just when Mikoyan was coming here, is a military fact of ~~XXXX~~ importance, if not gravity.

Here are the main points of the Mikoyan speech: The Soviet Union has no plan to conquer the United States or anybody. It wants peaceful competition in producing the better things of life. It is trying to correct mistakes of the Stalin regime, is curbing the power of the police and vesting it with local Soviet republics. It is giving farmers more freedom to grow what they want, and is splitting agriculture and industry into manageable administrative units. Communist China is making amazing progress and perhaps some mistakes, but no one should doubt the true friendship between Moscow and Peiping. The Kremlin regards the ring of Western bases around the Soviet Union as a sign of our bad intentions, as it does the proposed arming of West Germany with nuclear weapons, also the military strengthening of Iran and the additional supply of arms to Turkey.

Only in question time did Mikoyan hint at concessions on the Berlin issue, but any concession at all is of course significant. Russia, he said, would agree to guarantees, including free and certain access to Berlin by the West. He said there would be room for a United Nations role in this. He would not, however, say that Moscow would accept U.N. administration of the proposed free city. He said the possibility of making all Berlin a free city under some form of U.N. supervision was something the Soviet Union might discuss.

He implied that the Soviet Union does not wish to proceed with German unification until East Germany has the same material prosperity as West Germany, but said that this would be achieved in three to four years. He also made it clear that Russia would like a summit meeting if it could be held without an advance agenda.

One of the cards he did not show last night was the trade Russia would like with the United States, but he did talk about trade with Secretary Dulles, in outlining the subjects they are to discuss while here.

One can say that Mikoyan on his first day in Washington was neither grim nor rigid. He is a better envoy than Molotov used to be, at least he starts off with more good will. But his emphasis on our bases, on German re-armament, and on a three-to-four year delay in unifying Germany, is a sobering reminder, that no general settlement lies just over the horizon, and that Mikoyan did not come to seek one. At best, he came hoping to get things started.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan--

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 6, 1959

This is the news:

Representative Joseph Martin today was deposed as Republican leader of the House, after holding the position for twenty years. / He is replaced by Representative Charles Halleck of Indiana. / The action was taken at an organization meeting, attended by all but five of the 153 Republican members of the House, on the eve of the opening of the new Congress. / The vote against Martin...on a secret ballot...was 74 to 70. Four of the congressmen present did not vote. / A group of young Republican insurgents had argued that Martin...who is 74...was "no longer effective." / They gave him a standing ovation after the vote, in tribute to his years of service. Halleck is 58.

House Democrats had no trouble choosing their leadership for the new Congress. They decided...unanimously...to return Sam Rayburn of Texas as speaker and John McCormack of Massachusetts as floor leader. Rayburn's selection came on his 77th birthday.

In the Senate, the battle for Republican leadership was narrowed down when liberal Republicans decided to limit their fight to two positions--floor leader and party whip. Their choice for floor leader against Dirksen of Illinois is John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky. Senator Knchel of California is their candidate for party whip. The liberals agreed today to go along with Senator Bridges as chairman of the Republican policy committee and Senator Saltonstall as Republican conference chairman. They also endorsed Senator Young of North Dakota as conference secretary. The showdown comes tomorrow when Republican senators caucus to elect officers. The liberal forces were joined today by Senator Margaret Chase Smith.

Republican and Democratic senators (who want to make it easier to cut off filibusters) caucused today and said afterward that they are "encouraged". The first skirmish will come tomorrow after Congress reconvenes. Democratic Senator Anderson is expected to introduce a motion to change Senate Rule 22. Under the rule, a vote of two-thirds of the total Senate membership is required to put an end to unlimited debate. Various proposals have been made to amend this rule. But...generally... the liberals would limit debate either by a simple majority vote or by a two-thirds vote of senators present on the floor. A bloc of seventeen Southern senators...led by Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia...has gone on record as opposed to any change in Rule 22. No one expects the issue to be decided tomorrow.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan met today with Vice President Nixon in Washington. The meeting was arranged at the request of the Russian visitor. Soviet Ambassador Menshikov sat in on the conference; so did our ambassador to Moscow, Llewlyn Thompson. Mikoyan told reporters afterward...through an interpreter...that he was "very pleased" that Nixon had suggested that Russia and the United States join in combatting world poverty. This was a reference to a speech Mr. Nixon made to this effect in London last November. The conference lasted two hours. Berlin was discussed, and Mikoyan indicated that the Russian position with regard to Berlin is not changed.

In Cuba, the revolutionary government today dissolved Congress and announced that it would rule by decree until new free elections are held in 18 to 24 months. All provincial governors, mayors and councilmen were dismissed. The criminal courts---known as "courts of urgency" under Batista---were suspended. And there were reports that revolutionary courts will be set up to try members of the Batista regime accused of crimes. The provisional president, Dr. Manuel Urrutia, said he will demand the extradition of Batista from the Dominican Republic...along with the extradition of the other "war criminals". The government is said to be preparing a decree abolishing all political parties. Fidel Castro still has not entered Havana. He is reported spending the night in Santa Clara on his triumphal march from Oriente Province. It is doubtful that he will reach Havana tomorrow as planned.

The United States ambassador to Cuba...Earl Smith...has returned to Washington. He is recommending that the United States help Cuba rebuild its transportation system. Attorney General Rogers says Batista will not be granted asylum in the United States.

Britain today suspended home Rule on the island of Malta...in the Mediterranean...due to unrest over the island's demand for complete independence. For the indefinite future, the British governor will rule by decree.

The Chinese Nationalist defense ministry said today that the Communists have threatened a new "large-scale" bombardment of Quemoy. The Communists, it said, made the threat after charging that a nursery on the mainland had been hit by Nationalist artillery. The Nationalist defense ministry denies the charge. It says the Chinese Communists may want an excuse for resuming their heavy bombardment of the Quemoy complex.

In Paris, General DeGaulle announces that two of the three Socialist ministers in his cabinet have resigned in protest against his austerity program. ~~The announcement said that Minister of State Guy Mollet and Eugene Thomas, minister of posts and telegraphs, tendered their resignations last month. They agreed, however, not to resign until this Thursday, when a new French government will be installed. Today's announcement came as no surprise since the Socialists already had served notice that they would not take part in the new government...over which DeGaulle will preside as president. DeGaulle held his last cabinet meeting today as premier.~~

Mikoyan makes it apparent that Russia would like to deal directly with the United States in settling Cold War problems---something which, if agreed to, would surely cause our allies to feel "left out." This effort of Russia to separate us from our allies is a constant factor in Soviet policy and follows the ancient political maxim cited by Machiavelli, "Divide and conquer."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Representative Joseph Martin today was deposed as Republican leader of the House, after holding the position for twenty years. He is replaced by Representative Charles Halleck of Indiana. The action was taken at an organization meeting attended by all but five of the 153 Republican members of the House on the eve of the opening of the new Congress. The vote against Martin...on a secret ballot...was 74 to 70. Four of the congressmen present did not vote. A group of young Republican insurgents had argued that Martin...who is 74...was no longer effective. They gave him a standing ovation after the vote in tribute to his years of service. Halleck is 58.

House Democrats had no trouble choosing their leadership for the new Congress. They decided...unanimously....to return Sam Rayburn of Texas as speaker and John McCormack of Massachusetts as floor leader. Rayburn's selection came on his 77th birthday.

In the Senate, the battle for Republican leadership was narrowed down when liberal Republicans decided to limit their fight to two positions---floor leader and party whip. Their choice for floor leader against Dirksen of Illinois is John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky. Senator Kuchel of California is their candidate for party whip. The liberals agreed today to go along with Senator Bridges as chairman of the Republican policy committee and Senator Saltonstall as Republican conference chairman. They also endorsed Senator Young of North Dakota as conference secretary. The showdown comes tomorrow when Republican senators caucus to elect officers. The liberal forces were joined today by Senator Margaret Chase Smith.

Republican and Democratic senators (who want to make it easier to cut off fillibusters) caucused today and said afterward that they are "encouraged."

The first skirmish will come tomorrow after Congress reconvenes. Democratic Senator Anderson is expected to introduce a motion to change Senate Rule 22. Under the rule, a vote of two-thirds of the total Senate membership is required to put an end to unlimited debate. Various proposals have been made to amend this rule. But...generally...the liberals would limit debate either by a simple majority vote or by a two-thirds vote of senators present on the floor. A bloc of seventeen Southern senators...led by Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia... has gone on record as opposed to any change in Rule 22. No one expects the issue to be decided tomorrow.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan met today with Vice President Nixon in Washington. The meeting was arranged at the request of the Russian visitor. Soviet Ambassador Menshikov sat in on the conference; so did our ambassador to Moscow, Llewlyn Thompson. Mikoyan told reporters afterward...through an interpreter...that he was "very pleased" that Nixon had suggested that Russia and the United States join in combatting world poverty. This was a reference to a speech Mr. Nixon made to this effect in London last November. The conference lasted two hours. Berlin was discussed, and Mikoyan indicated that the Russian position with regard to Berlin is not changed.

In Cuba, the revolutionary government today dissolved Congress and announced that it would rule by decree until new free elections are held in 18 to 24 months. All provincial governors, mayors and councilmen were dismissed. The criminal courts---known as "courts of urgency" under Batista---were suspended. And there were reports that revolutionary courts will se set up to try members of the Batista regime accused of crimes. The provisional president, Dr. Manuel Urrutia, said he will demand the extradition of Batista from the Dominican Republic...along with extradition of the other "war criminals." The government is said to be preparing a decree abolishing all political parties. Fidel Castro still has not entered Havana. He is reported spending the night in Santa Clara on his triumphal march from Oriente Province. It is doubtful that he will reach Havana tomorrow as planned.

The United States ambassador to Cuba...Earl Smith...has retunned to Washington. He is recommending that the United States help Cuba rebuild its transportation systems. Attorney General Rogers says Batista will not be granted asylum in the United States.

Britain today suspended home rule on the island of Malta...in the Mediterranean...due to unrest over the island's demand for complete independence. For the indefinite future, the British governor will rule by decree.

The Chinese Nationalist defense ministry said today that the Communists have threatened a new "large-scale" bombardment of Quemoy. The Communists, it said, made the threat after charging that a nursery on the mainland had been hit by Nationalist artillery. The Nationalist defense ministry denies the charge. It says the Chinese Communists may want an excuse for resuming their heavy bombardment of the Quemoy complex.

In Paris, General DeGaulle announces that two of the three Soeialist ministers in his cabinet have resigned in protest against his austerity program.

Mr. Mikoyan did not wait long to lay some of his cards on the table on the purpose of his mission to this country. He did it with an air of such candor at the Eric Johnston dinner in Washington last night, that an onlooker might have thought he was showing all the cards he had come wtth. Many of those he showed were unobjectionable, and he sounded straightforward, reasonable and friendly.

For the most interesting impression he left was that the Soviet Union wants to settle outstanding cold war problems with the United States direct. This is not new. Senator Humphrey and others who have talked with Khrushchev have stressed that this is what Khrushchev wants and considers the best and quickest way to reduce world tensions. But Khrushchev also knows that if the United States starts negotiating on its own, our allies will go into a near panic.

They will be quite sure that if we agree with the Russians it is bound to be at their expense. Since one of the basic drives of the Kremlin is to destroy or weaken the alliance, one can well believe that the Russians are in earnest about wishing to negotiate with us by ourselves. Mikoyan last night disclaimed any desire to cause trouble between us and our allies. He said, as if to prove it, that Russia had to get along with these nations too. He did not add that Russia could get along with them to greater advantage if the Western alliance was coming apart.

His disclaimer was on a par with a disclaimer that Lunik, the new Soviet satellite, is a military threat to anybody. But itself, now on its way to orbit the sun, it is, as Mikoyan said, no more than an achievement in science. But the fact that it could be sent on its course and sent just when Mikoyan was coming here, is a military fact of importance, if not gravity.

Here are the main points of the Mikoyan speech: The Soviet Union has no plan to conquer the United States or anybody. It wants peaceful competition in producing the better things of life. It is trying to correct mistakes of the Stalin regime, is curbing the power of the police and vesting it with local Soviet republics. It is giving farmers more freedom to grow what they want, and is splitting agriculture and industry into manageable administrative units. Communist China is making amazing progress and perhaps some mistakes, but no one should doubt the true friendship between Moscow and Peiping. The Kremlin regards the ring of Western bases around the Soviet Union as a sign of our bad intentions, as it does the proposed arming of West Germany with nuclear weapons, also the military strengthening of Iran and the additional supply of arms to Turkey.

Only in question time did Mikoyan hint at concessions on the Berinn issue, but any concession at all is of course significant. Russia, he said, would agree to guarantees, including free and certain aceess to Berlin by the West. He said there would be room for a United Nations role in this. He would not, however, say that Moscow would accept U.N. administration of the proposed free city. He said the possibility of making all Berlin a free city under some form of U.N. supervision was something the Soviet Union might discuss.

He implied that the Soviet Union does not wish to proceed with German unification until East Germany has the same material prosperity as West Germany, but said that this would be achieved in three to four years. He also made it clear that Russia would like a summit meeting if it could be held without an advance agenda.

One of the cards he did not show last night was the trade Russia would like with the United States, but he did talk about trade with Secretary Dulles, in outlining the subjects they are to discuss while here.

One can say that Mikoyan on his first day in Washington was neither grim nor rigid. He is a better envoy than Molotov used to be, at least he starts off with more good will. But his emphasis on our bases, on German re-armament and on a three-to-four year delay in unifying Germany is a sobering reminder that no general settlement lies just over the horizon and that Mikoyan did not come to seek one. At best he came hoping go get things started.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Mikoyan makes it apparent that Russia would like to deal directly with the United States in settling Cold War problems---something which, if agreed to, would surely cause our allies to fed "left out." This effort of Russia to separate us from our allies is a constant factor in Soviet policy and follows the ancient political maxim cited by Machiavelli, "Divide and conquer."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 7, 1959

This is the news:

Congress convened today with Alaska represented for the first time as the 49th state. A bipartisan drive to make it easier to stop filibusters began...as expected...when the new Congress was less than an hour old. It started with Republican Senator Javits asking Vice President Nixon under what rules the new Senate was operating. Nixon said the Senate was operating under the rules of the last Congress but that...in his opinion... it has the right to adopt new rules. In restating this opinion (which he first expressed two years ago) Nixon helped the senators who oppose filibusters and want to change Rule 22. Under that rule, a vote of two-thirds of the total Senate membership is required to put an end to marathon debate. The liberal group---made up of Republicans and Democrats---would make it so that debate could be shut off by a simple majority vote. But today before any of the liberals could introduce a motion Senate Leader Johnson submitted a "compromise" proposal...and moved at once that the Senate adjourn until 10 a.m. tomorrow. His motion to adjourn was passed by a vote of 73 to 23. Johnson proposed as a compromise that a two-thirds majority vote of senators present be required to shut off debate. Liberal senators like Douglas of Illinois and Case of New Jersey complained that this was little, if any, improvement over the present rule. They accused Johnson of "high-handed tactics" and of "pulling a fast one".

Senate Republicans settled their differences today by electing Senator Dirksen of Illinois as ~~majority~~ Republican floor leader and Senator Kuchel of California as his assistant. A group of Republican insurgents had favored Senator Cooper of Kentucky over Dirksen. But in a secret vote, Dirksen won over his more liberal opponent, 20 to 14. The conservatives then put up Senator Mundt of South Dakota against Kuchel. Kuchel also won by a vote of 20 to 14. Vice President Nixon said he was pleased by the outcome. He said it would provide "a very vigorous, effective leadership, representative of all viewpoints in the party."

ALL-FURD

Over in the House, Representative Dale Alford, the Little Rock segregationist, was allowed to take his seat by an overwhelming vote. A House elections subcommittee had recommended that Alford not be seated, pending investigation of his write-in victory over Representative Brooks Hays. (In a few minutes, we will have a direct report from Washington on the convening today of the new 86th Congress).

Secretary Dulles today returned to his desk at the State Department after recovering from a virus infection. A department spokesman said that Mr. Dulles was "feeling fine".

The State Department today issued a new 53-page document...refuting, point by point, the "historical inaccuracies" contained in the Soviet note of November 27...proposing that the Western powers get out of Berlin.

The Soviet note accused the West of aiding and abetting Hitler..and of spurning cooperation with Moscow in the hope that the Nazi war machine would be turned eastward against the Soviet Union. The State Department said Russia was trying to rewrite history "by omission and distortion. It cited the pact that Stalin signed with Hitler in 1939...and and then again with Japan in April, 1941---eight months before Pearl Harbor. And after the war, it said, the good will felt by the American people toward Russia was "shattered" by Soviet disregard for solemn agreements and principles.

The Moscow radio announces that the Russian space rocket today started its orbit around the sun. It estimates that the artificial planet has now traveled more than 9-million miles since it was launched five days ago.

The Quemoy islands were hit today by the heaviest Communist bombardment in two months. By Nationalist count, the Communists fired 32-thousand, 919 shells. There was no immediate report of casualties. Communist China said yesterday that it would carry out a massive bombardment because a nursery on the mainland had been hit by Nationalist artillery. The Nationalist Defense Ministry said this was not so. Paiping says 23 children were killed in the Nationalist bombardment.

The United States today recognized the new provisional government of Cuba...and recognition by Great Britain is reported imminent. The State Department says, "The government of the United States expresses the sincere good will of the government and the people of the United States towards the new government and the people of Cuba." In Cuba, revolutionary authorities have announced the execution of fifteen officers of the Batista regime. One of those executed (for crimes against the state) was Batista's chief of operations in Oriente Province. #

The opening of the new Congress was covered today by CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd...and for his first-hand observations we switch now to Washington.

Tape runs 4:45

Ends on cue: "--to Ed Murrow in New York."

That was Charles Von Fremd with some observations on the insurrectionist character of the new 86th Congress. Lots to think about Saturday Session.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But firsts here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The election results of November are causing political repercussions in January in the new Congress. The surprise of Joseph Martin over his removal as Republican leader in the House illustrates an old axiom expressed by the late New York political boss, Ed Flynn. "In politics," he said, "when you're through, you're the last one to find out."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, January 7, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: The opening of the new Congress was covered today by CBS News correspondent Charles Von Fremd. And, for his first-hand observations, we switch now to Washington.

VON FREMD: The spanking new 86th Congress has all ready produced surprises, heartbreak and controversy. Most observers here see in these developments a delayed reaction to the stunning Democratic landslide last November. There is the personal tragedy of Joseph Martin. The veteran Massachusetts Congressman says, the biggest reason for his loss of Republican leadership in the House was the party's defeat at the polls. "The boys were restless," explains Martin, "they felt it was time for a change." His successor, Halleck of Indiana is only slightly less conservative in his political views than Martin, so yesterday's vote cannot be attributed to a liberal swing among House Republicans. Apparently these GOP representatives appalled by the wreckage of the party in November decided a younger more energetic man, in a word Halleck was needed in a leadership post. While Halleck cannot be classed a liberal or Eisenhower Republican, he also is not associated with the GOP old guard with the Martin's, the Clarence Brown's, the Dan Reids. The Republican rebellion in the Senate which failed today was a different matter. There the battleline was drawn between liberal and traditional conservative opponents. The losers, led by Cooper of Kentucky, Aiken of Vermont, Javits of New York, Case of New Jersey insisted that so long as the public image of the party remained in the McKinley mold, the Democrats would continue to forge ahead. They challenged the Bridges-Kirksen powerhouse and fell short, but only by six votes. Republican leadership in the Senate these next two years will remain in old guard hands but it may be their last stand. Some of the insurgents believe that if Pres. Eisenhower working publicly or behind the scenes had lent them support Cooper tonight would be leader. As it is, their rebellion was not entirely a failure, for they succeeded in placing one of their members Kuchel of California among the party leaders as GOP whip. For the first time a liberal Republican will sit in at the weekly conferences at the White House and presumably his voice will be heard. The renewed attack upon filibusters can also be traced to last election day. Senate Majority Leader Johnson inspite of his acknowledged skill in bringing off compromises will have his hands full containing the young liberals from both parties who came to the capital this week prepared to wage all-out war with opponents of rule changes. It's interesting to note that most of the newest recruits in this team are young-terks from Republican ranks. Javits, Case, Scott and others have joined with Senator Douglas and [illegible] to form an impressive bi-partisan coalition, th[illegible]ther, cross the center aisle to confer in their effort to change rules permitting them to halt filibusters. While they will probably fall short of their extensive goals, it's also probable they will bring about modifications in rule 22. The most basic change produced by the Democratic landslide is clear to an observer in the Senate radio gallery. Looking down on the Senate floor, he sees 34 chairs on one side of the aisle, 64 seats jammed tightly together on the other. The 64 chairs of course belong to the Democrats and their majority is now so great that there is some wonder whether Lyndon Johnson will be able to keep the big group under tight contreal as he has in the past. During this first session, many of the newcomers may behave as freshman Senators are supposed to behave, keep quiet, be polite and do as the leader says. But, come next year with its presidential campaign and the votes up for grabs and these freshman may feelan d act more like sophmores. It's been mentioned before but is worth recalling that the Democratic majority in the Senate today thanks to last November, is so large that it will be impossible for the Republicans to regain the Senate next year, even if their presidential candidate wins in a landslide. Any Republican who might occupy the White House will have to deal with the opposition in the Senate. Most of the new Democrats on the Hill interpret their success at the polls as a call by their constituents for leadership in Washington. This belief was voiced today by Lyndon Johnson, who quickly added his party would honor this mandate. The White House is braced for heightened criticism from confident Democrat spokesmen as this session wears on. The President cannot hope for the gentle treatment he has received from most Democrats in the past during the remainder of his term. The main point to all this is; the first little ripples from the title wave of last November 4th have reached the banks of the Potomic and as the weeks roll by, the ripples will grow into waves.

Now, back to ED MURROW in New York.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Congress convened today with Alaska represented for the first time as the 49th state.

A bipartisan drive to make it easier to stop filibusters began...as expected...when thenew Congress was less than an hour old. It started with Republican Senator Javits asking Vice President Nixon under what rules the new Senate was operating. Nixon said the Senate was operating under the rules of the last Congress but that...in his opinion...it has the right to adopt new rules. In restating this opinion which he first expressed two years ago, Nixon helped the senators who oppose filibusters and want to change Rule 22. Under that rule, a vote of two-thirds of the total Senate membership is required to put an end to marathon debate. The liberal group---made up of Republicans and Demcorats---would make it so that debate could be shut off by a simple majority vote. But today before any of the liberals could introduce a motion, Senate Leader Johnson submitted a "compromise" proposal...and moved at once that the Senate adjourn until 10 AM tomorrow.. His motion to adjourn was passed by a vote of 73 to 23. Johnson proposed a compromise that a two-thirds majority vote of senators present be required to shut off debate. Liberal senators like Douglas of Illinois and Case of New Jersey complained that this was little, if any, improvement over the present rule. They accused Johnson of "high-handed tactics" and of "pulling a fast one."

Senate Republicans settled their differences today by electing Senator Dirksen of Illinois as Republican floor leader and Senator Kuchel of California as his assistant. A group of Republican insurgents had favored Senator Cooper of Kentucky over Dirksen. But in a secret vote, Dirksen won over his more liberal opponent, 20 to 14. The conservatives then put up Senator Mundt of South Dakota against Kuchel. Kuchel also won by a vote of 20 to 14. Vice President Nixon said he was pleased by the outcome. He said it would provide "a very vigorous, effective leadership, representative of all viewpoints in the party." Over in the House, Representative Dale Alford, the Little Rock segregationist, was allowed to take his seat by an overwhelming vote. A House elections subcommittee had recommended that Alford not be seated, pending investigation of his write-in victory over Representative Brooks Hays. (In a few minutes, we will have a direct report from Washington on the convening today of the new 86th Congress.)

Secretary Dulles today returned to his desk at the State Department after recovering from a virus infection. A department spokesman said that Mr. Dulles was "feeling fine."

The State Department today issued a new 53-page document...refuting, point by point, the "historical inaccuracies" contained in the Soviet note of November 27th...proposing that the Western powers get out of Berlin. The Soviet note accused the West of aiding and abetting Hitler...and of spurning cooperation with Moscow in the hope that the Nazi war machine would be turned eastward against the Soviet Union. The State Department said Russia was trying to rewrite history "by omission and distortion. It cited the pact that Stalin signed with Hitler in 1939...and then again with Japan in April, 1941---eight months before Pearl Harbor. And after the war, it said, the good will felt by the American people toward Russia was "shattered" by Soviet disregard for solemn agreements and principles.

The Moscow radio announces that the Russian space rocket today started its orbit around the sun. It estimates that the artificial planet has now traveled more than 9-million miles since it was launched five days ago.

The Quemoy islands were hit today by the heaviest Communist bombardment in two months. By Nationalist count, the Communists fired 32-thousand, 919 shells. There was no immediate report of casualties. Communist China said yesterday that it would carry out a massive bombardment because a nursery on the mainland had been hit by Nationalist artillery. The Nationalist Defense Ministry said this was not so. Peiping says 23 children were killed in the Nationalist bombardment.

The United States today recognized the new provisional government of Cuba...and recognition by Great Britain is reported imminent. The State Department says, "The government of the United States expresses the sincere good will of the government and the people of the United States towards the new government and the people of Cuba." In Cuba, revolutionary authorities have announced the execution of fifteen officers of the Batista regime. One of those executed (for crimes against the state) was Batista's chief of operations in Oriente Province.

The opening of the new Congress was covered today by CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd...and for his first-hand observations we switch now to Washington.

VON FREMD: The spanking new 86th Congress has already produced surprises, heartbreak and controversy. Most observers here see in these developments a delayed reaction to the stunning Democratic landslide last November. There is the personal tragedy of Joseph Martin. The veteran Massachusetts Congressman says, the biggest reason for his loss of Republican leadership in the House was the party's defeat at the polls. "The boys were restless," explains Martin, "They felt it was time for a change." His successor, Halleck of Indiana is only slightly less conservative in his political views than Martin, so yesterday's vote cannot be attributed to a liberal swing among House Republicans. Apparently these GOP representatives appalled by the wreckage of the party in November decided a younger more energetic man, in a word Halleck was needed in a leadership post. While Halleck cannot be classed a liberal or Eisenhower Republican, he also is not associated with the GOP old guard with the Martins, the Clarence Browns, the Dan Reids. The Republican rebellion in the Senate which failed today was a different matter. There the battleline was drawn between liberal and traditional conservative opponents. The losers, led by Cooper of Kentucky, Aiken of Vermont, Javits of New York, Case of New Jersey insisted that so long as the public image of the party remained in the McKinley mold, the Democrats would continye to forge ahead. They challenged the Bridges-Dirksen powerhouse and fell short, but only by six votes. Republican leadership in the Senate these next two years will remain in old guard hands but it may be their last stand. Someof the insurgents believe that if President Eisenhower working publicly or behind the scenes had lent them support, Cooper tonight would be leader. As it is, their rebellion was not entirely a failure, for they succeeded in placing one of their members, Kuchel of California among the party leaders as GOP whip. For the first time a liberal Republican will sit in at the weekly conferences at the White House and presumably his voice will be heard. The renewed attack upon filibusters can also be traced to last election day. Senate Majority Leader Johnson in spite of his acknowledged skill in bringing off compromises will have his hands full containing the young liberals from both parties who came to the capital this week prepared to wage all-out war with opponents of rule changes. It's interesting to note that most of the newest recruits in this team are youngsters?from Republican ranks. Javits, Case, Scott and others have joined with Senator Douglas and other northern Democrats to form an impressive bi-partisan coalition, they caucus together, cross the center aisle to confer in their effort to change rules permitting them to halt filibusters. While they will probably fall short of their extensive goals, it's also probably they will bring about modifications in Rule 22. The most basic change produced by the Democratic landslide is clear to an observer in the Senate radio gallery. Looking down in the Senate floor, he sees 34 chairs on one side of the aisle, 64 seats jammed tightly together on the other. The 64 chairs of course belong to the Democrats and their majority is now so great that there is some wonder whether Lyndon Johnson will be able to keep the big group under tight control as he has in the past. During this first session, many of the newcomers may behave as freshman Senators are supposed to behave, keep quiet, be polite and do as the leader says. But, come next year, with its presidential campaign and the votes up for grabs and these freshmen may feel and act more like sophomores. It's been mentioned before, but is worth recalling that the Democratic majority in the Sem te today thanks to last November, is so large that it will be impossible for the Republicans to regain the Senate next year even if their presidential candidate wins in a landslide. Any Republican who might occupy the White House will have to deal with the opposition in the Senate. Most of the new Democrats on the Hill interpret their success at the polls as a call by their constituents for leadership in Washington. This belief was voiced today by Lyndon Johnson, who quickly added his party would honor this mandate. The White House is braced for heightened criticism from confident Democrat spokesmen as this session wears on. The President cannot hope for the gentle treatment he has received from most Democrats in the past during the remainder of his term. The main point to all this is; the first little ripples from the tidal wave of last November 4th have reached the banks of the Potomic and as the weeks roll by, the ripples will grow into waves.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Charles Von Fremd with some observations on the insurrectionist character of the new 86th Congress.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here hs George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The election results of November are causing political repercussions in January in the new Congress. The surprise of Joseph Martin over his removal as Republican leader in the House illustrates an old axiom expressed by the late New York political boss, Ed Flynn. "In politics," he said, "when you're through, you're the last one to find out."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 8, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate has agreed to postpone until tomorrow a preliminary test vote on the issue of filibusters. Democratic Senator Anderson has sponsored a resolution, proposing that the Senate consider changing Rule 22. Liberal senators want to amend the rule so as to make it easier to cut off marathon debate. Senate Leader Johnson has moved to table the Anderson resolution. But he suggested---because of the many senators who want to be heard on the subject---that no vote on his motion be taken until tomorrow. The suggestion was approved unanimously, and the Senate went into a night session so that more senators could speak.

(I should like to discuss this issue further in a few minutes).

The Cuban rebel leader, Fidel Castro, returned to Havana today in triumph. The provisional government declared a holiday. All businesses were closed. There was a ringing of church bells. Militiamen fired their rifles in the air, and cheering crowds thronged the downtown streets...as Castro entered the city in a jeep, preceded by eight tanks. [redacted]

In Washington, the Immigration Service says that seven of Batista's top naval officers are being given political asylum in the United States. The officers---including two admirals---arrived in Key West on New Years Day on Batista's private yacht.

The White House today expressed hope that while Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan is visiting the United States, he will be accorded the country's "traditional courtesy" wherever he goes. Mikoyan was booed yesterday in Cleveland and today he was picketed in Detroit. Detroit police kept the pickets from coming within shouting distance. News Secretary Hagerty said he was expressing the desire of President Eisenhower that Mikoyan return to Moscow with "an accurate picture of our good manners as well as our strength."

The United States has agreed to loan Yugoslavia up to twenty-two and a half million dollars to help it build a fertilizer plant originally contracted for by Russia. Russia lost interest in the project when Tito refused to toe the Moscow line.

Negotiations in Geneva...on a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests... are reported to have come to a virtual halt. Russia is said to be still insisting on an unconditional commitment now to end such tests "for all time." The Russians are also said to be irked by the American statement that telling the difference between underground nuclear tests and earthquakes is more difficult than earlier supposed.

The chairman of a congressional atomic research committee...Representative Melvin Price...says that he believes Russia may fly a nuclear-powered aircraft this year. He says the United States has been "dragging its feet" and may not have an atomic airplane for five years.

The West German government has postponed sending an official mission to Egypt to negotiate its participation in building the Aswan Dam. West Germany has thought of supporting a group of private German companies, planning to invest in the project. It is reported displeased by plans of East Germany to establish consular relations with Egypt.

Egypt says it shot down an Israeli jet fighter today in a dog-fight over the Sinai Peninsula. Egypt claims that the aircraft invaded its air space. Israel says it chased away four Egyptian Migs which had violated its territory. It does not confirm the Egyptian report that an airplane was shot down.

General DeGaulle today became president of the new Fifth Republic of France...succeeding Rene Coty, the last president of the Fourth Republic. An official proclamation was read, stating that DeGaulle has received 78 percent of the votes of the electoral college. The gold Collar of the Legion of Honor---symbol of the presidency---was placed about DeGaulle's shoulders. And Coty said, "The first among Frenchmen is henceforth the first man of France." After a luncheon, DeGaulle rode up the Champs-Elysees to place a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. He told the nation, "We are restoring to vigor the refurbished institutions of the French Republic and the French community." And, as expected, he named the outgoing minister of justice, Michel Debre (ME-SHELL DEH-BRAY), as premier. Debre (DEH-BRAY) said he would try to form a cabinet within 24 hours. The information minister, Jacques Soustelle, was named deputy premier.

~~Two Navy training planes collided and crashed today near Pensacola, Florida. Three airmen were killed.~~

In Anchorage, Alaska, fire has destroyed half a city block, and one of the largest department stores in Anchorage is reported in danger. At last report, the fire was still spreading.

American scientists may have tracked Russia's "lunik" as it passed the moon last Sunday on its way into orbit around the sun. This was announced tonight by Dr. William Pickering, who says the tracking appears to have been made at the Goldstone center in California.

The present rule of the Senate is that debate cannot be shut off without a vote of two-thirds of the entire membership, and that debate on a measure to change the rules cannot be shut off at all. Therefore in theory any reduction of the number of votes needed to shut off debates would be a setback for those using the filibuster...and so would any action to limit debate on a change of Senate rules. Senator Johnson's proposal of yesterday would do both. It would make it possible to cut off debate by a vote of two-thirds of senators present and voting, which normally would be somewhat fewer than two-thirds of the entire membership. And Senator Johnson proposed to cut off debate on a change of rules by the same majority. So the champions of the filibuster face two retreats.

Of these, a possible limitation of debate on changing the rules is perhaps more significant. For without it, a handful of senators could talk to death any proposal whatever to change the rules on the filibuster, although this has never happened and may never happen.

But Senator Johnson was willing to make sure that it never does.

His other offer amounts to considerably less. / The Senate already has worked under the formula Senator Johnson proposed. / From 1917 to 1949, cloture could be ordered---that is, debate could be cut off---by two-thirds of the senators present and voting. / The rule requiring a vote of two-thirds of the entire Senate was restored in 1949.

Since 1917, there have been 22 attempts to put an end to filibusters. Eighteen of them were failures. / If the 1917 rule had been in effect the whole of the time, the result would have been precisely the same. / There still would have been the 18 failures. / Between 1938 and 1950, eight attempts were made to stop filibusters against civil rights legislation. / All eight failed, though there were sizeable majorities in four of the cases. / That is why the liberals in both parties now are fighting for a rule to cut off debate by a majority vote of the entire Senate. / They argue that the Johnson formula was tried and found wanting.

Behind this question looms the issue of the rights of minorities under the American Constitution. The filibuster is a weapon of the minority against abuses by the majority. As such it has virtue. Nobody denies that the majority should be required to give itself ample time for deliberation before imposing its will on a minority. A classic example of its value, often cited, came in 1946...when President Truman asked for legislation allowing him to draft striking railroadmen into the Army. This went through the House in a few hours by a landslide. But it ran into stern opposition in the Senate. Senators Taft and Wagner promised to talk it to death. The debate went on for six days, when the Administration withdrew the provision to draft the strikers. On that occasion, the filibuster was used to defend a civil liberty.

Senate liberals today do not admit that this example weakens their case. Six days' debate was enough to protect the railway workers in 1946. They propose to permit debate for fifteen days, before resorting to cloture. They think fifteen days is long enough, for the minority to spell out its case. As to the Constitution, they point out that it empowers Congress to enforce the Constitution by a majority vote. Therefore, they argue, civil rights legislation should not need more than a majority vote. The minority had its protection, when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted, by three-fourths of the states. They also argue that the Constitution gave minorities special powers when it made small states the equal of large ones in the Senate. Under the two-thirds rule, small states with only 8 percent of the population, now have a power equal to senators representing 92 percent of the population. They think this is not what the writers of the Constitution foresaw or intended.

Even if the simple majority rule is applied to the filibuster, the small states still have a preferred position.

Under the Johnson proposal, the South does not give up much actual power. Under the proposed majority rule, it still would have won four of the last eight cloture votes, on civil rights legislation. So the difference between the two sides is not very great. But both sides feel very deeply, about not reducing it any further.

Back in a moment—

Fritz George Bryan—

W.R.U.A. Richmond.

General DeGaulle has more executive power than any French chief of state since Napoleon the Third. He always has thought of himself as a man with a mission...almost a sacred mission...and this may be all to the good. Because as Walt Whitman observed, "The greater the reform needed, the greater the personality you need to accomplish it."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 8, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate has agreed to postpone until tomorrow a preliminary test vote on the issue of filibusters. Democratic Senator Anderson has sponsored a resolution, proposing that the Senate consider changing Rule 22. Liberal senators want to amend the rule so as to make it easier to cut off marathon debate. Senator Leader Johnson has moved to table the Anderson resolution. But he suggested---because of the many senators who want to be heard on the subject---that no vote on his motion be taken until tomorrow. The suggestion was approved unanimously, and the Senate went into a night session so that more senators could speak. (I should like to discuss this issue further in a few minutes.)

The Cuban rebel leader, Fidel Castro, returned to Havana today in triumph. The provisional government declared a holiday. All businesses were closed. There was a ringing of church bells. Militiamen fired their rifles in the air, and cheering crowds thronged the downtown streets...as Castro entered the city in a jeep, preceded by eight tanks.

In Washington, the Immigration Service says that seven of Batista's top naval officers are being given political asylum in the United States. The officers including two admirals---arrived in Key West on New Years Day on Batista's private yacht.

The White House today expressed hope that while Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan is visiting the United States, he will be accorded the country's "traditional courtesy" wherever he goes. Mikoyan was booed yesterday in Cleveland and today he was picketed in Detroit. Detroit police kept the pickets from coming within shouting distance. News Secretary Hagerty said he was expressing the desire of President Eisenhower that Mikoyan return to Moscow with "an accurate picture of our good manners as well as our strength."

The United States has agreed to loan Yugoslavia up to twenty-two and a half million dollars to help it build a fertilizer plant originally contracted for by Russia. Russia lost interest in the project when Tito refused to toe the Moscow line.

Negotiations in Geneva...on a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests... are reported to have come to a virtual halt. Russia is said to be still insisting on an unconditional commitment now to end such tests "for all time." The Russians are also said to be irked by the American statement that telling the difference between underground nuclear tests and earthquakes is more difficult than earlier supposed.

The chairman of a congressional atomic research committee...Representative Melvin Price...says that he believes Russia may fly a nuclear-powered aircraft this year. He says the United States has been "dragging its feet" and may not have an atomic airplane for five years.

The West German government has postponed sending an official mission to Egypt to negotiate its participation in building the Aswan Dam. West Germany has thought of supporting a group of private German companies, planning to invest in the project. It is reported displeased by plans of East Germany to establish consular relations with Egypt.

Egypt says it shot down an Israeli jet fighter today in a dog-fight over the Sinai Peninsula. Egypt claims that the aircraft invaded its air space. Israel says it chased away four Egyptian Migs which had violated its territory. It does not confirm the Egyptian report that an airplane was shot down.

General DeGaulle today became president of the new Fifth Republic of France...succeeding Rene Coty, the last president of the Fourth Republic. An official proclamation was read, stating that DeGaulle has received 78 percent of the votes of the electoral college. The gold Collar of the Legion of Honor---symbol of the presidency----was placed about DeGaulle's shoulders. And Coty said,

"The first among Frenchmen is henceforth the first man of France." After a luncheon, DeGaulle rode up the Champs-Elysees to place a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. He told the nation, "We are restoring to vigor the refurbished institutions of the French Republic and the French community." And, as expected, he named the outgoing minister of justice, Michel Debre, as premier. Debre said he would try to form a cabinet within 24 hours. The information minister, Jacques Soustelle was named deputy premier.

In Anchorage, Alaska, fire has destroyed half a city block and one of the largest department stores in Anchorage is reported in danger. At last report, the fire was still spreading.

American scientists may have tracked Russia's "lunik" as it passed the moon last Sunday on its way into orbit aruund the sun. This was announced tonight by Dr. William Pickering, who says the tracking appears to have been made at the Goldstone center in California.

The present rule of the Senate is that debate cannot be shut off without a vote of two-thirds of the entire membership, and that debate on a measure to change the rules cannot be shut off at all. Therefore in theory any reduction of the number of votes needed to shut off debates would be a setback for those using the filibuster...and so would any action to limit debate on a change of Senate rules. Senator Johnson's proposal of yesterday would do both. It would make it possible to cut off debate by a vote of two-thirds of senators present and voting, which normally would be somewhat fewer than two-thirds of the entire membership. And Senator Johnson proposed to cut off debate on a change of rules by the same majority. So the champions of the filibuster face two retreats.

Of these, a possible limitation of debate on changing the rules is perhaps more significant. For without it, a handful of senators could talk to death any proposal whatever to change the rules on the filibuster, although this has never happened and may never happen. But Senator Johnson was willing to make sure that it never does.

His other offer amounts to considerably less. The Senate already has worked under the formula Senator Johnson proposed. From 1917 to 1949, cloture could be ordered---that is, debate could be cut off---by two-thirds of the senators present and voting. The rule requiring a vote of two-thirds of the entire Senate was restored in 1949.

Since 1917, there have been 22 attempts to put an end to filibusters. Eighteen of them were failures. If the 1917 rule had been in effect the whole of the time, the result would have been precisely the same. There still would have been the 18 failures. Between 1938 and 1950, eight attempts were made to stop filibusters against civil rights legislation. All eight failed, though there were sizeable majorities in four of the cases. That is why the liberals in both parties now are fighting for a rule to cut off debate by a majority vote of the entire Senate. They argue that the Johnson formula was tried and found wanting.

Behind this question looms the issue of the rights of minorities under the American Constitution. The filibuster is a weapon of the minority against abuses by the majority. As such it has virtue. Nobody denies that the majority should be required to give itself ample time for deliberation before imposing its will on a minority. A classic example of its value often cited came in 1946... when President Truman asked for legislation allowing him to draft striking railroadmen into the Army. This went through the House in a few hours by a landslide. But it ran into stern opposition in the Senate. Senators Taft and Wagner promised to talk it to death. The debate went on for six days, when the Administration withdrew the provision to draft the strikers. On that occasion, the filibuster was used to defend a civil liberty.

Senate liberals today do not admit that this example weakens their case. Six days debate was enough to protect the railway workers in 1946. They propose to permit debate for fifteen days before resorting to cloture. They think fifteen days is long enough for the minority to spell out its case. As to the Constitution, they point out that it empowers Congress to enforce the Constitution by a majority vote. Therefore, they argue, civil rights legislation should not need more than a majority vote. The minority had its protection when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted by three-fourths of the states. They also argue that the Constitution gave minorities special powers when it made small states the equal of large ones in the Senate. Under the two-thirds rule, small states with only eight percent of the population now have a power equal to senators representing 92 percent of the population. They think this is not what the writers of the Constitution foresaw or intended.

Even if the simple majority rule is applied to the filibuster, the small states still have a preferred position.

Under the Johnson proposal, the South does not give up much actual power. Under the proposed majority rule, it still would have won four of the last eight cloture votes on civil rights legislation. So the difference between the two sides is not very great. But both sides feel very deeply about not reducing it any further.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW : General DeGaulle has more executive power than any French chief of state since Napoleon the Third. He always has thought of himself as a man with a mission...almost a sacred mission...and this may be all to the good. Because as Walt Whitman observed, "The greater the reform needed, the greater the personality you need to accomplish it."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 9, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that in the next year his Administration will strive for fiscal integrity and the preservation of peace. He warned in his State of the Union message against "useless" defense spending. "We can afford everything we clearly need," he said, "but we cannot afford one cent of waste. The basic question facing us is more than mere survival; it is the preservation of a way of life." The President asked Democratic members of Congress to work with him to keep the budget in balance. "Congress," he said, "and Congress alone has the power of the purse." He said that prospects for an eventual tax cut would be brightened, if Congress acted in line with his budget recommendations. But he made plain that no tax reductions are possible in the next fiscal year. He called for new farm legislation that will cost less money...and for a new labor bill to combat union-management corruption. He will ask for new civil rights legislation, details of which are to be set forth in a separate message soon. He said "notable progress" is being made in the field of civil rights...but that when children are deprived of the opportunity for an education, the image of America abroad is "not improved". The President said he will set up a committee of outstanding citizens to chart a course of national objectives...a sort of long-term guide for the improvement of American living standards, education and health. The course laid out, he said, should "not only reflect the brightness of our finest dreams, but also meet the stern test of practicality."

Mr. Eisenhower said Russia's "disdain" of international obligations had again been demonstrated by its proposals on Berlin. He described some of the recent Soviet scientific achievements as "indeed brilliant", but he said the United States also has been making great strides. This year, he said, we are spending close to 7-billion dollars on missile development alone.

Mr. Eisenhower delivered the message in person before a joint session of the Senate and House. The first applause came after an impromtu remark that, now that Alaska was a state, he hoped Hawaii would be admitted, too. Altogether...in 56 minutes...he was applauded 55 times.

In general, Republicans praised the message and Democrats criticized. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen called it "a sound, timely and heartening message...a clear and ringing answer to those shouting for leadership." Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said that the President's hopes for a balanced budget "remain to be proved." "Our efforts," he said, "will be...not only to balance the fiscal books of the nation...but to balance the books of our public trust as well."

The Senate today killed a resolution which would have declared its right to adopt new rules. This is a setback for the anti-filibuster group of senators. The vote to table the resolution was 60 to 36. Of the 60, 40 were Democrats...20 were Republicans. Debate on various proposals to curb filibusters will get under way on Monday...with debate on each proposal limited to two hours. More than ever, it is the compromise proposal made by Senator Johnson which appears most likely to be approved. Under the Johnson proposal, a two-thirds vote of senators present could cut off debate...instead of two-thirds of the full membership as now required. Liberal senators say the Johnson resolution does not go far enough. They want it possible to limit debate by a simple majority vote.

Chairman Hannah of the Civil Rights Commission said today that federal agents have been unable to inspect the voter registration records in two Alabama counties, despite a U.S. court order. He was referring to Barbour and Bullock counties. And late today U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson again ordered compliance. Hannah said the officials in Macon County have cooperated.

James Hoffa said today that he has cancelled his plan to hold a teamsters union convention in Chicago in March. A federal judge ruled last month that a convention should not be held until the teamsters acted to clean out corruption and guarantee democratic procedures. Hoffa had planned to get himself re-elected as president of the union...at the March convention...and thus get rid of the court-appointed monitors who have been ordered to see that he cleans house.

A settlement in principle was reached today in the strike against American Airlines. Final details remain to be worked out, but employes of the airline already are being recalled. Service, the airline says, will be resumed "soon". The pilots have been on strike against American Airlines for three weeks in a salary dispute.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan has urged the United States to make counter-proposals to Russia for dealing with the future of West Berlin. According to Washington sources, Mikoyan made the request in a memorandum... which he gave to Secretary Dulles on Monday. The Russian arrived in Chicago today on his cross-country tour and again he was jeered. An egg splattered on his limousine at Midway Airport, but he appeared unruffled. At a private luncheon, he called for more East-West trade.

Edward R. Murrow: January 9, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The State of the Union message turned out to be more a statement of principles than policies and programs. The principles were all unobjectionable, like freedom, strength, progress, peace and economic stability, some of them were couched in words of considerable eloquence. The prediction that the message would deal more with the state of the world than the nation was true in part. It dealt with the role of the United States as leader of the free world, and more clearly, perhaps, than ever before committed this country to the aid of any nation anywhere that is fighting to preserve its independence. President Eisenhower curtly repudiated the concept of Fortress America. If we tried to set it up, he said, we would find the fortress was a prison. But the world in which we now play so vital a part, to judge from the tone of the message, is one of peril rather than promise.

The President allowed himself unusually strong words in dealing with Soviet untrustworthiness. "We have learned the bitter lesson", he said, "that international agreements are regarded in Communist doctrine and practise to be mere scraps of paper." He went on to cite the present Kremlin policy on Berlin as an example. "As a consequence," he said we can have no confidence in any treaty to which the Communists are a party except where such treaty provides within itself self-enforcing mechanisms."

To have made this statement while Deputy Premier Mikoyan is in the country could not have been coincidence. Mikoyan is urging a show of confidence by both sides in the world struggle as the only way to get tensions relaxed. The President was telling him bluntly that he has no confidence. He may have said it to induce Mikoyan to offer real concessions before he goes, but it looked as though he was turning a cold shoulder on the Mikoyan mission.

The President is always careful to identify himself as a man of peace. The peace he discussed today was first of all one of power and deterrence. To have peace, he said, we seek to prevent war at any place and in any dimension, and if it breaks out, to keep it from spreading. For this we are spending nearly sixty percent of our budget for military purposes. The President listed the high cost of modern weapons. The Atlases will average thirty-five million dollars apiece. We make fighter craft that cost fifty times the fighters of World War II, and have bombers that literally cost their weight in gold.

The President also spoke of peace as a product of collective security and promised a reconsideration of our mutual security program now being studied by a committee of eminent citizens. It has been reported that Mr. Eisenhower aspires to take a lead in bringing about a world of law to replace the world of force, and will propose repeal of the Connally amendment, which makes the American use of the World Court optional. Reference to this did not come till the very end of the message and then, as a kind of footnote, measures, he said, will be proposed, including examination of our relation to the International Court of Justice. But this did not brighten the somber tone of the message with much hope.

In the domestic portion of the message one sensed that the President was expressing his greatest interest. A balanced budget has become almost an obsession with him and he bore down heavily on the needs to curb inflation, and watch all spending closely. He said he would seek power to approve or veto specific items in appropriation and authorization Bills. At present, to veto any item the President must throw out the whole Bill.

He admitted that the country must progress unless it is to stagnate, and that its health depends on an expanding economy. But he did not explain how a balanced budget at next year's level is to be reconciled with the increased spending that economic growth requires. He did promise to name another study group of XXX eminent citizens to think ahead for ten or fifteen years to set the goals for education, health and a higher standard of living.

The impression the message is likely to give abroad is one of our determination to be strong and unyielding to threats. To Congress, it will sound like a challenge to go along with the forthcoming budget, or take the blame if prices rise.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

Today's state of the union message recalls a famous speech Theodore Roosevelt made sixty-eight years ago. "Our country," he said, "calls not for the life of ease but for the life of strenuous endeavor. If we stand idly by...if we seek merely swollen, slothful ease and ignoble peace...then the bolder and strongers peoples will pass us by and win for themselves domination of the world."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 9, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that in the next year his Administration will strive for fiscal integrity and the preservation of peace. He warned in his State of the Union message against "useless" defense spending. "We can afford everything we clearly need," he said, "but we cannot afford one cent of waste. The basic question facing us is more than mere survival; it is the preservation of a way of life." The President asked Democratic members of Congress to work with him to keep the budget in balance. "Congress," he said, "and Congress alone has the power of the purse." He said that prospects for an eventual tax cut would be brightened, if Congress acted in line with his budget recommendations. But he made plain that no tax reductions are possible in the next fiscal year. He called for new farm legislation that will cost less money...and for a new labor bill to combat union-management corruption. He will ask for new civil rights legislation, details of which are to be set forth in a separate message soon. He said, "notable progress" is being made in the field of civil rights...but that when children are deprived of the opportunity for an education, the image of America abroad is "not improved." The President said he will set up a committee of outstanding citizens to chart a course of national objectives...a sort of long-term guide for the improvement of American living standards, education and health. The course laid out, he said, should "not only reflect the brightness of our finest dreams, but also meet the stern test of practicality."

Mr. Eisenhower said Russia's "disdain" of international obligations had again been demonstrated by its proposals on Berlin. He described some of the recent Soviet scientific achievements as "indeed brilliant," but he said the United States also has been making great strides. This year, he said, we are spending close to 7-billion dollars on missile development alone.

In general, Republicans praised the message and Democrats critizized. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen called it "a sound, timely and heartening message...a clear and ringing answer to those shouting for leadership." Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said that the President's hopes for a balanced budget "remain to be proved." "Our efforts," he said, "will be...not only to balance the fiscal books of the nation...but to balance the books of our public trust as well."

The Senate today killed a resolution which would have declared its right to adopt new rules. This is a setback for the anti-filibuster group of senators. The vote to table the resolution was 60 to 36. Of the 60, 40 were Democrats...20 were Republicans. Debate on various proposals to curb filibusters will get under way on Monday with debate on each proposal limited to two hours. More than ever it is the compromise proposal made by Senator Johnson which appears most likely to be approved. Under the Johnson proposal, a two-thirds vote of senators present could cut off debate...instead of two-thirds of the full membership as now required. Liberal senators say the Johnson resolution does not go far enough. They want it possible to limit debate by a simple majority vote.

Chairman Hannah of the Civil Rights Commission said today that federal agents have been unable to inspect the voter registration records in two Alabama counties, despite a U.S. court order. He was referring to Barbour and Bullock counties. And late today U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson again ordered compliance. Hannah said the officials in Macon County have cooperated.

James Hoffa said today that he has cancelled his plan to hold a teamsters union convention in Chicago in March. A federal judge ruled last month that a convention should not be held until the teamsters acted to clean out corruption and guarantee democratic procedures. Hoffa had planned to get himself re-elected as president of the union...at the March convention...and thus get rid of the court-appointed monitors who have been ordered to see that he cleans house.

A settlement in principle was reached today in the strike against American Airlines. Final details remain to be worked out, but employees of the airline already are being recalled. Service, the airline says, will be resumed "soon." The pilots have been on strike against American Airlines for three weeks in a salary dispute.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan has urged the United States to make counter-proposals to Russia for dealing with the future of West Berlin. According to Washington sources, Mikoyan made the request in a memorandum... which he gave to Secretary Dulles on Monday. The Russian arrived in Chicago today on his cross-country tour and again he was jeered. An egg splattered on his limousine at Midway Airport, but he appeared unruffled. At a private luncheon, he called for more East-West trade.

The State of the Union message turned out to be more a statement of principles than policies and programs. The principles were all unobjectionalbe, like freedom, strength, progress, peace and economic stability, some of them were couched in words of considerable eloquence. The prediction that the message would dealmore with the state of the world than the nation was true in part. It dealt with the role of the United States as leader of the free world, and more clearly, perhaps, than ever before committed this country to the aid of any nation anywhere that is fighting to preserve its independence. President Eisenhower curtly repudiated the concept of Fortress America. If we tried to set it up, he said, we would find the fortress was a prison. But the world in which we now play so vital a part, to judge from the tone of the message, is one of peril rather than promise.

The President allowed himself unusually strong words in dealing with Soviet untrustworthiness. "We have learned the bitter lesson," he said, "that international agreements are regarded in Communist doctrine and practice to be mere scraps of paper." He went on to cite the present Kremlin policy on Berlin as an example. "As a consequence," he said we have no confidence in any treaty to which the Communists are a party except where such treaty provides within itself self-enforcing mechanisms."

To have made this statement while Deputy Premier Mikoyan is in the country could not have been coincidence. Mikoyan is urging a show of confidence by both sides in the world struggle as the only way to get tensions relaxed. The President was telling him bluntly that he has no confidence. He may have said it to induce Mikoyan to offer real concessions before he goes, but it looked as though he was turning a cold shoulder on the Mikoyan mission.

The President is always careful to identify himself as a man of peace. The peace he discussed today was first of all one of power and deterrence. To have peace, he said, we seek to prevent war at any place and in any dimension, and if it breaks out, to keep it from spreading. For this we are spending nearly sixty percent of our budget for military purposes. The President listed the high cost of modern weapons. The Atlases will average thirty-five million dollars apieee. We make fighter craft that cost fifty times the fighters of World War II, and have bombers that literally cost their weight in gold.

The President also spoke of peace as a product of collective security and promised a reconsideration of our mutual security program now being studied by a committee of eminent citizens. It has been reported that Mr. Eisenhower aspires to take a lead in bringing about a world of law to replace the world of force, and will propose repeal of the Connally amendment, which makes the American use of the World Court optional. Reference to this did not come till the very end of the message and then, as a kind of footnote, measures, he said, will be proposed, including examination of our relation to the International Court of Justice. But this did not brighten the somber tone of the message with much hope.

In the domestic portion of the message one sensed that the President was expressing his greatest interest. A balanced budget has become almost an obsession with him and he bore down heavily on the needs to curb inflation, and watch all spending closely. He said he would seek power to approve or veto specific items in appropriation and authorization bills. At present, to veto any item the President must throw out the whole bill.

He admitted that the country must progress unless it is to stagnate, and that its health depends on an expanding economy. But he did not explain how a balanced budget at next year's level is to be reconciled with the increased spending that economic growth requires. He did promise to name another study group of eminent citizens to think ahead for ten or fifteen years to set the goals f for education, health and a higher standard of living.

The impression the message is likely to give abroad is one of our determination to be strong and unyielding to threats. To Congress it will sound like a challenge to go along with the forthcoming budget or take the blame if prices rise.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Today's state of the union message recalls a famous speech Theodore Roosevelt made sixty-eight years ago. "Our country," he said, "calls not for the life of ease but for the life of strenuous endeavor. If we stand idly by...if we seek merely swollen, slothful ease and ignoble peace...then the bolder and stronger peoples will pass us by and win for themselves domination of the world."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 12, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate has just passed the "compromise" filibuster proposal offered by Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson. Under the Johnson proposal, a two-thirds majority of senators present and voting is required to cut off debate.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 12, 1959

[redacted]

[redacted] The way was cleared for [redacted] passage of the Johnson resolution earlier in the day...when a bipartisan liberal bloc failed to win approval for two stronger proposals. One of these motions...introduced by Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois... would have allowed a bare majority of the Senate to limit debate after 15 days. This was rejected by a vote of 67 to 28. The next proposal, that would have enabled a majority vote of three-fifths of those present to stop a filibuster, also went down in defeat...58 to 36. [redacted]

This motion was sponsored by Republican Senators Morton and Cooper of Kentucky and Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico.

In Alabama today, Circuit Judge George Wallace ignored a federal court order...and refused to turn the voter registration records of Barbour County over to the Civil Rights Commission. Instead, he gave the records to the county grand jury...which, he said, may do as it sees fit about making them available to federal agents. The grand jury then said that the agents might examine the records with it "jointly". But the invitation reportedly was declined. Judge Wallace thus faces the risk of being sentenced for contempt of court. He said today that he was ready to "face the consequences."

The Supreme Court agreed today to rule on a civil rights case brought by six Negroes in Greensboro, North Carolina. The Negroes had been sentenced to 30 days in jail on a charge of trespassing...after they tried to play golf on a public course.

The court declined to review a suit by a Negro woman of Savannah, Georgia...alleging that because of her race she had been denied admission to a public housing project.

The Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling...which said that the International Boxing Club must break up its monopoly of championship fights. The Supreme Court agreed...in a 5 to 3 decision...that the I.B.C. in its operations in New York and Chicago does violate the anti-trust laws.

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will confer with Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan on Saturday, after Secretary Dulles has had another talk with him on Friday. Dulles will see Mikoyan Friday morning and then have what is called a "working discussion" dinner with him Friday night. The new Soviet proposals on Germany and prevention of surprise attack will...inevitably...be discussed. And I should like to examine these aspects of the Mikoyan visit further in a few minutes.

The task of designing and building an American "space capsule"...capable of carrying a human passenger...was assigned today to the McDonnell Aircraft Corporation of St. Louis. The assignment was given to the St. Louis firm after bids had been submitted to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration by eleven other companies. And negotiations on a formal contract with the McDonnell Corporation are to begin at once. The cost of the "space capsule" is expected to be around 15-million dollars.

This is apart from the cost of developing the necessary rocket engine. That phase of the program will exceed 200-million dollars. The plan for ~~[illegible]~~ placing man in orbit about the earth...and achieving his safe return...is being called "Project Mercury." And it is expected to take several years. The government announcement says that it will provide a means of studying the psychological and physiological effects of space flight on man, ~~[illegible]~~ including man's reaction to "weightlessness." The passenger will have two-way radio contact with the earth...in a flight lasting about 24 hours.

Vice President Nixon's reported statement...that the United States is ahead of Russia in the development of military missiles, and is catching up rapidly in other phases of rocketry...was challenged today by Democratic Senator Symington. Symington called on the vice president to give...in percentages, ~~[illegible]~~ not in specific figures...the number of operational I.C.B.M.'s the ~~[illegible]~~ United States will have at the end of this calendar year, as compared with the Soviet Union. Symington said the public has the right to this knowledge, ~~[illegible]~~ and that if Nixon does not give out the information, he will. Nixon has made no reply to Symington. The vice president, however, has passed word to associates in the Senate, that the United States has no reason to fear because of a missile "gap"...that it is catching up fast.

Here in New York, the newborn baby...kidnaped from a hospital crib... has been returned to her parents alive and well. The baby girl was found in a furnished room in Brooklyn...when detectives followed up the 313th telephone tip received since the abduction ten days ago. Police said the infant had been well cared for by 43-year-old Mrs. Jean Iavarone (EE-AH-VAH-ROH'-NAY), the widowed mother of eight children. One of her sons recently died. The other children no longer live with her, including four that she had placed in institutions ~~orphanages~~ and foster homes. Mrs. Iavarone (EE-AH-VAH-ROH'-NAY) denied taking the baby, insisting it was her own. But police said after a medical examination, that this was impossible. ~~They said the woman may have taken the child because of an overwhelming maternal urge.~~ Her arraignment...on a charge of kidnaping...has been postponed until tomorrow.

Edward R. Murrow: January 12, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The Kremlin, in sending a note proposing to re-open negotiations to prevent surprise attack, was like an organist pulling out an organ stop to sweeten the music he has been playing. The Geneva talks on this subject had broken down. Khrushchev last month told Senator Humphrey quite bluntly that he considered them "hopeless." To re-open them may be no more than a gesture, but it is a gesture of conciliation.

This note came almost at the same time, as one that urged the calling of a conference of all the nations which made war against Germany, to meet in two months, and write a German peace treaty. It contained the text of a draft treaty. Nothing significantly new was to be found in the note or the draft. But they underlined the possibility of a confederation between East and West Germany, and insisted that unification can only come through direct negotiations between the two German Governments. If the German problem is to be solved at all, some form of confederation may end up as a part of the solution. The note, in mentioning confederation, explicitly invited the West to put forward alternative proposals. And it suggested advance discussions, which sounded like a preparatory conference of the Four Powers. So this note also pulled out an organ stop that sweetened the music.

In all, four stops have been pulled out since the Kremlin delivered its demand for a Western withdrawal from Berlin. The music of the November 27th note was unmistakably harsh. The West regarded it as an ultimatum and has sternly and unitedly refused to yield its rights in West Berlin. The Kremlin has been trying since then to create a better atmosphere. It denied that the November 27th note was an ultimatum, and kept saying the door was open for counterproposals. Then it pulled out its first organ stop, by sending Mikoyan to Washington. It pulled out a second one in a message which Mikoyan brought to Secretary Dulles - and which the Kremlin sent formally in writing to De Gaulle - inviting the West to make counter-proposals. The State Department did not divulge this message at the time. Only the news that it had also been sent to De Gaulle led to the disclosure that we already had received it. However, Mikoyan delivered it orally and the invitation was not mentioned in the aide memoire he left with Mr. Dulles. That may account for its having been played down by the State Department.

But it will not be played down anymore. The Kremlin wants counter-proposals. It wants to negotiate. It wants to merge the Berlin issue into the larger theme of German unification, German disarmament and European security. That is not to say that Soviet terms, when they are made known, will be acceptable. But the will to negotiate is there. This will implies a readiness to compromise.

The West is being hard pressed, and it is in no position to refuse to negotiate. To do so would be to invite a serious propaganda defeat. So it must prepare its counter-proposals. Even the Bonn Government, which disliked the proposal of a conference to write a peace treaty more than anyone else, said the Western Allies must now produce counter-proposals. If they do, that, too, will imply a willingness to compromise.

These counter-proposals now are the occupation of all the Western Foreign Offices. They must chart out what ground to give, they must consult each other on both principles and details, and draw up the strategy for negotiations. This already is going on behind the scenes. Next steps may give some clue of the direction events are taking. The West can be expected to turn down the German Treaty Conference in two months, and reject the Soviet draft treaty. But at the same time it must say that it is ready to deal with the broader German problem and European Security, and that it is not insisting on unification of Germany by free elections or demanding the right to re-arm a united Germany as a partner of the West. A further hint may come when Mikoyan meets President Eisenhower on Saturday. The Soviet Deputy Premier has been an adroit and likeable missionary, and has made it hard for the President simply to say: "I cannot deal with you". Moreover, Mikoyan has created more good will throughout the country than Washington anticipated, and done it in business circles that have influence with the President. Here again it must be stressed that the good will is not for any specific solution or solutions. It is simply an aroused belief in the virtue of discussions as such. Far Reasons - But those discussions now appear to be a likely event for 1959.

Back in a moment. -

Just George Bryan. -

Word for Today

Whatever one says about the Russians, they cannot be accused of lacking either ingenuity or initiative. In his current visit to this country, Mikoyan has so conducted himself that the United States can't just brush him off. In the words of Barbara Ward, this promises to be a year of "incessant maneuver and struggle with a vigorous and inventive foe."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate has just passed the "compromise" filibuster proposal offered by Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson. Under the Johnson proposal, a two-thirds majority of senators present and voting is required to cut off debate.

The way was cleared for passage of the Johnson resolution earlier in the day...when a bi-partisan liberal bloc failed to win approval for two stronger proposals. One of these motions...introduced by Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois...would have allowed a bare majority of the Senate to limit debate after 15 days. This was rejected by a vote of 67 to 28. The next proposal that would have enabled a majority vote of three-fifths of those present to stop a filibuster also went down in defeat 58 to 36. This motion was sponsored by Republican Senators Morton and Cooper of Kentucky and Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico.

In Alabama today, Circuit Judge George Wallace ignored a federal court order...and refused to turn the voter registration records of Barbour County over to the Civil Rights Commission. Instead, he gave the records to the county grand jury...which, he said, may do as it sees fit about making them available to federal agents. The grand jury then said that the agents might examine the records with it "jointly." But the invitation reportedly was declined. Judge Wallace thus faces the risk of being sentenced for contempt of court. He said today that he was ready to "face the consequences."

The Supreme Court agreed today to rule on a civil rights case brought by six Negroes in Greensboro, North Carolina. The Negroes had been sentenced to 30 days in jail on a charge of trespassing...after they tried to play golf on a public course.

The Court declined to review a suit by a Negro woman of Savanah, Georgia...alleging that because of her race she had been denied admission to a public housing project.

The Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling...which said that the International Boxing Club must break up its monopoly of championship fights. The Supreme Court agreed...in a 5 to 3 decision...that the I.B.C. in its operations in New York and Chicago does violate the anti-trust laws.

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will confer with Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan on Saturday, after Secretary Dulles has had another talk with him on Friday. Dulles will See Mikoyan Friday morning and then have what is called a "working discussion" dinner with him Friday night.

The task of designing and building an American "space capsule"... capable of carrying a human passenger...was assigned today to the McDonnell Aircraft Corporation of St. Louis. The assignment was given to the St. Louis firm after bids had been submitted to the Nationnl Aeronautics and Space Administration by eleven other companies. And negotiations on a formal contract with the McDonnell Corporation are to begin at once. The cost of the "space capsule" is expected to be around 15-million dollars. This is apart from the cost of developing the necessary rocket engine. That phase of the program will exceed 200-million dollars. The plan for placing man in orbit around the earth...and achieving his safe return...is being called "Project Mercury." And it is expected to take several years. The government announcement says that it will provide a means of studying the psychological and physiological effects of space flight on man, including man's reaction to "weightlessness." The passenger will have two-way radio contact with the earth...in a flight lasting about 24 hours.

Vice President Nixon's reported statement..that the United States is ahead of Russia in the development of military missiles and is catching up rapidly in other phases of rocketry...was challenged today by Democratic Senator

Symington. Symington called on the vice president to give...in percentages, not in specific figures...the number of operational I.C.B.M.'s the United States will have at the end of this calendar year as compared with the Soviet Union. Symington said the public has the right to this knowledge, and that if Nixon does not give out the information, he will. Nixon has made no reply to Symington. The vice president, however, has passed word to associates in the Senate that the United States has no reason to fear because of a missile "gap"... that it is catching up fast.

Here in New York, the newborn baby...kidnaped from a hospital crib... has been returned to her parents alive and well. The baby girl was found in a furnished room in Brooklyn...when detectives followed up the 313th telephone tip received since the abduction ten days ago. Police said the infant had been well-cared for by 43-year old Mrs. Jean Iavarone, the widowed mother of eight children. One of her sons recently died. The other children no longer live with her, including four that she had placed in institutions and foster homes. Mr. Iavarone denied taking the baby, insisting it was her own. But police said after a medical examination that this was impossible. Her arraignment...on a charge of kidnaping...has been postponed until tomorrow.

The Kremlin, in sending a note proposing to re-open negotiations to prevent surprise attack, was like an organist pullingout an organ stop to sweeten the music he has been playing. The Geneva talks on this subject had broken down. Khrushchev last month told Senator Humphrey quite bluntly that he considered them "hopeless." To re-open them may be no more than a gesture, but it is a gesture of conciliation.

This note came almost at the same time, as one that urged the calling of a conference of all the nations which made war against Germany, to meet in two months, and write a German peace treaty. It contained the text of a draft treaty. Nothing significantly new was to be found in the note or the draft. But they underlined the possibility of a confederation between East and West Germany, and insisted that unification can only come through direct negotiations between the two German Governments. If the German problem is to be solved at all, some form of confederation may end up as a part of the solution. The note in mentioning confederation, explicitly invited the West to put forward alternative proposals. And it suggested advance discussions which sounded like a preparatory conference of the Four Powers. So this note also pulled out an organ stop that sweetened the music.

In all, four stops have been pulled out since the Kremlin delivered its demand for a Western withdrawal from Berlin. The music of the November 27th note was unmistakably harsh. The West regarded it as an ultimatum and has sternly and unitedly refused to yield its rights in West Berlin. The Kremlin has been trying since then to create a better atmosphere. It denied that the November 27th note was an ultimatum, and kept saying the door was open for counterproposals. Then it pulled out its first organ stop, by sending Mikoyan to Washington. It pulled out a second one in a message which Mikoyan brought to Secretary Dulles- and which the Kremlin sent formally in writing to DeGaulle, inviting the West to make counter-proposals. The State Department did not divulge this message at the time. Only the news that it had also seen sent to DeGaulle led to the disclosure that we already had received it. However, Mikoyan delivered it orally and the invitation was not mentioned in the aide memoire he left with Mr. Dulles. That may account for its having been played down by the State Department.

But it will not be played down anymore. The Kremlin wants counter-proposals. It wants to negotiate. It wants to merge the Berlin issue into the larger theme of German unification, German disarmament and European security. That is not to say that Soviet terms, when they are made, will be acceptable. But the will to negotiate is there. This will implies a readiness to compromise.

The West is being hard-pressed, and it is in no position to refuse to negotiate. To do so would be to invite a serious propaganda defeat. So it must prepare its counter-proposals. Even the Bonn Government, which disliked the proposal of a conference to write a peace treaty more than anyone else, said the Western Allies must now produce counter-proposals. If they do, that, too, will imply a willingness to compromise.

These counter-proposals now are the occupation of all the Western Foreign Offices. They must chart out what ground to give, they must consult each other on both principles and details, and draw up the strategy for negotiations. This already is going on behind the scenes. Next steps may give some clue of the direction events are taking. The West can be expected to turn down the German Treaty Conference in two months, and reject the Soviet draft treaty. But at the same time it must say that it is ready to deal with the broader German problem and European Security and that it is not insisting on unification of Germany by free elections or demanding the right to re-arm a united Germany as a partner of the West. A further hint may come when Mikoyan meets President Eisenhower on Saturday. The Soviet Deputy Premier has been an adroit and likeable missionary, and has made it hard for the President simply to say: "I cannot deal with you." Moreover Mikoyan has created more good will throughout the country than Washington anticipated, and done it in business circles that have influence with the President. Here again it must be stressed that the good will is not for any specific solution or solutions. It is simply an aroused belief in the virtue of discussions as such. Far ranging discussions now appear to be a likely event for 1959.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Whatever one says about the Russians, they cannot be accused of lacking either ingenuity or initiative. In his current visit to this country, Mikoyan has so conducted himself that the United States can't just brush him off. In the words of Barbara Ward, this promises to be a year of "incessant maneuver and struggle with a vigorous and inventive foe."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 13, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that free elections are not the only means by which reunification of Germany might be accomplished. Mr. Dulles made the statement at his first news conference in six weeks. He declined to elaborate. However, he made clear this country's opposition to Russia's new proposal for a German peace treaty...under which Germany would be neutralized and forced to give up its membership in NATO. Yesterday, Chancellor Adenauer accused Russia...in making this proposal... of adopting a "brutal approach." Dulles said today that in the American view it is worse than a brutal approach. "It is a stupid approach," he said, because it won't work." Dulles went on to explain. "If you try to isolate and segregate a great people like the Germans," he said, "in the center of Europe, they will become a restive and dangerous force. They will attempt to gain advantages for themselves by trying to play off the East against the West."

→

Mr. Dulles said the United States hopes that techniques can be found for detecting...and identifying...underground nuclear tests. Recently the United States told Russia that differentiating between an underground nuclear explosion and an earthquake was more difficult than at first supposed. This is an important issue at Geneva...where the United States, ~~Britain~~ Britain and Russia are discussing a possible cessation of nuclear weapons tests.

Regarding Cuba, Dulles expressed hope that the new revolutionary government will conform to the ideals of the Cuban people for freedom, justice, liberty and law. The United States, he said, has not communicated with the new government on the reported executions of Batista followers. (Reports from Havana say that some of these "war crime" trials and executions have been halted on orders of the rebel army command. The foreign minister of the Castro government said tonight that the military had to move quickly "to assure justice." Otherwise, he said, the families of those who were murdered and tortured would take justice into their own hands "and many innocent would fall with the accused.")

The French government today announced a series of clemency measures for persons involved in the Algerian revolt. Seven thousand persons...interned in Algeria...are to be set free. Messali Hadj, a Nationalist leader who had been confined to a small island off the French coast has been granted the freedom of Metropolitan France...but is barred from returning to Algeria. Four other Nationalist leaders imprisoned in Paris are to be transferred to "a fortified area," where they are to have special privileges. And all rebels...under sentence of death...are now committed to forced labor for life.

The British governor of Cyprus today ordered the release of 35 Greek Cypriots who had been interned. He said Archbishop Makarios can return to Cyprus, "if the present truce becomes a permanent peace." The Greek Cypriot underground has observed a cease-fire since Christmas Eve.

The political crisis in Finland ended today with the formation of a new government. All but one member of the new cabinet belongs to the Agrarian Party. The new foreign minister...TERN-GREN...is without party affiliation.

The Belgian Congo today was promised independence in stages. The Belgian government gave this formal assurance after riots in Leopoldville, in which at least 42 Africans were killed. It said municipal and county elections...with equal voting rights...will be held by the end of this year. Provincial councils are to be elected by March, 1960. And all of these councils, in turn, will elect a "skeleton" parliament. Eventually, the parliament will exercise sovereign power. The Congo...with a population of 13-million...has been a Belgian colony for fifty years.

Republican congressional leaders today received a special White House briefing on the new budget. Senator Dirksen told reporters afterward that the budget actually contemplates a surplus of about a hundred million dollars. It calls for the spending of 77-billion dollars, or about 2-billion dollars less than in the current fiscal year which ends on July first. Democratic critics have called the new budget "inadequate".

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Albert Cole as head of the housing agency for personal reasons which are not specified. The effective date of the resignation has yet to be arranged.

A new government report confirms that unemployment increased by 275-thousand in December...pushing the total number of persons unemployed back above the 4-million mark. The increase is attributed to severe weather...which forced larger cutbacks than usual in outdoor work.

In Alabama, the Barbour County grand jury today turned over to agents of the Civil Rights Commission voting records which Circuit Judge George Wallace had refused to furnish the commission himself. ~~In turning the records over to the grand jury, Judge Wallace had said that it could do with them as it saw fit. He had been ordered by the United States District Court to make the records available.~~

Governor Faubus today was inaugurated as governor of Arkansas for a third term. He asked the legislature...in his inauguration speech... for an amendment to the constitution that would provide students with state funds...so that they could attend private, segregated schools. He also recommended legislation to protect private school teachers in the state teacher retirement system.

Edward R. Murrow: January 13, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

One significant but carefully under-emphasized statement by Secretary Dulles today made all the difference in what would otherwise have been thoroughly a "stand-pat" news conference. It was a suggestion that free elections are not necessarily the only way to re-unify Germany. This is the first public admission that the United States might agree to modify what heretofore has been a minimum condition for solving the German problem.

Mr. Dulles started off discussing the Berlin crisis and the Mikoyan visit with no hint or sign of concessions on our part in the deadlock over Berlin. He said that all that could come from Deputy Premier Mikoyan's conference in Washington Friday and Saturday would be a clear understanding of each other's widely differing viewpoints. He denied that we have counter-proposals to put forward. He denied that the talk should be called negotiations at all. Not that the West is not ready to enter into negotiations. The West is ready and eager, and has said so, but it insists on discussing a broad program, while the Soviet Union, also ready and eager for talks, insists on a narrow program. We are ready to discuss Berlin, German unification and European security.

It was while expounding the West's philosophy on Germany that Mr.

Dulles gave the first glimpse of a possible change in the thesis that free elections are the only acceptable way to unify Germany. He referred back to the formula we had used in the Foreign Ministers' conference after the Summit Meeting in 1955. This was that Germany must be unified, but not under conditions involving increased risks to the Soviet Union. He did not say "re-unified by free elections", which had been the American policy at that time. Correspondents at once smelled a possible shift in policy. One of them subsequently asked bluntly if we had changed our policy about ~~XXXXXXXX~~ free elections, to which Mr. Dulles could say that we hadn't. But when the question was put in a different way, he denied that we had ever said "no free elections, no re-unification". The formula of re-unification by free elections was agreed formula", he continued. "It seems to us the natural method. But I wouldn't say it is the only method by which re-unification could be accomplished."

The statement is reminiscent of two recent instances when Mr. Dulles unexpectedly hinted at a thawing out on previously frozen positions. One was in the Quemoy crisis, when in effect he re-wrote the nature of Chiang Kai-Shek's mission on the mainland of China as one not entailing the use of force. The other was early in the Berlin crisis when Mr. Dulles said that the United States might deal with East German officials in maintaining access to Berlin. The amendment of the Chinese policy ultimately was embodied in the joint communique of Chiang and Mr. Dulles after his visit to Formosa. The statement about dealing with East Germans in Berlin was seemingly withdrawn, after loud outcries from Bonn. Chancellor Adenauer may complain ~~XXXXXXX~~ again about today's statement and Mr. Dulles may again seem to withdraw it. But such statements are not to be obliterated from the record. They are signs of "give" which are necessary preludes if negotiations are to be possible.

Mr. Dulles was asked to mention some other way by which Germany could be re-unified without free elections, and declined. These would be bargaining points later on and he hardly would care to show his cards. He said simply that there are many ways in which two countries could move closer together. There is a way which later may come under consideration. The Soviet formula for German re-unification is a confederation negotiated by the two Germanys. This is not likely to be acceptable to West Germany as long as Dr. Adenauer is Chancellor. But many West Germans are prepared for such a solution. If it ever were to be adopted, and the leaders of the two Germanys agreed to the terms of a confederation, these might be submitted to the electorate of both regions for ratification by a plebiscite. The vote might be under United Nations supervision. This would be a kind of free elections. It would be a free vote for or against the confederation. It is not inconceivable that both Germanys would endorse a confederation if their leaders had agreed to it. This, at any rate, is the kind of solution that Mr. Dulles's statement today makes conceivable. Yesterday it would have sounded impossible.

Back in a moment -

George Bryan -

Word for Today

There are signs that the Western stand on Germany is not inflexible. This could be all to the good. More than a year ago...in accepting the Nobel Prise... Lester B. Pearson said, "The time has come for us to make a move...to concentrate on the possibilities of agreement, rather than on the disagreements and failures...the evils and wrongs...of the past."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that free elections are not the only means by which reunification of Germany might be accomplished. Mr. Dulles made the statement at his first news conference in six weeks. He declined to elaborate. However, he made clear this country's opposition to Russia's new proposal for a German peace treaty...under which Germany would be neutralized and forced to give up its membership in NATO. Yesterday, Chancellor Adenauer accused Russia...in making this proposal...of adopting a "brutal approach." Dulles said today that in the American view it is worse than a brutal approach. "It is a stupid approach," he said, "because it won't work." Dulles went on to explain. "If you try to isolate and segregate a great people like the Germans," he said, "in the center of Europe, they will become a restive and dangerous force. They will attempt to gain advantages for themselves by trying to play off the East against the West."

Mr. Dulles said the United States hopes that techniques can be found for detecting...and identifying...underground nuclear tests. Recently the United States told Russia that differentiating between an underground nuclear explosion and an earthquake was more difficult than at first supposed. This is an important issue at Geneva...where the United States, Britain and Russia are discussing a possible cessation of nuclear weapons tests.

Regarding Cuba, Dulles expressed hope that the new revolutionary government will conform to the ideals of the Cuban people for freedom, justice, liberty, and law. The United States, he said, has not communicated with the new government on the reported executions of Batista followers. (Reports from Havana say that some of these "war crime" trials and executions have been halted on orders of the rebel army command. The foreign minister of the Castro government said tonight that the military had to move quickly "to assure justice." Otherwise, he said, the families of those who were murdered and tortured would take justice into their own hands "and many innocent would fall with the accused.")

The French government today announced a series of clemency measures for persons involved in the Algerian revolt. Seven thousand persons...interned in Algeria...are to be set free. Messali Hadj, a Nationalist leader who had been confined to a small island off the French coast has been granted the freedom of Metropolitan France...but is barred from returning to Algeria. Four other Nationalist leaders imprisoned in Paris are to be transferred to "a fortified area," where they are to have special privileges. And all rebels...under sentence of death...are now committed to forced labor for life.

The British governor of Cyprus today ordered the release of 35 Greek Cypriots who had been interned. He said Archbishop Makarios can return to Cyrpus, "if the present truce becomes a permanent peace." The Greek Cypriot underground has observed a cease-fire since Christmas Eve.

The political crisis in Finland ended today with the formation of a new government. All but one member of the new cabinet belongs to the Agrarian Party. The new foreign minister Tern-Gren...is without party affiliation.

The Belgian Congo today was promised independence in stages. The Belgian government gave this formal assurance after riots in Leopoldville, in which at least 42 Africans were killed. It said municipal and county elections...with equal voting rights...will be held by the end of this year. Provincial councils are to be elected by March, 1960. And all of these councils, in turn, will elect a "skeleton" parliament. Eventually, the parliament will exercise sovereign power. The Congo...with a population of 13-million...has been a Belgian colony for fifty years.

Republican congressional leaders today received a special White House briefing on the new budget. Senator Dirksen told reporters afterward that the budget actually contemplates a surplus of about a hundred million dollars. It calls for the spending of 77-billion dollars, or about 2-billion dollars less than in the current fiscal year which ends on July first. Democratic critics have called the new budget "inadequate."

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Albert Cole as head of the housing agency for personal reasons which are not specified. The effective date of the resignation has yet to be arranged.

A new government report confirms that unemployment increased by 275-thousand in December...pushing the total number of persons unemployed back above the 4-million mark. The increase is attributed to severe weather...which forced larger cutbacks than usual in outdoor work.

In Alabama, the Barbour County grand jury today turned over to agents of the Civil Rights Commission voting records whcch Circuit Judge George Wallace had refused to furnish the commission himself.

Governor Faubus today was inaugurated as governor of Arkansas for a third term. He asked the legislature...in his inauguration speech... for an amendment to the constitution that would provide students with state funds...so that they could attend private, segregated schools. He also recommended legislation to protect private school teachers in the state teacher retirement system.

One significant but carefully under-emphasized statement by Secretary Dulles today made all the difference in what would otherwise have been thoroughly a stand-pat news conference. It was a suggestion that free elections are not neceasarily the only way to re-unify Germany. This is the first public admission that the United States might agree to modify what heretofore has been a minimum condition for solving the German problem.

Mr. Dulles started off discussing the Berlin crisis and the Mikoyan visit with no hint or sign of concessions on our part in the deadlock over Berlin. He said that all that could come from Deputy Premier Mikoyan's conference in Washington Friday and Saturday would be a clear understanding of each other's widely differing viewpoints. He denied that we have counter-proposals to put forward. He denied that the talks should be called negotiations at all. Not that the West is not ready to enter into negotiations. The West is ready and eager, and has said so, but it insists on discussing a broad program, while the Soviet Union, also ready and eager for talks, insists on a narrow program. We are ready to discuss Berlin, German unification and European security.

It was while expounding the West's philosophy on Germany that Mr. Dulles gave the first glimpse of a possible change in the thesis that free elections are the only acceptable way to unify Germany. He referred back to the formula we had used in the Foreign Ministers' conference after the Summit Meeting in 1955. This was that Germany must be unified, but not under conditions involving increased risks to the Soviet Union. He did not say "re-unified by free elections," which had been the American policy at that time. Correspondents at once smelled a possible shift in policy. One of them subsequently asked bluntly if we had changed our policy about free elections, to which Mr. Dulles could say that we hadn't. But when the question was put in a different way, he denied that we had ever said "no free elections, no re-unification." The formula of re-unification by free elections was agreed formula," he continued. "It seems to us the natural method. But I wouldn't say it is the only method by which re-unification could be accomplished."

The statement is reminiscent of two recent instances when Mr. Dulles unexpectedly hinted at a thawing out on previously frozen positions. One was in the Quemoy crisis, when in effect he re-wrote the nature of Chiang Kai-Shek's mission on the mainland of China as one not entailing the use of force. The other was early in the Berlin crisis when Mr. Dulles said that the United States might deal with East German officials in maintaining access to Berlin. The amendment of the Chinese policy ultimately was embodied in the joint communique of Chiang and Mr. Dulles after his visit to Formosa. The statement about dealing with East Germans in Berlin was seemingly withdrawn, after loud outcries from Bonn. Chancellor Adenauer may complain again about today's statement and Mr. Dulles may again seem to withdraw it. But such statements are not to be obliterated from the record. They are signs of "give" which are necessary preludes if negotiations are to be possible.

Mr. Dulles was asked to mention some other way by which Germany could be re-unified without free elections, and declined. These would be bargaining points later on and he hardly would care to show his cards. He said simply that there are many ways in which two countries could mover closer together. There is a way which later may come under consideration. The Soviet formula for German re-unification is a confederation negotiated by the two Germanys. This is not likely to be acceptable to West Germany as long as Dr. Adenauer is Chancellor. But many West Germans are prepared for such a solution. If it ever were to be adopted, and the leaders of the two Germany agreed to the terms of a confederation, these might be submitted to the electorate of both regions for ratification by a plebiscite. The vote might be under United Nations supervision. This would be a kind of free elections. It would be a free vote for or against the confederation, It is not inconceivable that both Germanys would endorse a confederation if their leaders had agreed to it. This, at any rate, is the kind of solution that Mr. Dulles's statement today makes conceivable. Yesterday it would have sounded impossible.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There are signs that the Western stand on Germany is not inflexible. This could be all to the good. More than a year ago...in accepting the Nobel Prize...Lester B. Pearson said, "The time has come for us to make a move...to concentrate on the possibilities of agreement, rather than on the disagreements and failures...the evils and wrongs...of the past."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 14, 1959

This is the news:

Mr. Eisenhower today made his first appearance at the National Press Club since becoming President. Like other guests of honor, he answered questions, put to him in writing by the newsmen assembled. He was asked what he expected to come of the Mikoyan visit. Did he---Mr. Eisenhower---plan to make counter-proposals?

#1 Runs 2:15

Ends on cue: "--it's part of a community."

Then, there was a question on missiles. There seems, the question said, to be a difference of opinion between Vice President Nixon, and Democratic Senator Symington, as to whether we are behind the Russians in missile development. Could the President settle the argument?

→

#2 Runs 2:07
Ends on cue: "---that our scientists have made remarkable progress."

Mr. Eisenhower had said last week in his State of the Union message that it was a necessity to have school teachers of competence...and that to obtain and hold them, a set of standards was required.

The President was asked what he had in mind by this, and he replied:

#3 Runs :45
Ends on cue: "---goals that would finally become standards."

Another question concerned civil rights. It was pointed out that...in 1957.. at the President's suggestion, Congress had passed a civil rights bill dealing largely with voting. The questioner wanted to know: Did Mr. Eisenhower think this Congress should pass civil rights legislation dealing specifically with problems arising from public school integration.

#4 Runs 1:20
Ends on cue: "--stand so that it will not be violated."

There was the inevitable question on taxation. Was it correct to assume that if Congress maintained a balanced budget this year, that next year Mr. Eisenhower would propose a reduction in individual income taxes? The President made this reply:

#5 Runs :22

Ends on cue: "---eventually all along the line."

There appears to be some discrepancy in the views taken by Mr. Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Dulles went before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today and called for "austerity and sacrifice on the part of all." He warned against underestimating the economic progress made by Russia and Red China. They are expanding production, he said, "at a very rapid pace." And he pointed out that in the contest for outer space, the United States is still trying to catch up. Dulles said that in the Middle East and Southeast Asia, there is a growing realization of the Soviet threat and the "sincerity" of American policy. International Communism, he predicted, will encounter increasing difficulties in the long run. But for the short run, Dulles said, (and this may be a period of years, even generations) the situation is "full of danger." He said, "We shall need the national will to stand firm."

Mr. Dulles was the first witness to appear in the committee's new study of free world problems. And today it approved a resolution... supporting the Administration stand on Berlin.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan is due back in Washington on Friday for a series of conferences with Secretary Dulles. He spent today in New York City...having luncheon with a group of Wall Street bankers and seeing the sights. His high spot in the morning was Macy's department store...where an official of the store says he went around "touching everything". He spent an hour and a half surrounded by capitalist goods but didn't buy. Mikoyan's meeting with the bankers was at his request.

A Japanese government source in Tokyo says that Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tse-tung will go to Moscow late this month. This report is not confirmed.

The provisional government of Algeria (which is the rebel government) today formally denied that secret negotiations are in progress with France for a cease-fire. Premier Fanfani of Italy was recently in Cairo, and he was reported to have made contact with the rebel leaders regarding a possible truce. The provisional government has been meeting almost continuously in Cairo for four days. Yesterday, France announced a series of clemency measures for persons involved in the Algerian revolt.

Reports from Cuba ~~tonight~~ tonight say that the execution of Batista "war criminals" is continuing.

President Eisenhower today nominated Norman Mason, federal housing commissioner, to succeed Albert Cole as administrator of the housing agency. Cole resigned yesterday for personal reasons.

Republican senators today elected Senator Schoeppel...a member of the conservative wing of the party...chairman of the Republican committee on committees. The conference of Republican senators put off until next week a decision whether to install Senator Goldwater of Arizona as their campaign chairman for 1960.

Back in a moment -

George Bryan -

Word for Today

Secretary of State Dulles says that we must be prepared to sacrifice for generations, if need be, to meet the challenge of the Soviet bloc. He uses the word "austerity". At the same time, President Eisenhower holds out hope that personal income taxes can be reduced. "Anyone can win," George Ade said, "unless there happens to be a second entry."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Mr. Eisenhower today made his first appearance at the National Press Club since becoming President. Like other guests of honor, he answered questions put to him in writing by the newsmen assembled. He was asked what he expected to come of the Mikoyan visit. Did he---Mr. Eisenhower--- plan to make counter-proposals?

PRES. EISENHOWER: I think that the most that would be expected of such an informal visit as Mr. Mikoyan is making would be that we would try to get behind each other's facial expressions and to see what we're really thinking.

Is there a peaceful, honest, peaceful motive behind these things? Are both of us really so sick of the burdens that we have to carry in the armament field that we want to find with some intelligence and some common approach a way out of this dilemma?

That is, I think, the most we could achieve from an informal visit such as this, if anything.

Now as to the different proposals of the Soviets and ourselves respecting Germany and Europe, we think it is just an exercise in futility to try to demilitarize, neutralize and completely disarm a people as strong, as important and virile as is the German people.

On the other hand that being the general tenor of the Russian proposals, we oppose to that concept this one: that we would say we don't believe in the free arming of Germnny in the sense that Hitler tried to rearm it.

We would like to see Germany so intertwine itself with other European nations in its economy and its thinking and its defense exercises that it doesn't have to do this. It is part of a community.

MURROW: Then there was a question on missiles. There seems, the question said, to be a difference of opinion between Vice President Nixon and Democratic Senator Symington as to whether we are behind the Russians in missile development. Could the President settle the argument?

PRES. EISENHOWER: First of all as all of you here who go to my press conferences know, I never comment on the statements of any particular individual. I will try to answer the question in my own way. I would say this. It is absolutely fatuous and futile to try to balance item by item the progress of two great nations in their technology of defense. We do know that in certain types of missile development the Soviets have performed brilliantly indeed. But we have a defense. I must point out that because it is defense, we must concentrate not only on one possible type of combat but every conceivable kind. We have to have balanced forces and not merely one that aims, let us say, at the destruction of cities or bases anywhere in the world.

Now in the missile field, itself, I should think that if the other people were, if we did not believe that they were, somewhat ahead in certain phases of the missile development we would indeed be a little stupid because they've been working at it for many years and our urgent work in this field in the long-range missile has started only something like four years ago.

Now in that time I want to say with all the depth of understanding I believe I have that we have made, that our scientists have made remarkable progress.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower had said last week in his State of the Union message that it was a necessity to have school teachers of competence...and that to obtain and hold them, asset of standards was required. The President was asked what he had in mind by this, and he replied:

EISENHOWER: It's broader than just merely the pay of teachers. And I am right now busily engaged in the business of getting together the kind of committee that I think will give us the widest representation from the whole spectrum of the American population-every walk of life, every party, every kind of philosophy that we can.

And if we can put together this kind of committee, and I preferably would like to see it financed privately so that there could be no dictatorial methods used, then we could begin to set up goals that would finally become standard.

MURROW: Another question concerned civil rights. It was pointed out that...in 1957...at the President's suggestion, Congress had passed a civil rights bill dealing largely with voting. The questioner wanted to know: Did Mr. Eisenhower think this Congress should pass civil rights legislation dealing specifically with problems arising from public school integration.

EISENHOWER: When we get the Federal Government working by law in things that are known to be primarily state, we run into difficulties. One of them is the closing of schools. To my mind this is tragic. I tried to say the other day that I believe the image of America is not helped abroad when we have so many thousands of our children deprived of schooling for no fault of their own by the closing, our children's of, getting an education by the no fault of their own and by the closing of the schools.

So I would say first I would like to see the vote-this problem of voting-solved with the necessary, whatever laws may be necessary, including that I would like to see extended the life of the Civil Rights Commission, I'd like to see power more clear-cut to make certain that they can examine into the difficulties about voting, the bars to it, and to get some kind of procedures that will make this privilege stand so that it will not be violated.

MURROW: There was the inevitable question on taxation. Was it correct to assume that if Congress maintained a balanced budget this year, that next year Mr. Eisenhower would propose a reduction in individual income taxes? The President made this reply:

EISENHOWER: I do say we must reform our tax structure so that incentives are enhanced and not damaged. And if we, if the Congress does keep this budget balanced, I say that increases our prospect for that kind of reform, as I say eventually a lowering of taxes all along the line.

MURROW:
There appears to be some discrepancy in the views taken by Mr. Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Dulles went before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today and called for "austerity and sacrifice on the part of all." He warned against underestimating the economic progress made by Russia and Red China. They are expanding production, he said, "at a very rapid pace." And he pointed out that in the contest for outer space, the United States is still trying to catch up. Dulles said that in the Middle East and Southeast Asia, there is a growing realization of the Soviet threat and the "sincerity" of American policy. International Communism, he predicted, will encounter increasing difficulties in the long run. But for the short run, Dulles said, (and this may be a period of years, even generations) the situation is "full of danger." He said, "We shall need the national will to stand firm."

Mr. Dulles was the first witness to appear in the committee's new study of free world problems. And today it approved a resolution...supporting the Administration stand on Berlin.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan is due back in Washington on Friday for a series of conferences with Secretary Dulles. He spent today in New York City... having luncheon with a group of Wall Street bankers and seeing the sights. His high spot in the morning was Macy's department store...where an official of the store says he went around "touching everything." He spent an hour and a half surrounded by capitalist goods but didn't buy. Mikoyan's meeting with the bankers was at his request.

A Japanese government source in Tokyo says that Chinese Communist Leader Mao-Tse-tung will go to Moscow late this month. This report is not confirmed.

The provisional government of Algeria (which is the rebel government) today formally denied that secret negotiations are in progress with France for a cease-fire. Premier Fanfani of Italy was recently in Cairo, and he was reported to have made contact with the rebel leaders regarding a possible truce.

The provisional government has been meeting almost continuously in Cairo for four days. Yesterday, France announced a series of clemency measures for persons involved in the Algerian revolt.

Reports from Cuba tonight say that the execution of Batista "war criminals" is continuing.

President Eisenhower today nominated Norman Mason, federal housing commissioner, to succeed Albert Cole as administrator of the housing agency. Cole resigned yesterday for personal reasons.

Republican senators today elected Senator Schoeppel...a member of the conservative wing of the party...chairman of the Republican committee on committees. The conference of Republican senators put off until next week a decision whether to install Senator Goldwater of Arizona as their campaign chairman for 1960.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles says that we must be prepared to sacrifice for generations, if need be, to meet the challenge of the Soviet bloc. He uses the ward "austerity." At the same time, President Eisenhower holds out hope that personal income taxes can be reduced. "Anyone can win," George Ade said, "unless there happens to be a second entry."

Goodnight and good luck!

Transcript of President Eisenhower's New

Following is the transcript of President Eisenhower's news conference yesterday at the National Press Club in Washington, as recorded by The New York Times:

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER—Mr. President, Mr. President-elect, gentlemen:

It is a very distinct honor, not to say valued privilege, to be able to participate in this way in your golden jubilee. I'm sorry that I couldn't have done it earlier, but at least I've gotten under the wire.

I understand that in the type of gathering that we have today the speaker normally delivers a talk and is then questioned.

Well, for those of you who have not been reading your newspapers, let me tell you that only last Friday I delivered a speech of forty-five minutes and it would seem quite unnecessary to go through that—the topics—I then suggested for consideration, because so far as I remember, I covered a great deal of the waterfront.

And so, with no other word of apology except to disclaim the title your president gave me of an authority, I assure you I'm a worker in the vineyard and a student. So with that word of apology, I suggest we go to the questions, for the simple reason that those few who didn't read the papers may not be so aware of the wisdom of my words last Friday as they should be.

JOHN V. HORNER of The Washington Evening Star, president of the National Press Club—Thank you, Mr. President. As you know, sir, the question and answer period at our club differs somewhat from your news conference at the White House.

In the standard news conference, correspondents rise for individual recognition. When recognized they identify themselves and they put the question. At the Press Club the procedure is for the members of the audience to submit questions in writing which are sent up to the presiding officer and it is he who selects a question asked and it is he who reads them. And I want to emphasize, Mr. President, that I don't write them. I do just read them. [Laughter.]

1 And now, sir, for the first one: there were two themes in your State of the Union Message, one of expanding the cost of defense and of maintaining adequate sums for a growing population; the other on the need for fiscal responsibility. Can we do both of these things and if so how can they be done?

A.—The real answer in a word is found in this truth, I think: that we can keep prices from rising unconscionably and by doing so we can do exactly what the question propounds. Now I do want to say this:

No one believes, of course, if he is a special advocate or a member of a particular lobby or recommending next year as the first move in this field reduction of personal income.

I do say we must reform our tax structure so that incentives are enhanced and not damaged. And if we, if the Congress does keep this budget balanced, I say that increases our prospect for that kind of reform, as I say eventually a lowering of taxes all along the line.

4 Q.—Sir, in your State of the Union Message you said that "we must have teachers of competence. To obtain and hold them we need standards." What do you have in mind, sir, about this—national minimum standards of pay, national standards for high school graduates, or

A.—It's broader than just merely the pay of teachers. And I am right now busily engaged in the business of getting together the kind of committee that I think will give us the widest representation from the whole spectrum of the American population—every walk of life, every party, every kind of philosophy that we can.

And if we can put together this kind of committee, and I preferably would like to see it financed privately so that there could be no dictatorial methods used, then we could begin to set up goals that would finally become standard.

or two examples. I happen to know of one district near Chicago where a very dedicated group of citizens went to work to make certain that their teachers were properly paid. The minimum salary of a qualified high school teacher in that school became $10,000. And pretty soon it was picked up by the whole district and the quality of teaching, the morale of the teacher and of the student and everybody else went up high—very high.

We have teachers for a purpose. They are one of the most—probably in many ways the most important group—that we know in this whole country. But they are for a purpose, not an end in themselves. They are to take our children, to give them the proper kinds of standards, the moral, intellectual and even physical standards we believe they should attain.

So, when we want to set a standard for this business of education, we've got to think of the problems, our needs, whether we should have completely classical or whether we should center on science alone, we must get a standard that brings us a well-rounded student at the productive and—what you might call the end product by the time he gets through high school.

And this means facilities, buildings, adequate recreational and athletic types of material, fine teachers and, I could add, dedicated parents that cooperate with the teachers. This is the kind of thing I'm talking about and I believe it can be done and I believe it'll inspire us all to

OFF THE CUFF: President Eisenhower answering reporters the National Press Club in Washington. He was the guest of h

'56, fall of '56, use the term "modern Republicanism." Because there was some question about that I tried to define it, and I said as far as I'm concerned this is the application of Republican principles to modern problems, and not to the problem of keeping the Union together which was President Lincoln's great preoccupation.

We're talking about the problems that we encounter today. I don't see any difference as far as I'm concerned, between Republicanism, modern Republicanism or another term that I liked was Theodore Roosevelt's, which was progressive Republicanism.

I believe we should cling very, very firmly to the principles, to the vision really, that our founders wrote into their great documents, and we should take those principles and apply them with problems of humans today.

At one time our population was 95 per cent agricultural. Well today I think it's something on the order of 10 or a little more or less. Of course problems are different and therefore let's [illegible] modern problems [illegible] would appeal to all Re[illegible]s and [illegible] few Democrats [illegible] are here to take very seriously this business of applying the real concepts of the Founding Fathers and applying them to problems [illegible] stated time, I like to meet them and listen to their questions.

And I also read that I sometimes get angry. Well, that's their idea. I don't believe I do.

I say they're a good institution. I would hate to see them relegated to a secondary place, but they are the President's press conferences and so I think you ought to indulge him a little bit in the way he thinks they ought to be, when they should be done.

9 Q.—Mr. President, a question on missiles. Sir, there seems to be a difference of opinion between Vice President Nixon and Senator Symington as to whether we are behind the Russians in missile development. Can you settle the argu[illegible]

A.—First of all, as all of you here who go to my press conferences know, [illegible] I never comment on the statements of any particular individual, either in a critical and only [illegible] in [illegible] to answer the question in my own [illegible] I would say this. It is absolutely fatuous and futile to try to balance item by item the progress of two great nations in their technology of defense. We do know that in certain types of missile development the Soviets have performed

ws Conference at the National Press Club

Associated Press Wirephoto

ers' questions yesterday at honor at a luncheon there.

oo much that we have not yet aught up with another great ower and people with great echnical skills in particular em, it would seem to me to how a sense, at a loss or a ack of a sense of balance.

And that's what we're co erned because we don't nything about time, place or haracter of any aggression hat would come. We have to repared and we've got to prepared to respond in kind. I think we have made very emarkable progress.

0 Q.—Mr. President, befo we go overseas we have uestion he would like f ou to settle. As an old-ti all star for him have you ny inside information on why arl Blaik is quitting as coach West Point?

A.—Again I must correct ou ident for the description es of me. My, I believe the ightest thing I said about e in the papers was I had ear promise. I was broken up soon that whether that omise would have been fulled I do not know.

But I would say this, and I'd e to say; matter of fact I am lighted at this chance to say publicly. I've never known man in the athletic world wh been a great inspiration mon approach a way out of this dilemma?

That is, I think, the most we could achieve from an informal visit such as this, if anything. Because if you try to make a proposal you get into what you might call a conference in which something is dotted and signed and then it becomes really quite a job.

Now as to the different proposals of the Soviets and ourselves respecting Germany and Europe, we think it is just an exercise in futility to try to demilitarize, neutralize and completely disarm a people as strong, as important and virile as is the German people.

On the other hand that being the general tenor of the Russian proposals, we oppose to that concept this one: that we would say we don't believe in the free arming of Germany in the sense that Hitler tried to rearm it.

We would like to see Germany so intertwine itself with other European nations in its economy and its thinking and its defense exercises that it doesn't have to do this. It is part of a community.

Now this is [illegible] far as the West is concerned in the Euratom, the Coal-Steel Community and the Free Market, that kind of thing. And we think it's a very great development for the benefit and strength of the Western Europe, because the rest of Europe at this point of course cannot get in.

But it's also a development that almost proves that it cannot be aggressive. They can't move except with the consent of a whole bevy of nations. How can you make a surprise aggressive move in such a way? It must be as far as military is concerned, a defensive sort of organization.

But if we have the thing separately and I am talking here I mean separately from all the West, I mean from France, Belgium, Holland, Italy and so on, we must remember this. The people cannot live in isolation. And the great movements toward integration in Europe that have now taken place look are proof that the West Germans at least and I personally believe the German people want to live in peace and we should be quite ready to make any assurances, make any material moves that would assure Russia that there is no danger from this people.

And they should not in our opinion insist upon really making there a sort of a vacuum in both the security world, the economic and political world. They shouldn't do it. It just won't work, in my opinion.

Q.—Mr. President, why do you think Mr. Mikoyan is here [illegible] before the luncheon [illegible] of us [illegible] at must occur during these ears, and I am sure we will ave to use more mechanical methods, more material means of insuring our own security. Until that happens we've indeed got a bleak problem and it must be solved.

Q.—Mr. President, I'm going to ask you if you will not reminisce a bit for us. Some war historians say one of your great contributions during World War II was your ability to bring men of divergent views together. Would you please, sir, recall for us some of your associations with Mr. Churchill, General Montgomery, General de Gaulle and the other Allied leaders?

A.—Well, first of all it's a very dangerous question to ask an old soldier because you ask him to reminisce and you really ask for something.

I think Mr. Churchill is one of those men that I have known that clearly deserves the title of great. And I think this is a title that can apply—can be applied accurately—only a few men because no matter how much we respect the capabilities of any individual we never can use that title or that adjective, as I see it, until the man has been proven into position—in a position—of great responsibility. He can be great in certain qualities but in great in the carrying of responsibility, like Mr. Churchill—is a very unusual qualification and one that entitles him, I think, over-all to that designation.

And this in spite of the fact that we probably had more differences of opinion and more quite warm arguments with Mr. Churchill than I suppose, did any other person, certainly in the Allied forces, because he happened to be of that nationality that he could not, but if he wanted to.

Now what I want to say is this: right down to the very moment of decision this man could support his own conclusion, his own beliefs more eloquently, more effectively than almost anyone I've ever known. And you had holding on tight to your basic conviction because the reasoning you knew he would shove you out of it because either with pathos or humor, or just sheer eloquence, he was a very, very powerful debater.

But when the decision was reached he was absolutely loyal. He—and some of them he didn't like at all. He was a really—not only in my mind—a great man, he's one of my—certainly—one of my greatest friends that's not of my nationality.

There are, of course, other men. We couldn't go through the list. I've often made public my admiration for General Bradley, and, of course, my almost veneration in many ways for General Marshall and others in the Eu[illegible] what different. We believed that didn't have to be true particularly as we were building up a bomber force that was going for us to soften defenses and make very difficult the maneuvers of the opponent.

Now, so far as predictions were concerned, many months before even I went to Overlord and from there on down to late May, there were many predictions that we would probably have another Anzio, or we'd be pinned in the beach; we'd never get out, and I heard this expression: "the tides would flow red with the blood of American and British youth and the beaches would be choked with their bodies."

Now you had to have a degree of confidence, maybe here and there brashness, but I will say this: all of the people on my staff, British and Americans, began to believe this. We began to believe we could win in a reasonable time.

The lowest prediction I ever heard, though, from any political figure on either side of the water was two years after we landed. Indeed, I heard one of the most prominent figures in the war say that if we were able to acquire a base—Paris by Christmas, 1944, the operation that we had then started would be known in history as the greatest military operation of all time up to that moment.

Well, we insisted we were going to be on the borders of Germany at Christmas and if they had any sense they'd surrender. Well, they didn't and I lost five pounds [sterling], but that's what we believed, all of us.

Now after that war was ended eleven months from the day we landed—as I say the most optimistic prediction was two years—from that moment now there became many, many critics who showed how much more quickly it could have been won. And possibly it could have been. The only answer I can give you is: "We won."

Q.—Again, Mr. President, we thank you. You made a most significant contribution to the golden anniversary celebration of the National Press Club in the doing have made considerable news. And we are grateful to you, Sir.

Now, Mr. President, I have just one short question remaining, but before I ask that I need to make an announcement:

First I would like to ask the members of the audience to remain in their places until the President and his party depart.

And now, Sir, I would like to say the board of governors, having agreed that you are well-qualified as a source of news, has elected you to membership in the National Press Club. [Applause.]

Thank you very much.

Q.—It is my honor and privilege, sir, to present that do want to say this:

No one believes, of course, if he is a special advocate or a pressure group that is seeking Federal funds, no one believes that the amounts that he has been allotted are quite sufficient.

This truth has always been known to all of us and it does take every earnest study, judgment and decision to bring about this balance between outgo and income and still make adequate provisions for security to make certain that we do not neglect those programs in which the Federal Government should participate for the welfare of our people and still keep fiscal integrity and pay our way as we go.

And I say I believe if we can substantially keep under control this rising—the problem of rising cost—this not only can be done but will very soon account for substantial surplus which will mean tax reform and eventually, certainly, some tax reduction.

2 Q.—Mr. President, what is your answer to critics who say the national economy cannot expand at a rate of 5 per cent a year unless the Federal Government makes a bigger investment annually in public facilities of all kinds?

A.—Well, I don't want to be a critic myself, but I do not believe that that question is really the one we ought to be asking because it is not the Federal Government that makes prosperity in this country. After all, we are talking within the reasonable future of a G. N. P. [gross national product] of 500,000,000,000 [dollars] and now we're talking about spending for all purposes 77,000,000,000, or a figure in that level.

It is quite clear that the decisions of 175,000,000 people and the way they make those decisions based upon their own need is far more important than what the Federal Government does.

The Federal Government needs to lead, to point the way to the things, as Lincoln said, that people cannot do for themselves, such as providing for the national security. That kind of problem they have to take initial and sole responsibility for.

But when it comes to the advancing and expanding our economy, that is by and large the business of Americans and the Federal Government can help but our expenditures will never be—our money, our Federal money—will never be spent so intelligently and in so useful fashion for the economy as will the expenditures that would be made by the private citizen, the taxpayer if he hadn't had so much of it funneled off into the Federal Government.

3 Q.—Mr. President, is it correct to assume that if Congress maintains a balanced budget this year, that next year you will propose a reduction in individual income taxes?

A.—Well, the first thing I believe we have to do is to reform our tax structure in a number of ways, and I think some of you will remember, I mentioned this last Friday, the need for tax reform. And that the Secretary of the Treasury, by the way a man who I think is in this field very brilliant and able, he is already studying the kinds of reform we should have. And I would not be prepared to say that we would be with the teachers. This is the kind of thing I'm talking about and I believe it can be done and [illegible] a better performance.

5 Q.—Turning now to civil rights, the question is: In 1957 Congress passed at your suggestion a civil rights bill dealing largely with voting. Do you think this Congress should pass civil rights legislation dealing specifically with problems arising from school segregation?

A.—I think when we get into the field of law here we must be very careful. I do believe in the law concerning voting and I think we should have whatever correctives are necessary in the law in order to make certain that a man's privilege, a qualified citizen's privilege, of voting is not taken away from him for such inconsequential things as race or creed or origin. That to [illegible] when we get the Federal Government working by law in things that are known to be primarily state, we run into difficulties. One of them is the closing of schools. To my mind this is tragic. I tried to say the other day that I believe the image of America is not helped abroad when we have so many thousands of our children deprived of schooling for no fault of their own by the closing, our children's of, getting an education by the no fault of their own and by the closing of the schools.

So I would say first I would like to see the vote—this problem of voting—solved with the necessary, whatever laws may be necessary, including that I would like to see extended the life of the Civil Rights Commission, I'd like to see power more clear-cut to make certain that they can examine into the difficulties about voting, the bars to it, and to get some kind of procedures that will make this privilege stand so that it will not be violated.

[illegible] belief that now voters themselves, local voters, state voters and national voters, will have a greater and finer opportunity to proceed with the, you might say the proper observance of their other rights.

But I do say that until all of us take as again a standard, a standard of living by the concepts of the Constitution and try by our teaching, our example, our beliefs, our expressed convictions, we are not going to get too far just by laws that operate specifically upon a state-supported activity. Because as I say if the state ceases that activity, then what do we do? That to my mind is a problem that takes time, dedication, but I do say this: it must be solved.

6 Q.—Mr. President, as you know, we have many questions here. I would like to shift, if you please, sir, to a topic—a favorite of all of us—politics. You said at a recent press conference that your political philosophy has not changed. Nevertheless many people say you have drifted away from modern Republicanism toward traditional Republican conservatism. Could you explain this, sir?

A.—I am always amused, sometimes frustrated, in my attempt to define terms that I have heard or seen coined. I happened to once, I believe in take very [illegible] of applying the real con[illegible] the Founding Fathers [illegible] And do it according [illegible] own way and your thinkin[illegible] cause that is American, [illegible] what keeps America [illegible] But I don't like terms tha[illegible] don't understand myself.

7 Q.—Mr. President, if you'll take just one more on politics, I'll let you go at the press. You have indicated, sir, you will follow a strictly hands-off policy in selecting the Republican Presidential nominee next year. Does that not run the risk of selection of a man with whose Republican political philosophy you do not agree?

A.—I'm quite sure, Mr. President, that everybody would know that if a nominee were possibly made whose basic philosophy I could not go along with, whose general attitude toward the relationship of government to the private citizen and to the state and to the community, who did not agree with my basic idea that only in a coalition of strong governments or at least in association through cooperation of strong governments can we make certain that freedom is not lost in the world. If any man could not go along with that kind of basic thinking, well I would say this: I couldn't possibly support him if my influence had anything to do with the matter. Therefore I could, I won't but I could, write out for you a list of half a dozen often or maybe a dozen fine men in the Republican party that I would gladly support.

But I do say this—those are men that I think in my mind who really want to see America go ahead, its economy sound and be very, very careful that our security is maintained not only by our own building of armaments with support, of cooperation of other governments that want to live in independence and liberty.

8 Q.—And now, sir, a question or so on the press. Which, sir, do you prefer, holding press conferences only when you have something specific to announce, or holding these conferences on a regularly scheduled basis whether or not you have anything to volunteer?

A.—I've had one sort of a predilection throughout my life—I never like to conform too much. And just to say that one particular day each week I'm going to be in the same exact spot, the same exact time, is, sort of puts me down.

Now I have no objection as long as we've got the time and something else isn't on the mind, I have no objection to do it periodically. And I will say this. I cannot recall when there's any time that I felt that I had anything in my mind that I should tell the press at that particular moment or in that particular way.

After all, you can always issue statements or sometimes these newsreel cameras want to get a hold of you and get a picture of you while you're saying these things.

But I do like, and this is contrary to some of the things I've seen in the paper, I do like the opportunity of meeting these people, not always I say periodically and not on any in their technology of [illegible] We do know that in [illegible] types of missile develo[illegible] Soviets have pe[illegible] brilliantly indeed. But w[illegible] a defense, I must point ou[illegible] because it is defense, mus[illegible] centrate not only on one [illegible] ble type of combat but [illegible] conceivable kind. We h[illegible] have balanced forces an[illegible] merely one that aims, [illegible] say, at the destruction of [illegible] or bases anywhere in the [illegible]

Now in the missile fie[illegible] self, I should think that [illegible] other people were, if w[illegible] not believe that they [illegible] somewhat ahead in [illegible] phases of the missile de[illegible] ment we would indeed [illegible] little stupid because t[illegible] been working at it for [illegible] years and our urgent wo[illegible] this field in the long-[illegible] missile has started only [illegible] thing like four years ago.

Now in that time I wo[illegible] say with all the depth o[illegible] derstanding I believe I [illegible] that we have made, tha[illegible] scientists have made, rem[illegible] ble progress [illegible] development [illegible] exemplified here in these [illegible] months by many succe[illegible] flights of the Atlas, by th[illegible] that training units of thos[illegible] those weapons are now [illegible] produced, their bases are [illegible] built, that certain of our [illegible] mediate, that is the fairly [illegible] range weapons are som[illegible] ployed. This kind of [illegible] means that we're going [illegible] very fast.

Now there is also to [illegible] that this is not just one [illegible] that we should consider, [illegible] the place of airplanes tak[illegible] planes. We have [illegible] now in the fi[illegible] that are mo[illegible] than twice [illegible] There are a[illegible] that are doi[illegible] and at great altitudes a[illegible] great efficiency.

So that to disturb our[illegible]

Washingto[illegible]

YESTERDAY

(Jan. 14, 1959)

THE PRESIDENT

Answered written ques[illegible] from reporters at a Nat[illegible] Press Club luncheon.

Spoke briefly at an[illegible] meeting of Association[illegible] State Planning and Dev[illegible] ment Agencies.

Named Norman P. M[illegible] to head Housing and H[illegible] Finance Agency.

His visitors include[illegible] group representing the [illegible] tional Association of M[illegible] facturers—C. Stanley H[illegible] president; Stephen Dunn, [illegible] president, and Charles [illegible] Sligh, former president; [illegible] Ernest Marples, British P[illegible] master General, and Sir [illegible] old Caccia, British Amba[illegible] dor, with Postmaster Ge[illegible] Summerfield.

THE SENATE

Approved resolution res[illegible] fling committees.

Received Goldwater bi[illegible] improve military retire[illegible] pay.

Received Hennings prop[illegible] to repeal the two-term [illegible] of Presidential tenure.

Heard Senator Talm[illegible]

ghted at the chance to say it publicly. I've never known a man in the athletic world who [illegible] his, the men he's teaching, his athletes under his control, for a whole corps of cadets and indeed for everybody that has known him and that has been Earl Blaik.

He is a very, indeed, great man and I think he has done a very remarkable job, a dedicated one, and I am quite sure that if he'd been thinking only of Earl Blaik he would have been long since gone.

I don't mind telling you that I have written him a letter today trying to express my feeling of admiration and gratitude for a man who for these long, I think it's now twenty-five years, been at Dartmouth and West Point doing a remarkable job for all of us.

Q.—And now, Sir, if you please, a few questions on foreign matters, foreign affairs. Mr. President, both the Russians and we seem to favor negotiations on the future of Germany but differ fundamentally on solutions to the problems. Do you have any new suggestions to make to Mr. Mikoyan which might break this dilemma?

A.—Well, going backwards at that question, I should say that any effort to lay out something that was new and would be called a definite proposal would be quite a great mistake.

I think that the most that would be expected of such an informal visit as Mr. Mikoyan is making would be that we would try to get behind each other's facial expressions and to see what we're really thinking.

Is there a peaceful, honest, peaceful motive behind these things? Are both of us really so sick of the burdens that we have to carry in the armament field that we want to find with some intelligence and some com-

[illegible] Mikoyan is publicly. I've never known [illegible] the hun[illegible] his teaching [illegible] and [illegible] we were trying [illegible]—a matter [illegible] was trying to get it from them what [illegible]nts.

But I [illegible] recall this: that [illegible] time back—oh, I don't know, ten, twelve, eighteen months ago—I suggested that one of the things we ought to promote is more visits by our people. Now some of this has been going on.

I even went so far as to suggest people that were very—deemed in Russia—very important, and by that I meant even in the political world.

I think that it is hard for me to interpret the meaning of one meeting, but I would welcome more of them because I believe thoroughly that in the long run peaceful negotiation is going to grow out of one thing that I just mentioned with respect to a problem in our own country—better understanding of each other.

And that's going to be brought about not by glaring across an Iron Curtain at each other but getting together, our news, our ideas.

I could make quite a speech on this one because it's something I've been entangled in for a long time.

But at Geneva we had, as I recall, seventeen programs that we wanted to put over in this October foreign ministers' meeting and one of the greatest was to increase our contacts, ideas, literature, books, movies and, above all, people.

So I would say this: if this means that they're making an experiment in sending some of their higher people over here I'm all for it and I would again repeat a very prayerful hope that I expressed sometime back: that regardless of our own political and social views about a government or about individuals America does not—should not—forget the requirements of courtesy.

13 Q.—Mr. President, do you consider Red China a potentially greater threat to the free world than Russia?

A.—I don't believe in the measurable time that on this you could make a really worthwhile conclusion or prediction.

There is no question that the leaders of Red China are determined by methods with which we are all familiar to become an industrial power, which means that behind it so far as we can see they want to be a big military power and they are going at that just as hard as they can.

Now here's a people of 600,000,000 people and I would think that if they continue in that line with no change in objective, doctrine or method, then we must indeed be watchful, and not only for ourselves but for other people that are friendly and who live closer to China.

But, of course, we would hope that as the instinctive urge of men for freedom, for the right to walk upright in the world, that that begins to have—to create a ferment, not only in the more Western sections of the Eurasian mass, but over in China as well, and that, in my humble opinion, is something

Bradley, and, of course, my [illegible] veneration in many [illegible] Marshall and others [illegible] in the European and African theatres.

Many of these people in the British services were indeed splendid people. One of them I think most of you never heard of, or not often. He was Air Chief Marshal Portal, now Lord Portal, one of the finest leaders that I've known. A very great mind.

Each of these men, like each of us, had his own strengths and here and there, I should think, his weaknesses. And I believe it's not profitable to try to show where you believe you were better than he was or where you thought you had done the job better if you'd have had someone else.

We did win the war. [Applause.]

And I'm going to reminisce only in one little item which shows the difference between foresight and hindsight.

All of us who supported the theory or concept of the Overlord operation had a very great case to prove and often we had to prove it before—against—our British friends.

They had from their experience in World War I visions of Vimy Ridge, of Passchendaele, of Ypres, of those places where literally hundreds of thousands of British and Canadian men lost their lives and often with not a single thing to show except maybe a few yards of territory.

They had that kind of vision and they could not stand the idea of starting another operation like that by invading Northern France.

The Americans believed some[illegible] you very much.

Q.—I [illegible] honor and pri[illegible] to you, a card of membership in our club. And now for the final question which you may answer in any way you like, Sir, of course: in 1948 as your retirement as Army Chief of Staff was nearing you told the club your prescription for ideal retirement:

"Put a chair on the porch. Sit in it for six months and then begin to rock slowly."

A few things have happened in the last eleven years. Is that still your idea of the best retirement?

A.—I would like, gentlemen, to retire this long: until I really wanted to go to work someday. Not that I think I don't like to work now, but I've never had that opportunity in my life just to stay out of the job long enough, even at the time I was a baby, to say I really now want to get back, because from the day I was almost a first grader I was helping earn my own living and I've always had something to do.

Now I don't know how long this type of retirement would last, but at least I want to sit in that chair until I really want to get out of it.

And now I want to say one thing about this card, for which I'm very grateful. I understand, possibly erroneously, but I hope it's true, that members of the press normally deal gently with their other members. [Applause.]

So I hope that possession of this card gives me a certain immunity that up to this moment has not been mine.

Thank you very much.

ton Proceedings

urge direct subsidy payments in place of farm price supports.

Adjourned at 4 P. M. until noon Saturday.

THE HOUSE

Not in session.

Republican conference pledged support to new Floor Leader Halleck.

DEPARTMENTS & AGENCIES

Civil Aeronautics Board hear arguments on airlines' mutual-aid anti-strike pact.

Justice Department pressed F. C. C. to disqualify applicants guilty of influence peddling.

SCHEDULED FOR TODAY
(Jan. 15, 1959)

President Eisenhower meets with National Security Council, 9 A. M.

Congressional Atomic Energy Committee hearing on civilian power program (closed) 10 A. M.

House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on foreign aid (closed) 10:30 A. M.; on Cuban situation (closed) 2:30 P. M.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson news conference (2:30 P. M.).

STUART NICETIES . . . ONE OF A SERIES

Our fantastic new MARATHON WORSTEDS of Dacron and Wool

Combining luxurious softness with special abilities to withstand punishment.
A boon to men who travel or are "hard on their clothes" Miniature herringbones and muted plaids of rare distinction. Suits, $85

Naturally tailored by Southwick

Paul Stuart

18 East 45th Street, New York • Murray Hill 2-0320

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 15, 1959

This is the news:

The State Department today denied the charge made by Fidel Castro, that the United States had sent arms to Batista for use against the revolutionary movement. The department said that the United States had followed a policy of strict non-intervention. Batista did employ United States military equipment...but this was done over our protest, and all arms shipments were stopped last spring when it became evident that the revolution had wide support. The State Department revealed that Batista's wife...who is now in the Dominican Republic...has been granted permission to enter the United States. She was given a temporary visa, usually good for 60 days in order to visit her 14-month-old daughter who is ill. The whereabouts of the child in this country was not announced.

Reports from Cuba say that executions of Batista "war criminals" have now passed the 200-mark. Eighteen persons died before firing squads today in Oriente Province. The Cuban constitution has been amended...so that the summary court martial proceedings will have a new legal basis. Referring to protests from the United States, Castro said today that the persons being executed "killed 20, 30 or 40 persons, and they ask us to be humane." The Associated Press quotes him as saying that if the Marines are sent to Cuba, "200-thousand gringos will die." No proposal to send the Marines has been made.

Chairman Celler of the House Judiciary Committee called today for a United Nations investigation of the mass executions. He made the proposal as the Assistant Secretary of State for Latin American Affairs, Roy Rubottom, appeared for questioning before two congressional committees. Rubottom said that the United States was not going to intervene in what is essentially Cuba's business. This does not mean, he said, that the United States cannot still exert a "constructive influence."

A new multi-billion-dollar housing bill was introduced today by Democratic Representative Rains of Alabama. The measure would lower the required down payments on government-insured home loans and provide for an expanded slum clearance program. Speaker Rayburn describes it as a "good bill". Republicans are calling it "bad" because of its high cost.

Democratic Representative Flood of Virginia today accused the Administration of trying to "handcuff" the heads of government departments who appear before congressional committees. Flood referred to a letter...sent out to department heads...instructing them when they testify before committees to "carefully avoid" asking for more money than would be provided in the President's new budget. The letter was sent out by the budget director, Maurice Stans.

General George Marshall suffered a "mild stroke" today at his home in Pinehurst, North Carolina. He was taken to the base hospital at Fort Bragg, and his condition is described as "satisfactory."

Circuit Judge George Wallace...of Alabama...today was cited for contempt of court. The contempt proceedings were instituted by U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson, who accused Wallace of refusing...by devious means...to obey the orders of the federal court. Wallace had been instructed by the court to produce the names of registered voters in Bullock and Barbour Counties for inspection by agents of the Civil Rights Commission. Instead, Wallace turned the records over to grand juries in the two counties. And the grand juries, in turn, made them available to federal investigators. Under criminal contempt proceedings, Wallace could be sentenced to prison for six months. A hearing for Judge Wallace to show cause why he should not be found guilty has been set for January 26.

In Paris, the new parliament met today to receive DeGaulle's first message as president of the Fifth Republic. The DeGaulle statement was brief. Its only reference to Algeria was that "pacification" is indispensable to a political solution of the problem. And a political solution, he said, "can proceed only from universal sufferage." He did not say when elections might be held in Algeria...or spell out what a political solution might entail. It could mean independence. In a policy speech before the National Assembly, Premier Michel Debre (ME-SHELL DEH-BRAY) said that DeGaulle's invitation to the Algerian rebels to come to Paris under a safe-conduct and negotiate a cease-fire still holds. He denied that secret negotiations already are in progress. Debre said France has the "duty" to become an atomic power. And he demanded a larger voice for France in the western alliance. He said, "We have great duties toward Europe and the West, and we dare to affirm that for these duties there are corresponding rights. The National Assembly has scheduled a confidence vote tomorrow on the government's program. The Socialists say they will vote against the government. Debre is certain to win the test, however, because of the large Gaullist majority.

Here in New York today, Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan visited the United Nations and called...again...for a summit conference. This concluded a two-week tour of the United States, which took Mikoyan to the West Coast and back. My colleague, Paul Niven, accompanied the Russian visitor everywhere he went. Paul, how would you sum it up?

Tape runs 4:45
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow."

That was my colleague, Paul Niven, who used to work out of Moscow but who spent the past two weeks covering Deputy Premier Mikoyan's good-will tour.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Mikoyan has been going up and down America...trying to win friends and influence people in a public relations operation worthy of Madison Avenue. As Niven said, he demonstrated that even a Russian leader can smile and make a joke. Will Rogers went calling on a Communist big-shot once. Afterward he said, "I just wanted to see did he eat, drink, sleep, laugh."

Goodnight and good luck!

Murrow Jan 15

Mikoyan will begin tomorrow the most important two days of his American visit. Arriving in Washington by train from New York, he will confer for two hours with Secretary of State Dulles. After a lunch with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he will join Dulles again for a working dinner at a private Washington Club. On Saturday, he will see President Eisenhower.

In a sense, the first two weeks of Mikoyan's visit have been preparation for these next two days. He now proceeds to the peaks of American power after a fortnight in the foothills. In a subtle and circumspect way, he has tried to appeal to the American people over the heads of the men whom he'll be meeting in Washington.

As a public relations operation, this trip has been brilliantly conceived and executed. The Kremlin may scorn Madison Avenue but is not above learning from it.

Mikoyan asked for American visa less than a month ago. He said that he wanted to come here to see the Soviet Ambassador in Washington, Mikhail Menshikov. This was at the very least an incomplete explanation of his purpose. The number two man in a government does not normally travel thousands of miles to see one of his ambassadors; he simply calls the ambassador home.

Then the Russians got on the telephone to a number of prominent citizens of various American cities. Most of them were businessmen, with impeccable political and social backgrounds and large expense accounts with which to finance international dinner parties. Most of them were also recent visitors to Moscow, where they had been lavishly entertained. It was explained to these gentlemen that Mikoyan was planning a trip here and might consider visiting their cities. Thus Mikoyan gained entree to some of the most exclusive brownstone clubs and hotel banquet rooms in the United States. Then, he gradually began responding to the clamor of the fourth estate. At first, as a matter of fact, he did not give news conferences. The press complained, and he then gave way, without any apparent reluctance, to the daily demands of reporters.

Mikoyan has not said anything earth-shaking, either to us newsmen or to the businessmen. He has explained Soviet policy, he has tried to portray it in the best possible light, but he has not changed it on any important issue. To be sure, he has made a few concessions. A reporter chided him today about his apparent discovery that Wall Street is inhabited by peacemongers. He has said also that American chairs and sofas are better than heavy Russian furniture. Such remarks are, not likely to appear in the Soviet press. And whenever a vital Soviet interest has come up -- Berlin, or the satellites, for instance -- he has been immovable.

But it isn't what Mikoyan says, it's the way that he says it. The response to his public appearances has been so favorable as to be astonishing. At the vast Ford plant at River Rouge, not a single worker refused his extended hand. At a news conference in San Fancisco, hundreds of people applauded when he denounced America's China policy as unrealistic. At the Waldorf here in New York last night, a businessman in a dinner jacket came down in the humorous away saying "You know, I could do business with that man."

Mikoyan's success can be attributed partly to a certain naivete among some Americans. The evidence that a man from the Kremlin can be human and even humorous has come as a revelation to many people here. Previous emissaries from Moscow have not been notable for these characteristics. It is hard to imagine the icy Molotov or any of the recent pre-Menshikov Soviet Ambassadors, tramping through Macy's or ogling airline hostesses or hamming it up with Jerry Lewis in Hollywood.

The fact that Mikoyan has done these things well, and scored a personal success here, is reportedly disturbing some officials in Washington. But there is little evidence that his smiles and jokes have changed American views on Hungary, for instance, or are likely to trick us out of West Berlin.

And if Mikoyan has sometimes made a good impression here, it is at least possible that the United States has made a good impression on him. American diplomats in Moscow feel strongly that the more the Soviet leaders see of this country, the better. Secretary Dulles will not be surprised tomorrow morning to find that Mikoyan is still a communist and still hard to deal with. But he will also be a man with more firsthand experience of the United States than any of his predecessors in high Kremlin positions in the entire forty years of Soviet power. ~~This Now here again is Edward R. Murrow.~~ It is not flattering to the United States to suggest that we have lost something, or will lose something, because Mikoyan now knows more about us than he did before.

Now here again is Edward R. Murrow.

Word for Today

Mikoyan has been going up and down America...trying to win friends and influence people in a public relations operation worthy of Madison Avenue. As Niven said, he demonstrated that even a Russian leader can smile and make a joke. Will Rogers went calling on a Communist big-shot once. Afterward he said, "I just wanted to see did he eat, drink, sleep, laugh."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The State Department today denied the charge made by Fidel Castro that the United States had sent arms to Batista for use against the revolutionary movement. The department said the United States had followed a policy of strict non-intervention. Batista did employ United States military equipment...but this was done over our protest, and all arms shipments were stopped last spring when it became evident that the revolution had wide support. The State Department revealed that Batista's wife...who is now in the Dominican Republic...has been granted permission to enter the United States. She was given a temporary visa usually good for 60 days in order to visit her 14 month old daughter who is ill. The whereabouts of the child in this country was not announced.

Reports from Cuba say that executions of Batista "war criminals" have now passed the 200 mark. Eighteen persons died before firing squads today in Oriente Province. The Cuban constitution has been amended...so that the summary court martial proceedings will have a new legal basis. Referring to protests from the United States, Castro said today that the persons being executed "killed 20,30 or 40 persons, and they ask us to be humane." The Associated Press quotes him as saying that if the Marines are sent to Cuba, "200-thousand gringos will die." No proposal to send the Marines has been made.

Chairman Celler of the House Judiciary Committee called today for a United Nations investigation of the mass executions. He made the proposal as the Assistant Secretary of State for Latin American Affiirs, Roy Rubottom, appeared for questioning before two congressional committees. Rubottom said that the United States was not going to intervene in what is essentially Cuba's business. This does not mean, he said, that the United States cannot still exert a "constructive influence."

A new multi-billion-dollar housing bill was introduced today by Democratic Representative Rains of Alabama. The measure would lower the required down payments on government-insured home loans and provide for an expanded slum clearance program. Speaker Rayburn describes it as a "good bill." Republicans are calling it "bad" because of its high cost.

Democratic Representative Flood of Virginia today accused the Administration of trying to "handcuff" the heads of government departments who appear before congressional committees. Flood referred to a letter...sent out to department heads...instructing them when they testify before committees to "carefully avoid" asking for more money than would be provided in the President's new budget. The letter was sent out by the budget director, Maurice Stans.

General George Marshall suffered a "mild stroke" today at his home in Pinehurst, North Carolina. He was taken to the base hospital at Fort Bragg, and his condition is described as "satisfactory."

Circuit Judge George Wallace...of Alabama...today was cited for contempt of court. The contempt proceedings were instituted by U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson, who accused Wallace of refusing..bby devious means...to obey the orders of the federal court. Wallace had been instructed by the court to produce the names of registered voters in Bullock and Barbour Counties for inspection by agents of the Civil Rights Commission. Instead, Wallace turned the records over to grand juries in the two counties. And the grand juries, in turn made them available to federal investigators. Under criminal contempt proceedings, Wallace could be sentenced to prison for six months. A hearing for Judge Wallace to show cause why he should not be found guilty has been set for January 26th.

In Paris, the new parliament met today to receive DeGaulles' first message as president of the Fifth Republic. The DeGaulle statement was brief. Its only reference to Algeria was that "pacification" is indispensable to a political solution of the problem. And a political solution, he said, "can proceed only from universal sufferage." He did not say when elections might be held in Algeria...or spell out what a political solution might entail. It could mean independence. In a policy speech before the National Assembly, Premier Michel Debre said that DeGaulle's invitation to the Algerian rebels to come to Paris under a safe-conduct and negotiate a cease-fire still holds. He denied that secret negotiations already are in progress. Debre said Frane has the "duty" to become an atomic power. And he demanded a larger voice for France in the Western alliance.

Here in New York today, Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan visited the United Nations and called...again...for a summit conference. This concluded a two-week tour of the United States, which took Mikoyan to the West Coast and back. My colleague, Paul Niven, accompanied the Russian visitor everywhere he went. Paul, how would you sum it up?

NIVEN: Mikoyan will begin tomorrow the most important two days of his American visit. Arriving in Washington by train from New York, he will confer for two hours with Secretary of State Dulles. After a lunch with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he will join Dulles again for a working dinner at a private Washington Club. On Saturday, he will see the President. In a sense these first two weeks of Mikoyan's visit have been preparation for the next two days. He now proceeds to the peak of American power after a fortnight in the foothills. In a subtle and circumspect way, he has tried to appeal to the American people over the heads of the men whom he will see in Washington. As a public relations operation, this trip has been brilliantly conceived and executed. The Kremlin may scorn Madison Avenue, but is not above learning from it. Mikoyan asked for his American visa less than a month ago. He said that he wanted to come here to see the Soviet Ambassador in Washington, Mikhail Menshikov. This was at the very least an incomplete explanation of the purpose of his trip. The number two man in the government does not normally travel thousands of miles just to see one of his ambassadors; he simply calls the ambassador home. Then the Russians got on the telephone to a number of prominent citizens of various American cities. Most of them were businessmen, with impeccable political and social backgrounds and large expense accounts with which to finance international dinner parties. Most of them were also recent visitors to Moscow, where they had been lavishly entertained. It was explained to these gentlemen that Mikoyan was planning a trip here and might consider visiting their cities. Thus, Mikoyan gained entre to some of the most exclusive brownstone clubs and hotel banqueting rooms in the United States. Then, he gradually began responding to the clamour of the fourth estate. At first, as a matter of fact, he did not give any news conferences, the press complained and he then gave way without apparent reluctance to the daily demands of reporters. Mikoyan has not said anything earthshaking either to newsmen or to businessmen. He has explained Soviet policy, he has tried to portray itin the best possible light, but he has not changed it in any important respect. To be sure, he has made a few concessions. A reporter chided him today about his apparent discovery that Wall Street is inhabited by peace-mongers. He has said also that American chairs and sofas are better than the heavy Russian furniture. Such remarks are not likely to appear in the Soviet press. And, wherever a vital Soviet interest has come up, Berlin or the satellites for instance, he has been immovable. But, it isn't what Mikoyan says, it's the way that he says it. The response to his public appearances has been so favorable as to be astonishing. At the vast Ford plant at River Rouge, not a single worker refused his extended hand. At a news conference in San Francisco, hundreds of people applauded when he denounced America's China policy as unrealistic. At the Waldorf here in New York last night, a businessman in a dinner jacket said coming down in the elevator, "You know I could do business with that man." Mikoyan's success can be attributed partly to a certain naivete among some Americans. The evidence that a man from the Kremlin could be human and even humorous has come as a revelation to many people here. Previous emissaries from Moscow have not been notable for these characteristics. It is hard to imagine the icy Molotov or any of the recent pre-Menshikov Soviet Ambassadors tramping through Macy's or ogling the airline hostesses or haming it up in Hollywood with Jerry Lewis. The fact that Mikoyan has done these things well and scored a personal success here, is reportedly disturbing some officials in Washington. But, there is little evidence that his smiles and jokes have changed American views on Hungary for instance or are likely to trek us out of West Berlin. And, if Mikoyan has some times made a good impression here, it is at least possible that the United States has made a good impression on him. American diplomats in Moscow feel strongly that the more the Soviet leaders see of this country the better. Secretary Dulles will not be surprised tomorrow morning to find that Mikoyan is still a Communist and still hard to deal with. But, he will also be a man with more first-hand experience of the United States than any of his predecessors in high Kremlin positions in the entire 40 years of Soviet power. It is not flattering to the United States to suggest that we have lost something or will lose something because Mikoyan now knows more about us than he did before.

Now, here again is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Paul Niven who used to work out of Moscow, but who spent the past two weeks covering Deputy Premier Mikoyan's good-will tour.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Mikoyan has been going up and down America...trying to win friends and influence people in a public relations operation worthy of Madison Avenue. As Niven said, he demonstrated that even a Russian leader can smile and make a joke. Will Rogers went calling on a Communist big-shot once. Afterward he said, "I just wanted to see did he eat, drink, sleep, laugh." Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, January 15, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: My colleague Paul Niven accompanied the Russian visitor everywhere he went. Paul, how would you sum it up?

NIVEN: Mikoyan will begin tomorrow the most important two days of his American visit. Arriving in Washington by train from New York, he will confer for two hours with Secretary of State Dulles. After a lunch with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he will join Dulles again for a working dinner at a private Washington club. On Saturday, he will see the President. In a sense these first two weeks of Mikoyan's visit have been preparation for the next two days. He now proceeds to the peak of American power after a fortnight in the foothills. In a subtle and circumspect way, he has tried to appeal to the American people over the heads of the men whom he will see in Washington. As a public relations operation, this trip has been brilliantly conceived and executed. The Kremlin may scorn Madison Avenue but is not above learning from it. Mikoyan asked for his American visa less than a month ago. He said that he wanted to come here to see the Soviet Ambassador in Washington, Mikhail Menshikov. This was at the very least an incomplete explanation of the purpose of his trip. The number two man in the government does not normally travel thousands of miles just to see one of his ambassadors, he simply calls the Ambassador home. Then the Russians got on the telephone to a number of prominent citizens of various American cities. Most of them were businessmen, with impeccable political and social backgrounds and large expense accounts with which to finance international dinner parties. Most of them were also recent visitors to Moscow, where they had been lavishly entertained. It was explained to these gentelmen that Mikoyan was planning a trip here and might consider visiting their cities. Thus, Mikoyan gained entre to some of the most exclusive brownstone clubs and hotel banqueting rooms in the United States. Then, he gradually began responding to the clamour of the forth estate. At first, as a matter of fact, he did not give any news conferences, the press complained and he than gave way without apparent reluctance to the daily demands of reporters. Mikoyan has not said anything earthshaking either to newsman or to businessmen. He has explained Soviet policy, he has tried to put trade in the best possible light, but he has not changed it in any important respect. To be sure, he has made a few concessions. A reporter chided him today about his apparent discovery that Wall Street is inhabited by peace-mongers. He has said also that American chairs and sofas are better than the heavy Russian furniture. Such remarks are not likely to appear in the Soviet press. And, wherever a vital Soviet interest has come up, Berlin or the satellites for instance, he has been immovable. But, it isn't what Mikoyan says, it's the way that he says it. The response to his public appearances has been so favorable as to be astonishing. At the vast Ford plant at River Rouge, not a single worker refused his extended hand. At a news conference in San Francisco, hundreds of people applauded when he denounced America's China policy as unrealistic. At the Waldorf here in New York last night, a businessman in a dinner jacket said coming down in the elevator, "You know I could do business with that man." Mikoyan's success can be attributed partly to a certain nievete among some Americans. The evidence that a man from the Kremlin could be human and even humorous has come as a revelation to many people here. Previous emissaries from Moscow have not been noteable for these characteristics. It is hard to imagine the icy Molotov or any of the recent pre-Menshikov Soviet Ambassaedrs tramping through Macy's or ogling the airline hostesses or hanging it up in Hollywood with Jerry Lewis. The fact that Mikoyan has done these things well and scored a personal success here, is reportedly disturbing some officials in Washington. But, there is little evidence that his smiles and jokes have changed American views on Hungary for instance/or are likely to trek us out of West Berlin. And, if Mikoyan has some times made a good impression here, it is at least possible that the United States has made a good impression on him. American diplomats in Moscow feel strongly that the more the Soviet leaders see of this country the better. Secretary Dulles will not be surprised tomorrow morning to find that Mikoyan is still a Communist and still hard to deal with. But, he will also be a man with more first-hand experience of the United States than any of his predecessors in high Kremlin positions in the entire 40 years of Soviet power. It is not flattering to the United States to suggest that we have lost something or will lose something because/Mikoyan now knows more about us than he did before.

Now, here again is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Paul Niven who used to work out of Moscow, but who spent the past two weeks covering Deputy Premier Mikoyan's good-will tour.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

PT/n.m.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 16, 1959

W

This is the news:

The White House announces a break-through in the development of a small atomic generator. The generator...weighing only five pounds... was demonstrated for President Eisenhower today and then shown to reporters. About the size of a kitchen radio, it generates heat...using radio-active waste material...and the heat is converted directly into electric energy. There are no moving parts. An official of the Atomic Energy Commission called the device, twenty times more efficient than conventional batteries. It was pointed out that if the transmitter of the "talking" Atlas satellite, had been powered by such a device, it could have sent out radio signals for a year, instead of for only 18 days.

—)

The White House said that because of its light weight and relatively long operating capability, the invention is "particularly suited" to application in outer space...but that it can also be applied wherever small sources of electricity are needed. Moreover, it opens the way to utilizing a vast accumulation of atomic waste material. So far, only one of the generators has been produced...at a cost, not including fuel, of 15-thousand dollars. However, once the new device goes into production, the cost would be reduced to around 200-dollars. The demonstration model was built by the Martin Company of Baltimore and the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis in four months.

The Defense Department says that an Atlas missile...fired at Cape Canaveral last night...flew less than 200 miles "because of an apparent malfunction in the propulsion system."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee received a military briefing today from Secretary of Defense McElroy and General Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Although they testified for two and a half hours, Chairman Green said afterward that he would have to hear more before he would be satisfied. The testimony was secret. But, generally speaking, it was to the effect that the country's over-all defense posture is adequate. McElroy said, "It is adequate to provide deterrence to any kind of general war, if the Russians use good judgment."

Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, was questioned by a Senate "watch-dog" committee today about Soviet missile development. Senator Russell...chairman of the group...said Dulles gave a detailed review of Russia's rocket program.

Secretary of State Dulles had two long conferences today with Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan...and is having a "working dinner" with him tonight. The morning session lasted two hours and 25 minutes...so long that the Russian was five minutes late getting to Capitol Hill for a luncheon with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. All that was said officially of the morning session was that there was an exchange of views on questions of mutual interest. No meeting had been scheduled for the afternoon, but a conference for 4 o'clock was arranged. This afternoon conference lasted a little more than an hour. And again neither side would say anything specific. All Mikoyan would say was that the exchange of views would be resumed at dinner tonight. Senators who attended the luncheon say Mikoyan still favors the creation of a neutral zone in Middle Europe, with each side pulling its troops back 500 miles from the Elbe. He is described as identifying Chancellor Adenauer as the chief stumbling block in solving the crisis over Berlin. He again promised free access to Berlin for the West.

The United States has sent Russia a note...saying that we will not resume talks in Geneva on prevention of surprise attack until a set of ground rules have been established for the conference. / The talks were suspended last month...when Russia and the Western powers could not agree on what should be discussed. / The American note is in response to a Russian proposal that the conference be resumed at once.

Today the French National Assembly...as expected...gave a vote of confidence to the new government. / The DeGaulle program was approved, 453 to 56.

In Cairo today, Britain and the United Arab Republic settled their financial differences...arising from the Anglo-French invasion of 1956. The text of the agreement has not been released. / Formal signing is expected in a few days. / But reportedly, Britain agreed to release Egyptian funds held in British banks. / And in return, the U.A.R. will pay compensation for the British firms taken over by the Egyptian government.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold reported today on his recent trip to the Middle East. / Conditions in that part of the world, he said, are "much more favorable" than they were last fall. / He said this was particularly true of the relationship between the various Arab states. He confirmed that Israel and Syria have agreed ON a series of steps aimed at preventing future border strife. One of the measures agreed on, calls for a clearer marking of the frontier.

The provisional government of Cuba announces, that it has accepted Philip Bonsal as the new United States ambassador. Bonsal is now serving as ambassador to Bolivia. In Havana today, police broke up a mob that wanted to lynch a war crimes suspect, held in police headquarters. President OO-ROO-TIA Urrutia has assured the International Red Cross, that his government intends to observe the Geneva conventions, regarding military prisoners. He also said in a speech, that Cuba will exercise its full sovereignty. All trade treaties existing between Cuba and other countries, will be revised.

Edward R. Murrow: January 16, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The Defense budget, when it goes to Congress next Monday, will carry the endorsement of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It follows that all officers serving under them must support it before the Congressional Committees. That is, neither the Joint Chiefs nor their subordinates will ask for more money for pet projects.

Only a few months ago, a good many Defense officials spoke out about their fears for United States security because not enough was being spent on satellites, missiles, planes, atomic naval vessels and highly mobile land forces armed with nuclear weapons - just to name some of the categories. At that time security was the measuring rod. There was a great deal of talk, public and private, about the danger we face from Soviet competition in the years just ahead. Then came the sessions with the budget bureau. Director Stans, backed up by President Eisenhower, applied a second measuring rod, the revenue available. Not any of the categories were given all that their sponsors wanted, though Mr. Stans made some important concessions in the interest of security. But he slashed ruthlessly in all other directions. In the end the Joint Chiefs recognized the President's responsibility for national policy as a whole, and bowed to him and M

Budget Director

Stans. That is to say, they are prepared to testify that the military budget is enough to assure security. Since the Joint Chiefs believe it - and it would be unfair to think they don't - they will not perjure themselves in so testifying. But if they happened not to believe it, and said so, they would be insubordinate to the Commander-in-Chief. The same is true for all Pentagon witnesses. Their testimony must be kept between perjury and insubordination. Certainly some of the witnesses will not believe that specific appropriations are sufficient. But Mr. Stans has sent out secret and written instructions on how to testify. He says bluntly: "Executive Branch personnel are expected to support the President in his budget recommendations. Witnesses will carefully avoid volunteering views differing from the budget, either on the record or off the record."

A witness when asked a direct question by a Congressional Committee has to answer, as Mr. Stans points out. But he gives witnesses a narrow path to follow. If he feels he must set forth a personal view inconsistent with the budget, Mr. Stans states that "he should point out that President Eisenhower's decision was reached from his over-all perspective as head of the Government and in the light of over-riding national policy. The witness", Mr. Stans directs, "should make it clear that his personal comments are not to be construed as a request for additional funds."

What is new in Mr. Stan's instructions is chiefly that he has written them. The same rules have applied before. Officers and Department Heads were not allowed to criticise the budget or go over the heads of their superiors in testifying. But the orders, largely because they were written and sent out secretly, have annoyed Congressmen. Representative Daniel Flood, a member of the House sub-Committee on Appropriations, called them a shocking attempt to impose a gag rule and an affront to Congressional dignity. Chairman Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee asked: "How are we going to act intelligently on a budget when witnesses who were the experts on preparing it are under restraint when we ask for details? How are we going to know if the ammounts are too much or too little, if the witnesses must stick to these amounts?"

Since all direct questions have to be answered, a complete gag is impossible. Committees only need to know how to phrase the right questions.

A witness, who has been invited to defend the budget figure for a given item, can be asked what sum he had originally sought for the same purpose. If the sum was larger, he can be asked to explain why he sought it. And then he can be asked what had happened to change his mind to the point of defending the smaller sum. At this juncture the witness can take cover under the Stans formula, refer to the President's overall responsibility, and the overriding national interests, and explain that nothing he is saying is to be construed as a request for more money. In this way both perjury and insubordination can be by-passed. The Committee will have learned what it needed to know, and it can make up its own mind on the proper relationship between national security and the revenue available.

The budget will reach the House Appropriations Committee early next week, and Mr. Stans and Secretary of the Treasury Anderson will be among the first witnesses in closed sessions. Mr. Stans is sure to be asked about his written rules for witnesses.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan. —

Word for Today

President Eisenhower pointed out in his State of the Union message that Congress controls the purse. Congress would have government officials state frankly what they believe to be their requirements. It must make the final judgment. And as John Locke observed, "He that judges without informing himself to the utmost cannot acquit himself of judging amiss."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House announces a break-through in the development of a small atomic generator. The generator...weighing only five pounds...was demonstrated for President Eisenhower today and then shown to reporters. About the size of a kitchen radio, it generates heat...using radioactive waste material... and the heat is converted directly into electric energy. There are no moving parts. An official of the Atomic Energy Commission called the device twenty times more efficient than conventional batteries. It was pointed out that if the transmitter of the "talking" Atlas satellite had been powered by such a device, it could have sent out radio signals for a year, instead of for only 18 days. The White House said that because of its light weight and relatively long operating capability, the invention is "particularly suited" to application in outer space...but that it can also be applied wherever small sources of electricity are needed. Moreover, it opens the way to utilizing a vast accumulation of atomic waste material. So far, only one of the generators has been produced,..at a cost, not including fuel, of 15-thousand dollars. However, once the new device goes into production, the cost would be reduced to around 200-dollars. The demonstration model was built by the Martin Company of Baltimore and the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis in four months.

The Defense Department says that an Atlas missile...fired at Cape Canaveral last night...flew less than 200 miles "because of an apparent malfunction in the propulsion system."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee received a military briefing today from Secretary of Defense McElroy and General Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Although they testified for two and a half hours, Chairman Green said afterward that he would have to hear more before he would be satisfied.

The testimony was secret. But, generally speaking, it was to the effect that the country's over-all defense posture is adequate. McElroy said, "It is adequate to provide deterrence to any kind of general war, if the Russians use good judgment."

Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, was questioned by a Senate "watch-dog" committee today about Soviet missile development. Senator Russell...chairman of the group...said Dulles gave a detailed review of Russia's rocket program.

Secretary of State Dulles had two long conferences today with Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan...and is having a "working dinner" with him tonight. The morning session lasted two hours and 25 minutes..so long that the Russian was five minutes late getting to Capitol Hill for a luncheon with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. All that was said officially of the morning session was that there was an exchange of views on questions of mutual interest. No meeting had been scheduled for the afternoon, but a conference for 4 o'clock was arranged. This afternoon conference lasted a little more than an hour. And again neither side would say anything specific. All Mikoyan would say was that the exchange of views would be resumed at dinner tonight. Senators who attended the luncheon say Mikoyan still favors the creation of a neutral zone in Middle Europe, with each side pulling its troops back 500 miles from the Elbe. He is described as identifying Chancellor Adenauer as the chief stumbling block in solving the crisis over Berlin. He again promised free access to Berlin for the West.

The United States has sent Russia a note...saying that we will not resume talks in Geneva on prevention of surprise attack until a set of ground rules have been established for the conference. The talks were suspended last month...when Russia and the Western powers could not agree on what should be discussed. The American note is in response to a Russian proposal that the conference be resumed at once.

Today the French National Assembly...as expected...gave a vote of confidence to the new government. The DeGaulle program was approved, 453 to 56.

In Cairo today, Britain and the United Arab Republic settled their financial differences...arising from the Anglo-French invasion of 1956. The text of the agreement has not been released. Formal signing is expected in a few days. But reportedly, Britain agreed to release Egyptian funds held in British banks. And in return, the U.A.R. will pay compensation for the British firms taken over by the Egyptian government.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold reported today on his recent trip to the Middle East. Conditions in that part of the world, he said, are "much more favorable" than they were last fall. He said this was particularly true of the relationship between the various Arab states. He confirmed that Israel and Syria have agreed on a series of steps aimed at preventing future border strife. One of the measures agreed on calls for a clearer marking of the frontier.

The provisional government of Cuba announces that it has accepted Philip Bonsal as the new United States ambassador. Bonsal is now serving as ambassador to Bolivia. In Havana today, police broke up a mob that wanted to lynch a war crimes suspect held in police headquarters. President Urrutia has assured the International Red Cross that his government intends to observe the Geneva conventions regarding military prisoners. He also said in a speech that Cuba will exercise its full sovereignty. All trade traaties existing between Cuba and other countries will be revised.

The Defense budget, when it goes to Congress next Monday will carry the endorsement of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It follows that all officers serving under them must support it before the Congressional Committees. That is, neither the Joint Chiefs nor their subordinates will ask for more money for pet projects.

Only a few months ago, a good many Defense officials spoke out about their fears for United States security because not enough was being spent on satellites, missiles, planes, atomic naval vessels and highly mobile land forces armed with nuclear weapons - just to name some of the categories. In the end the Joint Chiefs recognized the President's responsibility for national policy as a whole, and bowed to him and Budget Director Stans. That is to say, they are prepared to testify that the military budget is enough to assure security. Since the Joint Chiefs believe it - and it would be unfair to think they don't - they will not perjure themselves in so testifying. But if they happened not to believe it, and said so, they would be insubordinate to the Commander-in-Chief. The same is true for all Pentagon witnesses. Their testimony must be kept between perjury and insubordination. Certainly some of the witnesses will not believe that specific appropriations are sufficient. But Mr. Stans has sent out secret and written instructions on how to testify. He says bluntly: "Executive Branch personnel are expected to support the President in his budget recommendations. Witnesses will carefully avoid volunteering views differing from the budget, either on the record or off the record."

A witness when asked a direct question by a Congressional Committee has to answer, as Mr. Stans points out. But he give witnesses a narrow path to follow. If he feels he must set forth a personal view inconsistent with the budget, Mr. Stans states that "he should point out that President Eisenhower's decision was reached from his over-all perspective as head of the Government and in the light of over-riding national policy. The witness," Mr. Stans directs, "should make it clear that his personal comments are not to be construed as a request for additional funds."

What is new in Mr. Stan's instructions is chiefly that he has written them. The same rules have applied before. Officers and Department Heads were not allowed to criticise the budget or go over the heads of their superiors in testifying. But the orders, largely because they were written and sent out secretly, have annoyed Congressmen. Representative Daniel Flood, a member of the House sub-committee on Appropriations, called them a shocking attempt to impose a gag rule and an affront to Congressional dignity. Chairman Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee asked: "How are we going to act intelligently on a budget when witnesses who were the experts on preparing it are under restraint when we ask for details? How are we going to know if the amounts are too much or too little, if the witnesses must stick to these amounts?"

Since all direct questions have to be answered, a complete gag is impossible. Committees only need to know how to phrase the right questions.

A witness, who has been invited to defend the budget figure for a given item, can be asked what sum he had originally sought for the same purpose. If the sum was larger, he can be asked to explain why he sought it. And then he can be asked what had happened to change his mind to the point of defending the smaller sum. At this juncture the witness can take cover under the Stans formula, refer to the President's overall responsibility and the overriding national interests, and explain that nothing he is saying is to be construed as a request for more money. In this way both perjury and insubordination can be by-passed. The Committee will have learned what it needed to know, and it can make up its own mind on the proper relationship between national security and the revenue available.

The budget will reach the House Appropriations Committee early next week, and Mr. Stans and Secretary of the Treasury Anderson will be among the first witnesses in closed sessions. Mr. Stans is sure to be asked about his written rules for witnesses.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: President Eisenhower pointed out in his State of the Union message that Congress controls the purse. Congress would have government officials state frankly what they believe to be their requirements. It must make the final judgement. And as John Locke observed, "He that judges without informing himself to the utmost cannot acquit himself of judging amiss."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 19, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a balanced budget...calling for expenditure of 77-billion, 30-million dollars, in the next fiscal year beginning July first. / This is nearly 4-billion dollars less than is being spent in the current fiscal year. / But the savings are to be achieved, for the most part, in domestic programs...not in the area of defense. / Defense spending this year is expected to total around 40-billion, 800-million dollars. / The new budget calls for an additional 145-million dollars, with the accent on missiles. / Foreign aid spending would be cut by 383-million dollars. / But the reductions...by and large...would be in military assistance, not in the economic aid programs. / Mr. Eisenhower expects federal income next year to be up about 9-billion dollars.

→

Part of this increased income will come from a higher ~~mmm~~ federal tax on gasoline. Postal rates also are to be raised.

President Eisenhower has appealed directly to the American people for support of his budget. He recorded a statement...for use on radio and television...saying that if the government does not live within its means, every American will suffer because of inflation. "Inflation," he warned, "means rising costs to every housewife, a falling value to every pay ~~mmmm~~ envelope...and a threat to the prosperous functioning of our economy." Mr. Eisenhower said his budget provides for "a strong and adequate national defense program."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson says that Congress will examine the President's budget "line by line and comma by comma." "It seems to me," he says, "that the philosophy of this budget misses the point. It is based on the assumption that there is some magic figure into which it should be forced like putting a man into a straight jacket." Johnson then goes on ~~to say that the test of a budget is whether it serves the needs of the American people." That is the test, he says, which the Democratic-controlled Congress will apply. Chairman Cannon of the House~~

→

The "massive resistance" laws of Virginia against public school integration were struck down today in both federal and state courts. In a 5-to-2 decision, the Virginia Supreme Court ruled invalid the state law that automatically closes a school when it is integrated and then cuts it off from state funds. The majority opinion rejected the argument that when the United States Supreme Court knocked out the segregation section of the Virginia Constitution, it also invalidated the section requiring the state to provide a system of public schools. The Virginia court found no constitutional objection to the payment of tuition grants for helping with the education of children in private schools. But these grants, it said, must come out of funds "properly" available for that purpose. The state comptroller cannot be compelled to pay tuition grants from funds "improperly" withheld from other localities. The ruling by a three-judge Federal Court in Norfolk was unanimous. Virginia, it said, cannot close some of its schools because of integration and...at the same time...keep other public schools open on a segregated basis. It said any "evasive scheme" to get around the Supreme Court order barring public school ~~integration~~ segregation is unconstitutional. The Federal Court called the enforced absence of 13-thousand Virginia students from their public schools "tragic"...but it did not order the schools reopened. The court will meet again next Friday and enter a decree. Nine public schools have been closed in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Front Royal under the state's "massive resistance" program. Ten thousand of the 13-thousand students who have been unable to attend public secondary schools are in Norfolk. Many of them have been attending ~~make-shift~~ private tutoring classes. Governor Almond said this afternoon...after learning of the action taken by the courts...that he would study the opinions and then name a special legislative commission to work out a new anti-integration program. Governor Almond said he had faith in the "ability and judgment" of the state supreme court.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan today concluded his Washington talks by conferring at the Commerce and State Departments on the subject of trade. Mikoyan wants more trade between the United States and Russia with a relaxation of controls on the export to Russia of strategic goods. His observation...on coming out of the State Department conference...was that the "cold war" in that department continues. A State Department spokesman immediately called this a "fatuous allegation"..."particularly when it comes at the close of a tour on which this man has been very cordially received." At a National Press Club luncheon, Mikoyan said he has the impression that people in America want peace "above everything else." But the policies of the United States, he said, "remain in the old Cold War position." He said, "We all realize that the Cold War could be a prelude to a hot war." Mikoyan was asked in the question period what would happen if the United States used force to supply West Berlin. He said, "Force meets with force."

In Geneva, the West made a major concession today in its talks with Russia on a possible agreement to end nuclear weapons tests. The United States and Britain offered to isolate the question of halting nuclear tests from the broader issue of disarmament. No formal reaction yet from the Soviet side.

Reports from Havana tonight say that revolutionary leader Fidel Castro is ill with pneumonia. The provisional government has invited 10 members of Congress to attend a mass rally [redacted] scheduled for Wednesday. Most of the [redacted] senators and representatives have declined.

Edward R. Murrow: January 19, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

A nation, like a person, can be known and evaluated to some extent by what it spends its money for. And President Eisenhower's budget gives a picture of the United States that probably is truer than the things many Americans believe about themselves. The budget reveals a much greater preoccupation with national survival, than many people let themselves realize. They may know that present-day defense eats up fifty-nine-and-a-half cents of every revenue dollar. But that is only part of the story. Another seven cents goes to veterans, and ten-and-a-half cents pays the interest on the Federal debt. Since almost all of this debt is due to past wars, we are spending nearly seventy-seven cents of every revenue dollar, on our present and past security.

If one looks back on earlier budgets this figure is not only huge in itself, but huge in proportion to the other costs of government. The interest on the debt alone - that is, the cost of past wars - is nearly two-thirds of the total cost of government before World War II, even taking into account that the dollar has shrunk in value by half. And the prevention of future wars is more than twice as costly, as the supposedly extravagant annual cost of the "New Deal."

One sees how overwhelming the demands have come to be for survival, by listing where the rest of the revenue dollar goes - the remaining twenty-three cents. The largest slice - eight cents - goes for farm price supports and other agricultural programs. That is our number two consideration after security. Next in size is the five-cent slice for health, education, welfare and relief. In safer times this would loom much larger in the budget.

Then comes a three-cent slice for international affairs and finance. This is a somewhat puzzling item. One might think that a nation which spends seventy-seven cents of every dollar in one way or another for survival would spend more on foreign aid and foreign relations in general.

The rest of the dollar is divided - three cents on commerce and housing, two cents on water, power and other resources, and finally two cents for general governmental costs. This item might surprise those who think that the extravagant cost of government is chiefly responsible for high taxes.

The lopsidedness of this budget is not what will make the most news about it. Nobody is expected to attack it for spending too much on defense. On the contrary there will be a stiff fight between Congress and the Administration over spending more on missiles and space exploration, with the White House insisting that security is adequately provided for in the budget. There will be no revolt against Federal under-spending on education, health and public welfare. No revolt over the relatively small share of the dollar going to international aid and foreign affairs is looked for. If anything the effort will be to cut down foreign aid in the name of economy.

The feature of the budget which President Eisenhower cares most about is that it balances. To bring this about he has trimmed from all spending other than defense, and has proposed tax increases of one billion, three hundred million dollars. These are not what is called general taxes, but they will hit a wide section of the public. The largest tax increase does not show in the budget. It is a proposed boost in the gasoline tax ~~from three to four-and-a-half cents~~ of 1½ cents a gallon. This is to keep the highway construction trust fund in balance and will cost auto users nine hundred million a year. Another gasoline tax will hit all users of airplanes. It increases the present aviation gasoline tax from two to four-and-a-half cents, and levies a four-and-a-half cent tax on jet fuel. This will be reflected in increased cost of air travel. Other proposed ways to increase tax revenue are an increase in postal rates, higher levies on farm and consumer co-operatives and on insurance companies.

Congress has its own ideas on spending for urban renewal, housing, airport construction, depressed areas and unemployment insurance. The President has included all these items in his budget, but in no case has he recommended spending what Congress has shown that it wants.

That gives a broad front for the conflict between Congress and the White House. And news in the next months will concern the possibility of unbalancing the budget, through higher spending on missiles, housing, urban renewal and other social objectives. It is safe to predict that little will be attempted or said about cutting down the high cost of national survival, which is the key problem. That seems to have become an accepted fact of modern life.

Back in a moment -

George Bryan -

Word for Today

Congress has a new budget of 77-billion dollars...and already there is debate whether it is big enough to do the job. The President warns against increased spending. He would agree with Douglas Abbott that the budget is and must be "the balance wheel of the economy." Critics of the budget might quote H.G. Wells, who said, "Nothing is dear, if it is good."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a balanced budget...calling for expenditure of 77-billion, 30-million dollars in the next fiscal year beginning July first. This is nearly 4-billion dollars less than is being spent in the current fiscal year. But the savings are to be achieved for the most part in domestic programs...not in the area of defense. Defense spending this year is expected to total around 40-billion, 800-million dollars. The new budget calls for an additional 145-million dollars with the accent on missiles. Foreign aid spending would be cut by 383-million dollars. But the reductions...by and large...would be in military assistance, not in the economic aid programs. Mr. Eisenhower expects federal income next year to be up about 9-billion dollars. Part of this increased income will come from a higher federal tax on gasoline. Postal rates also are to be raised.

President Eisenhower has appealed directly to the American people for support of his budget. He recorded a statement...for use on radio and television...saying that if the government does not live within its means, every American will suffer because of inflation. "Inflation," he warned, "means rising costs to every housewife, a falling value to every pay envelope...and a threat to the prosperous functioning of our ecenomy." Mr. Eisenhower said his budget provides for "a strong and adequate national defense program."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson says that Congress will examine the President's budget "line by line and comma by comma." "It seems to me," he says, "that the philosophy of this budget misses the point. It is based on the assumption that there is some magic figure into which it should be forced like putting a man into a straight jacket."

The "massive resistance" laws of Virginia against public school integration were struck down today in both federal and state courts. In a 5-to-2 decision, the Virginia Supreme Court ruled invalid the state law that automatically closes a school when it is integrated and then cuts it off from state funds. The majority opinion rejected the argument that when the United States Supreme Court knocked out the segregation section of the Virginia Constitition, it also invalidated the section requiring the state to provide a system of public schools. The Virginia court found no constitutional objection to the payment of tuition grants for helping with the education of children in private schools. But these grants, it said, must come out of funds "properly" available for that purpose. The state comptroller cannot be compelled to pay tuition grants from funds "improperly" withheld from other localities. The ruling by a three-judge Federal Court in Norfolk was unanimous. Virginia, it said, cannot close some of its schools because of integration and...at the same time...keep other public schools open on a segregated basis. It said any "evasive scheme" to get around the Supreme Court order barring public school segregation is unconstitutional. The Federal Court called the enforced absence of 13-thousand Virginia students from their pubiic schools "tragic"...but it did not order the schools reopened. The court will meet again next Friday and enter a decree. Governor Almond said he had faith in the "ability and judgment" of the state supreme court.

Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan today concluded his Washington talks by conferring at the Commerce and State Departments on the subject of trade. Mikoyan wants more trade between the United States and Russia with a relaxation of controls on the export to Russia of strategic goods. His observation...on coming out of the State Department conference...was that the "cold war" in that department continues. A State Department spokesman immediately called this a "fatuous allegation"..."particularly when it comes at the close of a tour on which this man has been very cordially received." At a National Press Club luncheon, Mikoyan said he has the impression that people in America want peace "above everything else." But the policies of the United States, he said, "remain in the old Cold war position." He said, "We all realize that the Cold War could be a prelude to a hot war." Mikoyan was asked in the question period what would happen if the United States used force to supply West Berlin. He said, "Force meets with force."

In Geneva, the West made a major concession today in its talks with Russia on a possible agreement to end nuclear weapons tests. The United States and Britain offered to isolate the question of halting nuclear tests from the broader issue of disarmament. No formal reaction yet from the Soviet side.

Reports from Havana tonight say that revolutionary leader Fidel Castro is ill with pneumonia. The provisional government has invited 10 members of Congress to attend a mass rally scheduled for Wednesday. Most of the senators and representatives have declined.

A nation, like a person, can be known and evaluated to some extent by what it spends its money for. And President Eisenhower's budget gives a picture of the United States that probably is truer than the things many Americans believe about themselves. The budget reveals a much greater preoccupation with national survival, than many people let themselves realize. They may know that present-day defense eats up fifty-nine-and-a-half cents of every revenue dollar. But that is only part of the story. Another seven cents goes to veterans, and ten-and-a-half cents pays the interest on the Federal debt. Since almost all of this debt is due to past wars, we are spending nearly seventy-seven cents of every revenue dollar, on our present and past security.

One sees how overwhelming the demands have come to be for survival, by listing where the rest of the revenue dollar goes - the remaining twenty-three cents. The largest slice - eight cents - goes for farm price supports and other agricultural programs. That is our number two consideration after security.

Next in size is the five-cent slice for health, education, welfare and relief. In safer times this would loom much larger in the budget.

Then comes a three-cent slice for international affairs and finance. This is a somewhat puzzling item. One might think that a nation which spends seventy-seven cents of every dollar in one way or another for survival would spend more on foreign aid and foreign relations in general.

The rest of the dollar is divided - three cents on commerce and housing, two cents on water, power and other resources, and finally two cents for general governmental costs. This item might surprise those who think that the extravagant cost of government is chiefly responsible for high taxes.

The lopsidedness of this budget is not what will make the most news about it. Nobody is expected to attack it for spending too much on defense. On the contrary there will be a stiff fight between Congress and the Administration over spending more on missiles and space exploration, with the White House insisting that security is adequately provided for in the budget.

The feature of the budget which President Eisenhower cares most about is that it balances. To bring this about he has trimmed from all spending' other than defense, and has proposed tax increases of one billion, three hundred million dollars. These are not what is called general taxes, but they will hit a wide section of the public. The largest tax increase does not show in the budget. It is a proposed boost in the gasoline tax of 1½ cents a gallon. This is to keep the highway construction trust fund in balance and will cost auto users nine hundred million a year. Another gasoline tax will hit all users of airplanes. It increases the present aviation gasoline tax from two to four-and-a-half cents, and levies a four-and-a-half cent tax on jet fuel. This will be reflected in increased cost of air travel. Other proposed ways to increase tax revenue are an increase in postal rates, higher levies on farm and consumer co-operatives and on insurance companies.

Congress has its own ideas on spending for urban renewal, housing, airport construction, depressed areas and unemployment insurance. The President has included all these items in his budget, but in no case has he recommended spending what Congress has shown that it wants.

That gives a broad front for the conflict between Congress and the White House. And news in the next months will concern the possibility of unbalancing the budget, through higher spending on missiles, housing, urban renewal and other social objectives. It is safe to predict that little will be attempted or said about cutting down the high cost of national survival, which is the key problem. That seems to have become an accepted fact of modern life.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Congress has a new budget of 77-billion dollars...and already there is debate whether it is big enough to do the job. The President warns against increased spending. He would agree with Douglas Abbott that the budget is and must be "the balance wheel of the economy." Critics of the budget might quote H.G. Wells, who said, "Nothing is dear, if it is good."

Goodnight and good luck."

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 20, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower's new budget came under heavy fire today from the Senate floor. / Democratic Leader Johnson called it "a propaganda budget." / He said, "The people were led to believe, that the budget would be balanced out of current income. That is not done. / The people were led to believe that the budget would open the way to tax cuts. That is not true." / Johnson charged, that the proposed increase in the federal gasoline tax was...actually...a sales tax and that, if approved, it would lead to a sales tax, on more and more essential items. / Senator Kuchel of California, the new Republican whip, said he resented the charge, that the American people had been misled. / Johnson, he said, should apologize to the President. The majority leader said he was not referring to Mr. Eisenhower personally. He would hate to see the day, he said, when the President's budget could not be criticized.

→

Hearings on the budget opened today before the House Appropriations Committee. The first witnesses were Secretary of the Treasury Anderson and the director of the budget, Maurice Stans. After hearing their testimony, Chairman Cannon said there seemed to be "no immediate hope that government spending will not continue to rise."

Tonight, the Democratic Advisory Council issued a statement...describing the budget as a combination of "deception, denial and defeat." The council notes the lack of any new education program and what it calls "the low or starvation level" of economic aid.

Secretary of Defense McElroy testified today before the Senate Armed Services Committee. So did General Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Chairman Russell thought they painted too "rosy" a picture... although they offered considerable classified material to support their view. Their view was that United States forces are adequate to cope with either a limited or a general war. "We are confident," McElroy said, "that we are able to discourage any nation from attacking, if that nation has any good judgment at all." He added that any attacking country would be destroyed.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his annual report on the nation's economy. There is reason for confidence, he said, that the recent improvement in business activity "will be extended into the months ahead." Today...incidentally...marked the start of Mr. Eisenhower's seventh year in office.

New civil rights legislation has been introduced in the Senate by Democratic Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson. A rival civil rights measure has yet to be submitted by the Administration. Johnson introduced HIS BILL IN FOUR PARTS. One would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission until February, 1961. (It is now scheduled to go out of business next September). Another would make the inter-state transportation of explosive material, for bombings, a federal offense. And a third PROVISION gives the attorney general subpoena power, in cases dealing with the alleged violation of voting rights. The fourth PROPOSAL ... MADE BY Senator Johnson...would create a new independent federal agency, which would act as a conciliation service in helping to resolve civil rights disputes.

→

Johnson calls his four-point program a "modest" step in the right direction. The civil rights issue, he says, cannot be resolved by force or all at once.

Democratic Senator Kennedy also stole a march on the Administration... submitting a labor bill he said would virtually put Teamster President James Hoffa out of business. The measure would require a secret ballot for the selection of convention delegates as well as for the election of all union officers. Union finances would have to be fully disclosed. And any person convicted of a serious crime would be barred from union office.

Our ambassador to Moscow...Llewllyn Thompson...warned today that Russia is expanding its agriculture and industry at a faster rate than the United States. Thompson said this in testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The chairman of the committee...Senator Green...said he got the impression that Russia could surpass the United States in its economic development "unless we adopt bold imaginative policies for the management of our own economy and for the economic development of other free countries."

Deputy Premier Mikoyan is flying back to Moscow after an American visit of more than two weeks. Just before he took off, Mikoyan received a telegram from Secretary of State Dulles...asking him to express to the Russian people the "sincere desire" for friendship felt by the people of the United States. The telegram said, "We hope you can report to Premier Khrushchev that you have gained an understanding of the attitudes of our people---not only of the desire for peace---but also of their unswerving belief in the right of people to determine their own form of government." The message also voiced hope that the Russian...during his visit...had observed the progress made by Americans under the capitalistic system. ~~And it called for "more visits and exchanges" for the promotion of understanding. Dulles said he was sending the telegram on behalf of President Eisenhower and the other officials with whom Mikoyan conferred while he was in Washington.~~

President Frondizi of Argentina arrived in Washington today for a state visit. Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles met him at the airport. In Argentina, the general strike called by the Peronist and Communist-dominated unions is reported on the verge of collapse.

Edward R. Murrow: January 20, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

It seems that nothing is less predictable than the public reaction to a notable foreign visitor. It can change as suddenly as the weather. Mr. Mikoyan is a case in point. Three days ago his American success was a sensation. To begin with, he was the most important Soviet visitor ever to have come here. He saw more of the country and met more Americans of every kind than had any Russian in history. He used every medium of public communications with complete self-possession. He set out to be friendly and frank. Some of the business men he met - and he met hundreds across the country - began thinking they could do business with this man. Americans don't like the cold war, and only regretfully believe it is necessary. After seeing or reading about Mikoyan many of them began to doubt that the cold war is necessary. His success was remarkable because he wasn't departing from the straight Soviet line in anything he said for publication.

But by the time he left Washington today, the public reaction was different. Not that the visit had soured. Yet somehow it began to be realized that Mr. Mikoyan hadn't come to show us that an acceptable settlement of the Berlin problem is within reach. He had come to make Soviet policy more attractive to Americans. He wasn't going to budge; he wanted us to budge. And after all his smiles, good gestures and delighted examination of things American he hadn't budged an inch.

He hadn't budged in his quotable statements, nor in his secret conferences with American officials. He took utmost care not to do so. And American officials took the same care in what they said to him. No one will be able to accuse either side of having given anything away behind closed doors.

But if the reaction to Mr. Mikoyan was more realistic at the end, that is not to say that his visit has done nothing to loosen up the "freeze" between us. The words that passed between him and the American leaders did not open any doors. But between words there can be chinks indicating that a high level meeting on the German question should be possible before the fateful twenty-first of May. And this meeting can deal with an idea re-affirmed by Secretary Dulles in his news conference last week. This was that the Soviet Union is entitled to a guarantee against a revived Germany. He made it clear that the United States would join in such a guarantee. So it is in this area that new talks might be fruitful. It is quite likely that the preliminary search for counter-proposals by the Western allies covers this field.

The small part that increased trade with the Soviet Union has played in the talks seems to have annoyed Mr. Mikoyan, who after all is Russia's number one trade boss. He called our trade policy a cold war policy - this is only partly true. The trade is kept small by both sides. In addition to our strategic goods, we have not placed on the open list most of the things Russia wants to buy.

But even if all these restrictions were removed, the two countries could not "trade their way into good relations". The possible volume of trade would still be too small. The Communist trade with the non-Communist countries is only three percent of total world trade. To build this up to anything approaching the inter-state trade inside the free world would be impossible. At best a small beginning could be made, and it could not much affect relations for a long time. Even that beginning lies some way ahead. There must be negotiations over existing restrictions. Before Khrushchev can get long-term credit to buy American machinery and goods, as he has asked, an understanding must be reached about the Czarist debt, which the Kremlin has repudiated. The Johnson Act forbids long-term credit to governments in default. And before trade concessions will be in order, the Kremlin would have to improve its offer to settle the Lend-Lease debt. We are ready to take eight hundred million dollars, the Soviets have only offered three hundred.

Here is a case where trade is not a short cut to good relations. There is only one road, the thorny and tedious way of political settlement. The Mikoyan visit has not brought this in sight. But beyond the horizon it may have been brought a little nearer.

Back in a moment.-

George Bryan -

Word for Today

Mikoyan's visit...in its final hours...became a trifle chilly.

He accused the State Department of continuing the Cold War. And the department accused him of making a "fatuous" remark. Of course...as a Communist... Mikoyan was simply running true to form. Santayana expressed it well. "You can't have Falstaff," he said, "and have him thin."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower's new budget came under heavy fire today from the Senate floor. Democratic Leader Johnson called it "a propaganda budget." He said, "The people were led to believe that the budget would be balanced out of current income. That is not done. The people were led to believe that the budget would open the way to tax cuts. That is not true." Johnson charged that the proposed increase in the federal gasoline tax was...actually...a sales tax and that, if approved, it would lead to a sales tax on more and more essential items. Senator Kuchel of California, the new Republican whip, said he resented the charge that the American people had been misled. Johnson, he said, should apologize to the President. The majority leader said he was not referring to Mr. Eisenhower personally. He would hate to see the day, he said, when the President's budget could not be criticized.

Hearings on the budget opened today before the House Appropriations Committee. The first witnesses were Secretary of the Treasury Anderson and the director of the budget, Maurice Stans. After hearing their testimony, Chairman Cannon said there seemed to be "no immediate hope that government spending will not continue to rise."

Tonight, the Democratic Advisory Council issued a statement...describing the budget as a combination of "deception, denial and defeat." The council notes the lack of any new education program and what it calls "the low or starvation level" of economic aid.

Secretary of Defense McElroy testified today before the Senate Armed Services Committee. So did General Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Chairman Russell thought they painted too "rosy" a picture...although they offered considerable classified material to support their view.

Their view was that United States forces are adequate to cope with either a limited or a general war. "We are confident," McElroy said, "that we are able to discourage any nation from attacking, if that nation has any good judgment at all." He added that any attacking country would be destroyed.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his annual report on the nation's economy. There is reason for confidence, he said, that the recent improvement in business activity "will be extended into the months ahead." Today... incidentally....marked the start of Mr. Eisenhower's seventh year in office.

New civil rights legislation has been introduced in the Senate by Democratic Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson. A rival civil rights measure has yet to be submitted by the Administration. Johnson introduced his bill in four parts. One would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission until February, 1961. (It is now scheduled to go out of business next September.) Another would make the inter-state transportation of explosive material for bombings a federal offense. And a third provision gives the attorney general subpoena power in cases dealing with the alleged violation of voting rights. The fourth proposal... made by Senator Johnson...would create a new independent federal agency, which would act as a conciliation service in helping to resolve civil rights disputes. Johnson calls his four-point program a "modest" step in the right direction. The civil rights issue, he says, cannot be resolved by force or all at once.

Democratic Senator Kennedy also stole a march on the Administration... submitting a labor bill he said would virtually put Teamster President James Hoffa out of business. The measure would require a secret ballot for the selection of convention delegates as well as for the election of all union officers. Union finances would have to be fully disclosed. And any person convicted of a serious crime would be barred from union office.

Our ambassador to Moscow...Llewllyn Thompson...warned today that Russia is expanding its agriculture and industry at a faster rate than the United States.

Thompson said this in testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The chairman of the committee...Senator Green...said he got the impression that Russia could surpass the United States in its economic development "unless we we adopt bold imaginative policies for the management of our own economy and for the economic development of other free countries."

Deputy Premier Mikoyan is flying back to Moscow after an American visit of more than two weeks. Just before he took off, Mikoyan received a telegram from Secretary of State Dulles...asking him to express to the Russian people the "sincere desire" for friendship felt by the people of the United States. The telegram said, "We hope you can report to Premier Khrushchev that you have gained an understanding of the attitudes of our people---not only of the desire for peace---but also of their unswerving belief in the right of people to determine their own form of government." The message also voiced hope that the Russian...during his visit...had observed the progress made by Americans under the capitalistic system.

President Frondizi of Argentina arrived in Washington today for a state visit. Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles met him at the airport, In Argentina, the general strike called by the Peronist and Communist-dominated unions is reported on the verge of collapse.

It seems that nothing is less predictable than the public reaction to a notable foreign visitor. It can change as suddenly as the weather. Mr. Mikoyan is a case in point. Three days ago his American success was a sensation. To begin with, he was the most important Soviet visitor ever to have come here. He saw more of the country and met more Americans of every kind than had any Russian in history. He used every medium of public communications with complete self-possession. He set out to be friendly and frank. Some of the business men he met - and he met hundreds across the country - began thinking they could do business with this man. Americans don't like the cold war, and only regretfully believe it is necessary. After seeing or reading about Mikoyan many of them began to doubt that the cold war is necessary. His success was remarkable because he wasn't departing from the straight Soviet line in anything he said for publication.

But by the time he left Washington today, the public reagtion was different. Not that the visit had soured. Yet somehow it began to be realized that Mr. Mikoyan hadn't come to show us that an acceptable settlement of the Berlin problem is within reach. He had come to make Soviet policy more attractive to Americans. He wasn't going to budge; he wanted us to budge. And after all his smiles, good gestures and delighted examination of things American he hadn't budged an inch.

He hadn't budged in his quotable statements, nor in his secret conferences with American officials. He took utmost care not to do so. And American officals took the same care in what they said to him. No one will be able to accuse either side of having given anything away behind closed doors.

But if the reaction to Mr. Mikoyan was more realistic at the end, that is not to say that his visit has done nothing to loosen up the "freeze" between us. The words that passed between him and the American leaders did not open any doors. But between words there can be chinks indicating that a high level meeting on the German question should be possible before the fateful twenty-first of May. And this meeting can deal with an idea re-affirmed by Secretary Dulles in his news conference last week. This was that the Soviet Union is entitled to a guarantee against a revived Germany. He made it clear that the United States would join in such a guarantee. So it is in this area that new talks might be fruitful. It is quite likely that the preliminary search for counter-proposals by the Western allies covers this field.

The small part that increased trade with the Soviet Union has played in the talks seems to have annoyed Mr. Mikoyan, who after all is Russia's number one trade boss. He called our trade policy a cold war policy - this is only partly true. The trade is kept small by both sides. In addition to our strategic goods, we have not placed on the open list most of the things Russia wants to buy.

But even if all these restrictions were removed, the two countries could not "trade their way into good relations." The possible volume of trade would still be too small. The Communist trade with non-Communist countries is only three percent of total world trade. To build this up to anything approaching the inter-state trade inside the free world would be impossible. At best a small beginning could be made, and it could not much affect relations for a long time. Even that beginning lies some way ahead. There must be negotiations over existing restrictions. Before Khrushchev can get long-term credit to buy American machinery and goods, as he has asked, an understanding must be reached about the Czarist debt, which the Kremlin has repudiated. The Johnson Act forbids long-term credit to governments in default. And before trade concessions will be in order the Kremlin would have to improve its offer to settle the Lend-Lease debt. We are ready to take eight hundred million dollars, the Soviets have only offered three hundred.

Here is a case where trade is not a short cut to good relations. There is only one road, the thorny and tedious way of political settlement. The Mikoyan visit has not brought this in sight. But beyond the horizon it may have been brought a little nearer.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Mikoyan's visit...in its final hours...became a trifle chilly. He accused the State Department of continuing the Cold War. And the department accused him of making a "fatuous" remark. Of course...as a Communist...Mikoyan was simply running true to form. Santayana expressed it well. "You can't have Falstaff," he said, "and have him thin."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 21, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that the Democrats who criticize his budget are suffering from "budgetry schizophrenia". Schizophrenia is the medical term for split personality. Mr. Eisenhower said that while some Democrats complain that his budget is too big, others are calling it too small. He warned again of the danger of inflation. Mr. Eisenhower said he was in favor of repealing the Twenty-Second Amendment. This is the constitutional amendment...prohibiting any President from serving more than two terms. Mr. Eisenhower doubted that the creation of a new federal agency to conciliate civil rights disputes would be "fruitful" at this time. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson has introduced a civil rights bill calling for the establishment of such an agency. (I should like to discuss the President's news conference further in a few minutes).

→

The Little Rock school board today requested permission to reopen the closed high schools in Little Rock on a segregated basis. The board filed its request in the United States District Court which...on January 10...had ordered it to report what it was doing about integration within 30 days. Today the school board, in effect, asked for more time. It promised to come up with a program for operating the schools in accordance with the United States Supreme Court decision not later than the fifteenth of August. Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the plan to reopen the schools on a segregated basis would definitely be opposed. "The Supreme Court," he said, "already has decided that such action is illegal." Governor Faubus said he would be glad to discuss reopening of the schools under the proposal of the school board.

Today...in Atlanta, Georgia...Negroes began implementing a recent court order and sat wherever they pleased on city buses. There was no ~~disorder.~~ INCIDENT.

In Congress today, Senator Goldwater of Arizona was elected chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee. Goldwater was opposed by Republican liberals who felt that the action might hurt the party in 1960.

In Des Moines, the Republican committee charged with choosing a site for the 1960 national convention decided today to defer a decision for at least a month. The committee also decided not to eliminate any of the six cities bidding for the convention at this time. The Democratic site committee already has chosen Los Angeles, subject to approval by the National Committee. The Republican national chairman, Meade Alcorn, says that President Eisenhower has approved a plan for putting the Republican Party on a year-around campaign basis. Alcorn described the program as "tremendously expensive"...and said it will be financed by monthly or quarterly payments by "contributors".

The Administration housing bill was introduced today in the Senate. The measure provides for a gradual increase in the state and local share of the housing program...especially in urban renewal. In the House, the Democrats have submitted a housing bill that goes far beyond the recommendations of President Eisenhower. The conflicting measures may provide the first test of the President's economy drive.

The United States may set off some underground nuclear explosions next year to test their peaceful application. This was announced today by Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission...who said the United States is under "no injunction" to refrain from such testing. But first, he said, he would like the matter to be spelled out by the Geneva conference on nuclear weapons tests.

President Frondizi...of Argentina...today addressed a joint session of Congress...and warned that the United States cannot remain indifferent to the poverty existing in many parts of Latin America. "A stagnant and impoverished country," he said, "cannot uphold democratic institutions. It is fertile soil for anarchy and dictatorship." He predicted that the success or failure of his anti-inflation program in Argentina would "influence decisively the policies of the hemisphere."

Today...in Havana...half a million Cubans attended an outdoor rally in support of Fidel Castro and the policies of his provisional government. Castro told the crowd that Batista was the "Hitler of Cuba." And Cuba, he said, is trying to extradite Batista from the Dominican Republic so that he may face trial. Castro estimated the crowd at one million. "The million who are here," he said, "can see that all Cuba backs revolutionary justice." (An indirect promise that the "war crimes" trials and [redacted] executions will [redacted] continue. And when he spoke, his words were drowned out shouts of approval). Castro said that the "onerous" concessions given foreign enterprises by the Batista government will be "revised and nullified". He said, "Cuba wants not only [redacted] to be free politically but economically as well." [redacted] Public trials will get under way tomorrow.

Edward R. Murrow: January 21, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The Mikoyan visit naturally loomed large in the President's news conference today, though he had no fresh information to contribute. He found the Soviet visitor to be able, quick, extremely intelligent - and a consistent upholder of Marxist doctrine, as interpreted by Lenin. / He thought that Mr. Mikoyan may have had two motives in coming, one to find out if the men in government in Washington use the same language about foreign affairs, as diplomats in the field. / He found that they did.

The other motive may have been to show that business and professional circles, and indeed people as whole, disagree with American foreign policy. It was Mr. Mikoyan's exploration of America, which the President thought the more important part of his visit. The official talks, he said, were devoted to a statement of problems by both sides, in an effort to show why positions on these issues had been taken. / But once out in the country, Mr. Mikoyan must have learned that America wants peace, is ready to conciliate, is ready to match reasonableness with reasonableness, and yet simply won't be pushed around. Mr. Eisenhower was sure Mr. Mikoyan had learned that American people believe this, as much as any official in Washington.

Later, the President said that American visitors to Russia come back all testifying that the Russian people want peace as much as we do. "And that to my mind" he remarked, "is the great fact that to all of us has a great hope. The more we have people meeting people, the better is our situation." He made this comment in reply to a question whether he wanted Vice President Nixon to go to Russia. He did not answer with a direct "Yes".

The Virginia school crisis found the President perplexed by Governor Almond's appeal to the people of his state last night to strengthen their resistance to integration. He said he didn't know exactly what the Governor meant. Their own laws allowing discrimination have apparently been declared invalid by their Supreme Court, not to mention the United States Supreme Court. The laws are clear as interpreted by the Courts he said. He was not a lawyer and doesn't know when the Court battle is finished. But it would seem that it comes down to this: "Is the United States citizen, in or out of government, ready to obey the laws of his State ~~Senate~~ and nation."

"That" said the President is the real question we have all got to meet". He called attention to the Federal employees living in Norfolk. ~~Five thousand five hundred of the fifteen thousand children of the closed Norfolk schools are from families of military personnel.~~ Many of the children locked out of school are from families of Military Personnel - He called attention to the fact that the Federal Government has spent in recent years nine hundred million dollars in buildings, and put up forty thousand school rooms, in Federal impacted areas like Norfolk.

Asked if he was implying that he might ask Congress to deny aid to areas resisting integration, he said he was not. But he added that the time might come when the building program in such areas would diminish.

The President asnwered with a good deal of heat the question whether he himself believed in school integration. It was not desirable, he said, for a President to express either approval or disapproval of a Supreme Court decision. His job is to execute the laws. If he says: "I don't like it but I will do it", or "I do like it and will do it", he is laying his enforcement of the law open to suspicion that he is doing his duty well one time and not well another time.

The President was given an opening to answer Senator Lyndon Johnson's attack on his budget as being political. As usual he refrained from naming names, but he was not less effective on that account." The budget has been called political propaganda" he said. "Now, I am not running for anything. If someone is using the budget as a political football, I assure you it is not I." All the newsmen, of course, know that Senator Johnson is a possible candidate for the presidency.

To the question whether he had any particular controls in mind, ~~in~~ if inflation starts getting out of hand, he answered vehemently, that he does not, that he despises controls. / In emergency he explained, people will take controls, and they work well for a period. / But the more controls you have, he said, the more you need. / It was like using morphine. / "Then certainly you don't have a free economy, and that is what I am trying to preserve."

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.

Word for Today

Today...like yesterday...is a time of decision. Whether it be in the realm of international diplomacy or domestic legislation, we can never escape entirely the consequences of what we decide. Longfellow said, "No action, whether fair or foul, is ever done but it leaves somewhere a record written by fingers ghostly as a blessing or a curse."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that the Democrats who criticize his budget are suffering from "budgetary schizophrenia." Schizophrenia is the medical term for split personality. Mr. Eisenhower said that while some Democrats complain that his budget is too big, others are calling it too small. He warned again of the danger of inflation. Mr. Eisenhower said he was in favor of repealing the Twenty-Second Amendment. This is the constitutional amendment...prohibiting any President from serving more than two terms. Mr. Eisenhower doubted that the creation of a new federal agency to conciliate civil rights disputes would be "fruitful" at this time. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson has introduced a civil rights bill calling for the establishment of such an agency. (I should like to discuss the President's news confernnce further in a few minutes.)

The Little Rock school board today requested permission to reopen the closed high schools in Little Rock on a segregated basis. The board filed its request in the United States District Court which...on January 10...had ordered it to report what it was doing about integration within 30 days. Today the school board, in effect, asked for more time. It promised to come up with a program for operating the schools in accordance with the United States Supreme Court decision not later than the fifteenth of August. Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the plan to reopen the schools on a segregated basis would definitely be opposed. "The Supreme Court," he said, "already has decided that such action is illegal." Governor Faubus said he would be glad to discuss reopening of the schools under the proposal of the school board.

Today, in Atlanta, Georgia, Negroes began implementing a recent court order and sat wherever they pleased on city buses. There was no incident.

In Congress today, Senator Goldwater of Arizona was elected chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee. Goldwater was opposed by Republican liberals who felt that the action might hurt the party in 1960.

In Des Moines, the Republican committee charged with choosing a site for the 1960 national convention decided today to defer a decision for at least a month. The committee also decided not to eliminate any of the six cities bidding for the convention at this time. The Democratic site committee already has chosen Los Angeles, subject to approval by the National Committee. The Republican national chairman, Meade Alcorn, says that President Eisenhower has approved a plan for putting the Republican Party on a year-round campaign basis. Alcorn described the program as "tremendously expensive"...and said it will be financed by monthly or quarterly payments by "contributors."

The Administration housing bill was introduced today in the Senate. The measure provides for a gradual increase in the state and local share of the housing program...especially in urban renewal. In the House, the Democrats have submitted a housing bill that goes far beyond the recommendations of President Eisenhower. The conflicting measures may provide the first test of the President's economy drive.

The United States may set off some underground nuclear explosions next year to test their peaceful application. This was announced today by Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission...who said the United States is under "no injunction" to refrain from such testing. But first, he said, he would like the matter to be spelled out by the Geneva conference on nuclear weapons tests.

President Frondizi of Argentina, today addressed a joint session of Congress and warned that the United States cannot remain indifferent to the poverty existing in many parts of Latin America. "A stagnant and impoverished country," he said, "cannot uphold democratic institutions. It is fertile soil for anarchy and dictatorship." He predicted that the success or failure of his anti-inflation program in Argentina would "influence decisively the policies of the hemisphere."

Today...in Havana...half a million Cubans attended an outdoor rally in support of Fidel Castro and the policies of his provisional government. Castro told the crowd that Batista was the "Hitler of Cuba." And Cuba,,he said, is trying to extradite Batista from the Dominican Republic so that he may face trial. Castro estimated the crowd at one million. "The million who are here," he said, "can see that all Cuba backs revolutionary justice." (An indirect promise that the "war crimes" trials and executions will continue. And when he spoke, his words were drowned out shouts of approval.) Castro said that the "onerous" concessions given foreign enterprises by the Batista government will be "revised and nullified." He said, "Cuba wants not only to be free politically but economically as well." Public trials will get under way tomorrow.

The Mikoyan visit naturally loomed large in the President's news conference today, though he had no fresh information to contribute. He found the Soviet visitor to be able, quick, extremely intelligent - and a consistent upholder of Marxist doctrine, as interpreted by Lenin. He thought that Mr. Mikoyan may have had two motives in coming, one to find out if the men in government in Washington use the same language about foreign affairs, as diplomats in the field. He found that they did.

The other motive may have been to show that business and professional circles, and indeed people as whole, disagree with American foreign policy. It was Mr. Mikyyan's exploration of America, which the President thought the more important part of his visit. The official talks, he said, were devoted to a statement of problems by both sides, in an effort to show why positions on these issues had been taken. But once out in the country, Mr. Mikoyan must have learned that America wants peace, is ready to conciliate, is ready to match reasonableness with reasonableness, and yet simply won't be pushed around. Mr. Eisenhower was sure Mr. Mikoyan had learned that American people believe this as much as any official in Washington.

Later, the President said that American visitors to Russia come back all testifying that the Russian people want peace as much as we do. "And that to my mind" he remarked, "is the great fact that to all of us has a great hope. The more we have people meeting people, the better is our situation." He made this comment in reply to a question whether he wanted Vice President Nixon to go to Russia. He did not answer with a direct "Yes."

The Virginia school crisis found the President perplexed by Governor Almond's appeal to the people of his state last night to strengthen their resistance to integration. He said he didn't know exactly what the Governor meant. Their own laws allowing discrimination have apparently been declared invalid by their Supreme Court, not to mention the United States Supreme Court. The laws are clear as interpreted by the Courts he said, He was not a lawyer and doesn't know when the Court battle is finished. But it would seem that it comes down to this: "Is the United States citizen, in or out of government, ready to obey the laws of his state and nation."

"That" said the President "is the real question we have all got to meet." He called attention to the Federal employees living in Norfolk. Many of the children locked out of school are from families of military personnel. He called attention to the fact that the Federal Government has spent in recent years nine hundred million dollars in buildings, and put up forty thousand school rooms, in Federal impacted areas like Norfolk.

Asked if he was implying that he might ask Congress to deny aid to areas resisting integration, he said he was not. But he added that the time might come when the building program in such areas would diminish.

The President answered with a good deal of heat the question whether he himself believed in school integration. It was not desirable, he said, for a President to express either approval or disapproval of a Supreme Court decision.

His job is to execute the laws. If he says: "I don't like it but I will do it" or "I do like it and will do it." he is laying his enforcement of the law open to suspicion that he is doing his duty well one time and not well another time.

The President was given an opening to answer Senator Lyndon Johnson's attack on his budget as being political. As usual he refrained from naming names, but he was not less effective on that account. "The budget has been called political propaganda" he said. "Now, I am not running for anything. If someone is using the budget as a political football, I assure you it is not I." All the newsmen, of course, know that Senator Johnson is a possible candidate for the presidency.

To the question whether he had any particular controls in mind if inflation starts getting out of hand, he answered vehemently that he does not, that he despises controls. In emergency he explained, people will take controls, and they work well for a period. But the more controls you have, he said, the more you need. It was like using morphine. "Then certainly you don't have a free economy, and that is what I am trying to preserve."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Today....like yesterday...is a time of decision. Whether it be in the realm of international diplomacy or domestic legislation, we can never escape entirely the consequences of what we decide. Longfellow said, "No action, whether fair or foul, is ever done but it leaves somewhere a record written by fingers ghostly as a blessing or a curse."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 22, 1959

This is the news:

Governor Lawrence has declared a state of emergency for the flooded communities in Western Pennsylvania. Near Pittston, Pennsylvania, water from the Susquehanna River poured into the mouth of a coal mine, drowning three miners and...momentarily...trapping at least 40 others. Twenty of the trapped men have been rescued, and the rest are said to be safe. Other small towns along the Allegheny River were hard hit. At Pittsburgh...where the Allegheny and the Monongahela Rivers converge to form the Ohio...a flood crest of 31 feet is predicted for midnight. This is six feet above flood stage. And low-lying parts of the north side of Pittsburgh will be inundated, if the prediction holds true. Many steel mills in the area already are shut down.

Flood waters are receding in Ohio...where the capital city of Columbus had its worst flood since 1913. Throughout the state, at least 11 persons are known to have drowned. Ten thousand persons had to leave their homes.

The public trial of Batista "war criminals" began today in Havana. The first defendant to be tried in the open-air coliseum...called the Palace of Sports...was an ex-officer in the Cuban Army accused of confessing to more than 100 murders. He is quoted as telling the three-judge revolutionary tribunal that he would do it again under the same circumstances. The trial began before 15-thousand spectators...including more than 300 foreign correspondents. At last report, the trial was still in progress.

The president of Finland conferred in Leningrad today with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. The conference is believed to have had for its purpose the settlement of the Soviet-Finnish trade dispute.

Deputy Premier Mikoyan stopped off in Copenhagen...and began an unexpected round of talks with the Premier of Denmark.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told a news conference in Washington today that there is no "positive" evidence that Russia is ahead of the United States in producing an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of being employed in combat. He said, "We do not believe that Russia has an I.C.B.M. capable of operation against this country at this time."

A State Department spokesman said today that...so far as the United States is concerned...free elections are still the "normal and agreed formula" for achieving reunification of Germany. / Secretary Dulles told a news conference last week that free elections were "not necessarily the only method" for reunifying Germany. / Today, the department spokesman... Lincoln White...said that informal consultations between the United States, Britain, France and West Germany have been going on in Washington for some time. / So far, no specific reply to Russia on its proposals regarding Berlin and a possible German peace conference has been drafted. / White said that...obviously...the western powers are examining "all of the theoretical possibilities in order to arrive at a firm basis on which final policy decisions can be reached." There has been "substantial" agreement, he said, but no precise answer has been worked out. / The French ambassador to Washington said today that formal talks on the Allied reply to Moscow will begin soon.

David Schoenbrun reported from Paris this morning...on a CBS News program...that there is no Western agreement to use force to break through a Berlin blockade, if a blockade should be imposed. / The French, he said,

→

"express surprise at the spate of stories out of Washington concerning a three-power agreement to use an armored column to break through a blockade." Schoenbrun said the stories are described in Paris as "irresponsible, highly exaggerated versions of what actually has been taking place." On the same program, Ernest Leiser reported an apparently conflicting story from Bonn. His information, he said, is that while the possibility of an airlift has not been ruled out, the plan now is to resort to aircraft "only if a United States military column on the Berlin highway were forced back or knocked out." Leiser said that he...and other correspondents...had got this information from "a high Western official in Bonn." Immediately after the broadcast, the Paris and Bonn circuits were "patched in" so that Schoenbrun and Leiser could pursue the subject. Here...as it was recorded in New York...is their conversation on a matter which would appear to be of some importance.

(Tape runs 4:05
Ends with Schoenbrun saying, "--a lot of trouble looming ahead for us."

Authoritative sources in London deny that any commitments on how to break through a blockade have been made. Consultations, they emphasize, are continuing.

— INSERT —

In Washington, the State Department is known to be disturbed by the reports of Allied disagreement. There is complete unanimity, it insists, in the policy of maintaining access to Berlin by force if necessary. Various plans are being studied for carrying out this policy. But there is no disunity, we are told, as to substance. At his news conference this afternoon, Secretary of Defense McElroy said there was a plan to supply West Berlin entirely by air and another plan to supply it by the ground route. No unilateral action is being taken, he said, and no final decisions have been made.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

— INSERT —

British Prime Minister Macmillan today indicated that there may be a summit meeting of Western leaders to review the existing proposals on Germany. He dropped the hint...in reply to a question put to him in the House of Commons. MacMillan said, "We are at present engaged in reviewing our proposals." And then he added, "I am not prepared to say whether it will be necessary for the Western leaders to meet, in order to conclude this review..but I do not exclude that possibility."

Word for Today

The Western powers are debating how they might deal with a new blockade of Berlin. Apparently no final decision has been made---whether to supply our garrison by air or try to ram through a supply column on the ground. The ideal solution, of course, would be a decent settement through diplomacy. "Prevention," Erasmus said, "is better than cure."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, January 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

SCHOENBRUN: Hello Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Ernie, I listened to your piece with great interest. I wonder whether there is a contridiction in our two reports as there appears - perhaps there isn't. My feeling was that according to what I just heard you say, that your sources in Bonn are talking about a decision to send an armoured column through an eventual blockade of Berlin, but I believe if I'm not mistaken that your referring to an American decision.

LEISER: That's right. This is a decision reached I think in the Defense Department, not after consultation with our allies.

SCHOENBRUN: Correct. Now my report from Paris says that there is no allied agreement. Now, I believe, therefore, there's no contridiction between our reports. However, there seems to be a contridiction among the allies. I wonder if you could spell it out from your capital as to this particular type of decision, what the Germans think of it and just whose involved in it.

LEISER: Well I don't think the Germans have had much time to think about it. This thing just broke yesterday, David, I have a feeling that they'll be alarmed at first, maybe they'll support it when they've had it explained to them. But, I think what's important in this, is that the American decision - unless it's changed - will be governing on the conduct of our own military forces in their efforts to get to Berlin. We always have reserved the right to protect our own garrisons in the best way we see fit, and I doubt whether we would renounce that right now . I'm sure that it will be discussed extensively at NATO headquarters and at an allied level. But, I think that our effort will be to persuade the allies that this is the only way to preserve our rights and I've a feeling we'll succeed. What do you think?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I'm not sure of that. Let's back up a little bit before I answer that question Ernie. One thing strikes me that you and I have discovered in the course of our reporting today, is that an American national decision has apparently been taken before we have sounded out or won the approval of our allies. That's dangerous in the first place because this may reveal to the Russians a difference in allied ranks which they might be able to exploit. I think it's extremely dangerous to take an American decision in Berlin which is a three-powered capital when there has been no prior agreement from our allies and there has beennone. Secondly, I must ... (inter.)

LEISER: Of course David I think you must realize that military plans have to be made in advance ... always in advance of consultations with allies. That we had plans for a Berlin blockade or what we would do in an attempt to ... to block our access to Berlin long before the Soviets ever planted their May 27th ultimatum.

SCHOENBRUN: Quite true, Ernie, but this difference between a plan and a decision. Now is this a plan or is it a decision?

LEISER: This, I think quite clearly a plan. I'm not quite sure that I see the difference between a plan and a decision.

SCHOENBRUN: A plan is a hypothesis.

LEISER: If the Soviets turn over their controls and if the East Germans attempt to block our access to Berlin, the decision depending on two 'if's', the if's of course are dependent on the other side.

SCHOENBRUN: Well Ernie, I believe there is a major difference, between a plan which is a contingency and a national decision. If I understand you correctly now, we have a contingency plan.

LEISER: That's right.

SCHOENBRUN: It's not yet a firm decision.

LEISER: And, again, David, I think I should clarify that there is this growing belief among Americans that it won't be necessary to take these steps, because the belief is growing rightly or wrongly that the Russians will back away from the Berlin crisis that they created before the deadline expires.

SCHORENSTEIN: Well, as you know Ernie I have always believed that myself and I hope it's correct, I'm afraid, however, that there's been some kind of a blunder made by somebody in permitting even this kind of a plan to be made public as an American decision before it has even been presented to the NATO Council, and there I think there's a lot of trouble looming ahead for us.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Lawrence has declared a state of emergency for the flooded communities in Western Pennsylvania. Near Pittston, Pennsylvania, water from the Susquehanna River poured into the mouth of a coal mine, drowning three miners and...momentarily...trapping at least 40 others. Twenty of the trapped men have been rescued, and the rest are said to be safe. Other small towns along the Allegheny River were hard hit. At Pittsburgh...where the Allegheny and the Monongahela Rivers converge to form the Ohio...a flood crest of 31 feet is predicted for midnight. This is six feet above flood stage. And low-lying parts of the north side of Pittsburgh will be inundated, if the prediction holds true. Many steel mills in the area already are shut down.

Flood waters are receding in Ohio...where the capital city of Columbus had its worst flood since 1913. Throughout the state, at least 11 persons are known to have drowned. Ten thousand persons had to leave their homes.

The public trial of Batista "war criminals" began today in Havana. The first defendant to be tried in the open-air coliseum...called the Palace of Sports...was an ex-officer in the Cuban Army accused of confessing to more than 100 murders. He is quoted as telling the three-judge revolutionary tribunal that he would do it again under the same circumstances. The trial began before 15-thousand spectators...including more than 300 foreign correspondents. At last report, the trial was still in progress.

The president of Finland conferred in Leningrad today with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. The conference is believed to have had for its purpose the settlement of the Soviet-Finnish trade dispute.

Deputy Premier Mikoyan stopped off in Copenhagen...and began an unexpected round of talks with the Premier of Denmark.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told a news conference in Washington today that there is no "positive" evidence that Russia is ahead of the United States in producing an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of being employed in combat. He said, "We do not believe that Russia has an I.C.B.M. capable of operation against this country at this time."

A State Department spokesman said today that...so far as the United States is concerned...free elections are still the "normal and agreed formula" for achieving reunification of Germany. Secretary Dulles told a news conference last week that free elections were "not necessarily the only method" for reunifying Germany. Today, the department spokesman...Lincoln White...said that informal consultations between the United States, Britain, France and West Germany have been going on in Washington for some time. So far, no specific reply to Russia on its proposals regarding Berlin and a possible German peace conference has been drafted. White said that...obiviously...the western powers are examining "all of the theoretical possibilities in order to arrive at a firm basis on which final policy decisions can be reached." There has been "substantial" agreement, he said, but no precise answer has been worked out. The French ambassador to Washington said today that formal talks on the Allied reply to Moscow will begin soon.

David Schoenbrun reported from Paris this morning...on a CBS News program.. that there is no Western agreement to use force to break through a Berlin blockade if a blockade should be imposed. The French, he said, "express surprise at the spate of stories out of Washington concerning a three-power agremment to use an armored column to break through a blockade." Schoenbrun said the stories are described in Paris as "irresponsible, highly exaggerated versions of what actually has been taking place." On the same program, Ernest Leiser reported an apparently conflicting story from Bonn. His information, he said, is that while the possibility of an airlift has not been ruled out, the plan now is to resort to aircraft "only if a United States military column on the Berlin highway were forced back or knocked out." Leiser said that he...and other correspondents... had got this information from "a high Western official in Bonn." Immediately after the broadcast, the Paris and Bonn circuits were "patched in" so that Schoenbrun and Leiser could pursue the subject. Here...as it was recorded in New York...is their conversation on a matter which would appear to be of some importance.

SCHOENBRUN: Hello Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Ernie, I listened to your piece with great interest. I wonder whether there is a contradiction in our two reports as there appears - perhaps there isn't. My feeling was that according to what I just heard you say, that your sources in Bonn were talking about a decision to send an armoured column through an eventual blockade of Berlin, but I believe if I'm not mistaken that you're referring to an American decision.

LEISER: That's right. This is a decision reached I think in the Defense Department not after consultation with our allies.

SCHOENBRUN: Correct. Now my report from Paris says that there is no allied agreement. Now, I believe, therefore, there's no contradiction between our reports. However, there seems to be a contradiction among the allies. I wonder if you could spell it out from your capital as to this particular type of decision, what the Germans think of it and just who's involved in it.

LEISER: Well, I don't think the Germans have had much time to think about it. This thing just broke yesterday, David, I have a feeling that they'll be alarmed at first, maybe they'll support it when they've had it explained to them. But, I think what's important in this, is that the American decision - unless it's changed will be governing on the conduct of our own military forces in their efforts to get to Berlin. We always have reserved the right to protect our own garrisons in the best way we see fit, and I doubt whether we would renounce that right now. I'm sure that it will be discussed extensively at NATO headquarters and at an allied level. But, I think that our effort will be to persuade the allies that this is the only way to preserve our rights and I've a feeling we'll succeed. What do you think?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I'm not sure of that. Let's back up a little but before I answer that question Ernie. One thing strikes me that you and I have discovered in the course of our reporting today, is that an American national decision has apparently been taken before we have sounded out or won the approval of our allies. That's dangerous in the first place because this may reveal to the Russians a difference in allied ranks which they might be able to exploit. I think it's extremely dangerous to take an American decision in Berlin which is a three-powered capital when there has been no prior agreement from our allies and there has been none. Secondly, I must...(inter)

LEISER: Of course David I think you must realize that military plans have to be made in advance...always in advance of consultations with allies. That we had plans for a Berlin blockade or what we would do in an attempt to...to block our access to Berlin long before the Soviets ever planted their May 27th ultimatum.

SCHOENBRUN: Quite true, Ernie, but this difference between a plan and a decision. Now is this a plan or is it a decision?

LEISER: This, I think quite clearly a plan. I'm not quite sure that I see the difference between a plan and a decision.

SCHOENBRUN: A plan is a hypothesis.

LEISER: If the Soviets turn over their controls andif the East Germans attempt to block our access to Berlin, the decision depending on two "ifs", the ifs of course are dependent on the other side.

SCHOENBRUN: Well Ernie, I believe thare is a major difference, between a plan .. which is a contingency and a national decision. If I understand you correctly now, we have a contingency plan.

LEISER: That's right.

SCHOENBRUN: It's not yet a firm decision.

LEISER: And again, David, I think I should clarify that there is this growing belief among Americans that it won't be necessary to take these steps, because the belief is growing rightly or wrongly that the Russians will back away from the Berlin crisis that they created before the deadline expires.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, as you know Ernie I have always believed that myself and I hope it's correct. I'm afraid however, that there's been some kind of a blunder made by somebody in permitting even this kind of a plan to be made public as an American decision before it has even been presented to the NATO Council, and there I think there's a lot of trouble looming ahead for us.

MURROW: Authoritative sources in London deny that any commitments on how to break through a blockade have been made. Consultations, they emphasize, are continuing.

British Prime Minister Macmillan today indicated that there may be a summit meeting of Western leaders to review the existing proposals on Germany. He dropped the hint...in reply to a question put to him in the House of Commons. Macmillan said, "We are at present engaged in reviewing our proposals." And then he added, "I am not prepared to say whether it will be necessary for the Western leaders to meet in order to conclude this review...but I do not exclude that possibility."

In Washington, the State Department is known to be disturbed by the reports of Allied disagreement. There is complete unanimity, it insists, in the policy of maintaining access to Berlin by force if necessary. Various plans are being studied for carrying out this policy. But there is no disunity, we are told, as to substance. At his news conference this afternoon, Secretary of Defense McElroy said there was a plan to supply West Berlin entirely by air and another plan to supply it by the ground route. No unilateral action is being taken, he said, and no final decisions have been made.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Western powers are debating how they might deal with a new blockade of Berlin. Apparently no final decision has been made---whether to supply our garrison by air or try to ram through a supply column on the ground. The ideal solution, of course, would be a decent settlement through diplomacy. "Prevention," Erasmus said, "is better than cure."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 23, 1959

This is the news:

In Richmond, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered four Negro students admitted to a previously all-white junior high school in Arlington County. The order is effective February second, the date on which the new semester starts. The ruling apparently means that the junior high school will integrate. The county school board voted last night to integrate classes, if that were necessary for them to continue.

The Circuit Court of Appeals took no action today on the applications of 26 other Negro students for admission to white schools in Arlington County. It said the applications required further examination before final conclusions could be reached. The 26 Negroes had been denied admission on the basis of various criteria, other than race. In the past, public schools ordered integrated were automatically closed under Virginia state law. Last Monday, the law was ruled unconstitutional by both the state supreme court and a special three-judge federal court in Norfolk. Attorney General Rogers told a news conference this afternoon that there would "seem" to be no constitutional objection to pupil placement,..so long as it was not used to continue racial segregation.

-5

the basis of various criteria, other than race. In the past, public schools ordered integrated were automatically closed under Virginia state law. Last Monday, the school closing law was ruled unconstitutional by both the state supreme court and a special three-judge federal court in Norfolk.

In Ohio, Governor Disalle has declared a state of emergency because of floods. Nine thousand persons were driven from their homes in

CHILLA-COTHE SIGH-O-TOE
Chillicothe, Ohio...when the Scioto River overflowed its banks. Stranded residents were rescued by helicopter. Part of Western Pennsylvania has been declared a major disaster area by President Eisenhower. ~~[illegible]~~ Twelve coal miners are still trapped in a flooded mine near Pittston, Pennsylvania. And hope was fading tonight that they would be found alive. ~~Water that [illegible] poured into the mine from the Susquehanna River~~ is blocking rescue operations. ~~Other coal mines in the area have been closed as a precautionary move.~~

The government reports a decline of two-tenths of one percent in the cost of living in December---the first drop in the consumer price index since August. The December decline is attributed primarily to the lower prices charged for food. Transportation costs also were down, largely because of the additional discounts allowed by new car dealers.

President Eisenhower today ordered the creation of a government committee, to determine to what extent, activities of the Federal Government affect the national economy. / Mr. Eisenhower said that he wants to make sure, that federal programs "contribute as much as possible to reasonable price stability." / ~~Representatives of various government agencies will be members of the committee. It will be headed by Dr. Raymond Saulnier, chairman of the President's council of economic advisers.~~ 22

~~Republican~~ Senator Goldwater of Arizona advised the Republican Party today "to quit copying the New Deal"...and to remember "that the two-party system needs two philosophies." / Goldwater's message was read at the meeting of Republican national committeemen in Des Moines. / The national committee approved a rejuvenation program, which calls...among other things...for a new declaration of party principles.

The Administration missile program was attacked again today on the Senate floor. / Democratic Senator Symington predicted that...in two years... Russia will have four times as many operational intercontinental ballistic missiles ~~than~~ as the United States, if the Administration sticks to its present program. / He said the reason we are not going into full production of I.C.B.M.'s, is that the Administration is not planning to spend the necessary funds. Secretary of Defense McElroy said yesterday that reports of the missile gap between the United States and Russia are "greatly exaggerated." Today he told a House committee, "The nation is prepared to meet the threat it faces today." "Our forces," McElroy said, "are fully capable of carrying out their assigned missions."

In Havana, the public trial of Batista "war criminals" has been discontinued for 24 hours...at the request of a defense attorney. Early today, the first defendant...an officer in Batista's army...was convicted and sentenced to die before a firing squad. He has the privilege of filing an appeal. Fidel Castro flew to Venezuela today to attend a celebration marking the first anniversary of the overthrow of the Venezuelan dictator, Perez Jimenez. (HIM-MEN-EZ) Castro is reported to have ordered an end to direct radio and television broadcasts from the Havana sports palace, where the trials are being held....on grounds that the broadcasts might "produce a state of permanent agitation."

Charles Shaw, news director at WCAU, Philadelphia, is just back from Cuba after covering that story for two weeks. I asked Charlie how the Cubans feel about our criticism...how the provisional government really works...and what may be in store. Here is his report.

(Shaw to run 5 minutes
Returns on cue, "Now back to Edward R. Murrow."

That was my ~~good~~ old friend and colleague, Charles Shaw, with some of the background of the Cuban situation after spending two weeks as a reporter on the scene. It was revealed today that the new United States ambassador to Cuba...Philip Bonsal...will not leave for Havana for several weeks. It would appear from this delay that the United States will not be attempting to exert a large amount of influence on the Castro regime at this time. Apparently, the State Department prefers to wait until the present phase is over before undertaking the delicate task of establishing close relations with the new provisional government. (Career diplomat, ill-concealed antipathy for dictators...formerly served as ambassador to Colombia and Bolivia).

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

After two years of bloody civil war, Cuba has seen a new birth of freedom. What is freedom? More than a hundred years ago, Hartley Coleridge said that freedom...rightly understood...was "a universal licence to be good." And Spinoza said, "He alone is free who lives with free consent under the entire guidance of reason."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, January 23, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: I asked Charlie how the Cubans feel about our criticism, how the provisional government really works and what may be in store. Here is his report.

SHAW: The leaders of the new Cuba and the people they lead are puzzled, perplexed. They were proud of their revolution - they still are. And what they were mostproud of perhaps was the almost incredible restraint shown by the Cuban people toward the soldiers, policemen and other Batista minions charged with murdering, raping, torturing and otherwise brutalizing some 20,000 Cubans, the number may be even larger. Fidel Castro, the leader of the revolution told me that he worried during his long stay in the Sierra Maestra that the Cuban people, understandably vengeful would do what Cuban people did after the ouster of Pres. Machado in 1933, stage an orgy of killing and looting, killing many innocent at the same time, for weeks on end. Castro appealed to the people not to take the law in their own hands, he promised quick trial and punishmen of war criminals. The people heeded Castro's appeal. Except in Havana, where there were two days of disorder until rebel troops arrived, the people remained calm, there were no lynchings. Trials of accused war criminals began in about a week, the trials were short, the procedure as unorthodox, punishment followed immediately. But, Castro complains that little attention has been paid to the fact that many of the accused were freed for lack of evidence or prosecution. Others received prison terms, not all were shot. I attended one trial in Santiago. A defendent was accused of having committed 82 murders, he indignantly denied the charge, shouting like a man insulted, "I did not kill 82, I only killed 40." The blast of United States criticism hit Cubans like a bombshell. Pres. Manuel Urrutia said to me, "We are doing what you did at Nurenburg, our trials are not as long." "The people we try are accused of violating long existant Cuban laws against murder, torture, rape and kidnapping. You made up the laws for the trials of the Axis war criminals. The people/are trying are not political prisoners, they are wanton criminals, this is not vengeance, but punishment." And, Castro said, "We shall execute no more than 450." More than 2000 Axis war criminals were executed in addition to those slaughtered by the people. Castro, I can report really believed the revolutionary government's treatment of the Cuban war criminals would meet with our approval, that we would applaud the Cuban peoples restraint and understand the necessity of quick justice as the better alternative to mob violence. Castro assumed that we all knew of the Batistato atrocities, some of whose victims I saw and the pictures of hundreds of whom I have studied. Castro had complained that we voiced no protest of the Batistato killings, nevertheless, he told his friends, "When freedom is restored and the truth is known - all will be well." A week ago last night, Castro said to me, "We permit unlimited freedom of the press and see what happens. Batista surpressed the truth and your people seldom criticized him." Castro is perplexed also by his inability to belie the charges that he's pro-Communist. The Urrutia Government has accepted recognition of Nationalist China - not Red China. It is has not established relations with Russia, it has permitted the Communists Party to operate - if it obeys Cuban law. But, that's because Castro said, "We are not afraid of Communism. We'll put our ideology of freedom and democracy up against Communism at any time and we know we'll win." Castro strikes me as a man whose a little afraid which is not a very appropriate word for a man whose demonstrated such courage. He seems afraid that he might lose the revolution after winning the war and he's not disposed to waste the sacrifices of the last 5½ years. He drives himself relentlessly as if he must do in a week all that he chafingly wanted to do in his 2 years in the Sierra. Those who know him best insist that he wants no personal power, that he really wants to be something sort of nebulous called the conscience and the philosopher of the revolution. But, the guessing is that he'll run for President when he's old enough, but that's 2½ years from now. He keeps telling the people that they won the war, he was only one man who could be replaced. He defers often to Pres. Urrutia, the provincial judge who heads a government composed almost entirely of men, however, brilliant who lack political experience. Thetask of the politically inexperienced would be formidable enough in normal times and these times are far from normal. But, Fidel Castro as the conscience and philosopher of the revolution as well as commander in chief of the armed forces and the civilian government seeking to consolidate a genuine peoples revolution which cost many lives and much suffering are working night and day confident of success and confident that when all the facts are known, they will have the civilized world's approval.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my old friend and wartime colleague Charles Shaw, now News Director at WCAU, Philadelphia.

PT/jl.m

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 23, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

In Richmond, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered four Negro students admitted to a previously all-white junior high school in Arlington County. The order is effective February second, the date on which the new semester starts. The ruling apparently means that the junior high school will integrate. The county school board voted last night to integrate classes, if that were necessary for them to continue. The Circuit Court of Appeals took no action today on the applications of 26 other Negro students for admission to white schoolsin Arlington County. It said the applications required further examination before final conclusions could be reached. The 26 Negroes had been denied admission on the basis of various criteria other than race. In the past, public school ordered integrated were automatically closed under Virginia state law. Last Monday, the law was ruled unconstitutional by both the state supreme court and a special three-judge federal court in Norfolk. Attorney General Rogers told a news conference this afternoon that there would "seem" to be no constitutional objection to pupil placement....so long as it was not used to continue racial segregation.

In Ohio, Governor DiSalle has declared a state of emergency because of floods. Nine thousand persons were driven from their homes in Chillicothe, Ohio when the Scioto River overflowed its banks. Stranded residents were rescued by helicopter. Part of Western Pennsylvania hss been declared a major disaster area by President Eisenhower. Twelve coal miners wre still trapped in a flooded mine near Pittston, Pennsylvania. And hope was fading tonight that they would be found alive.

President Eisenhower today ordered the creation of a government committee to determine to what extent activities of the Federal Government affect the national economy. Mr. Eisenhower said that he wants to make sure that federal programs "contribute as much as possible to reasonable price stability."

Senator Goldwater of Arizona advised the Republican Party today "to quit copying the New Deal"...and to remember "that the two-party system needs two philosophies." Goldwater's message was read at the meeting of Republican national committeemen in Des Moines. The national committee approved a rejuvenation program which calls...among other things...for a new declaration of party principles.

The Administration missile program was attacked again today on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Symington predicted that...in two years...Russia will have four times as many operational intercontinental ballistic missiles as the United States, if the Administration sticks to its present program. He said the reason we are not going into full production of I.C.B.M.'s is that the Administration is not planning to spend the necessary funds. Secretary of Defense McElroy said yesterday that reports of the missile gap between the United States and Russia are "greatly exaggerated." Today he told a House committee, "The nation is prepared to meet the threat it faces today." "Our forces," McElroy said, "are fully capable of carrying out their assigned missions."

In Havana, the public trial of Batista "war criminals" has been discontinued for 24 hours...at the request of a defense attorney. Early today, the first defendant...an officer in Batista's army...was convicted and sentenced to die before a firing squad. He has the privilege of filing an appeal. Fidel Castro flew to Venezuela today to attend a celebration marking the first anniversary of the overthrow of the Venezuelan dictator Perez Jemenez. Castro is reported to have ordered an end to direct radio and television broadcasts from the Havana sports palace, where the trials are being held...on grounds that the broadcasts might "produce a state of permanent agitation."

Charles Shaw, news director at WCAU, Philadelphia, is just back from Cuba after covering that story for two weeks. I asked Charlie how the Cubans feel about our criticism...how the provisional government really works...and what may be in store. Here is his report.

SHAW: The leaders of the new Cuba and the people they lead are puzzled, perplexed. They were proud of their revolution - they still are. And what they were most proud of perhaps was the almost incredible restraint shown by the Cuban people toward the soldiers, policemen and other Batista minions charged with murdering, raping, torturing and otherwise brutalizing some 20,000 Cubans, the number may be even larger. Fidel Castro, the leader of the revolution told me that he worried during his long stay in the Sierra Maestra that the Cuban people, understandably vengeful would do what Cuban people did after the ouster of Pres. Machado in 1933, stage an orgy of killing and looting, killing many innocent at the same time, for weeks on end. Castro appealed to the people not to take the law in their own hands, he promised quick trial and punishment of war criminals. The people heeded Castro's appeal. Except in Havana, where there were two days of disorder until rebel troops arrived, the people remained calm, there were no lynchings. Trials of accused war criminals began in about a week, the trials were short, the procedure as unorthodox, punishment followed immediately. But, Castro complains that little attention has been paid to the fact that many of the accused were freed for lack of evidence or prosecution. Others received prison terms, not all were shot. I attended one trial in Santiago. A defendent was accused of having committed 82 murders, he indignantly denied the charge, shouting like a man insulted, "I did not kill 82, I killed only 40." The blast of United States criticism hit Cubans like a bombshell. President Manuel Urrutia said to me, "We are doing what you did at Nurenburg, our trials are not as long." "The people we try are accused of violating long existant Cuban laws against murder, torture, rape and kidnapping. You made up the laws for the trials of the Axis war criminals. The people we are trying are not political prisoners, they are wanton criminals, this is not vengeancebut punishment." And, Castro said, "We shall execute no more than 450." More than 2,000 Axis war criminals were executed in addition to those slaughtered by the people. Castro, I can report really believed the revolutionary government's treatment of the Cuban war criminals would meet with our approval, that we would applaud the Cuban peoples restraint and understand the necessity of quick justice as the better alternative to mob violence. Castro assumed that we all knew of the Batista atrocities, some of whose victims I saw and the pictures of hundreds of whom I have studied. Castro had complained that we voiced no protest of the Batista killings, nevertheless, he told his friends, "When freedom is restored and the truth is known - all will be well." A week ago last night, Castro said to me, "We permit unlimited freedom of the press and see what happens. Batista surpressed the truth and your people seldom criticized him." Castro is perplexed also by his inability to belie the charges that he's pro-Communist. The Urrutia Government has accepted recognition of Nationalist China - not Red China. It has not established relations with Russia, it has permitted the Communist Party to operate - if it obeys Cuban law. But, that's because Castro said, "We are not afraid of Communism. We'll put our ideology of freedom and democracy up against Communism at any time and we know we'll win." Castro strikes me as a man who's a little afraid which is not a very appropriate word for a man who's demonstrated such courage. He seemsafraid that he might lose the revolution after winning the war and he's not disposed to waste the sacrifices of the last five and a half years. He drives himself relentlessly as if he must do in a week all that he chafingly wanted to do in his two years in the Sierra. Those who know him best insist that he wants no personal power, that he really wants to be something sort of nebulous called the conscience and the philosopher of the revolution. But, the guessing is that he'll run for President when he's old enough, but that's two and a half years from now. He keeps telling the people that they won the war, he was only one man who could be replaced. He defers often to President Urrutia, the provincial judge who heads a government composed almost entirely of men, however brilliant who lack political experience. The task of the politically inexperienced would be formidable enough in normal times and these times are far from normal. But, Fidel Castro as the conscience and philosopher of the revolution as well as commander in chief of the armed forces and the civilian government seeking to consolidate a genuine peoples revolution which cost many lives and much suffering are working night and day confident of success and confident that when all the facts are known, they will have the civilized world's approval.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my old friend and colleague, Charles Shaw , now News Director at WCAU, Philadelphia with some of the background of the Cuban situation after spending two weeks as a reporter on the scene. It was revealed today that the new United States ambassador to Cuba..Philip Bonsal...will not leave for Havana for several weeks. It would appear from this delay that the United States will not be attempting to exert a large amount of influence on the Castro regime at this time. Apparently, the State Department prefers to wait until the present phase is over before undertaking the delicate task of establishing close relations with the new provisional government. (Career diplomat, ill-concealed antipathy for dictators...formerly served as ambassador to Colombia and Bolivia.)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: After two years of bloody civil war, Cuba has seen a new birth of freedom. What is freedom? More than a hundred years ago, Hartley Coleridge said that freedom...rightly understood...was "a universal license to be good." And Spinoza said, "He alone is free who lives with free consent under the entire guidance of reason." Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 26, 1959

This is the news:

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today that there appears to be "the possibility of a thaw" in relations between Russia and the United States. Khrushchev said this is the impression he gets from a report made to him by Deputy Premier Mikoyan...who returned to Moscow on Saturday after a two-week American tour. Khrushchev stressed that the talks Mikoyan had with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles were just talks---not negotiations. He said that Russia, for its part, was doing "everything possible." Khrushchev made these remarks at a Moscow reception celebrating India's day of national independence. Negotiations with the West, he said, are more difficult than negotiations with India because in dealing with the West, there is no confidence./ He said Russia wants a thaw in the Cold War. If the West wants it colder, he said, "we can add to it."/ Later at the reception, Khrushchev chatted with the West German ambassador.

It was announced today that West German Chancellor Adenauer will fly to London for informal talks with Prime Minister Macmillan./ No definite date was set. France's new premier...Michel Debre...will visit London late next month, or early in March.

ME-SHELL DEH-BRAY

David Schoenbrun reports from Paris that in the French view, an East-West foreign ministers conference on Germany is "both desirable and possible." Schoenbrun says the French feel that the meeting would have the best chance of success if it were held privately behind closed doors.

Talks on a possible prohibition of nuclear weapons tests continued today in Geneva. The United States and Britain proposed that half of the personnel...manning inspection stations...be Russian and the other half be composed of representatives from the West. The Soviet delegation asked for time to study the proposal.

In Italy, the Fanfani government fell today...after ruling the country for about seven months. / President Gronchi will start consulting political leaders on the formation of a new government on Wednesday. / In a few minutes we will switch to Rome for a direct report.

Israel today requested an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council to discuss the latest series of incidents on the Syrian frontier. / The complaint was against Syria, but there was a clash today in the no man's land in Jerusalem dividing Israel and Jordan. / Israel accuses Jordanian troops of fatally wounding an Israeli soldier near the Mandelbaum Gate. Israel says the soldier was inside Israeli territory. Jordan claims he was trying to cross No Man's Land and that he ignored a warning to stop.

The ministerial council of the Baghdad Pact met in Karachi today---without Iraq. Since the revolution last summer, Iraq has maintained a policy of non-activity in the anti-Communist alliance...which has as its other members Britain, Turkey, Pakistan and Iran. The United States is not a full member of the Baghdad Pact, although it is a member of most of its committees. / We are being represented at the meeting by Loy Henderson, under-secretary of state. / The prime minister of Iran expressed regret that neither the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd, nor Secretary Dulles had chosen to come.

Our ambassador to the Philippines...Charles Bohlen...today began consultations at the State Department regarding the deterioration of relations between the Philippines and the United States. There is some feeling that the Philippine government has not received its share of American economic aid.

In Cuba, the war crimes trials have been transferred from the Havana sports palace to a special courtroom. The defendants are being tried before the same three-judge court.

A former Alabama judge today was acquitted of contempt of court in a case involving the Civil Rights Commission. A federal court had ordered Circuit Judge George Wallace to produce the names of registered voters in Bullock and Barbour Counties for inspection by agents of the commission. Wallace balked at the order. Instead of producing the records, he turned them over to grand juries in the two counties...which, in turn, made them available to federal investigators. Wallace then resigned as circuit judge but not before being charged with contempt. He admitted today that he disobeyed the federal court but denied that he was guilty of contempt. ~~He argued that...as a judge of the state of Alabama...he had no choice.~~ After hearing the arguments, Federal Judge Frank Johnson dismissed the contempt charge. Wallace, he said, had attempted to give the "impression" of defiance of the court...~~and he indicated that Wallace might have been politically motivated.~~

→

The federal government announced today that if the closed schools in Norfolk, Virginia are not reopened next month, it will set up an integrated school for the children of Navy personnel living in Norfolk. Governor Almond has called the Virginia legislature to meet on Wednesday to hear new proposals for preventing integration of the public schools.

The Defense Department told Congress today that a four-year extension of the draft is "absolutely essential" to fulfill the nation's military requirements. This testimony was given to the House Armed Services Committee by Charles Finucane, assistant secretary of defense. At the same time, the Senate Armed Services Committee heard the testimony of Secretary of the Navy Gates and the chief of naval operations, Admiral Burke. Both stressed the importance of sea power. Gates said the Polaris missile... designed for use on atomic submarines made an all-out war "unthinkable" for a ~~potential aggressor.~~

For a direct report on the new Italian crisis...how it happened and what may come of it...we switch now to Winston Burdett in Rome.

(Tape runs 5:23
Ends on cue: "---to Edward R. Murrow in New York."

That was my colleague, Winston Burdett, reporting from Rome on the resignation of Premier Fanfani and his cabinet.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Another Italian government has fallen, and a broader political spectrum in the next cabinet is probable. The question arises: How far to the right...or left...will this representation go? The Italians will decide in due course, but Josh Billings once said a man can't be too radical if he is right...and he can't be too conservative if he is wrong.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, January 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now, for a direct report on the new Italian crisis, how it happened and what may come of it, we switch now to Winston Burdett in Rome.

BURDETT: Only a rash prophet would risk predicting tonight what kind of government will finally emerge from the crisis that began in Rome this morning, with the sudden resignation of the government of Prime Minister Fanfani. The government did not fall because of any hostile vote in the Italian Parliament, which is the usual way that a crisis gets started here. This time the government itself, at a special Cabinet meeting, decided to quit. It did so because one minister, the member of a comparatively small party, had decided to walk out of the coalition government. It's expected that three other members of the same small party will desert the government and vote with the opposition in Parliament hereafter. Four men are a tiny group in a Parliament of 596 members, but they were enough to bring the house down. Their four votes made the difference between a shaky majority in Parliament and no majority at all. The immediate cause of the crisis may seem trivial but beneath the surface lies a much larger political drama. The collapse of the Fanfani government is the first of many political changes that are likely to take place in Italy as the result of a dramatic turn of events last week.

The Italian Socialists, for many years closely associated with the Communists, voted last week, at their annual convention, to repudiate their Communist ties and to stand alone. Ever since the end of the war the political field here has been divided between two big parties, the Christian Democrats whose chief is Fanfani, and the Communists with their Socialist friends tagging along beside them. The Socialists' break with the communists thus destroys the old picture, and theoretically at least, it gives Italy something it has not had for years, a Democratic opposition party. The declared aim of the Socialist leader, Pietro Nenni, is to make the Socialists the core of a large effective Democratic opposition, a magnet for all the scattered Democratic groups in Italy which are discontent with the rule of Christian Democracy. The attraction of this idea, understandably enough, has been most powerfully felt among the Social Democrats who had been partners in the Fanfani government. The four men who provoked the present crisis are all Social Democrats who have decided to desert Fanfani and join Nenni, now that Nenni has at last decided to break with the Communists.

But the drama does not end there. In the younger ranks of Italian Christian Democracy, there are many who believe that the Catholic party itself should move to the Left and who argue that Catholics and Socialists can and should collaborate politically. Needless to say, this view has met the most vigorous opposition within the Catholic camp. Only this morning the Vatican itself pronounced judgment. Alfredo Cardinal Ottaviani, the Secretary of the Holy Office, Supreme Guardian of Catholic Faith, publicly denounced the leftward trend in the party and said that Christian Doctrine needs no help from the followers of Marxism. Powerful figures in the party regard any association with the Socialist Left as a snare and a delusion and say that the Nenni Socialists are still what they have been throughout the post-war years, the Trojan Horse of the Italian Communists. In this group are two former prime ministers, Giuseppe Pella and Mario Scelba. Both men have formally declared their opposition to Fanfani's leadership. They've called on Fanfani to resign as party head. They've charged that he is willing to make a deal with socialism and to broaden his government to the Left; whereas they insist that the door to socialism be closed and that the government be broadened to the Right.

Several times in recent weeks, this Right-Wing of the Catholic party has revolted in Parliament. In secret ballots, Catholic deputies have voted against their own prime minister. And only last week, Fanfani scraped through a major battle in Parliament by the irreducible margin of a single vote. No wonder he resigned when four men abandoned him.

There have been many difficult government crises in post-war Italy, but this one seems to go deeper than all the rest. For the crisis of Christian democracy itself has now been opened. The party that restored Italy after the ruin of war but held the front against the Communists and held the country in the Western camp- the party goes into this crisis more deeply decided than ever before, with sharper pressures on it from both Right and Left. It is the biggest party in the country, with 272 members in Parliament, but still not enough to rule alone. The Christian Democrats must govern in some kind of coalition. Should they move Left and court the Socialists; or should they edge Right and seek support from conservative groups, including possibly even the Monarchists. What kind of a party should they try to be? Which way should they move and how far in order to strengthen their democratic support in the country? These are questions that are now being bitterly debated. And the trouble is that there seems to be no solution that does not threaten to strip the Catholic party still more deeply and possibly to split it open into rival groups. That is why no one can say how or where the crisis that started today is going to end. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Winstan Burdett, reporting from Rome.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

MONDAY, JANUARY 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

This is the news:

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today that there appears to be "the possibility of a thaw" in relations between Russia and the United States. Khrushchev said this is the impression he gets from a report made to him by Deputy Premier Mikoyan...who returned to Moscow on Saturday after a two-week American tour. Khrushchev stressed that the talks Mikoyan had with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles were just talks---not negotiations. He said that Russia, for its part, was doing "everything possible." Khrushchev made these remarks at a Moscow reception celebrating India's day of national independence. Negotiations with the West, he said, are more difficult than negotiations with India because in dealing with the West there is no confidence. He said Russia wants a thaw in the Cold War. If the West wants it colder, he said, "we can add to it." Later at the reception, Khrushchev chatted with the West German ambassador.

It was announced today that West German Chancellor Adenauer will fly to London for informal talks with Prime Minister Macmillan. No definite date was set. France's new premier...Michel Debre...will visit London late next month or early in March.

David Schoenbrun reports from Paris that in the French view, an East-West foreign ministers conference on Germany is "both desirable and possible." Schoenbrun says the French feel that the meeting would have the best chance of success if it were held privately behind closed doors.

Talks on a possible prohibition of nuclear weapons tests continued today in Geneva. The United States and Britain proposed that half of the personnel...manning inspection stations...be Russian and the other half be composed of representatives from the West. The Soviet delegation asked for time to study the proposal.

In Italy, the Fanfani government fell today...after ruling the country for about seven months. President Gronchi will start consulting political leaders on the formation of a new government on Wednesday. In a few minutes we will switch to Rome for a direct report.

Israel today requested an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council to discuss the latest series of incidents on the Syrian frontier. The complaint was against Syria, but there was a clash today in the No Man's Land in Jerusalem dividing Israel and Jordan. Israel accuses Jordanian troops of fatally wounding an Israeli soldier near the Mandelbaum Gate. Israel says the soldier was inside Israeli territory. Jordan claims he was trying to cross No Man's Land and that he ignored a warning to stop.

The ministerial council of the Baghdad Pact met in Karachi today---without Iraq. Since the revolution last summer, Iraq has maintained a policy of non-activity in the anti-Communist alliance...which has as its other members Britain, Turkey, Pakistan and Iran. The United States is not a full member of the Baghdad Pact, although it is a member of most of its committees. We are being represented at the meeting by Loy Henderson, under-secretary of state. The prime minister of Iran expressed regret that neither the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd, nor Secretary Dulles had chosen to come.

Our ambassador to the Philippines...Charles Bohlen...today began consultations at the State Department regarding the deterioration of relations between the Philippines and the United States. There is some feeling that the Philippine government has not received its share of American economic aid.

In Cuba, the war crimes trials have been transferred from the Havana sports palace to a special courtroom. The defendants are being tried before the same three-judge court.

A former Alabama judge today was acquitted of contempt of court in a case involving the Civil Rights Commission. A federal court had ordered Circuit Judge George Wallace to produce the names of registered voters in Bullock and Barbour Counties for inspection by agents of the commission. Wallace balked at the order. Instead of producing the records, he turned them over to grand juries in the two counties..which, it turn, made them available to federal investigators. Wallace then resigned as circuit judge but not before being charged with contempt. He admitted today that he disobeyed the federal court but denied that he was guilty of contempt.

The federal government announced today that if the closed schools in Norfolk, Virginia are not reopened next month, it will set up an integrated school for the children of Navy personnel living in Norfolk. Governor Almond has called the Virginia legislature to meet on Wednesday to hear new proposals for preventing itegration of the public schools.

The Defense Department told Congress today that a four-year extension of the draft is "absolutely essential" to fulfill the nation's military requirements.

For a direct report on the new Italian crisis...how it happened and what may come of it...we switch now to Winston Burdett in Rome.

BURDETT: Only a rash prophet would risk predicting tonight what kind of government will finally emerge from the crisis that began in Rome this morning, with the sudden resignation of the government of Prime Minister Fanfani. The government did not fall because of any hostile vote in the Italian Parliament, which is the usual way that a crisis gets started here. This time the government itself, at a special cabinet meeting, decided to quit. It did so because one minister, the member of a comparatively small party, had decided to walk out of the coalition government. It's expected that three other members of the same small party will desert the government and vote with the opposition in Parliament hereafter. Four men are a tiny group in a Parliament of 596 members, but they were enough to bring the house down. Their four votes made the difference between a shaky majority in Parliament and no majority at all. The immediate cause of the crisis may seem trivial but beneath the surface lies a much larger political drama. The collapse of the Fanfani government is the first of many political changes that are likely to take place in Italy as the result of a dramatic turn of events last week.

The Italian Socialists, for many years closely associated with the Communists, voted last week, at their annual convention, to repudiate their Communist ties and to stand alone. Ever since the end of the war the political field here has been divided between two big parties, the Christian Democrats whose chief is Fanfani, and the Communists with their Socialist friends tagging along beside them. The Socialists' break with the communists thus destroys the old picture, and theoretically at least, it gives Italy something it has not had for years, a Dem cratic opposition party. The declared aim of the Socialist leader, Pietro Nenni, is to make the Socialists the core of a large effective Democratic opposition, a magnet for all the scattered Democratic groups in Italy which are discontent with the rule of Christian democracy. The attraction of this idea, understandably enough, has been most powerfully felt among the Sciial Democrats who had been partners in the Fanfani government. The four men who provoked the present crisis are all Social Democrats who have decided to desert Fanfani and join Nenni, now that Nenni has at last decided to break with the Communists.

But the drama does not end there. In the younger ranks of Italian Christian Democracy, there are many who believe that the Catholic party itself should move to the Left and who argue that Catholics and Socialists can and should collaborate politically. Needless to say, this view has met the most vigorous opposition within the Catholic camp. Only this morning the Vatican itself pronounced judgement. Alfredo Cardinal Ottaviani, the Secretary of the Holy Office, Supreme Guardian of Catholic Faith, publicly denounced the leftward trend in the party and said that Christian Doctrine needs no help from the followers of Marxism. Powerful figures in the party regard any association with the Socialist Left as a snare and a delusion and say that the Nenni Socialists are still what they have been throughout the post-war years, the Trojan Horse of the Italian Communists. In this group are two former prime ministers, Guiseppe Pella and Mario Scelba. Both men have formally declared their opposition to Fanfani's leadership. They've called on Fanfani to resign as party head. They've charged that he is willing to make a deal with socialism and to broaden his government to the Left, whereas they insist that the door to socialism be closed and that the government be broadened to the Right.

Several times in recent yeeks, this Right-Wing of the Catholic patty has revolted in Parliament. In secret ballots, Catholic deputies have voted against their own prime minister. And only last week, Fanfani scraped through a major battle in Parlimment by the irreducible margin of a single vote. No wonder he resigned when four men abandoned him.

There have been many difficult government crises in post-war Italy, but this one seems to go deeper than all the rest. For the crisis of Christian democracy itselfhas now been opened. The party that restored Italy after the ruin of war but held the frontagainst the Communists and held the country in the Western camp - the party goes into this crisis more deeply divided than ever before, with sharper pressures on it from both Right and Left. It is the biggest party in the country, with 272 members in Parliament but still not enough to rule alone. The Christain Democrats must govern in some kind of coalition. Should they move Left and court the Socialists, or should they edge Right and seek support from conservative groups, including possibly even the Monarchists. What kind of party should they try to be? Which way should they move and how far in order to strengthen their democratic support in the country? These are questions that are now being bitterly debated. And the trouble is that there seems to be no solution that does not threaten to strip the Catholic party still more deeply and possibly to split it open into rival groups. That is why noone can say how or where the crisis that started today is going to end. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Winston Burdett reporting from Rome on the resignation of Premier Fanfani and his cabinet.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Another Italian government has fallen and a broader political spectrum in the next cabinet is probable. The question arises: How far to the right... or left...will this representation go? The Italians will decide in due course, but Josh Billings once said a man can't be too radical if he is right...and he can't be too conservative if he is wrong.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 27, 1959

This is the news:

The speech Khrushchev made today at the opening of the 21st Party Congress, is being studied carefully in the capitals of the free world. Khrushchev spoke for six hours and five minutes. The first part of his speech was devoted to a resume of the Seven Year Plan announced in November. The plan calls for an 80 percent increase in gross industrial production...and a gain of 62 percent in consumer goods. Agricultural production in the seven-year period is to be stepped up 70 percent. Khrushchev promised that personal taxes would be discontinued...and that the Russians, by 1970, would have the highest standard of living in the world. The nation, he said, is now ready "to enter the period of extensive building of the Communist society." He attributed much of the progress made to the "guiding role" of the Communist Party and to its Central Committee, "headed for many years by J.V. Stalin." This appears to have been his only direct reference to Stalin...whom he denounced at the last party congress in 1956. He also had a good word for himself. His own program to decentralize industry, he said, had made for a more efficient economy. Khrushchev said the "theme" of the new Seven Year Plan is peace and the lessening of world tension...that it was designed "to insure the triumph of the Soviet Union in peaceful economic competition." He warned in the same breath that Russia has "everything necessary to bridle the forces of aggression." He said that Russia---through its rocketry---has gained the lead in outer space. And Russia's intercontinental missile, he said, is in "serial" production. He seemed to be saying that the missiles are being produced on an assembly line basis. The Soviet leader described nuclear disarmament as the primary task facing East and West. He suggested that production of nuclear weapons be prohibited, together with the testing of those weapons. And that nuclear stockpiles be destroyed. "Our government," he said, "is ready to sign an appropriate agreement at this time." He proposed an "atom free" zone in the Far East, including the entire Pacific area. Khrushchev said there are...and can be...no disagreements between Russia and Communist China, although the Chinese "are employing many original forms of socialist construction." Russia, he said, is ready to discuss Germany, but reunification is a matter for the two German governments...themselves... to decide. He said, "There is no other method." Nor did he offer any new approach to the problem of Berlin.

→

Among those who heard Khrushchev's speech in the Kremlin palace were Gomulka of Poland and Chou En-lai of China. Mao Tse-tung was not present. Foreign correspondents attended the opening of the party congress for the first time since Lenin.

Secretary of State Dulles told his news conference today that a foreign ministers conference on Germany this spring would be "timely". But he warned that negotiating with Russia is a long, arduous task. The United States, he said, would be willing to discuss the Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone in Central Europe. (I should like to discuss this phase of the Dulles news conference further in a few minutes). Mr. Dulles said that he expects new military and economic agreements to be reached with Turkey, Pakistan and Iran---the three active members of the Baghdad Pact in the Middle East. He conceded that the United States and some of the Baghdad Pact powers are in disagreement as to how far we should commit ourselves to their defense. Dulles said that the United States is planning to withdraw its military mission from Cuba since the new Cuban government has indicated that it would like the mission to leave.

→

Communist China said today that it would join East Germany in repulsing any assault by "imperialist countries."

In Tokyo today, Prime Minister Kishi said that Japan wants to restore its trade with Communist China. But, he said, Japan wants to maintain its close military and diplomatic ties with the United States.

Vice President Nixon said tonight...in a speech here in New York... that the United States must have the vision, not only to meet Russia's military threat, but also to counter its economic and propaganda threats as well. Nixon said, "We can be the strongest military power in the world and still lose the struggle for the world without a missile being launched." ~~It is Russia not the United States, he said, which began and insists on continuing the Cold War. The vice president believes that Khrushchev forgets this...when he asks us to act to improve relations.~~

A Senate subcommittee was set up today to investigate Russia's trade policies. Senator Stennis of Mississippi said the government should subsidize American exports so as to compete with Russian goods on the world market.

The Senate rackets committee resumed public hearings today and heard more testimony involving the teamsters union. The first witness was Rolland McMasters, a business agent for Local 299 in Detroit. McMasters refused to answer questions on grounds of possible self-incrimination. But another witness said that McMasters drummed up 19-thousand dollars' worth of trucking business as a sideline.

Tomorrow, President Eisenhower will send Congress his recommendations for wiping out corruption in the labor-management field. Republican congressional leaders...who were briefed today at the White House...say that the President's measure will be stronger than the labor reform bill already introduced by Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts.

The Air Force told Congress today that this country needs more air power and "space power." Air Force Secretary Douglas and General White, Air Force chief of staff, testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee. General White said the Air Force has made a "firm request" to the Administration for an atom-powered plane.

The director of the United States space program...Dr. Keith Glennan... revealed today that 110 potential candidates have been selected for making this country's first space flight...orbiting the Earth. Dr. Glennan said that by late March, the number of potential "spacemen" would be further reduced to twelve. He did not say when the flight of a manned rocket would be made.

Today...in Norfolk, Virginia...a federal judge ruled that the Norfolk city council may not close the high schools there because of fear of violence. Judge Walter Hoffman said that the City Council "perpetuated an evasive scheme to avert integration"...in voting to cut off funds to all classes above the sixth grade. The federal judge said he would issue an injunction...forbidding the planned closing of the schools on Monday. His ruling clears the way for the admission of 17 Negro students to six other schools, closed since last fall. These schools had been shut down under Virginia's "massive resistance" laws...which have since been declared unconstitutional in both the federal and state courts.

Edward R. Murrow: January 27, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles started out in his news conference as though he intended to leave the impression that there is no thaw in prospect for the cold war. If there is to be one, he said, it must be from the Russians "who live in the North where the icy blasts come from." He also denied that so far he had seen anything that led him to feel that the Russians have any genuine desire to end the cold war. ~~"There is", he said, "a strong desire to delude us into thinking the cold war is ended. There are proposals which ostensibly would help end the cold war but which, in fact, would greatly play into the hands of the Russians in prosecuting the cold war."~~

But before he finished he dropped hints of changes, slight or better than slight, that represented a willingness on his part to find common ground with the Russians. ~~Perhaps the most notable was his statement that he would be willing to discuss the Rapacki Plan if the Russians cared to bring it up in a Four-Power conference. This is the first time newsmen recalled his expressing such a readiness. And he spoke at length about confederation as a means for unifying Germany.~~

Mr. Dulles does not like the word confederation, as applied to Germany. It has connotations distasteful to him. And as the Russians use the word he thinks it means perpetuating the partition of Germany. But he was willing to consider the concept of confederation as being of possible use in finding a German settlement, so long as the Germans are free to accept or not accept it and are free under it. If confederation can bring that to pass, it will have to be studied, he said, with all possible resourcefulness.

~~After all, he explained, West Germany itself is a kind of confederation. And American history has instances of union through confederation which did not start with free elections. The thirteen colonies had not voted for union, they legislated for it. Union after the Civil War was not achieved through free elections, nor did Alaska become a state in the union through elections. "I would say," he declared, "that we would all be delighted if you could achieve re-unification of Germany, an effective re-unification, by any means."~~

But he did not carry his readiness to consider other means to the point of volunteering an alternative to free elections. Free elections, he reminded the newsmen, was the agreed method. The Soviet Union had agreed to it. He recalled that the negotiations at the Summit Conference on this point had been the toughest he had been through with the Russians -- one of whom was Khrushchev himself. Now, he went on, if they want to suggest another method than the one they agreed to, it is up to them to suggest the alternative not up to us. "We do not relinquish the agreement that we have merely [redacted] for a wild goose chase looking for another method" he said.

Mr. Dulles cited Mikoyan's trade proposals to Under-Secretary Dillon as an instance in which the Russians seek their own advantage and offer nothing in return. "He made certain requests, almost demands" Mr. Dulles said. These would eliminate political control over strategic goods, give most favored nation treatment, open large credits and repeal the Johnson Act forbidding long-term credits to nations in default. "That" said Mr. Dulles, "is what we were supposed to do. Of course, on their side they would keep every particle of foreign trade absolutely under the strictest kind of political control. I don't think that kind of proposition is really designed to end the cold war. It would give the Soviet Union a very considerable advantage in prosecuting it."

At times Mr. Dulles sounded so pessimistic about negotiations that he was asked what was the use of holding a Foreign Ministers' conference in the Spring. And this challenged him to say something more hopeful, which he did. "It is occasionally possible" he said, "to get out of the Soviet Union - out of the Communists - an agreement which tends to promote international peace on a fair basis." He recalled the Korean Armistice, the liberation of Austria, the agreement for cultural exchanges. "So we constantly try" he said." And our past experience indicated that if you keep on trying you sometimes get things. That is the spirit that animates us."

The net effect of what Mr. Dulles said was to show flexibility. New methods and ideas are in the air. The Western allies obviously are studying them. But he also showed an absence of gullibility. So far he has seen no signs of Russian flexibility, and he was asking for such signs. In other words, this was pre-conference shadow-boxing. It was lively and arresting. And its significance is that it foreshadows a conference.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Throughout Khrushchev's long speech there is a spirit of confidence. Of course, in his position it is well to appear confident. Still, he ~~has not gone batty~~ managed to talk for more than 6 hours. Whether we can have confidence in him is another matter. Secretary Dulles probably would paraphrase Cicero and say he is not "a man to whom you could safely stretch out your fingers in the dark."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The speech Khrushchev made today at the opening of the 21st Party Congress is being studied carefully in the capitals of the free world. Khrushchev spoke for six hours and five minutes. The first part of his speech was devoted to a resume of the Seven Year Plan announced in November. The plan calls for an 80 percent increase in gross industrial production...and a gain of 62 percent in consumer goods. Agricultural production in the seven-year period is to be stepped up 70 percent. Khrushchev promised that personal taxes would be discontinued...and that the Russians by 1970 would have the highest standard of living in the world. The nation, he said, is now ready "to enter the period of extensive building of the Communist society." He attributed much of the progress made to the "guiding role" of the Communist Party and to its Central Committee, "headed for many years by J.V. Stalin." This appears to have been his only direct reference to Stalin...whom he denounced at the last party congress in 1956. He also had a good word for himself. His own program to decentralize industry, he said, had made for a more efficient economy. Khrushchev said the "theme" of the new Seven Year Plan is peace and the lessening of world tension... that it was designed "to insure the triumph of the Soviet Union in peaceful economic competition." He warned in the same breath that Russia has "everything necessary to bridle the forces of aggression." He said that Russia---through its rocketry---has gained the lead in outer space. And Russia's intercontinental missile, he said, is in "serial"production. He seemed to be saying that the missiles are being produced on an assembly line basis. The Soviet leader described nuclear disarmament as the primary task facing East and West. He suggested that production of nuclear weapons be prohibited, together with the testing of those weapons. And that nuclear stockpiles be destroyed. "Our government," he said, "is ready to sign an appropriate agreement at this time." He proposed an "atom free" zone in the Far East, including the entire Pacific area. Khrushchev said there are....and can be...no disagreements betweenRuussia and Communist China, although the Chinese "are employing many original forms of socialist construction." Russia, he said, is ready to discuss Germany, but reunification is a matter for the two German governments...themselves... to decide. He said, "There is no other method." Nor did he offer any new approach to the problem of Berlin.

Secretary of State Dulles told his news conference today that a foreign ministers conference on Germany this spring would be "timely." But he warned that negotiating with Russia is a long, arduous task. The United States, he said, would be willing to discuss the Rapacki Plan for an atom-free zone in Central Europe. (I should like to discuss this phase of the Dulles news conference further in a few minutes.) Mr. Dulles said that he expects new military and economic agreements to be reached with Turkey, Pakistan and Iran---the three active members of the Baghdad Pact in the Middle East. He conceded that the United States and some of the Baghdad Pact powers are in disagreement as to how far we should commit ourselves to their defense. Dulles said that the United States is planning to withdraw its military mission from Cuba since the new Cuban government has indicated that it would like the mission to leave.

Communist China said today that it would join East Germany in repulsing any assault by "imperialist countries."

In Tokyo today, Prime Minister Kishi said that Japan wants to restore its trade with Communist China. But, he said, Japan wants to maintain its close military and diplomatic ties with the United States.

Vice President Nixon said tonight...in a speech here in New York....that the United States must have the vision, not only to meet Russia's military threat, but also to counter its economic and propaganda threats as well. Nixon said,

"We can be the strongest military power in the world and still lose the struggle for the world without a missile being launched."

A Senate subcommittee was set up today to investigate Russia's trade policies. Senator Stennis of Mississippi said the government should subsidize American exports so as to compete with Russian goods on the world market.

The Senate rackets committee resumed public hearings today and heard more testimony involving the teamsters union. The first witness was Rolland McMasters, a business agent for Local 299 in Detroit. McMasters refused to answer questions on grounds of possible self-incrimination. But another witness said that McMasters drummed up 19-thousand dollars' worth of trucking business as a sideline.

Tomorrow, President Eisenhower will send Congress his recommendations for wiping out corruption in the labor-management field. Republican congressional leaders...who were briefed today at the White House...say that the President's measure will be stronger than the labor reform bill already introduced by Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts.

The Air Force told Congress today that this country needs more air power and "space power." Air Force Secretary Douglas and General White, Air Force chief of staff, testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee. Gneeral White said the Air Force has made a "firm request" to the Administration for an atom-powered plane.

The director of the United States space program...Dr. Keith Glennan... revealed today that 110 potential candidates have been selected for making this country's first space flight...orbiting the Earth. Dr. Glennan said that by late March, the number of potential "spacemen" would be further reduced to twelve. He did not say when the flight of a manned rocket would be made.

Today...in Norfolk, Virginia...a federal judge ruled that the Norfolk city council may not close the high schools there because of fear of violence.

Judge Walter Hoffman said that the City Council "perpetuated an evasive scheme to avert integration"...in voting to cut off funds to all classes above the sixth grade. The federal judge said he would issue an injunction...forbidding the planned closing of the schools on Monday. His ruling clears the way for the admission of 17 Negro students to six other schools, closed since last fall. These schools had been shut down under Virginia's "massive resistance" laws... which have since been declared unconstitutional in both the federal and state courts.

Secretary Dulles started out in his news conference as though he intended to leave the impression that there is no thaw in prospect for the cold war. If there is to be one, he said, it must be from the Russians "who live in the North where the icy blasts come from." He also denied that so far he had seen anything that led him to feel that the Russians have any genuine desire to end the cold war.

But before he finished he dropped hints of changes, slight or better than slight, that represented a willingness on his part to find common ground with the Russians.

Mr. Dulles does not like the word confederation as applied to Germany. It has connotations distasteful to him. And as the Russians use the word, he thinks it means perpetuating the partition of Germany. But he was willing to consider the concept of confederation as being of possible use in finding a German settlement, so long as the Germans are free to accept or not accept it and are free under it. If confederation can bring that to pass, it will have to be studied, he said, with all possible resourcefuleess.

But he did not carry his readiness to consider other means to the point of volunteering an alternative to free elections. Free elections, he reminded the newsmen, was the agreed method. The Soviet Union had agreed to it. He recalled that the negotiations at the Summit conference on this point had been the toughest he had been through with the Russians - one of whom was Khrushchev himself. Now, he went on, if they want to suggest another method than the one they agreed to, it is up to them to suggest the alternative not up to us. "We do not relinquish the agreement that we have merely for a wild goose chase looking for another method," he said.

Mr. Dulles cited Mikoyan's trade proposals to Under-Secretary Dillon as an instance in which the Russians seek their own advantage and offer nothing in return. "He made certain requests, almost demands" Mr. Dulles said. These would eliminate political control over strategic goods, give most favored nation treatment, open large credits and repeal the Johnson Act forbidding long-term credits to nations in default. "That" said Mr. Dulles, "is what we were supposed to do. Of course, on their side they would keep every particle of foreign trade absolutely under the strictest kind of political control. I don't think that kind of proposition is really designed to end the cold war. It would give the Soviet Union a very considerable advantage in prosecuting it."

The net effect of what Mr. Dulles said was to show flexibility. New methods and ideas are in the air. The Western allies obiviously are studying them. But he also showed an absence of gullibility. So far he has seen no signs of Russian flexibility, and he was asking for such signs. In other words, this was pre-conference shadow-boxing. It was lively and arresting. And its significance is that it foreshadows a conference.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Throughout Khrushchev's long speech there is a spirit of confidence. Of course, in his position it is well to appear confident. Still, he managed to talk for more than six hours. Whether we can have confidence in him is another matter. Secretary Dulles probably would paraphrase Cicero and say he is not "a man to whom you could safely stretch out your fingers in the dark."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 28, 1959-

This is the news:

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will go to Mexico next month for informal talks with President Lopez Mateos. (MAH-TAY'-OS) Mr. Eisenhower will be going at the invitation of the Mexican president...who proposed that their meeting take place at the resort city of Acapulco, (AH-KAH-POOL'-KOH) on the Pacific coast. The informal two-day conference will start on February 19th.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today denied the published report that a rift had developed between him and Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court. The story appeared this morning in the New York Herald-Tribune...and was written by Robert J. Donovan, head of the paper's Washington bureau. In 1956, Donovan wrote a book which was regarded as a semi-official account of Mr. Eisenhower's first term. He had access to the minutes of cabinet meetings and talked to members of the President's official family. Donovan said today that the relationship between President Eisenhower and Chief Justice Warren had become "cold and distant". In his article, he attributed this "cooling off" of an old friendship to Warren's stand on the issue of public school integration and later decisions of the Supreme Court...in which Warren concurred...invalidating certain laws dealing with subversion. Donovan said the President began by expressing mild incredulity over the Warren position and "finally wound up in a state of anger." Chief Justice Warren, he said, was "pained" that Mr. Eisenhower had not given the decision on integration more solid support. At his news conference today, the President labeled Donovan's story "irresponsible". The chief justice was his close friend, he said, and he knew of no personal rift of any kind. He was "quite sure" that if Warren had been unhappy, he was capable of telling him himself...and "didn't have to go to the public printer." Chief Justice Warren has issued a brief statement...saying that the story merited no comment, that it was "wholly without foundation."

In the field of foreign affairs, Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference that talks with Russia might be useful, if they showed signs of bearing fruit. In matters of principle, he said, the United States will not "retreat a single inch."

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the West must be on guard against Soviet proposals calculated to give "unwary people" a sense of relief.

The feeling, he said, that we no longer need to make the sacrifices that are called for is just what Russia wants. Mr. Dulles made the statement to reporters, after testifying in secret before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

In Virginia today, Governor Almond called for state legislation creating tuition grants for the private education of students who do not want to attend integrated schools. He also asked for repeal of the state law making school attendance compulsory. Almond made the requests in person before a special session of the Virginia legislature. He said that after the legislature had carried out his recommendations, he would appoint a commission to study the problem. Almond said he saw no legal way to avoid integration in the public schools. And he would not invoke his police powers, he said, "to thwart or override" the decrees of the duly constituted courts. The governor said he would invoke these powers to preserve law and order. Six schools are scheduled to open...on an integrated basis... next Monday in Norfolk. A federal judge has also ordered four Negro students admitted to a junior high school in Arlington County on Monday. And similar situations exist in Charlottesville and Front Royal.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his recommendations for labor reform...and Republican Senator Goldwater immediately introduced a bill to enact the recommendations into law. / In many respects, the Administration measure parallels the labor bill submitted earlier by Democratic Senator Kennedy. / They would both require secret ballots in the election of union officers, and they both prescribe fines and imprisonment for the fraudulent handling of union funds. / In both measures, convicted criminals would be barred from union office. / The Administration bill, however, calls for tighter restrictions on secondary boycotts, and would also prohibit picketing...designed to compel an employer to give a union bargaining rights. / This, to apply in those cases where the employes have indicated they do not want a union. / These last two proposals would involve amending the Taft-Hartley Act. / Senate Leader Johnson says the Administration measure will be given close study.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his semi-annual report on the mutual security program. In the six months ending last June 3-billion, 300-million dollars in aid---military and economic---went to 64 countries. Mr. Eisenhower called the program "the most economically effective means of holding and turning back the blandishments of Communism."

Today, the main speaker at the party congress in Moscow was the Chinese Communist premier, Chou En-lai...who said the bonds of friendship between Russia and Red China are "unbreakable". American "imperialists" and Yugoslav "revisionists", he said, are trying to divide Russia and China, but to no avail. Like Khrushchev yesterday, Chou En-lai predicted the ultimate defeat of capitalism in the field of peaceful competition. Soviet achievements, Chou said, will make this possible. He then read a message from the head of the Chinese Communist Party, Mao Tse-tung, praising the "correct" leadership of Khrushchev and calling Russia's new Seven Year Plan "additional proof" of Communist superiority. The Polish leader...Gomulka...told the congress that Poland "fully supports" the Soviet proposals on Berlin.

The ministerial council of the Baghdad Pact has concluded its meeting in Karachi, capital of Pakistan, by issuing the usual communique. The communique says that the threat of direct and indirect aggression in the Middle East has not diminished. And it "notes with concern" that international Communism is still trying to dominate the area. The communique makes no direct mention of Iraq...which has been a non-active member of the alliance since the revolution last July. However, a new center for training technicians in the use of nuclear energy will be set up in Iran, replacing a similar project in Iraq. No agreement was reached on the degree to which the United States will commit itself...militarily...to defend Turkey, Pakistan and Iran in the event of attack. Negotiations on that are continuing.

The French military headquarters in Algiers today reported 163 Algerian rebels killed in two actions...occurring in the past 24 hours. No French losses were announced.

There was more rioting today in Leopoldville...in the Belgian Congo. Colonial troops were called out to disperse African demonstrators, who had overpowered the regular police. At least 80 Africans were placed under arrest.

The Air Force...in Washington...has cleared up the apparent mystery of the Atlas missile fired from Cape Canaveral last night. It says the missile flew the "programmed range"...and that the ~~flight was "routine", and that the missile~~ test "achieved most of its objectives." The missile is believed...unofficially...to have traveled a little more than 4-thousand miles.

Edward R. Murrow: January 28, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

President Eisenhower's political troubles at home got more attention at his news conference today than the world crisis. He did comment briefly on Khrushchev's boast that the Soviet Union is mass-producing I.R.B.M.'s that can be pinpointed to their targets. Some people, he said, are prone to believe some Soviet statements one hundred percent, and dismiss others as bald-faced lies. He did not know precisely what Khrushchev had in mind, but as to our own missile production we should, he said, be proud of it, and not have "a hang-dog attitude of humiliation." We started late, he admitted, but are now "very remarkably successful".

5 ~~He also spoke up for the good to be expected from any international talks. What we need most of all, he declared, is a basic agreement on principles; then we could arrive at the different technical agreements, such as test banning and prevention of surprise attack, with their self-enforcing provisions. In this way confidence could be gained and in the end the armament load could be lightened.~~

But most of the questions dealt with the President's troubles at home. After denying the rift with Chief Justice Warren, he dealt with criticisms he had been receiving within his own Party. One is that his role as leader has not been decisive enough, and people did not know what Republicans were after. He retorted that he had been supporting moderate government, that most Republicans understand this, know what he means and agree. "Anyone who doesn't understand after reading two Republican platforms and six State of the Nations messages," he said, "must not have read as seriously as they should have."

Asked if he intended to call another Party meeting like the Mackinac Conference, he said he did not, but was not against one. Ever since November sixth, he said, he had called in Party leaders to study how better to put the Republican case. Did he believe he had been copying the New Deal? he was asked. "I have copied nothing in the world", he said, "but the basic principles of Americanism." He went back to Lincoln for his definition of good government, as being one whose "proper function is to do for people those things they annot do at all, or not so well, individually" and not to interfere in anything else.

Why, he was asked, had he not stuck to the agreement made with Senator Taft in 1952 to reach a sixty billion dollar budget in four years. Partly, he said, it was due to rising prices. But partly it was due to the great cost of Defense programs that have become necessary since the Korean War. The world situation, he said, had not necessarily become worse, but it takes a very large arsenal of complicated, destructive weapons to keep our deterrent power.

Then he was asked about complaints that he does not see enough politicians and legislators. He recalled that in 1953 he set out to have every member of Congress at the White House, just to make their acquaintance. "Time and again", he said, "I have insisted to leaders of both Parties that I am available when they think I am making a mistake or am about to make one. So far as I know, no one was ever denied a right to come to my office if there was any reasonable position on which to make the request."

And finally he was asked about how best to describe the American system. Ambassador Lodge had denied to the Soviet U.N. Ambassador that we are a capitalist country, but are a land of economic humanism. "I believe there is no such thing," the President said, "as pure democracy, or as pure competitive enterprise." The nearest thing to pure government is pure dictatorship, he said, but even in Russia that had yielded to the introduction of incentives not at first dreamed of. Mr. Eisenhower again took refuge in Lincoln. He would accept Lincoln's description of our government as being one of, for and by the people. He prayed, he said, that the government would always be responsive to the will of the people, and would not try to govern ~~the lives, ambitions and aspirations of the people.~~

11

The news conference was not as meaty as that of Secretary Dulles yesterday, perhaps because newsmen felt that Mr. Dulles had already spoken for the government on the world crisis. / So today they asked more political questions. / In doing this, they cited criticism of the President, and that put him on the defensive. That certainly was his position today.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

The politicians are girding up their loins. [redacted] David Hinshaw once said that politicians could save themselves much trouble and second-rate thought by adopting the policy of Mike Sutton, "a rare, vigorous, shaggy uninhibited lawyer of Dodge City." When Sutton ran for mayor, his platform [redacted] had only one plank: "Like Caesar's wife," he said, "I will be all things to all men."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 28, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will go to Mexico next month for informal talks with President Lopez Mateos. Mr. Eisenhower will be going at the invitation of the Mexican president..who proposed that their meeting take place at the resort city of Acapulco, on the Pacific coast. The informal two-day conference will start on February 19th.

President Eisenhower today denied the published report that a rift had developed between him and Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court. The story appeared this morning in the New York Herald-Tribune...and was written by Robert J. Donovan, head of the paper's Washington bureau. In 1956, Donovan wrote a book which was regarded as a semi-offical account of Mr. Eisenhower's first term. He had access to the minutes of cabinet meetings and talked to members of the President's official family. Donovan said today that the relationship between President Eisenhower and Chief Justice Warren had become "cold and distant." In his article, he attributed this "cooling off" of an old friendship to Warren's stand on the issue of public school integration and later decisions of the Supreme Court...in which Warren concurred...invalidating certain laws dealing with subversion. Donovan said the President began by expressing mild incredulity over the Warren position and "finally wound up in a state of anger." Chief Justice Warren, he said, was "pained" that Mr. Eisenhower had not given the decision on integration more solid support. At his news conference today, the President labeled Donovan's story "irresponsible." The chief justice was his close friend, he said, and he knew of no personal rift of any kind. He was "quite sure" that if Warren had been unhappy, he was capable of telling him himself...and "didn't have to go to the public printer." Chief Justice Warren has issued a brief statement...saying that the story merited no comment, that it was "wholly without foundation."

In the field of foreign affarrs, Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference that talks with Russia might be useful, if they showed signs of bearing fruit. In matters of principle, he said, the United States will not "retreat a single inch."

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the West must be on guard against Soviet proposals calculated to give "unwary people" a sense of relief. The feeling, he said, that we no longer need to make the sacrifices that are called for is just what Russia wants. Mr. Dulles made the statement to reporters after testifying in secret before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

In Virginia today, Governor Almond called for state legislation creating tuition grants for the private education of students who do not want to attend integrated schools. He also asked for repeal of the state law making school attendance compulsory. Almond made the requests in person before a special session of the Virginia legislature. He said that after the legislature had carried out his recommendations, he would appoint a commission to study the problem. Almond said he saw no legal way to avoid integration in the public schools. And he would not invoke his police powers, he said, "to thwart or override" the decrees of the duly constituted courts. The governor said he would invoke these powers to preserve law and order. Six schools are scheduled to open...on an integrated basis... next Monday in Norfolk. A federal judge has also ordered four Negro students admitted to a junior high school in Arlington County on Monday. And similar situations exist in Charlottesville and Front Royal.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his recommendations for labor reform...and Republican Senator Goldwater immediately introduced a bill to enact the recommendations into law. In many respects, the Administration measure parallels the labor bill submitted earlier by Democratic Senator Kennedy. They would both require secret ballots in the election of union officers and they both prescribe fines and imprisonment for the fraudulent handling of union funds. In both measures, convicted criminals would be barred from union office. The Administration bill, however, calls for tighter restrictions on secondary boycotts and would also prohibit picketing...designed to compel an employer to give a union bargaining rights. This, to apply in those cases where the employees have indicated they do not want a union. These last two proposals would involve amending the Taft-Hartley Act. Senate Leader Johnson says the Administration measure will be given close study.

Today, the main speaker at the party congress in Moscow was the Chinese Communist premier, Chou En-lai...who said the bonds of friendship between Russia and Red China are "unbreakable." American "imperialists" and Yugoslav "revisionists" he said, are trying to divide Russia and China but to no avail. Li e Khrushchev yesterday, Chou En-lai predicted the ultimate defeat of capitalism in the field of peaceful competition. Soviet achievements, Chou siid, will make this possible. He then read a message from the head of the Ch nese Communist Party, Mao Tse-tung, praising the "correct" leadership of Khrushchev and calling Russia's new Seven Year Plan "additional proof" of Communist superiority. The Polish leader...Gomulka...told the congress that Poland "fully supports" the Soviet proposals on Berlin.

The ministerial council of the Baghdad Pact has concluded its meeting in Karachi, capital of Pakistan, by issuing the usual communique. The communique says that the threat of direct and indirect aggression in the Middle East has not diminished. And it "notes with concern" that international Communism is still trying to dominate the area. The communique makes no direct mention of Iraq... which has been a non-active member of the alliance since the revolution last July. However, a new center for training technicians in the use of nuclear energy will be set up in Iran, replacing a similar project in Iraq. No agreement was reached on the degree to which the United States will commit itself... militarily...to defend Turkey, Pakistan and Iran in the event of attack. Negotiations on that are continuing.

The French military headquarters in Algiers today reported 163 Algerian rebels killed in two actions...occurring in the past 24 hours. No French losses were announced.

The Air Force...in Washington...has cleared up the apparent mystery of the Atlas missile fired from Cape Canaveral last night. It says the missile flew the "programmed range" and that the test "achieved most of its objectives." The missile is believed...unofficially....to have traveled a little more than 4-thousand miles.

President Eisenhower's political troubles at home got more attention at his news conference today than the world crisis. He did comment briefly on Khrushchev's boast that the Soviet Union is mass-producing I.R.B.M.'s that can be pinpointed to their targets. Some people, he said, are prone to believe some Soviet statements one hundred percent, and dismiss others as bald-faced lies. He did not know precisely what Khrushchev had in mind, but as to our own missile production we should, he said, be proud of it, and not have "a hang-dog attitude of humiliation." We started late, he admitted, but are now "very remarkably successful."

But most of the questions dealt with the President's troubles at home. After denying the rift with Chief Justice Warren, he dealt with criticisms he had been receiving within his own Party. One is that his role as leader has not been decisive enough, and people did not know what Republicans were after. He retorted that he had been supporting moderate government, that most Republicans understand this, know what he means and agree. "Anyone who doesn't understand after reading two Republican platforms and six State of the Nations messages," he said, "must not have read as seriously as they should have."

Asked if he intended to call another Party meeting like the Mackinac Conference, he said he did not, but was not against one. Ever since November 6th, he said, he had called in Party leaders to study how better to put the Republican case. Did he believe he had been copying the New Deal? he was asked. "I have copied nothing in the world," he said, "but the basic principles of Americanism." He went back to Lincoln for his definition of good government, as being one whose "proper function is to do for people those things they cannot do at all, or not so well, individually" and not to interfere in anything else.

Then he was asked about complaints that he does not see enough politicians and legislators. He recalled that in 1953 he set out to have every member of Congress at the White House, just to make their acquaintance. "Time and again," he said, "I have insisted to leaders of both Parties that I am available when they think I am making a mistake or am about to make one. So far as I know, no one was ever denied a right to come to my office if there was any reasonable position on which to make the request."

The news conference was not as meaty as that of Secretary Dulles yesterday, perhaps because newsmen felt that Mr. Dulles had alreay spoken for the government on the world crisis. So today they asked more political questions. In doing this, they cited criticism of the President and that put him on the defensive. That certainly was his position today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a momemt with the word for today. But first a word from George Bryan about the weather.

MURROW: The politicians are girding up their loins. David Hinshaw once said that politicians could save themselves much trouble and second-rate thought by adopting the policy of Mike Sutton, "a rare, vigorous, shaggy, uninhibited lawyer of Dodge City." When Sutton ran for mayor, his platform had only one plank: "Like Caesar's wife," he said, "I will be all things to all men."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 29, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of Defense McElroy conceded today that...two years from now... Russia will have more intercontinental ballistic missiles than the United States. / McElroy made the statement in answering questions put to him by the Senate preparedness subcommittee, headed by Democratic Senator Lyndon Johnson. / Johnson had called the hearings...saying that Congress wanted "a plain, unvarnished, unadorned accounting of American missile strength." / McElroy said that while it was true, that Russia in two years would be ahead in the production of long-range ballistic missiles, we do not intend to try to match them "missile for missile." / The United States, he said, is working on a diversified capability---a variety of weapons.

—>

He said that...right now...neither country has an operational I.C.B.M. and that American superiority over Russia in heavy bombers is "very marked". McElroy testified that our first I.C.B.M. squadron will be set up at the Vandenberg Air Force Base in June. At that time, this squadron...consisting of about ten missiles...will have "some" operational capability. McElroy acknowledged that Russia today has an I.C.B.M. more powerful than any produced in the United States...but said our Atlas missile has "an adequate thrust." It does no good, he said, to overshoot. He said that the shorter range Polaris missile...designed for launching from submarines... is expected to become operational late next year. And he indicated that this was better than had been expected. McElroy told the senators that, at present, we have no detection system for warning of an enemy I.C.B.M. attack, but one is being built. He said the 41-billion-dollar defense budget, submitted by President Eisenhower, has the support of the Joint Chiefs of Staff...although, he said, each member of the staff has some reservations, about the amount earmarked for his particular service. This was illustrated by the testimony given by Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations. Burke said the budget does not endanger national security...but that the Navy request had been cut by two and a half billion dollars. And he indicated that more money would have to be spent later to make it up. / Democratic Senator Symington said...after hearing today's testimony...that McElroy had contradicted the recent statement attributed to Vice President Nixon, that the United States was overtaking Russia in the missile field.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a farm message...calling for lower price supports. / Chairman Cooley, of the House Agriculture Committee, immediately called it an "anti-farmer" program. / And Speaker Rayburn, a farmer himself, expressed doubt that it would pass. / Mr. Eisenhower told Congress that the price support program "simply has not worked." He said it helped create an ever larger surplus and, in most cases, served the interests of the "big operator". / He suggested that the farm surpluses be used as an instrument of peace. / The President said he was taking steps to explore...with other countries that have surpluses... the "practical means" of using this food to reinforce peace, and assist in the well-being of friendly peoples throughout the world.

United States Ambassador Thompson returned to Moscow today, after consultations in Washington.

Foreign Minister Gromyko boasted today that Soviet power had "most probably" made a new world war impossible. He claimed that if the Communist system were able by its growing might to guarantee the impossibility of global war, this alone would mean the "death knell" of capitalism. Gromyko spoke at the Russian party congress, now in its third day. He called again for solution of the Berlin crisis on Russia's terms. And he hinted that if the West does not cooperate in drawing up an over-all German peace treaty, Russia might sign a separate treaty with the East German regime.

In Washington, the government has ~~announced a plan for refinancing~~ nearly 15-billion dollars of the national debt. Holders of maturing government securities in that amount would be offered new issues in exchange. The new issues would consist of either one-year certificates or three-year notes. The notes would pay 4 percent interest. The one-year certificates would bear an ~~interest rate of three and three-quarters percent.~~

Democratic Senator Douglas today introduced a broad civil rights bill aimed at insuring integrated public schools. Fourteen other senators joined Douglas in sponsoring the measure. Under one of its major provisions, schools which want to integrate but have had their funds cut off by the state would receive federal money to help them operate. A civil rights bill introduced by Senator Johnson contains no such provision.

In Norfolk, Virginia, the school board announces that six Norfolk schools closed since last fall will be reopened Monday on an integrated basis. This will mark the first time in Virginia history that Negro students have attended previously all-white schools. Seventeen Negroes are involved.

In Baltimore, a federal judge today postponed the mandatory integration of two public schools in Charlottesville, Virginia. The postponement was granted by Judge Sobeloff, of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, at the request of the Charlottesville school board. Sobeloff expressed conviction that the school board wants to comply with the law but needs time to carry out its program. The two Charlottesville schools were closed last September...after a federal court ordered the admission of 12 Negro students. The schools are now expected to open on a segregated basis.

It is now possible to distinguish between two issues in the crisis over school integration. / There is the issue of the right of negro children to be educated in the same schools with white children. / The Supreme Court has laid down the right of negroes to be educated in the same classes with white children, if the schools are supported by public funds. / And there is the right of white children to attend schools from which negroes are excluded. Governor Almond of Virginia is now fighting for this other right.

He told the special session of the Virginia Assembly that "the right to associate, carries with it the right not to associate." / "No parent" he said, "is under any legal compulsion, from any source, to send a child to a racially mixed school."

That has not been his fight all along. He, too, sought to keep negro children out of white schools, doing so through laws that closed white schools, to which negroes were admitted, laws that have now been found unconstitutional. In other words, he has lost one issue, but continues the fight for the other. But he is not fighting with defiance, as Governor Faubus did, in calling out the militia to prevent the entry of negro children to school premises. / He proposes a program to assure Virginian children adequate instruction through private tuition grants. He urges the repeal of the compulsory school attendance law. This would give parents the option of sending their children to integrated schools, or keeping them out, and receiving state aid in paying the tuition in private schools.

This is a retreat for Governor Almond. If the Assembly goes along it will be a retreat for Virginia, as well as for all southern forces resisting the integration ruling of the Supreme Court. It had been thought probable that the Governor might continue his fight against de-segregation by trying new ways of manipulating the pupil placement law.

In Alabama, where the device has kept all negro children from white schools so far, the Supreme Court has ruled that the placement law is constitutional so long as placements are not made on the ground of race. So far, no appeal has reached the federal courts in Alabama calling for a ruling on whether refusal to place negroes in white schools in specific cases was on racial grounds.

But Virginia has a pupil placement law, and it did seek to exclude negroes under the guise of other disabilities than race. But it lost in some of the cases that negro parents carried to the federal courts. Next week, several Virginia schools will have to accept negroes whose qualifications have been approved by the courts.

Governor Almond made it clear in his analysis yesterday that the student placement law is no way to impose segregation. All that the placement laws can do, is to reduce the number of negroes introduced into white schools. In this way the Supreme Court has sanctioned a slow tempo in the advance ordered toward integration. But the principle of non-discrimination where public funds are concerned has not been changed.

In Virginia, in some regions, many parents will not withdraw their children from schools into which negroes are to be admitted. But throughout the state, so long as compulsory attendance is not the law, some will, and the school will suffer. Attendance will fall. Governor Almond even proposed that the state have the right to sell school property fallen into disuse. But he also proposed that the state continue to pay its share of public school salaries, no matter how much attendance falls. He did ask for re-examination of the constitutional requirement in Virginia, that the state maintain an adequate public school system. But he did not recommend outright that it be repealed. He admitted that Virginia schooling will suffer severely, but the weight of his influence is to keep the schools going, obey the federal courts and maintain education as well as possible through tuition grants.

A notable feature of Governor Almond's presentation yesterday was his deliberate and conscientious refusal to resist the courts by using his police power. He said bluntly that he does not have the power to negate the federal courts. And the power that he does have, to preserve order, he will use. He even asked an immediate strengthening of the law punishing anyone threatening to blow up a church or school.

All in all, Governor Almond took a moderate line. "A happy surprise," the Washington Post and Times Herald called it today. The language of his address was not so moderate, but he faced the facts and urged the state to face them, which is what matters.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

[~~Governor Almond holds respect for law.~~] Recently a Southern "moderate", Brooks Hays, was led to predict that the day would soon come when, he said, we might appropriately paraphrase what Henry W. Grady wrote more than seventy years ago. "There was a South of fears and misgivings; that South is dead. There is a South of human kindness and of law, of justice and of peace."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 29, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of Defense McElroy conceded today that...two years from now... Russia will have more intercontinental ballistic missiles than the United States. McElory made the statement in answering questions put to him by the Senate preparedness subcommittee, headed by Democratic Senator Lyndon Johnson. Johnson had called the hearings...saying that Congress wanted "a plain, unvarnished, unadorned accounting of American missile strength." McElroy said that while it was true that Russia in two years would be ahead in the production of long-range ballistic missiles, we do not intend to try to match them "missile for missile." The United States, he said, is working on a diversified capability---a variety of weapons. He said that...right now...neither country has an operational I.C.B.M. and that American superiority over Russia in heavy bombers is "very marked." McElroy testified that our first I.C.B.M. squadron will be set up at the Vandenberg Air Force Base in June. At that time, this squadron...consisting of about ten missiles...will have "some" operational capability. McElroy acknowledged that Russia today has an I.C.B.M. more powerful than any produced in the United States, but said our Atlas missile has "an adequate thrust." It does no good, he said, to overshoot. He said that the shorter range Polaris missile...designed for launching from submarines...is expected to become operational late next year. And he indicated that this was better than had been expected. McElroy told the senators that at present we have no detection system for warning of any enemy I.C.B.M. attack, but one is being built. He said the 41 billion dollar defense budget submitted by President Eisenhower has the support of the Joint Chiefs of Staff...although, he said, each member of the staff has some reservations about the amount earmarked for his particular service. This was illustrated by the testimony given by Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations. Burke said the budget does not endanger national security...but that the Navy request had been cut by two and a half billion dollars. And he indicated that more money would have to be spent later to make it up. Democratic Senator Symington said...after hearing today's testimony...that McElroy had conrradicted the recent statement attributed to Vice President Nixon that the United States was overtaking Russia in the missile field.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a farm message...calling for lower price supports. Chairman Cooley of the House Agriculture Committee immediately called it an "anti-farmer" program. And Speaker Rayburn, a farmer himself, expressed doubt that it would pass. Mr. Eisenhower told congress that the price support ptogram "simply has not worked." He said it helped create an even larger surplus and in most cases served the interests of the "big operator." He suggested that the farm surpluses be used an an instrument of peace. The President said he was taking steps to explore...with other countries that have surpluses...the "practical means" of using this food to reinforce peace and assist in the well-being of friendly peoples throughout the world.

United States Ambassador Thompson returned to Moscow today after consultations in Washington.

Foreign Minister Gromyko boasted today that Soviet power had "most probably" made a new world war impossible. He claimed that if the Communist system were able by its growing might to guarantee the impossibility of global war, this alone would mean the "death knell" of capitalism. Gromyko spoke at the Russian party congress, now in its third day. He called again for solution of the Berlin crisis---on Russia's terms. And he hinted that if the West does not cooperate in drawing up an over-all German peace treaty, Russia might sign a separate treaty with the East German regime.

Democratic Senator Douglas today introduced a broad civil rights bill aimed at insuring integrated public schools. Fourteen other senators joined Douglas in sponsoring the measure. Under one of its major provisions, schools which want to integrate but have had their funds cut off by the state would receive federal money to help them operate. A civil rights bill introduced by Senator Johnson contains no such provision.

In Norfolk, Virginia, the school board announces that six Norfolk schools closed since last fall will be reopened Monday on an integrated basis. This will mark the first time in Virginia history that Negro students have attended previously all-white schools. Seventeen Negros are involved.

It is now possible to distinugish between two issues in the crisis over school integration. There is the issue of the right of negro children to be educated in the same schools with white children. The Supreme Court has laid down the right of negroes to be educated in the same classes with white children if the schools are supported by public funds. And there is the right of white children to attend schools from which negroes are excluded. Governor Almond of Virginia is now fighting for this other right.

He told the special session of the Virginia Assembly that "the right to associate carries with it the right not to associate." "No parent" he said, "is under any legal compulsion from any source to send a child to a racially mixed school."

That has not been his fight all along. He, too, sought to keep negro children out of white schools, doing so through laws that closed white schools to which negroes were admitted, laws that have now been found unconstitutional. In other words, he has lost one issue, but continues the fight for the other. But he is not fighting with defiance, as Governor Faubus did in calling out the militia to prevent the entry of negro children to school premises. He proposes a program to assure Virginian children adequate instruction through private tuition grants. He urges the repeal of the compulsory school attendance law. This would give parents the option of sending their children to integrated schools, or keeping them out, and receiving state aid in paying the tuition in private schools.

This is a retreat for Governor Almond. If the Assembly goes along it will be a retreat for Virginia, as well as for all southern forces resisting the integration ruling of the Supreme Court. It had been thought probable that the Governor might continue his fight against de-segregation by trying new ways of manipulating the pupil placement law.

In Alabama, where the device has kept all negro children from white schools so far, the Supreme Court has ruled that the placement law is constitutional so long as placements are not made on the ground of race. So far, no appeal has reached the federal courts in Alabama calling for a ruling on whether refusal to place negroes in white schools in specific cases was on racial grounds.

But Virginia has a pupil placement law, and it did seek to exclude negroes under the guise of other disabilities than race. But it lost in some of the cases that negro parents carried to the federal courts. Next week, several Virginia schools will have to accept negroes whose qualifications have been approved by the courts.

Governor Almond made it clear in his analysis yesterday that the student placement law is no way to impose segregation. All that the placement laws can do, is to reduce the number of negroes introduced into white schools. In this way the Supreme Court has sanctioned a slow tempo in the advance ordered toward integration. But the principle of non-discrimination where public funds are concerned has not been changed.

In Virginia, in some regions, many parents will not withdraw their children from schools into which negroes are to be admitted. But throughout the state, so long as compulsory attendance is not the law, some will, and the school will suffer. Attendance will fall. Governor Almond even proposed that the state have the right to sell school property fallen into disuse. But he also proposed that the state continue to pay its share of public school salaries, no matter how much attendance falls. He did ask for re-examination of the constitutional requirement in Virginia, that the state maintain an adequate public school system. But he did not recommend outright that it be repealed. He admitted that Virginia schooling will suffer severely, but the weight of his influence is to keep the schools going, obey the federal courts and maintain education as well as possible through tuition grants.

A notable feature of Governor Almond's presentation yesterday was his deliberate and conscientious refusal to resist the courts by using his police power. He said bluntly that he does not have the power to negate the federal courts. And the power that he does have, to preserve order, he will use. He even asked an immediate strengthening of the law punishing anyone threatening to blow up a church or school.

All in all, Governor Almond took a moderate line. "A happy surprise," the Washington Post and Times Herald called it today. The language of his address was not so moderate, but he faced the facts and urged the state to face them, which is what matters.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Recently a Southern "moderate" Brooks Hays, was led to predict that the day would soon come when, he said, we might appropriately paraphrase what Henry W. Grady wrote more than seventy years ago. "There was a South of fear and misgivings; that South is dead. There is a South of human kindness and of law, of justice and of peace."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 30, 1959

This is the news:

A Danish ship has radioed that it is sinking in the North Atlantic with 130 persons on board. The vessel is identified as the Hans Hedtoft, a combination passenger ship and freighter of about 3-thousand tons. It left Copenhagen on January 7...bound for Greenland...and was returning to Denmark on its maiden run. The first S.O.S....sent out nearly nine hours ago...said that the ship had struck an iceberg, 37 miles off the southern tip of Greenland, and that the engine room was "taking a lot of water." Other ships in the area...including a German trawler...immediately headed for the scene. The United States Air Force ordered its air-sea rescue squadron at Goose Bay to give all possible assistance. Another distress

Hayftoft

call...received from the ship four hours ago...said, "Slowly sinking. Need immediate assistance." A late report, relayed from Copenhagen, says that an Air Force helicopter is hovering above the ship. The German trawler radioes that it is alongside. ~~that it has sighted a blip on its radar screen. "Distance one mile. In process of search."~~ The American Coast Guard cutter Campbell is also on its way...but probably cannot reach the scene before tomorrow. A Coast Guard spokesman, here in New York, says rough weather will make the transfer of passengers and crew a hazardous operation. Low clouds are blanketing the area, and icing conditions are reported. #

Senator Green of Rhode Island resigned today, as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. At the age of ninety-one, Green is the oldest person ever to serve in Congress. Recently he underwent an operation for the removal of a cataract from his left eye. In a letter to Senate Majority Leader Johnson...explaining his resignation... he said, "I am forced to conclude, that it will be a long while before my eyesight has been fully restored." He ~~was relinquishing~~ giving up the chairmanship, ~~he said, in what he deemed to be the best interests of his country, the United States Senate, and the Foreign Relations Committee.~~ He remains a committee member. Green took the action over the unanimous protest of the committee. One of its members...Senator Mike Mansfield...said, "This has been a sad morning." Senator Johnson issued a statement describing Green as one who served his country "with distinction and honor." No action has been taken on the selection of a new chairman. But under the seniority system, the chairmanship presumably will go to Senator Fulbright...who has been, at times, an outspoken critic of Administration policy. Only today...at a news conference...Fulbright called on the Administration to get off "dead center"...in its dealings with Moscow and Peiping.

Dr. Keith Glennan, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said today that the American space program should be carried out "with the same sense of urgency we had during the war." Dr. Glennan testified before the Senate preparedness committee. He said that Russia is ahead in space exploration...possibly by a year and a half in the development of rocket thrust. But except for propulsion, he said, "I don't think we're back of the Russians at all." Dr. Glennan said that...six years from now...he expects the United States to have a rocket powerful enough to send a man to the moon. Another scientist, Dr. William Pickering, said there is "nothing phony" about Russia's claim that it has placed a rocket in orbit around the sun. Dr. Homer Stewart, planning director for the civilian space agency, said the Lunik shot demonstrates that the Russians have developed a guidance system capable of directing a long-range hydrogen missile to its target. And Dr. Wernher von Braun, director of the Army ballistic missile program, agreed. Braun testified that it would take a year for the United States to catch up with Russia in the space contest---even if the Russians in that time stood perfectly still.

The House Armed Services Committee today approved a four-year extension of the draft.

President Eisenhower said today that any cut in foreign aid spending would require the appropriation of more money for our own security forces. Mr. Eisenhower spoke at a meeting sponsored by the Institute of International Education. The United States, he said, welcomes exchange students.. and persons in all walks of life who serve as ambassadors of good will.

President DeGaulle today renewed his invitation to Algerian rebel leaders to come to France and discuss arrangements for a cease-fire. The war in Algeria, he said, can lead to nothing but "useless miseries". DeGaulle made the new offer in his first radio "fireside chat" to the French people since becoming president. He made the original offer in October...when he invited the rebel leaders to come to Paris under a guarantee of safe conduct. He also called on rebel forces in Algeria "to show the white flag." Leaders of the revolt turned the offer down on grounds that DeGaulle was demanding surrender. ~~And they insisted that~~ any pease talks be held on neutral soil. ~~In his broadcast today,~~ DeGaulle did ~~not propose a political settlement. But he said that if~~ the Algerians followed his program of social and economic reform, "one would see...without doubt...the elements of a political solution." He said France must put its ~~economy in order. "We are doing it,"~~ he said, "to the astonishment of the whole world."

In Moscow today, the main speaker at the 21st Party Congress was Mikhail Suslov, a member of the powerful ~~ruling~~ party presidium. / Suslov predicted that capitalism...in his phrase..."will sink under its own crimes"...and, at the same time, he denounced the "crimes" of the so-called "anti-party" group of former Soviet leaders. / ~~Suslov was close to Stalin.~~ There is some ~~theorizing that if he had not joined in the chorus of denunciation...he, too, might have been removed from a position of power.~~ Stat

The official Yugoslav newspaper Borba, today accused Premier Khrushchev of meddling in Yugoslavia's internal affairs. / Khrushchev told the party congress on Tuesday that Yugoslav "revisionists" were "denying the need for international proletarian solidarity"...and were trying to split Russia and Red China. / The newspaper characterized this charge as "silly".

My colleague...Alexander Kendrick...has been making a study of the Khrushchev speech, and is ready with some observations. / Kendrick's base of operations is London...and so we go there now for his report.

(Tape runs 4:15
Ends on cue:"Z---to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was Alexander Kendrick...who has been examining some of the fine print in Khrushchev's speech to the 21st Party Congress, earlier ~~this~~ THIS week.

Back in a moment Irvin Bryant

Khrushchev made political proposals...but he also outlined an ambitious agricultural and industrial program for the Russian people. Tolstoy said, "If the arrangement of society is bad and a small number of people have power over the majority and oppress it, every victory over nature will inevitably serve only to increase that power and oppression."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A Danish ship has radioed that it is sinking in the North Atlantic with 130 persons on board. The vessel is identified as the Hans Hedtoft, a combination passenger ship and freighter of about 3-thousand tons. It left Copenhagen on January 7...bound for Greenland...and was returning to Denmark on its maiden run. The first S.O.S...sent out nearly nine hours ago...said that the ship had struck an iceberg, 37 miles off the southern tip of Greenland, and that the engine room was "taking a lot of water." Other ships in the area...including a German trawler...immediately headed for the scene. The United States Air Force ordered its air-sea rescue squadron at Goose Bay to give all possible assistance. Another distress call...received from the ship four hours ago...said, "Slowly sinking. Need immediate assistance." A late report, relayed from Copenhagen says that an Air Force helicopter is hovering above the ship. The German trawler radioes that it is alongside. The American Coast Guard cutter Campbell is also on its way...but probably cannot reach the scene before tomorrow. A Coast Guard spokesman, here in New York, says rough weather will make the transfer of passengers and crew a hazardous operation. Low clouds are blanketing the area and icing conditions are reported.

Senator Green of Rhode Island resigned today as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. At the age of ninety-one, Green is the oldest person ever to serve in Congress. Recently he underwent an operation for the removal of a cataract from his left eye. In a letter to Senate Majority Leader Johnson...explaining his resignation... he said, "I am forced to conclude that it will be a long while before my eyesight has been fully restored." He remains a committee member. Green took the action over the unanimous protest of the committee. No action has been taken on the selection of a new chairman. But under the seniority system, the chairmanship presumably will go to Senator Fulbright...who has been, at times, an outspoken critic of Administration policy. Only today...at a news conference Fulbright called on the Administration to get off "dead center"...in its dealings with Moscow and Peiping.

Dr. Keith Glennan, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said today that the American space program should be carried out "with the same sense of urgency we had during the war." Dr. Glennan testified before the Senate preparedness committee. He said that Russia is ahead in space exploration possibly by a year and a half in the development of rocket thrust. But except for propulsion, he said, "I don't think we're back of the Russians at all." Dr. Glennan said that...six years from now, he expects the United States to have a rocket powerful enough to send a man to the moon. Another scientist, Dr. William Pickering, said there is "nothing phony" about Russia's claim that it has placed a rocket in orbit around the sun. Dr. Homer Stewart, planning director for the civilian space agency, said the Lunik shot demonstrates that the Russians have developed a guidance system capable of directing a long-range hydrogen missile to its target. And Dr. Wernher von Braun, director of the Army ballistic missile program, agreed. Braun testified that it would take a year for the United States to catch up with Russia in the space contest...even if the Russians in that time stood perfectly still.

The House Armed Services Committee today approved a four-year extension of the draft.

President Eisenhower said today that any cut in foreign aid spending would require the appropriation of more money for our own security forces. Mr. Eisenhower spoke at a meeting sponsoredby the Institute of International Education. The United States, he said, welcomes exchange students...and persons in all walks of life who serve as ambassadors of good will.

President DeGaulle today renewed his invitation to Algerian rebel leaders to come to France and discuss arrangements for a cease-fire. The war in Algeria, he said, can lead to nothing but "useless miseries." DeGaulle made the new offer in his first radio "fireside chat" to the French people since becoming president. He made the original offer in October...when he invited the rebel leaders to come to Paris under a guarantee of safe conduct. He also called on rebel forces in Algeria "to show the white flag." Leaders of the revolt turned the offer down on grounds that DeGaulle was demanding surrender.

In Moscow today, the main speaker at the 21st Party Congress was Mikhail Suslov, a member of the powerful party presidium. Suslov predicted that capitalism...in his phrase..."will sink under its own crimss"...and, at the same time, he denounced the crimes of the so-called "anti-party" group of former Soviet leaders.

The official Yugoslav newspaper Borba today accused Premier Khrushchev of meddling in Yugoslavia's internal affairs. Khrushchev told the party congress on Tuesday that Yugoslav revisionists were "denying the need for international proletarian solidarity"...and were trying to split Russia and Red China. The newspaper characterized this charge as "silly."

My colleague...Alexander Kendrick...has been making a study of the Khrushchev speech and is ready with some observations. Kendrick's base of operations is London...and so we go there now for his report.

KENDRICK: Who is the Lenin of today? This is the question that in effect has been asked from the rostrum of the 21st Soviet Communist Party Congress and 1300 voices have answered in unison, "You are, comrade Khrushchev." With his seven year economic plan which he says will enable the Russians to catch up with the United States in 1972, with the continuing attacks made at the Congress upon the so-called anti-party group of Molotov, Malenkov and Kaganovich, with his new diatribes against the Tito heresy, with the open obeisance of Wladyslaw Gomulka of Poland and the brother act of Chou en-Lai of Red China, the first secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, Nikita Khrushchev, has this week unmistakably consolidated his position not only as boss inside Russia, but also as ideological leader of the Communist block. But, despite his paramount position, it is not taken as definitive here that Khrushchev is the unchallenged boss inside Russia or the unchallenged ideological leader of the block. For, after the first secretary's own long speech, stalwart after party stalwart called for the public capitulation of the Molotiv, Malenkov group and as of tonight, they have not capitualted, though, of course, further secret proceedings of the Congress, like those at which Khrushchev three years ago denounced Stalin are not excluded. And the shadow of old-line Stalinist Suslov hovered large over Khrushchev's shoulder at the Congess today. Moreover, while Khrushchev and Chou pledged undying devotion to the same cause, there is belief here that Sino-Soviet ideological differences have not been buried. Khrushchev in fact openly acknowledged reports of such differences. True, he did so only in order to deny them, but he admitted that Soviet and Chinese methods of building socialism were in many respects dissimiliar. And, the Chinese themselves last month, had elimanated the need for a public rebuke by confessing that their much publicized commune plan still left the achievement of communism to the distant future instead of bringing true communism to China sooner than to Russia. Mr. Chou also recognized the leadership of the Soviet Union in the communist block, recognition which is necessary if the Chinese want to continue receiving Soviet economic aid. But, on the other side of the ledger is the fact that China's ideological chiefton, Mao Tse-tung, who has claims to being the modern Lenin himself shows not to attend the Soviet Party Congress, though he recently retired as head of state in order to devote himself to party matters. Moreover, the only new and unexpected item in Khrushchev's six hour oration was his proposal for an atom free zone in the Far East including China. Now, this could be regarded as the price the Communists are willing to pay in order to obtain American nuclear withdrawal from Formosa,

Japan and the Pacific Island bases. The United States with its conventional forces would then be left facing far greater Chinese conventional forces, hence, an atom free zone in the Far East might even be desirable to the Chineee. But, if so, it's regarded here as strange that the proposal was not made by Peiping but by Moscow. Moreover, the Chinese have announced their intention of becoming an atomic power, so Mr. Khrushchev's suggestion that China be atom free could also be the expression of Russian apprehension at the thought of nuclear arms in Chinese hands. Taking into account the centuries old history of Soviet-Chinese rivalry, the present struggle for dominant influence in Mongolia and North Korea, the resettlement of two million Chinese in border and buffer areas, the clash between the commune system and the Soviet system, this interpretation has much to support it. And, if the Chinese themselves do want to be left out of that top bracket - the International Nuclear Club, it's strange again that Chou en-Lai did not say so when his turn came to speak or that Mao Tse-tung preserved an icy silence on the subject in his message of (indistinct) greetings to the Lenin of today, though not necessarily of tomorrow.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alexander Kendrick who has been examining some of the fine print in Khrushchev's speech to the 21st Party Congress that he made earlier this week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Khrushchev made political proposals...but he also outlined an ambitious agricultural and industrial program for the Russian people. Tolstoy said, "If the arrangement of society is bad and a small number of people have power over the majority and oppress it, every victory over nature will inevitably serve only to increase that power and oppression."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, January 30, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: Kendrick's base of operation is London, so we go there now for his report.

KENDRICK: Who is the Lenin of today? This is the question that in effect has been asked from the rostrum of the 21st Soviet Communist Party Congress, and 1300 voices have answered in unison, "You are, comrade Khrushchev." With his seven year economic plan which he says will enable the Russians to catch up with the United States in 1972, with the continuing attacks made at the Congress upon the so-called anti-party group of Molotov, Malenkov and Kaganovich, with his new diatribes against the Tito heresy, with the open obeisance of Wladyslaw Gomulka of Poland and the brother act of Chou en-Lai of Red China, the first secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, Nikita Khrushchev, has this week unmistakably consolidated his position not only as boss inside Russia, but also as ideological leader of the Communist block. But, despite his paramount position, it is not taken as difinitive here that Khrushchev is the unchallenged boss inside Russia or the unchallenged ideological leader of the block. For, after the first secretary's own long speech, stalwart after party stalwart called for the public capitulation of the Molotov, Malenkov group and as of tonight, they have not capitulated, though, of course, further secret proceedings of the Congress, like those at which Khrushchev three years ago denounced Stalin are not excluded. And the shadow of old-line Stalinist Suslov hovered large over Khrushchev's shoulder at the Congress today. Moreoever, while Khrushchev and Chou pledged undying devotion to the same cause, there is belief here that Sino-Soviet ideological differences have not been buried. Khrushchev in fact openly acknowledged reports of such differences. True, he did so only in order to deny them, but he admitted that Soviet and Chinese methods of building socialism were in many respects dissimiliar. And, the Chinese themselves last month, had eliminated the need for a public rebuke by confessing that their much publicized commune plan still left the achievement of communism to the distant future instead of bringing true communism to China sooner than to Russia. Mr. Chou also recognized the laedership of the Soviet Union in the communist block, recognitition which is necessary if the Chinese want to continue receiving Soviet economic aid. But, on the other side of the ledger is the fact that China's ideological chiefton, Mao Tse-tung, who has claims to being the modern Lenin himself shows not to attend the Soviet Party Congress, though he recently retired as head of state in order to devote himself to party matters. Moreover, the only new and unexpected item in Khrushchev's six hour oration was his proposal for an atom free zone in the Far East including China. Now, this could be regarded as the price the Communists are willing to pay in order to obtain American nuclear withdrawal from Formosa, Japan and the Pacific Island basis. The United States with its conventional forces would then be left facing far greater Chinese conventional forces, hence, an atom free zone in the Far East might even be desirable to the Chinese. But, if so, it's regarded here as strange that the proposal was not made by Peiping but by Moscow. Moreover, the Chinese have announced their intention of becoming an atomic power, so Mr. Khrushchev's suggestion that China be atom free could also be the expression of Russian apprehension at the thought of nuclear arms in Chinese hands. Taking into account the centuries old history of Soviet-Chinese rivalry, the present struggle for dominant influence in Mongolia and North Korea, the resettlement of two million Chinese in border and buffer areas, the clash between the commune system and the Soviet system, this interpretation has much to support it. And, if the Chinese themselves do want to be left out of that top bracket - the International Nuclear Club, it's strange again that Chou en-Lai did not say so when his turn came to speak or that Mao Tse-tung preserved an icy silence on the subject in his message of (indistinct) greetings to the Lenin of today, though not necessarily of tomorrow.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alexander Kendrick, who has been examining some of the fine print in Khrushchev's speech to the 21st Party Congress that he made earlier this week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

PT/N.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A Danish ship has radioed that it is sinking in the North Atlantic with 130 persons on board. The vessel is identified as the Hans Hedtoft, a combination passenger ship and freighter of about 3-thousand tons. It left Copenhagen on January 7...bound for Greenland...and was returning to Denmark on its maiden run. The first S.O.S...sent out nearly nine hours ago...said that the ship had struck an iceberg, 37 miles off the southern tip of Greenland, and that the engine room was "taking a lot of water." Other ships in the area...including a German trawler...immediately headed for the scene. The United States Air Force ordered its air-sea rescue squadron at Goose Bay to give all possible assistance. Another distress call...received from the ship four hours ago...said, "Slowly sinking. Need immediate assistance." A late report, relayed from Copenhagen says that an Air Force helicopter is hovering above the ship. The German trawler radioes that it is alongside. The American Coast Guard cutter Campbell is also on its way...but probably cannot reach the scene before tomorrow. A Coast Guard spokesman, here in New York, says rough weather will make the transfer of passengers and crew a hazardous operation. Low clouds are blanketing the area and icing conditions are reported.

Senator Green of Rhode Island resigned today as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. At the age of ninety-one, Green is the oldest person ever to serve in Congress. Recently he underwent an operation for the removal of a cataract from his left eye. In a letter to Senate Majority Leader Johnson...explaining his resignation... he said, "I am forced to conclude that it will be a long while before my eyesight has been fully restored." He remains a committee member. Green took the action over the unanimous protest of the committee. No action has been taken on the selection of a new chairman. But under the seniority system, the chairmanship presumably will go to Senator Fulbright...who has been, at times, an outspoken critic of Administration policy. Only today...at a news conference Fulbright called on the Administration to get off "dead center"...in its dealings with Moscow and Peiping.

Dr. Keith Glennan, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said today that the American space program should be carried out "with the same sense of urgency we had during the war." Dr. Glennan testified before the Senate preparedness committee. He said that Russia is ahead in space exploration possibly by a year and a half in the development of rocket thrust. But except for propulsion, he said, "I don't think we're back of the Russians at all." Dr. Glennan said that...six years from now, he expects the United States to have a rocket powerful enough to send a man to the moon. Another scientist, Dr. William Pickering, said there is "nothing phony" about Russia's claim that it has placed a rocket in orbit around the sun. Dr. Homer Stewart, planning director for the civilian space agency, said the Lunik shot demonstrates that the Russians have developed a guidance system capable of directing a long-range hydrogen missile to its target. And Dr. Wernher von Braun, director of the Army ballistic missile program, agreed. Braun testified that it would take a year for the United States to catch up with Russia in the space contest...even if the Russians in that time stood perfectly still.

The House Armed Services Committee today approved a four-year extension of the draft.

President Eisenhower said today that any cut in foreign aid spending would require the appropriation of more money for our own security forces. Mr. Eisenhower spoke at a meeting sponsoredby the Institute of International Education. The United States, he said, welcomes exchange students...and persons in all walks of life who serve as ambassadors of good will.

President DeGaulle today renewed his invitation to Algerian rebel leaders to come to France and discuss arrangements for a cease-fire. The War in Algeria, he said, can lead to nothing but "useless miseries." DeGaulle made the new offer in his first radio "fireside chat" to the French people since becoming president. He made the original offer in October...when he invited the rebel leaders to come to Paris under a guarantee of safe conduct. He also called on rebel forces in Algeria "to show the white flag." Leaders of the revolt turned the offer down on grounds that DeGaulle was demanding surrender.

In Moscow today, the main speaker at the 21st Party Congress was Mikhail Suslov, a member of the powerful party presidium. Suslov predicted that capitalism...in his phrase..."will sink under its own crimss"...and, at the same time, he denounced the crimes of the so-called "anti-party" group of former Soviet leaders.

The official Yugoslav newspaper Borba today accused Premier Khrushchev of meddling in Yugoslavia's internal affairs. Khrushchev told the party congress on Tuesday that Yugoslav revisionists were "denying the need for international proletarian solidarity"...and were trying to split Russia and Red China. The newspaper characterized this charge as "silly."

My colleague...Alexander Kendrick...has been making a study of the Khrushchev speech and is ready with some observations. Kendrick's base of operations is London...and so we go there now for his report.

KENDRICK: Who is the Lenin of today? This is the question that in effect has been asked from the rostrum of the 21st Soviet Communist Party Congress and 1300 voices have answered in unison, "You are, comrade Khrushchev." With his seven year economic plan which he says will enable the Russians to catch up with the United States in 1972, with the continuing attacks made at the Congress upon the so-called anti-party group of Molotov, Malenkov and Kaganovich, with his new diatribes against the Tito heresy, with the open obeisance of Wladyslaw Gomulka of Poland and the brother act of Chou en-Lai of Red China, the first secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, Nikita Khrushchev, has this week unmistakably consolidated his position not only as boss inside Russia, but also as ideological leader of the Communist block. But, despite his paramount position, it is not taken as definitive here that Khrushchev is the unchallenged boss inside Russia or the unchallenged ideological leader of the block. For, after the first secretary's own long speech, stalwart after party stalwart called for the public capitulation of the Molotiv, Malenkov group and as of tonight, they have not capitualted, though, of course, further secret proceedings of the Congress, like those at which Khrushchev three years ago denounced Stalin are not excluded. And the shadow of old-line Stalinist Suslov hovered large over Khrushchev's shoulder at the Congess today. Moreover, while Khrushchev and Chou pledged undying devotion to the same cause, there is belief here that Sino-Soviet ideological differences have not been buried. Khrushchev in fact openly acknowledged reports of such differences. True, he did so only in order to deny them, but he admitted that Soviet and Chinese methods of building socialism were in many respects dissimiliar. And, the Chinese themselves last month, had elimanated the need for a public rebuke by confessing that their much publicized commune plan still left the achievement of communism to the distant future instead of bringing true communism to China sooner than to Russia. Mr. Chou also recognized the leadership of the Soviet Union in the communist block, recognition which is necessary if the Chinese want to continue receiving Soviet economic aid. But, on the other side of the ledger is the fact that China's ideological chiefton, Mao Tse-tung, who has claims to being the modern Lenin himself shows not to attend the Soviet Party Congress, though he recently retired as head of state in order to devote himself to party matters. Moreover, the only new and unexpected item in Khrushchev's six hour oration was his proposal for an atom free zone in the Far East including China. Now, this could be regarded as the price the Communists are willing to pay in order to obtain American nuclear withdrawal from Formosa,

Japan and the Pacific Island bases. The United States with its conventional forces would then be left facing far greater Chinese conventional forces, hence, an atom free zone in the Far East might even be desirable to the Chineee. But, if so, it's regarded here as strange that the proposal was not made by Peiping but by Moscow. Moreover, the Chinese have announced their intention of becoming an atomic power, so Mr. Khrushchev's suggestion that China be atom free could also be the expression of Russian apprehension at the thought of nuclear arms in Chinese hands. Taking into account the centuries old history of Soviet-Chinese rivalry, the present struggle for dominant influence in Mongolia and North Korea, the resettlement of two million Chinese in border and buffer areas, the clash between the commune system and the Soviet system, this interpretation has much to support it. And, if the Chinese themselves do want to be left out of that top bracket - the International Nuclear Club, it's strange again that Chou en-Lai did not say so when his turn came to speak or that Mao Tse-tung preserved an icy silence on the subject in his message of (indistinct) greetings to the Lenin of today, though not necessarily of tomorrow.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alexander Kendrick who has been examining some of the fine print in Khrushchev's speech to the 21st Party Congress that he made earlier this week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Khrushchev made political proposals...but he also outlined an ambitious agricultural and industrial program for the Russian people. Tolstoy said, "If the arrangement of society is bad and a small number of people have power over the majority and oppress it, every victory over nature will inevitably serve only to increase that power and oppression."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Feb. 2, 1959

This is the news:

Twenty-one Negro students today entered seven previously all-white schools in Virginia...marking the first racial integration to take place in the public schools, of that ~~Southern~~ state. / The first steps were taken in Norfolk and Arlington. / For the story in Norfolk, we switch to CBS Newsman Blaine Littell.

(Tape runs 1:55
Ends on cue: "-- to ERM in NY."

The integration of a public school in Arlington...across the Potomac from Washington...also was accomplished, without incident. / There, four Negro children were enrolled at Stratford Junior High School under heavy police guard. / A segregationist organization had appealed to white students to boycott the school, but fewer students were absent than usual.

In Richmond, Governor Almond said he was "most gratified" by the absence of violence. And the White House in Washington announced that President Eisenhower regarded the orderly transition as "a fine thing".

The Federal Civil Rights Commission today heard testimony dealing with racial discrimination in housing in New York City. A city official, Dr. Frank Horne, said that 80 percent of the city's Negro population must live in four areas of concentration...in many instances under conditions detrimental to the well-being of other New York residents. Mayor Wagner cited the progress being made under New York City's fair housing practices law.

The Senate Banking Committee tonight approved a 3-billion-dollar omnibus housing bill. The measure would provide three quarters of a billion dollars more for slum clearance than President Eisenhower had proposed. It would also authorize the construction of 35-thousand new public housing units...and raise the interest on G.I. mortgages by one-half of one percent.

President Eisenhower sent a report to Congress today dealing with the American space program. The report was prepared under the over-all direction of the new space administration. It said that although "notable" progress had been made, "the United States is aware of the magnitude of the challenge and aware that it must be fully met." Dr. Keith Glennan, director of the national space administration, told a House committee today that it may be three years or more before the United States can "match" Russia in rocket thrust.

Secretary of State Dulles will fly to Europe tomorrow...to discuss the German situation with allied leaders in London, Paris and Bonn. Tonight, Mr. Dulles conferred at his home with Democratic Senator Fulbright...who is due to become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The senator says they "very seriously" considered possible counter-proposals.

In Geneva today, Russia again demanded a veto over the operation of machinery designed to police any prohibition of nuclear weapons tests. The American and British delegates said this would make "true inspection" impossible.

There was new faint hope tonight that there may be survivors in the wreck of the Danish ship last Friday, off the coast of Greenland. Feeble radio signals...on the regular emergency frequency for ships...were again picked up this afternoon. However, no actual trace of the vessel or its lifeboats, has been found.

Edward R. Murrow: February 2, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles is off tomorrow on another of his improvised missions to allied capitals. He will discuss the German crisis in Paris, London and Bonn. The fact that he is going is an open admission that it needs more than normal diplomatic handling to produce allied agreement. But it does not necessarily follow that there are basic allied differences. Perhaps the situation can be best understood in terms of power as well as diplomacy.

When Senator Humphrey came back from Moscow he brought a personal message from Khrushchev to President Eisenhower. It was information that the Soviet Union has an I.C.B.M. with a range of 8,300 miles. What this message implied was unmistakable. It was that the Soviet demand that the Western Powers get out of West Berlin was the result of a shift in power. The Kremlin felt strong enough to impose a withdrawal on the West. The West replied to this challenge by refusing to get out of Berlin, or even talking about it under a threat. In so doing, it denied that a decisive shift of power had taken place. In Washington, the Administration took pains to explain to Congress, the public and the Soviet Union that our relative strength has not been decreased by the big Soviet missiles.

So the West was ordered out of Berlin and has refused to go. And if that had been all that happened, the world might well believe in the possibility of war next May. Nobody has backed down on Berlin. Even the Soviet denial that it had issued an ultimatum was not a retreat. All it said was that if talks were going on about Western withdrawal by May 27th, the date could be changed. But the talks had to be about a withdrawal.

However, a great deal more has happened. The West, shortly before the Berlin crisis, had sent a note to the Kremlin proposing a conference on German re-unification and European security. The Soviet Union in reply proposed a broad conference to write a peace treaty with the two Germanys. Both proposals were unacceptable to the other side. But both sides have taken to conciliatory remarks, and have been hinting that they will be "flexible" in approaching new negotiations.

So now the West has two issues on its hands. One is to prepare to sit tight in Berlin at whatever cost. The other is to get into negotiations on wider issues with some chance of acceptable results. There is no disunity about staying in Berlin, only some technical difference over the advance planning for the eventual use of force. Mr. Dulles will not find this any problem. But the differences about broader European talks are something else. Here, if there are to be any talks at all, everybody has to give up some past policies. Nobody in the West knows how much has to be given up. And what is even more serious, nobody knows what the Soviet Union is willing to pay for what is given up.

Thus the West hints it might discuss some kind of disengagement, or the thinning out of military strength in Central Europe. Mr. Dulles himself has said he is willing to talk about the Rapacki Plan. But he cannot commit himself unless there is an inkling of what can be bought with such concessions. So far, Moscow has said to the allies: You make the ~~proposals~~ counter-proposals. But the West can't make counter-proposals that the Soviet Union will look at if it doesn't know that the Soviet Union will pay well for them. And that it doesn't know.

Here is where Mr. Dulles must try to find common ground for the allies. But before he can even begin to map it out, he will have to bring about an agreement on the timing of a Four-Power conference. President De Gaulle thinks it would be weakness to promise talks of any kind before the Soviet Union has modified the challenge in Berlin. He doesn't want a date proposed in the forthcoming reply to the last Soviet note. Prime Minister Macmillan has no such compunctions, he wants a date proposed. Dr. Adenauer agrees with De Gaulle. Mr. Dulles presumably agrees more or less with Mr. Macmillan.

The smaller NATO states are strongly on the Macmillan side.

~~No serious trouble is expected over when to propose a Four Power conference.~~ But if a 4 Power Conference is reached, the real trouble starts. Then the trick will be to convince the Kremlin that the West will be flexible and reasonable, but will not give up anything for free. And success may depend on what Khrushchev is willing to pay to get Germany out of the NATO military establishment and held to a low level of military strength. And it may also depend on how much he still believes in the persuasive power of his I.C.B.M.'s.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

Any settlement with Russia is going to call for some old-fashioned horse-trading. Abraham Lincoln said he once heard of a warantee bill of sale for a horse...avowing that the animal was "sound of skin and skeleton and without faults or faculties." Before the West does any "buying", it wants more assurance than that!

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, February 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LITELL: Here in Norfolk 17 negro children registered today in six previously all-white public schools. At the same time, 6,426 white students registered for classes in the same six schools; a drop of about 3,500 from the normal enrollment. According to officials, those who stayed away today have decided to continue private instruction, to go to high school elsewhere or not go to school at all rather than attend classes with negroes. The 17 negroes who registered today were received politely. In marked contrast to integration efforts in Arkansas, there were no incidents. Police Chief Harold Anderson, saying he hoped Norfolk would not turn into another Little Rock, took pains to make his hope a reality. He placed his force on a 12 hour shift and assigned scores of officers to the six schools. They had orders to keep parents and the curious off the school grounds, and to deal swiftly with any real or potential troublemakers. Later after the students had registered and left for their homes, still without incident, Chief Anderson declared he was very satisfied and said "A lion's share of the credit goes to the student bodies for their behavior." It was cold in Norfolk today, well below freezing, and perhaps the weather had something to do with the fact that nothing happened. It was not the kind of a day for hanging around. The negro children, shy and polite, told reporters that everything had gone fine - and then hurried into the warm, waiting automobiles. Most of the white students said and did the same. But there were some, mostly boys, who said things might have been different if it had been warmer and if the police hadn't been around. "There's bound to be trouble," said one of them, "but not today. The word's been passed - not today."

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Twenty-one negro students today entered seven previously all-white schools in Virginia...marking the first racial integration to take place in the public schools of that state. The first steps were taken in Norfolk and Arlington. For the story in Norfolk, we switch to CBS Newsman Blaine Littell.

LITTELL: Here in Norfolk 17 negro children registered today in six previously all white public schools. At the same time, 6,426 white students registered for classes in the same six schools, a drop of about 3,500 from the normal enrollment. According to officials, those who stayed away today have decided to continue private instruction, to go to high school elsewhere or not go to school at all rather than attend classes with negroes. The 17 negroes who registered today were received politely. In marked contrast to integration efforts in Arkansas, there were no incidents. Police Chief Harold Anderson, saying he hoped Norfolk would not turn into another Little Rock, took pains to make his hope a reality. He placed his force on a 12 hour shift and assigned scores of officers to the six schools. They had orders to keep parents and the curious off the school grounds, and to deal swiftly with any real or potential troublemakers. Later after the students had registered and left for their homes, still without incident, Chief Anderson declared he was very satisfied and sad "a lion's share of the credit goes to the student bodies for their behavior." It was cold in Norfolk today, well below freezing, and perhaps the weather had something to do with the fact that nothing happened. It was not the kind of a day for hanging around. The negro children, shy and polite, told reporters that everything had gone fine - and then hurried tnto the warm, waiting automobiles. Most of the white students said and did the same. But there were some, mostly boys, who said things might have been different if it had been warmer and if the police hadn't been around. "There's bound to be trouble," said one of them, "but not today. The word'h been bassed - not today."

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The integration of a public school in Arlington...across the Potomac from Washington...also was accomplished without incident. There, four Negro children were enrolled at Stratford Junior High School under heavy police guard. A segregationist organization had appealed to white students to boycott the school, but fewer students were absent than usual.

In Richmond, Governor Almond said he was "most gratified" by the absence of violence. And the White House in Washington announced that President Eisenhower regarded the orderly transition as "a fine thing."

The Federal Civil Rights Commission today heard testimony dealing with racial discrimination in housing in New York City. A city official, Dr. Frank Horne, said that 80 percent of the city's Negro population must live in four areas of concentration...in many instances under conditions detrimental to the well-being of other New York residents. Mayor Wagner cited the progress being made under New York City's fair housing practices law.

The Senate Banking Committee tonight approved a 3-billion-dollar omnibus housing bill. The measure would provide three quarters of a billion dollars more for slum clearance that President Eisenhower had proposed. It would also authorize the construction of 35-thousand new public housing units...and raise the interest on G.I. mortgages by one-half of one percent.

President Eisenhower sent a report to Congress today dealing with the American space program. The report was prepared under the over-all direction of the new space administration. It said that although "notable" progress had been made, "the United States is aware of the magnitude of the challange and aware that it must be fully met." Dr. Keith Glennan, director of the national space administration, told a House committee today that it may be three years or more before the United States can "match" Russia in rocket thrust.

Secretary of State Dulles will fly to Europe tomorrow...to discuss the German situation with allied leaders in London, Paris and Bonn. Tonight,

Mr. Dulles conferred at his home with Democratic Senator Fulbright...who is due to become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations committee. The senator says they "very seriously" considered possible counter-proposals.

In Geneva today, Russia again demanded a veto over the operation of machinery designed to police any prohibition of nuclear weapons tests. The American and British delegates said this would made "true inspection" impossible.

There was new faint hope tonight that there may be survivors in the wreck of the Danish ship last Friday, off the coast of Greenland. Feeble radio signals...on the regular emergency frequency for ships,..were again picked up this afternoon. However, no actual trace of the vessel or its lifeboats, has been found.

Secretary Dulles is off tomorrow on another of his improvised missions to allied capitals. He will discuss the German crisis in Paris, London and Bonn. The fact that he is going is an open admission that it needs more than normal diplomatic handling to produce allied agreement. But it does not necessarily follow that there are basic allied differences. Perhaps the situation can be best understood in terms of power as well as diplomacy.

When Senator Humphrey came back from Moscow he brought a personal message from Khrushchev to President Eisenhower. It was information that the Soviet Union has an I.C.B.M. with a range of 8,300 miles. What this message implied was unmistakable. It was that the Soviet demand that the Western Powers get out of West Berlin was the result of a shift in power. The Kremlin felt strong enough to impose a withdrawal on the West. The West replied to this challenge by refusing to get out of Berlin, or even talking about it under a threat. In so doing, it denied that a decisive shift of power had taken place. In Washington, the Administration took pains to explain to Congress, the public and Soviet Union that our relative strength has not been decreased by the big Soviet missiles.

So the West was ordered out of Berlin and has refused to go. And if that had been all that happened, the world might well believe in the possibility of war next May. Nobody has backed down on Berlin. Even the Soviet denial that it had issued an ultimatum was not a retreat. All it said was that if talks were going on about Western withdrawal by May 27th, the date could be changed. But the talks had to be about a withdrawal.

However, a great deal more has happened. The West, shortly before the Berlin crisis, had sent a note to the Kremlin proposing a conference on German re-unification and European security. The Soviet Union in reply proposed a broad conference to write a peace treaty with the two Germanys. Both proposals were unacceptable to the other side. But both sides have taken to conciliatory remarks, and have been hinting that they will be "flexible" in approaching new negotiations.

So now the West has two issues on its hands. One is to prepare to sit tight in Berlin at whatever cost. The other is to get into negotiations on wider issues with some chance of acceptable results. there is no disunity about staying in Berlin, only some technical difference over the advance planning for the eventual use of force. Mr. Dulles will not find this any problem. But the differences about broader European talks are something else. Here, if there are to be any talks at all, everybody has to give up some past policies. Nobody in the West knows h w much has to be given up. And what is even more serious, nobody knows what the Soviet Union is willing to pay for what is given up.

Thus the West hints it might discuss some kind of disengagement, or the thinning out of military strength in Central Europe. Mr. Dulles himself has said he is willing to talk about the Rapacki Plan. But he cannot commit himself unless there is an inkling of what can be bought with such concessions. So far, Moscow has said to the allies; You make the counter-proposals. But the West can't make counter-proposals that the Soviet Union will look at if it doesn't know that the Soviet Union will pay well for them. And that it doesn't know.

Here is where Mr. Dulles must try to find common ground for the allies. But before he can even begin to map it out, he will have to bring about an agreement on the timing of a Four-Power conference. President DeGaulle thinks it would be weakness to promise talks of any kind before the Soviet Union has modified the challenge in Berlin. He doesn't want a date proposed in the forthcoming reply to the last Soviet note. Prime Minister Macmillan has no such compunctions, he wants a date proposed. Dr. Adenauer agrees with DeGaulle. Mr. Dulles presumably agrees more or less with Mr. Macmillan. The smaller NATO states are strongly on the Macmillan side.

But if a four power conference is reachedthe real trouble starts. Then the trick will be to convince the Kremlin that the West will be flexible and reasonable, but will not give up anything for free. And success may depend on what Khrushchev is willing to pay to get Germany out of the NATO military establishment and held to a low level of military strength. And it may also depend on how much he still believes in the persuasive power of his I.C.B.M.'s

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first a word from George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Any settlement with Russia is going to call for some old-fashioned horse-trading. Abraham Lincoln said he once heard of a warrantee bill of sale for a horse..avowing that the animal was "sound of skin and skeleton and without faults or faculties." Before the West does any "buying," it wants more assurance than that!

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Feb. 3, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles has left for Europe for intimate talks with British, French and West German leaders on policy regarding German reunification and Berlin. Before he took off, Mr. Dulles conferred for almost an hour with President Eisenhower. Dulles said he and the President "considered together the highly complicated situation that is developing as the result of Soviet threats, particularly with respect to Berlin." He said, "The President and I have no doubt that my personal and intimate talks will serve to solidify the unity of the Western allies and demonstrate once again our determination not to yield before threats." Later, he said the possibility of talks with Russia also would be explored.

The Russians are still refusing passage to the U.S. Army convoy held up yesterday on the autobahn between West Germany and Berlin. The convoy of four trucks...and five G.I.'s...had almost reached the West German frontier when Russian authorities demanded the right to inspect the cargo. The non-commissioner officer in charge of the convoy obeyed standing Army orders and refused. He also turned down a Russian suggestion that he turn the convoy around and go back to West Berlin. Already the United States has made three protests to the Soviet military authroities. So far, the protests have been ignored.

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Secretary of the Navy Gates...who had expressed a desire to return to private life. The resignation was made effective June first, so that Gates may take part in the presentation of Navy programs to Congress. "Your departure from government service," Mr. Eisenhower said, "will be a great loss." The present Navy under-secretary, William Franke (Frankie), has been nominated to succeed Gates as secretary.

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that by the end of this year the United States will have about as many operational long-range ballistic missiles as Russia. McElroy was testifying before the House Armed Services Committee. Last week, he told a Senate committee that in two years Russia might have more I.C.B.M.'s than the United States. It was not the intention of the United States, he said, to match the Russians missile for missile in that category. McElroy was asked today about the statement by Russia's defense minister (at the 21st Party Congress) that Russia has long-range missiles "which can carry their hydrogen charges to any point on earth---to the very point, for they are very accurate." McElroy said he would be interested in the Soviet definition of "pinpoint accuracy." It sounded to him, he said, like the kind of statement one would make in a war of nerves. He conceded that the Russians have rockets of greater thrust than those possessed by the United States. But, he said, we have rockets capable of traveling 5-thousand, 500 miles, "or into Russia."

This was a reference to the Atlas missile. At Cape Canaveral today, the United States failed for the second time to carry out a successful launching of the Titan intercontinental ballistic missile. The engines were cut off...due to a malfunction...while the missile was still on its launching pad. The cause of the malfunction was not immediately determined.

Lieutenant General Anderson, director of Air Force research, told the House space committee today that the Administration cut his budget request for the current fiscal year by more than one-third. Because of this, he said, he had been forced to cut back research programs he felt were needed. General Anderson made no direct criticism of the funds proposed by the Administration for his work in the next fiscal year. But the President's budget, he said, calls for about three million dollars less for Air Force research than in the current fiscal year.

Republican congressional leaders today urged people who believe in a balanced budget "to make their voices heard." House Republican Leader Halleck said this feeling was "very definitely" shared by President Eisenhower. Halleck spoke to reporters after the usual Tuesday morning meeting with the President which lasted an unusual two and a half hours. Much of the discussion dealt with the civil rights program which Mr. Eisenhower has yet to send Congress. Republican legislative leaders predicted it would be a "moderate" program...somewhere between the civil rights measure already introduced by Majority Leader Johnson and the broader legislation sponsored by Northern liberals. They did not elaborate.

Today...in Norfolk, Virginia...the integration of six public schools proceeded without incident. About 500 more white students attended the integrated classes in Norfolk today than yesterday---which was the first day Negro and white students reported. Police continued to guard the integrated schools in Norfolk and Arlington...where the situation also remains calm. The police guard, however, was not as heavy as yesterday.

President Gronchi of Italy today refused to accept the resignation of Premier Fanfani...and asked Fanfani to go before parliament with his cabinet for a new vote of confidence. Gronchi said he had been unable...after consulting other political leaders...to find any workable alternative. Fanfani resigned last week because of a split in his Christian-Democratic Party.

Edward R. Murrow: February 3, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

In our system of government the President makes the foreign policy with the advice of the Senate, which gives the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations special scope and influence. It can examine and question pretty much what it pleases in the field of foreign affairs. The Secretary of State, through whom the President conducts his foreign policy, can be under no illusion that he is immune from criticism by the Committee or can hold back information from it. His success to some extent is mortgaged to the Committee. So in foreign affairs, the three men can play the greatest role, the President, the Secretary of State and the Chairman of the Senate Committee.

Normally the Committee does not cause much trouble to an Administration. Usually the Party in power in the White House is also in power in the Senate, and Party regularity smooths things out in the Committee for the Secretary of State. Normally, too, the seniority system does not put an exceptionally strong man at the head of the Committee, but these are not normal times. The Administration forces are a minority in the Senate, and the new Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is a strong man who for some years has been outstanding for his criticism of Secretary Dulles.

"Bi-partisanship in foreign policy" has been a saving phrase for Secretaries of State since the days of Senator Vandenberg. It could be evoked to shut off unpleasant debates. But it is a little hard to fit Secretary Dulles and Senator Fulbright into the old pattern bi-partisanship. Both are too positive for that. Who is going to dominate the other? Mr. Dulles conducts foreign policy with more independence from anyone save the President, and certainly from the State Department, than anyone in modern times. He is not going to junk what he has so carefully built up for the sake of Senator Fulbright. And the Senator, who has been unhappy over the way Mr. Dulles runs things, is not going to keep his mouth shut to suit the Secretary. So it is suggested that we are now entering an area of what the British call a "loyal Opposition" in foreign affairs. In Britain that means unfettered debate but no obstruction. Presumably Senator Fulbright would subscribe to the doctrine of no obstruction. There is no question about his belief in unfettered debate.

It is being said in Washington that Senator Fulbright's differences with Mr. Dulles have been more over methods than the substance of foreign policy. But that somewhat belittles the Senator's criticisms. Certainly the chief objections he has raised to the Secretary's policy have been basic in two respects. He has found it inflexible, and he has found it negative. The negative quality is not primarily Mr. Dulles's fault. He is conducting a policy for allies as well as his own country, and it is easier for a coalition to unite against something than for it. But the inflexible has been inherent in Mr. Dulles's basic thesis. For he believes it imperative to maintain pressure on the Soviet Union to produce changes within that country to our advantage, and to encourage the hope for freedom in the countries absorbed into the Soviet system.

Senator Fulbright is interested in finding a new approach to the issues between us and the Russians. That is, he wants to settle them. It is significant that last night, after the first conference with the Secretary since becoming Chairman, he could report that Mr. Dulles is looking for counter-proposals to put to the Russians in the present crisis. This was not the result of the Senator's persuasiveness, but it was what he was delighted to hear. He and the Secretary will be happy together only if the search goes on for new proposals to make to the Russians. That is, the Senator wants a positive policy.

Mr. Fulbright has waited a long time for the power and distinction he now will enjoy. As long ago as 1943, when a Member of the House, he wrote the Fulbright Resolution which authorized the United States to enter the United Nations. [Later he authored the plan for the exchange of students and teachers with foreign countries, which has made the name Fulbright better known in school circles around the world, than that of Cecil Rhodes.]

At fifty-three he is a world figure, and a Chairman of one of the most powerful of Congressional Committees. With an unusually able complement of Senators on the Committee, he can genuinely serve the Administration with what the Constitution calls "advice." And he also can serve the public here and abroad, with constructive discussion of foreign policy.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

The succession of Senator Fulbright to the chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee means breaking retaining the old pattern of bipartisanship, a new "loyal opposition", and a great deal more debate. Thomas Erskine said, "Let reason be opposed to reason, and argument to argument, and every good government will be safe."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles has left for Europe for intimate talks with British, French and West German leaders on policy regarding German reunification and Berlin. Before he took off, Mr. Dulles conferred for almost an hour with President Eisenhower. Dulles said he and the President "considered together the highly complicated situation that is developing as the result of Soviet threats, particularly with respect to Berlin." He said, "The President and I have no doubt that my personal and intimate talks will serve to solidify the unity of the Western allies and demonstrate once again our determination not to yield before threats." Later, he said the possibility of talks with Russia also would be explored.

The Russians are still refusing passage to the U.S. Army convoy held up yesterday on the autobahn between West Germany and Berlin. The convoy of four trucks..and five G.I.'s...had almost reached the West German frontier when Russian authorities demanded the right to inspect the cargo. The non-commissioner officer in charge of the convoy obeyed standing Army orders and refused. He also turned down a Russian suggestion that he turn the convoy around and go back to West Berlin. Already the United States has made three protests to the Soviet military authorities. So far, the protests have been ignored.

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Secretary of the Navy Gates...who had expressed a desire to return to private live. The resignation was made effective June first, so that Gates may take part in the presentation of Navy programs to Congress. "Your departure from government service," Mr. Eisenhower said, "will be a great loss." The present Navy under-secretary, William Franke, has been nominated to succeed Gates as secretary.

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that by the end of this year the United States will have about as many operational long-range ballistic missiles as Russia. McElroy was testifying before the House Armed Services Committee. Last week, he told a Senate committee that in two years Russia might have more I.C.B.M.'s than the United States. It was not the intention of the United Staess, he said, to match the Russians missile for missile in that category. McElroy was asked today about the statement by Russia's defense minister (at the 21st Party Congesss) that Russia has long-range missiles "which can carry their hydrogen charges to any point on earth---to the very point, for they are very accurate." McElroy said he would be interested in the Soviet definition of "pinpoint accuracy." It sounded to him, he said, like the kind of statement one would make in a war of nerves. He conceded that the Russians have rockets of greater thrust than those possessed by the United States. But, he said, we have rockets capable of traveling 5-thousand, 500 miles, "or into Russia."

This was a reference to the Atlas missile. At Cape Canaveral today, the United States failed for the second time to carry out a successful launching of the Titan intercontinental ballistic missile. The engines were cut off...due to a malfunction...while the missile was still on its launching pad. The cause of the malfunction was not immediately determined.

Lieutanant General Anderson, director of Air Force research, told the House space committee today that the Administration cut his budget request for the current fiscal year by more than one-third. Because of this, he said, he had been forced to cut back reaearch programs he felt were needed. General Anderson made no direct criticism of the funds proposed by the Administration for his work in the next fiscal year. But the President's budget, he said, calls for about three million dollars less for Air Force research than in the current fiscal year.

Republican congressional leaders today urged people who believe in a balanced budget "to make their voices heard." House Republican Leader Halleck said this feeling was "very definitely" shared by President Eisenhower. Halleck spoke to reporters after the usual Tuesday morning meeting with the President which lasted an unusual two and a half hours. Much of the discussion dealt with the civil rights program which Mr. Eisenhower has yet to send Congress. Republican legislative leaders predicted it would be a "moderate" program... somewhere between the civil rights measure already introduced by Majority Leader Johnson and the broader legislation sponsored by Northern liberals. They did not elaborate.

Today...in Norfolk, Virginia...the integration of six public schools proceeded without incident. About 500 more white students attended the integrated classes in Norfolk today than yesterday---which was the first day Negro and white students reported. Police continued to guard the integrated schools in Norfolk and Arlington...where the situation also remains calm. The police guard, however, was not as heavy as yesterday.

President Gronchi of Italy today refused to accept the resignation of Premier Fanfani...and asked Fanfani to go before parliament with his cabinet for a new vote of confidence. Gronchi said he had been unable...after consulting other political leaders...to find any workable alternative. Fanfani resigned last week because of a split in his Christian-Democratic Party.

In our system of government the President makes the foreign policy with the advice of the Senate, which gives the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations special scope and influence. It can examine and question pretty much what it pleases in the field of foreign affairs. The Secretary of States, through whom the President conducts his foreign policy, can be under no illusion that he is immune from criticism by the Committee or can hold back information from it. His success to some extent is mortgaged to the Committee. So in foreign affairs, three men play the greatest role, the President, the Secretary of State and the Chairman of the Senate Committee.

Normally the Committee does not cause much trouble to an Administration. Usually the Party in power in the White House is also in power in the Senate, and Party regularity smooths things out in the Committee for the Secretary of State. Normally too, the seniority system does not put an exceptionally strong man at the head of the Committee, but these are not normal times. The administration forces are a minority in the Senate, and the new Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is a strong man who for some years has been outstanding for his criticism of Secretary Dulles.

"Bi-partisanship in foreign policy" has been a saving phrase for Secretaries of State since the days of Senator Vandenberg. It could be evoked to shut off unpleasant debates. But it is a little hard to fit Secretary Dulles and Senator Fulbright into the old pattern bi-partisanship. Both are too positive for that. Who is going to dominate the other? Mr. Dulles conducts foreign policy with more independence from anyone save the President, and certainly from the State Department, than anyone in modern times. He is not going to junk what he has so carefully built up for the sake of Senator Fulbright. And the Senator, who has been unhappy over the way Mr. Dulles runs things, is not going to keep his mouth shut to suit the Secretary. So it is suggested that we are now entering an area of what the British call a "loyal Opposition" in foreign affairs. In Britain that means unfettered debate but no obstruction. Presumably Senator Fulbright would subscribe to the doctrine of no obstruction. There is no question about his belief in unfettered debate.

It is being said in Washington that Senator Fulbright's differences with Mr. Dulles have been more over methods than the substance of foreign policy. But that somewhat belittles the Senator's criticisms. Certainly the chief objections he has raised to the Secretary's policy have been basic in two respects. He has found it inflexible, and he has found it negative. The negative quality is not primarily Mr. Dulles's fault. He is conducting a policy for allies as well his own country, and it is easier for a coalition to unite against something than for it. But the inflexible has been inherent in Mr. Dulles's basic thesis. For he believes it imperative to maintain pressure on the Soviet Union to produce changes within that country to our advantage, and to encourage the hope for freedom in the countries absorbed into the Soviet system.

Senator Fulbright is interested in finding a new approach to the issues between us and the Russians. That is, he wants to settle them. It is significant that last night, after the first conference with the Secretary since becoming Chairman, he could report that Mr. Dulles is looking for counter-proposals to put the Russians in the present crisis. This was not the result of the Senator's persuasiveness, but it was what he was delighted to hear. He and the Secretary will be happy together only if the search goes on for new proposals to make to the Russians. That is, the Senator wants a positive policy.

Mr. Fulbright has waited a long time for the power and distinction he now will enjoy. As long ago as 1943, when a Member of the House, he wrote the Fulbright resolution which authorized the United states to enter the United Nations. Later he authored the plan for the exchange of students and teachers with foreign countries which has made the name Fulbright better known in school circles around the world than that of Cecil Rhodes.

At fifty-three he is a world figure, and a Chairman of one of the most powerful of Congressional Committees. With an unusually able complement of Senators on the Committee,he can genuinely serve the Administration with what the Constitution calls "advice." And he also can serve the public here and abroad with constructive discussion of foreign policy.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The succession of Senator Fulbright to the chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee means breaking or straining of the old pattern of bipartisanship, a new "loyal opposition" and a great deal more debate. Thomas Erskine said, "Let reason be opposed to reason and argument to argument, and every good government will be safe."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Feb. 4, 1959

This is the news:

The Air Force reports one of its weather reconnaissance aircraft missing over the North Atlantic with twelve men on board. The four-engine plane left Bermuda early this morning and has not been heard from for twelve hours. Air Force officials say it is possible that the aircraft simply lost radio contact. However, a Japanese freighter has reported seeing an aircraft fall in flames, 300 miles northwest of Bermuda. The Coast Guard has sent out search planes, and the Coast Guard cutter Mackinac is on the way. The Japanese ship reported very high seas.

Here in New York, 65 persons are presumed dead in the crash...in the East River...of a new turbo-jet airliner late last night. There were eight survivors. Twenty-one bodies have been recovered. The other 44 victims are believed to have been trapped in the wreckage...underwater... or carried away by the current. The aircraft was American Airlines Flight 320...approaching LaGuardia Field from Chicago in a mixture of rain and fog. The Civil Aeronautics Board says that the pilot...who died... made a standard instrument approach to Runway 22. His last contact with the airport tower was a routine acknowledgement of permission to land. #

→

A spokesman for the aeronautics board pointed out tonight that while boundary lights were operating normally, Runway 22 does not have approach lights extending out into the water. At the end of the runway there is radio beam equipment for telling pilots whether they are on course. But there is no radio beam...at that end of the runway...to tell pilots whether they are coming in too high or too low. It is reported that such equipment was about to be installed.

In Congress today, the House passed...and sent to the Senate...a G.I. housing bill opposed by the Administration. The House vote was 310 to 89. Under the bill, 300-million dollars in direct government loans would be made available to veterans in rural areas who want to buy homes. Interest on private G.I. home loans would be raised one-half of one percent.

Debate on the three-billion-dollar omnibus housing bill...sponsored by the Democrats...opened today on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Fulbright led off the debate by urging passage. Fulbright said he was "aware" of the veto power of the President...but thought Mr. Eisenhower would not veto the legislation unless it were "greatly inflated". Democratic Senator Clark of Pennsylvania already has said that he would try to expand some of the programs. The measure...as it stands...would cost almost twice as much as the bill recommended by the Administration.

The Senate Commerce Committee today approved a half-billion-dollar airport construction program...a program exceeding President Eisenhower's recommendations by 300-million dollars. And the National Education Association urged Congress to approve an education program sponsored by Democratic Senator Murray of Montana. The Murray bill would provide 11 and a half billion dollars...over a four-year period...for raising teachers' salaries and building new schools.

The House Interior Committee today approved a bill to make Hawaii the 50th state. The measure now goes to the Rules Committee.

George Kennan, former ambassador to Moscow, testified today before a Senate disarmament subcommittee. Kennan does not believe that Russia wants another war...but, he said, for reasons not fully apparent, Soviet leaders in the Berlin situation are prepared "to play particularly close to the edge." Kennen said that...in his view...there is only one contingency in which Russia might make a surprise attack on the United States. That, he said, would be if a situation arose which made Russia feel that a major war was "both inevitable and imminent." He feels that it should be the business of American statesmanship to see that no such situation develops.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told the House Armed Services Committee today that the U.S. armed forces are capable of meeting any "limited war situations" which might arise in the next two years. He suggested strongly that in case of another war...like that in Korea...nuclear weapons will be employed.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in London tonight with Prime Minister Macmillan in an effort to "unify" allied policy on Berlin...and on the German question as a whole. Later, Dulles will fly to Paris and Bonn. He said today that he had gone to Europe with no new proposals. "I have come here," he said, "because I suspect that in coming weeks we shall be forced to take difficult decisions pressed on us by the Soviet Union." And, Mr. Dulles added, it is vital that we understand each other.

Tomorrow, Prime Minister Macmillan is expected to announce that he will visit Moscow late this month. Khrushchev is understood to have tendered him an invitation. Macmillan reportedly talked this over with Secretary Dulles tonight.

In East Germany, Russian authorities have allowed a U.S. Army convoy to proceed to West Germany, after holding it up at the border checkpoint for two days. The convoy...made up of four trucks...had come from West Berlin. Russian officers had demanded to inspect what the trucks were carrying (they were obviously carrying a shipment of jeeps), and the corporal in charge of the convoy had refused. The Russians finally let the convoy pass...after the State Department sent a strong note to Moscow, denouncing the Soviet action as "unwarranted and inadmissable" under the Big Four agreements on Berlin.

Edward R. Murrow: February 4, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

With Secretary Dulles in Europe to prepare for negotiations with the Soviet Union, the great missile debate in Washington cannot be said to be strengthening his hand. / For it casts doubt on United States power at a time when Soviet spokesmen are proclaiming the decisive success of their I.C.B.M.'s. President Eisenhower, as though alive to this, went to some lengths at his news conference today to deflate the boast of Soviet Defense Minister Malinovsky that Russian missiles have made the American nuclear attack system obsolete.

The Russians, he pointed out, also have said that they invented the flying machine, the automobile and the telephone. / "I am not trying to be facetious", he went on, "I am trying to ask this question, why should you be respectful of this statement — the Malinovsky statement — if you are not respectful of the other three? / I think there is a design behind every Soviet pronouncement." / The President then informed newsmen that last night's test firing of an Atlas had been "absolutely successful" and had been at long range. / He went on to question the term "pinpoint accuracy", which sounded to him like propaganda. / He said he was not going to worry himself by trying to take everything the Russians can do in every field to find out if it comes to equality. "We have a much more variegated, and we believe a more balanced type of defensive organization than they have", he said. "We believe that with the dispersion we have, and with the competence of our planes, supported as they are by missiles we have developed, we have a very splendid posture today in the whole security field." He said he expected more of the Russian statements. "Apparently they are believed all around the world, and too implicitly."

The President was asked about the Soviet ability to knock out our retaliatory power before we could use it. He said we don't believe the Soviet Union has this ability. If we were to be attacked by surprise, American forces would suffer some losses, so would America itself, he admitted. That is why we have to be on the alert. We are improving our warning equipment. Our Strategic Air Force is much more widely dispersed than a few years ago. We can put a good portion of the whole force into the air in a matter of minutes. And we have additional weapons that would be useful.

The President was asked how many missiles the Russians would need to send off in one volley all over the world to immobilize us. There is such a thing as a logical limit to capability, he said, and we just know there is not that kind of capability in the world today. As to America's capability, he said it was to make certain that our retaliatory power is strong and remains so. "We do not believe," he concluded, "that there is a relative increase in the Soviet capacity."

Mr. Eisenhower started off his conference with a ~~diatribe against~~ denunciation of the housing and airport bills now before Congress, which threaten to unbalance the budget. Everybody admits that deficit spending is not a good thing, he said, then why do not these bills include measures for increasing taxes. He was particularly severe on the airport bill. The exclusive duty of the Federal Government in this field, he said, was to assure safety, and not to build administrative buildings and other conveniences at terminals. The government had not built stations for railroads and buses, and he said he saw no reason for doing it for air terminals. The locality, he said, should pay for such things.

The President warmly commended the officials, parents and the students of Virginia for the peaceful start of school integration. He particularly praised the honor students in Norfolk who inserted an advertisement in the local newspaper saying they wanted the school opened and wanted it done in an orderly way. "We are beginning to understand," he said, "that we must have some consideration for our fellow men, if democracy is going to work."

Back in a Moment — George Bergan

Shortly after the news conference, President Eisenhower flew to Georgia for five days of quail hunting and golf. / His civil rights program will be sent to Congress tomorrow.

A high school...and two elementary schools...in Alexandria, Virginia have been ordered to admit nine Negro children on Tuesday. / The order was issued today by ~~the~~ United States District Judge Albert Bryan. / At the same time, Judge Bryan upheld the action of the Alexandria school board in denying admittance to five other Negro students. [Two of the give were classified as scholastically deficient, and three are attending a Negro high school located closer to their homes.]

In Charlottesville, two schools closed last fall were re-opened today on a segregated basis. A federal judge gave Charlottesville until next September to work out an integration program.

This is Ed Murrow, etc.

Back in a moment--

~~George Bryan~~

George Bryan

Sir Winston Churchill is causing to be published a new abridged edition of his wartime memoirs. He has written in an epilogue to the new volume these words: "As long as the Free World holds together...and especially Britain and the United States...and maintains its strength, Russia will find that peace and plenty have more to offer than exterminatory war."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Air Force reports one of its weather reconnaissance aircraft missing over the North Atlantic with twelve men on board. The four-engine plane left Bermuda early this morning and has not been heard from for twelve hours. Air Force officials say it is possible that the aircraft simply lost radio contact. However, a Japanese freighter has reported seeing an aircraft fall in flames, 300 miles northwest of Bermuda. The Coast Guard has sent out search planes, and the Coast Guard cutter Mackinac is on the way. The Japanese ship reported very high seas.

Here in New York, 65 persons are presumed dead in the crash...in the East River...of a new turbo-jet airliner late last night. There were eight survivors. Twenty-one bodies have been recovered. The other 44 victims are believed to have been trapped in the wreckage...underwater...or carried away by the current. The aircraft was American Airlines Flight 320...approaching LaGuardia Field from Chicago in a mixture of rain and fog. The Civil Aeronautics Board says that the pilot...who died...made a standard instrument approach to Runway 22. His last contact with the airport tower was a routine acknowledgement of permission to land. A spokesman for the aeronautics board pointed out tonight that while boundary lights were operating normally, Runway 22 does not have approach lights extending out into the water. At the end of the runway there is radio beam equipment for telling pilots whether they are on course. But there is no radio beam...at that end of the runway...to tell pilots whether they are coming in too high or too low. It is reported that such equipment was about to be installed.

In Congress today, the House passed...and sent to the Senate... a G.I. housing bill opposed by the Administration. The House vote was 310 to 89. Under the bill, 300-million dollars in direct government loans would be made available to veterans in rural areas who want to buy homes. Interest on private G.I. home loans would be raised one-half of one percent.

Debate on the three-billion dollar omnibus housing bill...sponsored by the Democrats..opened today on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Fulbright led off the debate by urging passage. Fulbright said he was "aware" of the veto power of the President...but thought Mr. Eisenhower would not veto the legislation unless it were "greatly inflated." Democratic Senator Clark of Pennsylvania already has said that he would try to expand some of the programs. The measure... as it stands...would cost almost twice as much as the bill recommended by the Administration.

The Senate Commerce Committee today approved a half-billion-dollar airport construction program...a program exceeding President Eisenhower's recommendations by 300-million dollars. And the National Education Association urged Congress to approve an education program sponsored by Democratic Senator Murray of Montana. The Murray bill would provide 11 and a half billion dollars... over a four year period...for raising teachers' salaries and building new schools.

The House Interior Committee today approved a bill to make Hawaii the 50th state. The measure now goes to the Rules Committee.

George Kennan, former ambassador to Moscow, testified today before a Senate disarmament subcommittee. Kennan does not believe that Russia wants another war...but, he said, for reasons not fully apparent, Soviet leaders in the Berlin situation are prepared "to play particularly close to the edge." Kennan said that...in his view...there is only one contingency in which Russia might make a surprise attack on the United States. That, he said, would be if a situation arose which made Russia feel that a major war was "both inevitable and imminent." He feels that it should be the business of American statesmanship to see that no such situation develops.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told the House Armed Services Committee today that the U.S. armed forces are capable of meeting any "limited war situations" which might arise in the next two years. He suggested strongly that in case of another war...like that in Korea...nuclear weapons will be employed.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in London tonight with Prime Minister Macmillan in an effort to "unify" allied policy in Berlin...and on the German question as a whole. Later, Dulles will fly to Paris and Bonn. He said today that he had gone to Europe with no new proposals. "I have come here," he said, "because I suspect that in coming weeks we shall be forced to take difficult decisions pressed on us by the Soviet Union." And, Mr. Dulles added, it is vital that we understand each other.

Tomorrow, Prime Minister Macmillan is expected to announce that he will visit Moscow late this month. Khrushchev is understood to have tendered him an invitation. Macmillan reportedly talked this over with Secretary Dulles tonight.

In East Grrmany, Russian authorities have allowed a U.S. army convoy to proceed to West Germany, after holding it up at the border checkpoint for two days. The convoy...made up of four trucks...had come from West Berlin. Russian officers had demanded to inspect what the trucks were carrying (they were obviously carrying a shipment of jeeps) and the corporal in charge of the convoy had refused. The Russians finally let the convoy pass...after the State Department sent a strong note to Moscow, denouncing the Soviet action as "unwarranted and inadmissable" under the Big Four agreements on Berlin.

With Secretary Dulles in Europe to prepare for negotiations with the Soviet Union, the great missile debate in Washington cannot be said to be strengthening his hand. For it casts doubt on United States power at a time when Soviet spokesman are proclaiming the decisive success of their I.C.B.M.'s. President Eisenhower, as though alive to this, went to some lengths at his news conference today to deflate the boast of Soviet Defense Minister Malinovsky that Russian missiles have made the American nuclear attack system obsolete.

The Russians, he pointed out, also have said that they invented the flying machine, the automobile and the telephone. "I am not trying to be facetious," he went on, "I am trying to ask this question, why should you be respectful of this statement - the Malinovsky statement - if you are not respectful of the other three? I think there is a design behind every Soviet pronouncement." The President then informed newsmen that last night's test firing of an Atlas had been "absolutely successful" and had been at long range. He went on to question the term "pinpoint accuracy," which sounded to him like propaganda. He said he was not going to worry himself by trying to take everything the Russians can do in every field to find out if it comes to equality. "We have amuch more variegated, and we believe a more balanced type of defensive organization than they have," he said. "We believe that with the dispersion we have, and with the competence of our planes, supported as they are by missiles we have developed, we have a very splendid posture today in the whole security field." He said he expected more of the Russian statements. "Apparently they are believed all around the world, and too implicitly."

The President was asked about the Soviet ability to knock out our retaliatory power before we could use it. He said we don't believe the Soviet Union has this ability. If we were to be attacked by surprise, American forces would suffer some losses, so would America itself, he admitted. That is why we have to be on the alert. We are improving our warning equipment. Our Strategic Air Force is much more widely dispersed than a few years ago. We can put a good portion of the whole force into the air in a matter of minutes. And we have additional weapons that would be useful.

The President was asked how many missiles the Russians would need to send off in one volley all over the world to immobilize us. There is such a thing as a logical limit to capability, he said, and we just know there is not that kind of capability in the world today. As to America's capability, he said it was to make certain that our retaliatory power is strong and remains so. "We do not believe," he concluded, "that there is a relative increase in the Soviet capacity."

Mr. Eisenhower started off his conference with a denunciation of housing and airport bills now before Congress, which threaten to unbalance the budget. Everybody admits that deficit spending is not a good thing, he said, then why do not these bills include measures for increasing taxes. He was particularly severe on the airport bill. The exclusive duty of the Federal Government in this field, he said, was to assure safety, and not to build administrative buildings and other conveniences at terminals. The government had not built stations for railroads and buses, and he said he saw no reason for doing it for air terminals. The locality, he said, should pay for such things.

The President warmly commended the officials, parents and the students of Virginia for the peaceful start of school integration. He particularly praised the honor students in Norfolk who inserted an advertisement in the local newspaper saying they wanted the school opened and wanted it done in an orderly way. "We are beginning to understand," he said, "that we must have some consideration for our fellow men, if democracy is going to work."

Shortly after the news conference, President Eisenhower flew to Georgia for five days of quail hunting and golf. His civil rights program will be sent to Congress tomorrow.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Sir Winston Churchill is causing to be published a new abridged edition of his wartime memoirs. He has written in an epilogue to the new volume these words: "As long as the Free World holds together...and especially Britain and the United States...and maintains its strength, Russia will find that peace and plenty have more to offer than exterminatory war."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Feb. 5, 1959

This is the news:

Premier Khrushchev today invited President Eisenhower to come to the Soviet Union, as "his welcome guest." / Khrushchev did not send the President a formal invitation...but made the suggestion in a speech, climaxing the Communist Party congress. / The White House, so far, has declined to comment. / British Prime Minister Macmillan announced today, that he has accepted a standing invitation...and will go to Russia on February 21st, to stay for a week or ten days. / Macmillan told the House of Commons, that he is not going to Moscow to negotiate. / The trip, he said, will be "something in the nature of a reconnaissance." / West Germany says that it "welcomes" the Macmillan visit to Moscow. / The British prime minister, it says, will have an opportunity to present the Western position "directly and with all emphasis."

David Schoenbrun...reporting from Paris...says the French like the West Germans are putting as good a face as possible on the Macmillan visit, although it is directly contrary to what DeGaulle wants at this time. The French know that Macmillan is no Chamberlain, but they want to avoid any impression that we are "running scared".

Secretary of State Dulles has arrived in Paris after two days of talks with British leaders. Tomorrow, he will see General DeGaulle...and on Saturday he will confer with Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn. Dulles said today that his consultations in London had been useful. We are conferring, he said, so that our views on Germany "may develop on parallel lines."

In his speech today...before the 21st party congress...Khrushchev again demanded the withdrawal of allied troops from Berlin. He would still make West Berlin a "free city"...but the West, he said, would be guaranteed access to it. And Russia would consider making it a United Nations responsibility. Khrushchev called for an end to the Cold War, but it was not "mere rhetoric", he said, to report that Russia now has long-range missiles in "serial production"./ He also accused American leaders of having a "readiness" to sacrifice their allies. (I should like to examine the Khrushchev speech further in a few minutes).

→

The United States charged today that Soviet aircraft deliberately shot down an American transport plane last September./ To support the charge, the State Department made public a recording of what it said was an intercepted radio conversation among Russian fighter pilots./ The Russian pilots are heard talking to each other as they attack a target described as a four-engined transport./ The American aircraft was a four-engined C-130, with a crew of seventeen on board. Russia has returned only six bodies...and claims that it knows nothing of the other eleven. Moscow says the transport crashed some 20 miles inside Russia, near the Turkish frontier, but denies that it was shot down./ The United States says the aircraft strayed over the frontier by accident, and now it accuses Russia of making a deliberate attack. The State Department does not say how the recording of the pilots' conversation was obtained...but describes it as "absolutely authentic"./ About three months ago, the department tried to get Soviet Ambassador Menshikov to listen to the recording, but Menshikov refused...on grounds that he was not expert in such matters. He did accept a transcript. Vice President Nixon and Secretary Dulles questioned Deputy Premier Mikoyan on the subject last month, when Mikoyan was in Washington. Mikoyan insisted that the Soviet government had given all the information it had. The transcript of the recording was read this afternoon by Senator Lausche of Ohio on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Symington called the Russian action "sad and reprehensible" and urged a program of greater military strength. United Nations Ambassador Lodge said, "Soviet actions like these speak louder than words."

The East German Communists today released five American servicemen, in accordance with arrangements made by the Red Cross. Three of the men had been missing behind the Iron Curtain for more than two months and were listed as A.W.O.L.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his civil rights program. The legislation proposed falls into seven parts. It would make the use of force...or the threat of force...to obstruct court orders in a school integration case a federal crime. The life of the Civil Rights Commission, due to expire next September, would be extended for two years. And the commission to prevent discrimination in employment...(where government contracts are involved.)...would be established by law.(It was created originally by executive order.) Mr. Eisenhower also asked for a strengthening of the hand of the F.B.I. in dealing with the bombing of churches and schools. Funds would be authorized to help states make the transition from segregated to de-segregated schools. And provision would be made for the education of children of members of the armed forces where public schools have been closed...due to the decisions handed down by either the federal or state courts. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen says the program exemplifies the President as a "man of utmost good will, always devoted to a moderate course." Majority Leader Johnson promises that the President's recommendations will be considered "on their merits". (Johnson himself has introduced a civil rights bill of his own). House Speaker Rayburn predicts that Congress will extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission. But he is silent on the rest of Mr. Eisenhower's recommendations.

Edward R. Murrow: February 5, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

A new kind of competition seems to be going on between the East and the West over who is going to be more "flexible" in the upcoming negotiations over Germany. Secretary Dulles started it when he admitted that Germany could be re-united by some means other than free elections. Then he expressed willingness to discuss the Rapacki plan for a nuclear-free zone in Central Europe. Then, after quietly urging our allies to re-study their German policies, he went off to Europe to see how much flexibility they had shown, so that new counter-proposals could be made to the Russians.

But flexibility is not what Mr. Dulles is noted for, nor can flexibility be expected from a coalition. By its nature a coalition thrives on negatives, on things it refuses to do, not on its imagination about new solutions. In Nikita Khrushchev the West is up against a great expert in flexibility. He can strike and he can step back, challenge and conciliate, timing each step to suit himself. In his closing speech before the Soviet Communist Party Congress today he gave a new display of these abilities.

He applied his flexibility to his demand that the Allies get out of West Berlin, a proposition he had previously made so blatantly that the West had at once agreed to reject it. They were sure that West Berlin as a free city would be an island in a sea of Communism, without reliable access to the West, and dependent on East Germany for its economic survival. They felt they were being ordered to abandon two million free Germans to inevitable absorption by the Eastern communists.

But Khrushchev today changed his pitch if not his tune. And he produced something considerably harder for the West to reject. He proposed that the Four Powers draft a statute which would guarantee the links of the city with all countries with which it wants to maintain relations, and the access of these countries to the city. And he suggested that the free city be under the auspices of the United Nations.

The tune is the same, in that the Allies would have to get out. But the music is softer and sweeter. The immediate comment of informed people in Washington was that everything depends on how much Khrushchev means it. Would he, for example, allow administration of the city to be in any way supervised by the United Nations? This would seem to call for the presence of U.N. forces. It would surprise them if Khrushchev agreed. But it was admitted in Washington that he had made it harder for the Allies to hold fast to their unanimous rejection of the Berlin plan.

Khrushchev showed flexibility in other ways too. Yesterday the news passed the Moscow censorship that Khrushchev had told the West German Ambassador he would accept free elections in a unified Germany. It happens that this information did not originate in German or American quarters in Moscow. The Russians supplied it. Obviously they wanted the world to hear how flexible they are. Then Khrushchev in his speech today said openly that he did not object to free elections if East and West Germany agreed to them, so long as no third party interfered. However, he was not abandoning East Germany for he told Chancellor Adenauer, as though addressing him in person: "Neither by yourself nor with the aid of your Allies are you capable of abolishing the Socialist - that is, the Communist - system in East Germany." So re-unification will only be possible if East Germany remains autonomous and Communist. He wanted free elections, Khrushchev said, because one day he hoped West Germany would vote to go Communist.

The Khrushchev speech glowed with cordiality for the West. The invitation to President Eisenhower to visit the Soviet Union could not have been more unqualified and handsome. This, and the offer to Mr. Dulles, to crown him as victor of the cold war, if only he would stop it, are examples of effective peace propaganda. They have made it harder to convince people that it is ~~the~~ Soviet Union who is making trouble.

On analysis, however, Khrushchev did not give anything away, or even hint that he would be ready for a real give-and-take in the negotiations about Germany and European security. [Even as to Berlin, it is yet to be demonstrated that he would make West Berlin a genuinely and permanently free city under effective United Nations control.]

Back in a moment.-

Jorge Bryan.-

Word for Today

Khrushchev has made another [redacted] speech...brandishing the intercontinental ballistic missile and at the same time making sounds of sweet reasonableness. Khrushchev is full of this kind of flexibility. The West, too, needs to [redacted] pursue peace with boldness, imagination, [redacted]

For the alternative, as Paul Hoffman once said, is stalemate. "And stalemate, let's face it, means the end of our way of life."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Premier Khrushchev today invited President Eisenhower to come to the Soviet Union as "his welcome guest." Khrushchev did not send the President a formal invitation...but made the suggestion in a speech climaxing the Communist party congress. The White House, so far, has declined to comment. British Prime Minister Macmillan announced today that he has accepted a standing invitation...and will go to Russia on February 21st to stay for a week or ten days. Macmillan told the House of Commons that he is not going to Moscow to negotiate. The trip, he said, will be "something in the nature of a reconnaissance." West Germany says that it "welcomes" the Macmillan visit to Moscow. The British prime minister, it says, will have an opportunity to present the Western position "directly and with all emphasis."

David Schoenbrun...reporting from Paris...says the French like the West Germans are putting as good a face as possible on the Macmillan visit, although it is directly contrary to what DeGaulle wants at this time. The French know that Macmillan is no Chamberlain, but they want to avoid any impression that we are "running scared."

Secretary of State Dulles has arrived in Paris after two days of talks with British leaders. Tomorrow, he will see General DeGaulle...and on Saturday he will confer with Canncellor Adenauer in Bonn. Dulles said today that his consultations in London had been useful. We are conferring, he said, so that our views on Germany "may develop on parallel lines."

In his speech today...before the 21st party congress...Khrushchev again demanded the withdrawal of allied troops from Berlin. He would still make West Berlin a "free city"...but the West... he said, would be guaranteed access to it. And Russia would consider making it a United Nations responsibility. Khrushchev called for an end to the Cold War, but it was not "mere rhetoric," he said to report that Russia now has long-range missiles in "serial production." He also accused American leaders of having a "readiness" to sacrifice their allies. (I should like to examine the Khrushchev speech further in a few minutes.)

The United States charged today that Soviet aircraft deliberately shot down an American transport plane last September. To support the charge, the State Department made public a recording of what it said was an intercepted radio conversation among Russian fighter pilots. The Russian pilots are heard talking to each other as they attack a target described as a four-engined transport. The Amercian aircraft was a four-engined C-130, with a crew of seventeen on board. Russia has returned only six bodies...and claims that it knows nothing of the other eleven. Moscow says the transport crashed some 20 miles inside Russia, near the Turkish frontier, but denies that it was shot down. The United States says the aircraft strayed over the frontier by accident, and now it accuses Russia of making a deliberate attack. The State Department does not say how the recording of the pilots' conversation was obtained...but describes it as "absolutely authentic." About three months ago, the department tried to get Soviet Ambassador Menshikov to listen to the recording, but Menshikov refused...on grounds that he was not expert in such matters. He did accept a transcript. Vice President Nixon and Secretary Dulles questioned Deputy Premier Mikoyan on the subject last month, when Mikoyan was in Washington. Mikoyan insisted that the Soviet government had given all the information it had. The transcript of the recording was read this afternoon by Senator Lausche of Ohio on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Symington called the Russian action "sad and reprehensible" and urged a program of greater military strength. United Nations Ambassador Lodge said, "Soviet actions like these speak louder than words."

The East German Communists today released five American servicemen, in accordance with arrangements made by the Red Cross. Three of the men had been missing behind the Iron Curtain for more than two months and were listed as A.W.O.L.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his civil rights program. The legislation proposed falls into seven parts. It would make the use of force....or the threat of force...to obstruct court orders in a school integration case a federal crime. The life of the Civil Rights Commission, due to expire next September, would be extended for two years. And the commission to prevent discrimination in employment...where government contracts are involved...would be established by law. It was created originally by executive order. Mr. Eisenhower also asked for a strengthening of the hand of the F.B.I. in dealing with the bombing of churches and schools. Funds would be authorized to help states make the transition from segregated to de-segregated schools. And provision would be made for the education of children of members of the armed forces where public schools have been closed...due to the decisions handed down by either the federal or state courts. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen says the program exemplifies the President as a "man of utmost good will, always devoted to a moderate course." Majority Leader Johnson promises that the President's recommendations will be considered "on their merits." (Johnson himself has introduced a civil rights bill of his own.) House Speaker Rayburn predicts that Congress will extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission. But he is silent on the rest of Mr. Eisenhower's recommendations.

A new kind of competition seems to be going on between the East and the West over who is going to be more "flexible" in the upcoming negotiations over Germany. Secretary Dulles started it when he admitted that Germany could be re-united by some means other than free elections. Then he expressed willingness to discuss the Rapacki plan for a nuclear-free zone in Central Europe. Then, after quietly urging our allies to re-study their German policies, he went off to Europe to see how much flexibility they had shown, so that new counter-proposals could be made to the Russians.

But flexibility is not what Mr. Dulles is noted for, nor can flexibility be expected from a coalition. By its nature a coalition thrives on negatives, on things it refuses to do, not on its imagination about new solutions. In Nikita Khrushchev the West is up against a great expert in flexibility. He can strike and he can step back, challenge and conciliate, timing each step to suit himself. In his closing speech before the Soviet Communitt Party Congress today he gave a new display of these abilities.

He applied his flexibility to his demand that the Allies get out of West Berlin, a proposition he had previously made so blantantly that the West had at once agreed to reject it. They were sure that West Berlin as a free city would be an island in a sea of Communism, without reliable access to the West, and dependent on East Germany for its economic survival. They felt they were being ordered to abandon two million free Germans to inevitable absorption by the Eastern communists.

But Khrushchev today changed his pitch if not his tune. And he produced something considerably harder for the West to reject. He proposed that the Four Powers draft a statute which would guarantee the links of the city with all countries with which it wants to maintain relations, and the access of these countries to the city. And he suggested that the free city be under the auspices of the United Nations.

The tune is the same, in that the Allies would have to get out. But the music is softer and sweeter. The immediate comment of informed peiple in Washington was that everything depends on how much Khrushchev means it. Would he, for example, allow administration of the city to be in any way supervised by the United Nations? This would seem to call for the presence of U.N. forces. It would surprise them if Khrushchev agreed. But it was admitted in Washington that he had made it harder for the allies to hold fast to their unanimous rejection of the Berlin plan.

Khrushchev showed flexibility in other ways too. Yesterday the news passed the Moscow censorship that Khrushchev had told the West German Ambassador he would accept free elections in a unified Germany. It happens that this information did not originate in German or American quarters in Moscow. The Russians supplied it. Obviously they wanted the world to hear how flexible they are. Then Khrushchev in his speech today said openly that he did not object to free elections if East and West Germany agreed to them, so long as no third party interfered. However,he was not abandoning East Geramny for he told Chancellor Adenauer, as though address ing him in person: "Neither by yourself nor with the aid of your Allies are you capable of abolishing the Socialist - that is, the Communist - system in East Germany." So reunification will only be possible if East Germany remains autonomous and Communist. He wanted free elections, Khrushchev said, because one day he hoped West Germany would vote to go Communist.

The Khrushchev speech glowed with cordiality for the West. The invitation to President Eisenhower to visit the Soviet Union could not have been more unqualified and handsome. This, and the offer to Mr. Dulles, to crown him as victor of the cold war, if only he would stop it, are examples of effective peace propaganda. They have made it harder to convince people that it is the Soviet Union who is making trouble.

On analysis, however, Khrushchev did not give anything away, or even hint that he would be ready for a real give-and-take in the negotiations about Germany and European security. Even as to Berlin, it is yet to be demonstrated that he would make West Berlin a genuinely and permanently free city under effective United Nations control.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Khrushchev has made another speech...brandishing the intercontinental ballistic missile and at the same time making sounds of sweet reasonableness. Khrushchev is full of this kind of flexibility. The West, too, needs to pursue peace with boldness and imagination, for the alternative as Paul Hoffman once said, is stalemate. "And stalemate, let's face it, means the end of our way of life."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 6, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today conferred with French leaders on the German problem. He called first on Foreign Minister de Murville...and then saw President DeGaulle for an hour and a half. They agreed that the right of free access to Berlin must be maintained. A French spokesman says they also agreed not to accept the unilateral decision of Russia to end the four-power status of Berlin on May 27. Dulles later had a long talk with the secretary-general of NATO, Paul-Henri Spaak.

An American spokesman says that Dulles is "fully satisfied" with the results of his talks so far. Those talks began in London on Wednesday, and for a report on how the consultations are being viewed in British quarters, here is Charles Collingwood.

TAPE RUNS 1:55, ENDS ON CUE: "NOW BACK TO ED MURROW IN N.Y."

The difference in approach to the German problem becomes more apparent as we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris. TAPE RUNS 2:20, ENDS ON CUE: "NOW BACK TO ERM IN NY."

Secretary Dulles enters the most difficult phase of his mission tomorrow, when he flies to West Germany. Chancellor Adenauer would appear to be more inflexible on the subject of German reunification and Berlin than either Britain or the United States. The opposition parties in West Germany have been urging Adenauer to adopt a more flexible line...and today the opposition party leaders called on the chancellor in person to demand what course he proposes to follow. After a two-hour meeting, they complained that Adenauer had refused to go into particulars. According to informants, he said that the "decisive" proposals would have to come from the United States. He is also quoted as saying that much will depend on what British Prime Minister Macmillan has to report after his mission...late this month...to Moscow.

President Eisenhower has responded to Premier Khrushchev's informal invitation to visit Russia by saying that he has "no present plans to make such a trip." Mr. Eisenhower gave his reaction in a statement...read by News Secretary Hagerty at Thomasville, Georgia, where the President is vacationing. It was noted that Khrushchev issued the invitation in a speech which contained some "very hostile" references to American leaders. "It seems strange," the White House statement continued, "that Premier Khrushchev...if he really welcomes a visit by the President...would extend it in such circumstances." But if future developments suggest that a visit to Russia would serve the cause of peace, "then it certainly would be considered."

The State Department today explained why it had made public the recorded radio conversation of Soviet pilots...identified as shooting down an unarmed American transport last September. A department spokesman, Lincoln White, denied that the tape was released at this time...so that it might influence negotiations on the future of Germany. He said the recording was released because five months of diplomatic inquiry had proved fruitless. It is hoped, he said, that the "shock of world opinion" will now cause the Soviet government to come forward with the facts. The American C-130 carried a crew of seventeen, when it strayed over the Soviet frontier. The Russians...who say that the aircraft simply crashed... have returned the bodies of six airmen but deny knowledge of the other eleven. Two of the victims were buried with honors today in Arlington National Cemetery.

Yesterday, Premier Khrushchev described Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota as a "peddlar of fairy tales". / Khrushchev was referring to Humphrey's remarks...based on his recent eight-hour interview with the Soviet leader. / Khrushchev was particularly incensed by Humphrey's suggestion of rivalry between Russia and Communist China, and the possibility of an ultimate split. Humphrey's comment today was: "I must have touched a very sensitive nerve."

Reports reaching Lebanon today, said that six members of the Iraqi cabinet have resigned. / All six...including the Iraqi foreign minister... are ~~[illegible]~~ regarded as anti-Communists. / A new political crisis appears to be facing Premier Kassem. / Details are fragmentary---and not confirmed.

In Rome, former Premier Segni today agreed to try to form a new government. / President Gronchi called on Segni, after Premier Fanfani refused to withdraw his resignation, and go before parliament for a new vote of confidence. / A member of the majority Christian-Democratic Party, Segni was minister of defense in the Fanfani cabinet. If Segni fails to form a government, Gronchi may call for parliamentary elections to end the crisis, now in its second week.

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey met in Zurich, Switzerland today...in an effort to solve the Cyprus problem. A Turkish spokesman said...after the two-hour meeting... that they "got down to the core of the problem." He did not elaborate.

At Cape Canaveral this afternoon, the United States fired its first Titan missile. An intercontinental ballistic missile of 110-tons, the Titan is the first of a new series of "second generation" rockets. The Air Force says it should be more powerful and less complex than the Atlas...with a range of better than 8-thousand miles. Today's test flight of the Titan...over a limited 300-mile range...was an apparent success.

In Congress today, the Senate approved a 465-million-dollar airport improvement program. The final vote was 62 to 22. The program...as approved...is 100-million dollars less than the Democrats originally proposed but 265-million dollars more than was recommended by the Administration.

House Democrats agreed today to cut the omnibus housing bill by 875-million dollars...still leaving it 400-million dollars bigger than President Eisenhower has proposed. The new 2-billion-dollar measure was then approved by a House banking subcommittee. Next week it goes before the full banking committee.

In Montgomery, Alabama...a petition was filed today in Federal Court, asking for an injunction to stop alleged discrimination against Negro voters in Macon County. The petition was filed by the Justice Department. It charges that qualified Negroes have been barred from voting...in violation of THE Constitution..."for years."

Back in a moment -

George Bryan

Word for Today

Secretary Dulles is engaged in the serious task of trying to preserve allied unity in the face of Soviet threats. He already has conferred with British leaders. Today he was in Paris, and tomorrow he flies to see Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn. As Albert Camus once said of a character, "He is taking steps. Indeed, he is making haste with prudent deliberation."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, February 6, 1959
8:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... and for a report on how the consultations are being viewed in British quarters, here is Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: The easiest part of Secretary Dulles's trip to Europe was undoubtedly his stopover in London. As far as go the problems of Germany and how to deal with the Russians over them, he doesn't have any trouble with the British. He knows what they think and agrees with most of it. They know what he thinks and agree with most of that. It's to Paris and Bonn, that the Secretary's real concern seems directed. The West Germans and the French do not want to budge from the formula for Germany on which the West has relied for so long. London does want to budge, maybe not far, but it would like to add a new wrinkle or two, and the impression persists that Secretary Dulles is ready to try a slightly different approach too. When he arrived in London, there were many reports that the Secretary of State was bringing some new ideas. Once he was here, his staff indignantly denied that he had any new ideas at all, his old ones, they said still had a lot of wear in them. Nevertheless, he and Prime Minister MacMillan and Foreign Secretary Lloyd certainly did discuss while he was here some approaches to the German problem which go beyond the present Allied position. They're not committed to them, and these approaches do not necessarily violate the present position or change its fundamental emphasis, but they go beyond it. The feeling here is that this is at the core of Mr. Dulles's mission, that he wants to persuade Dr. Adenauer and General De Gaulle as he doesn't have to persuade the British, that it is possible to make some new suggestions on Germany that do not do violence to the basic hypotheses of Western policy but are nonetheless different. Chancellor Adenauer, of course, is very leary about anything which might conceivably pjeopardize the future he wants for Germany. General De Gaulle, these days, is very leary about most things in the realm of foreign policy which emanates from Washington or London. It looks as though Mr. Dulles may have his work cut out for him.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The difference in approach to the German problem becomes more apparent, as we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: Diplomatic sources here in Paris - both American and European, all sound like old Dr. Kooay, whose prescription for good health was simply to keep saying, "Everyday and everyway I'm getting better and better." In this spirit, the diplomats here in Paris have been endlessly chanting, "There are no splits in the Western camp, there are no splits in the Western camp." The truth, I believe, is somewhere between this Kooay like spirit and press reports of discord among the Allies. There is no real evidence of any deep and fundamental discord on the need to defend Western positions in Germany and to keep that country solidly tied to the Atlantic Alliance. But, if there's no fundamental conflict on these principles, there certainly are divergent ideas on how to accomplish them. Diplomatic sources of many nations here in the NATO capital, are concerned for example about British diplomacy. Britain did not consult with her Allies about MacMillan's trip to Moscow. The British simply informed their Allies that MacMillan would go. London for many weeks has been a busy launching platform for trial balloons, about how to deal with the East Germans, about reviving the Eden Plan, about the need to be more flexible in dealing with the Russians. All of this has been highly disturbing to the continental nations who live in fear of any move that seems to encourage the neutralization of Germany or the withdrawal of American troops. The French particularly are anxious to preserve important progress towards a united European community and above all to preserve the American committment to defend that community on the continent. These fears are real, and so are these differences in approach to East-West negotiations., and no amount of official denials can conceal them. Nor has any official disclosed any new proposals on how to end the German deadlock. The only general agreement is the need to seek new ideas and to be ready to talk with the Russians. On this, there is agreement, and a feeling of real satisfaction here in Paris following what is described as the cordial and useful talks between Dulles and Pres. De Gaulle. This is Paris.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary Dulles enters the most difficult phase of his mission tomorrow when he flies to West Germany.

PT/ N.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today conferred with French leaders on the German problem. He called first on Foreign Minister de Murville...and then saw President DeGaulle for an hour and a half. They agreed that the right of free access to Berlin must be maintained. A French spokesman says they also agreed not to accept the unilateral decision of Russia to end the four-power status of Berlin on May 27. Dulles laterhad a long talk with the secretary general of NATO, Paul-Henri Spaak.

An American spokesman says that Dulles is "fully satisfied" with the results of his talks so far. Those talks began in London on Wednesday, and for a report on how the consultations are being viewed in British quarters, here is Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: The easiest part of Secretary Dulles's trip to Europe was undoubtedly his stopover in London. As far as go the problems of Germany and how to deal with the Russians over them, he doesn't have any trouble with the British. He knows what they think and agrees with most of it. They know what he thinks and agree with most of that. It's to Paris and Bonn, that the Secretary's real concern seems directed. The West Germans and the French do not want to budge from the formula for Germany on which the West has relied for so long. London does want to budge, amybe not far, but it would like to add a new wrinkle or two, and the impression persists that Secretary Dulles is ready to try a slightly different approach too. When he arrived in London, there were many reports that the Secretary of State was bringing some new ideas. Once he was here, his staff indignantly denied that he had any new ideas at all, his old ones, they said still had a lot of wear in them. Nevertheless, he and Prime Minister Macmillan and Foreign Secretary Lloyd certainly did discuss while he was here some approaches to the German problem which go beyond the present Allied position. They're not committed to them, and these approaches do not necessarily violate the present position or change its fundamental emphasis, but they go beyond it. The feeling here is that this is at the core of Mr. Dulles's mission, that he wants to persuade Dr. Adenauer and General DeGaulle as he doesn't have to persuade the British, that it is possible to make some new suggestions on Germany that do not do violence to the basic hypotheses of Western policy but are nonetheless different. Chancellor Adenauer, of course, is very leary about anything which might conceivably jeopardize the future he wants for Germany. General DeGaulle, these days, is very leary about most things in the realm of foreign policy which emanates from Washington or London. It looks as though Mr. Dulles may have his work cut out for him.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The difference in approach to the German problem becomes more apparent, as we switch to Davidi Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: Diplomatic sources here in Paris - both American and European all sound like old Dr. Couet whose prescription for good health was simply to keep saying, "Every day and every way I'm getting better and better." In this spirit, the diplomats here in Paris have been endlessly chanting, "There are no splits in the Western camp, there are no splits in the Western camp." The truth, I believe, is spmewhere between this Couet-like spirit and press reports of discord among the Allies. There is no real evidence of any deep and fundamental discord on the need to defend Western positions in Germany and to keep that country solidly tied to the Atlantic Alliance. But, if there's no fundamental conflict on these principles, there certainly are divergent ideas on how to accomplish them. Diplomatic sources of many nations here in the NATO capital, are concerned for example about British diplomany. Btitain did not consult with her allies about MacMillan's trip to Moscow. The British simply informed their allies that MacMillan would go. London for many weeks has been a busy launching platform for trial balloons, about how to deal with the East Germans, about reviving the Eden Plan, about the need to be more flexible in dealing with the Russians. All of this has been highly disturbing to the continental nations who live in fear of any move that seems to encourage the neutralization of Germany or the withdrawal of American troops. The French particularly are anxious to preserve important progress towards a united European community and above all to preserve the American committment to defend that community on the continent. These fears are real, and so are these differences in approach to East-West negotiation, and no amount of official denials can conceal them. Nor has any official disclosed any new proposals on how to end the German deadlock. The only general agreement is the need to seek new ideas and to be ready to talk with the Russians. On this, there is agreement, and a feeling of real satisfaction here in Paris following what is described as the cordial and useful talks between Dulles and President DeGaulle. This is Paris.

Now, here is Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary Dulles enters the most difficult phase of his mission tomorrow when he flies to West Germany. Chancellor Adenauer would appear to me more inflexible on the subject of German reuinification than either Britain or the United States. The opposition parties in West Germany have been urging Adenauer to adopt a more flexible line...and today the opposition party leaders called on the chancellor in person to demand what course he proposes to follow. After a two hour meeting, they complained that Adenauer had refused to go into particulars. According to informants, he said that the "decisive" proposals would have to come from the United States. He is also quoted as saying that much will depend on what British Prime Minister MacMillan has to report after his mission...late this month to Moscow.

President Eisenhower has responded to Premier Khrushchev's informal invitation to visit Russia by saying that he has "no present plans to make such a trip." Mr. Eisenhower gave his reaction in a statement....read by News Secretary Hagerty at Thomasville, Georgia, where the President is vacationing. It was noted that Khrushchev issued the invitation in a speech which contained some "very hostile" references to American leaders. "It seems strange," the White House statement continued, "that Premier Khrushchev...if he really welcomes a visit by the President...would extend it in such circumstances." But if future developments suggest that a visit to Russia would serve the cause of peace, "then it certainly would be considered."

The State Department today explained why it had made public the recorded radio conversation of Soviet pilots...identified as shooting down an unarmed American transport last September. A department spokesman, Lincoln White, denied that the tape was released at this time...so that it might influence negotiations on the future of Germany. He said the recording was released because five months of diplomatic inquiry had proved fruitless. It is hoped, he said, that the "shock of world opinion" will now cause the Soviet government to come forward with the facts. The American C-130 carried a crew of seventeen when it strayed over the Soviet frontier. The Russians...who say that the aircraft simply crashed... have returned the bodies of six airmen, but deny knowledge of the other eleven. Two of the victims were buried with honors today in Arlington National Cemetery.

Yesterday, Premier Khrushchev described Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota as a "peddlar of fairy tales." Khrushchev was referring to Humphrey's remarks...based on his recent eight-hour interview with the Soviet leader. Khrushchev was particularly incensed by Humphrey's suggestion of rivalry between Russia and Communist China and the possibility of an ultimate split. Humphrey's comment today was: "I must have touched a very sensitive nerve."

Reports reaching Lebanon today said that six members of the Iraqi cabinet have resigned. All six---including the Iraqi foreign minister...are regarded as anti-Communists. A new political crisis appears to be facing Premier Kassem. Details are fragmentary---and not confirmed.

In Rome, former Premier Segni today agreed to try to form a new government. President Gronchi called on Segni after Premier Fanfani refused to withdraw his resignation and go before parliament for a new vote of confidence. A member of the majority Christian-Democratic Party, Segni was minister of defense in the Fanfani cabinet. If Segni fails to form a government, Gronchi may call for parliamentary elections to end the crisis, now in its second week.

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey met in Zurich, Switzerland today in an effort to solve the Cyprus problem. A Turkish spokesman said...after the two-hour meeting...that they "got down to the core of the problem." He did not elaborate.

At Cape Canaveral this afternoon, the United States fired its first Titan missile. An intercontinental ballistic missile of 110-tons, the Titan is the first of a new series of "second generation" rockets. The Air Force says it should be more powerful and less complex than the Atlas..with a range of better than 8-thousand miles. Today's test flight of the Titan...over a limited 300-mile range...was an apparent success.

In Congress today, the Senate approved a 465 million dollar airport improvement program. The final vote was 62 to 22. The program...as approved...is 100-million dollars less than the Democrats originally proposed but 265 million dollars more than was recommended by the Administration.

House Democrats agreed today to cut the omnibus housing bill by 875 million dollars...still leaving it 400-million dollars bigger than President Eisenhower has proposed. The new 2-billion dollar measure was then approved by a House banking subcommittee. Next week it goes before the full banking committee.

In Montgomery, Alabama...a petition was filed today in Federal Court, asking for an injunction to stop alleged discrimination against Negro voters in Macon County. The petition was filed by the Justice Department. It charges that qualified Negroes have been barred from voting...in violation of the Constitution "for years."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Secretary Dulles is engaged in the serious task of trying to preserve allied unity in the face of Soviet threats. He already has conferred with British leaders. Today he was in Paris, and tomorrow he flies to see Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn. As Albert Camus once said of a character, "He is taking steps. Indeed, he is making haste with prudent deliberation." Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Feb. 9, 1959

This is the news:

The White House announces that Secretary of State Dulles is giving up his duties "for a short period" so that he may undergo a hernia operation. Mr. Dulles said in a letter to President Eisenhower, "My doctors advise that I should have an operation for a recently developed hernia, and I have not wholly thrown off the effects of the inflammation of the colon, which occurred last December." For this reason, he said, he would also like to devote a few weeks to physical recuperation. He pointed out that in this time...free from other responsibilities...he could concentrate on the "complicated and grave problems" raised by the Soviet threats regarding Berlin. Mr. Dulles will enter Walter Reed Hospital tomorrow for the operation. His duties will be taken over temporarily by Deputy Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon. / The position normally would be filled by Under Secretary of State Christian Herter, but Herter is on vacation, and Dillon will serve until his return. / A reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty whether there is any indication that Dulles may not return to his post. / Hagerty said, "He not only has every intention of returning, but is going to return." Mr. Dulles was operated on for cancer of the intestine in 1957. / Last December...when the intestine again became inflamed...doctors said the two illnesses were unrelated.

Tonight's announcement of Mr. Dulles' new indisposition, came immediately after he had reported personally to President Eisenhower on his mission last week to London, Paris and Bonn. / Before seeing the President, Dulles also conferred for half an hour with Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin...who is visiting Washington. / Brandt says that Dulles gave him "strong new assurances", that the United States would firmly defend its rights in Berlin.

Mr. Dulles told reporters...on returning to Washington this morning... that his talks with British, French and West German leaders had consisted primarily of an exchange of views on the "serious situation created by Soviet threats and repudiations concerning Berlin." Dulles said, "We are resolved that our position in...and access to...West Berlin shall be preserved." There is general agreement, he said, "as to the procedures we shall follow, if physical means are invoked to interfere with our rights." Mr. Dulles did not say what these procedures might be. But he said in his prepared statement "We do not accept any substitution of East Germans for the Soviet Union in its responsibilities toward Berlin and its obligations to us." (Russia has said that it will turn over its control of Allied communications to the East German regime.) Dulles said the Western powers will keep in close touch on the German situation. "Their foreign ministers," he said, "contemplate meetings as may be appropriate."

The British Foreign Office was asked TO comment today...on Mr. Dulles' recent testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the Western powers would rather risk war than abandon West Berlin to the Communists. A Foreign Office spokesman said that whether there need be any risk of war over Berlin "lies solely with the Soviet government."

President Eisenhower will hold a news conference tomorrow...instead of on Wednesday...because of a heavy Wednesday schedule.

The Administration today sent Congress its program of aid to education. The program is in two parts. School districts...financially unable to build new elementary schools and high schools...would receive about 2-billion dollars on a matching basis over a period of 25 years. The other part of the program would apply to colleges and universities which cannot afford new construction. For these institutions...over a period of 25 years...the Federal Government would provide 500-million dollars. Payments would amount to 25 percent of the total construction cost. The secretary of health, education and welfare...Dr. Arthur Flemming... called the project consistent with the fiscal policies of the Eisenhower Administration. Both phases of the program, he explained, can be handled within the bounds of the 77-billion-dollar budget since no cash payments would be required in the next fiscal year. Any federal loans to a school district are repayable. However, if a district cannot repay a loan after 10 years, the loan is "forgiven."

~~Dr. Flemming said he wished to point out "for the record" that "only a fraction" of either the federal or municipal bonds are held by banks.~~

The Federal Aviation Agency today curtailed the bad weather operation of Electra turbo-prop aircraft. It was an Electra turbo-prop which crashed here in New York last Tuesday, claiming 65 lives. The accident occurred in a combination of rain and fog. Pending further investigation, the minimum visibility requirements for Electra aircraft are raised. ~~An Electra is forbidden...temporarily...to land when the cloud ceiling over an airport is less than one thousand feet...and when daytime forward visibility is less than a mile. The visibility at night must be at least two miles.~~ The aircraft was placed in service last month.

Newspapers in Syria say that two hundred Arab nationalists have been arrested by the Iraqi government...following the mass resignation last week of six anti-Communists from the cabinet of Premier Kassem. ~~The Communist newpaper in Baghdad, Capital of Iraq, calls the resignation of cabinet ministers a victory for the Communist cause. It claims that pressure was brought on Kassem to curb the Communist momement in Iraq but that Kassem refused.~~

Edward R. Murrow: February 9, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

A question of some moment to almost everyone in the world is how strong Nikita Khrushchev really is. He has come through the ordeal of a Party Congress with sensational success. And in the field of foreign affairs he is so strong as to make Secretary Dulles look almost pitiful in contrast. That is, Khrushchev sits in the Kremlin, maps out his moves, times his steps and dominates the preliminaries to the coming negotiations over Germany, while Mr. Dulles has to fly from capital to capital feverishly seeking an elusive accord on Western policy. Mr. Dulles has suffered no setbacks on his last trip, but the job of getting something positive out of a coalition is both complicated and nerve-wracking. The job of Khrushchev as boss of a huge ~~authoritarian~~ Totalitarian empire seems to be dazzlingly simple. This is a reversal of the copybook maxim that things go well for the free, and not so well for the dictators.

And it raises the immediate question of how genuine Khrushchev's power really is. Judged by the all-Party Congress, his control of Soviet affairs is flawless. Not a voice was raised to criticize him or anything he had done. This was all the more impressive since Khrushchev is deliberately basing his power on the Party, and not, as Stalin did, on the army and secret police along with the Party. Stalin did not even bother to call an all-Party Congress for thirteen years. Another copybook maxim is that a ruler who governs by consent is stronger than one who rules by tyranny, which would make Khrushchev stronger than Stalin, even though the Party is only a fraction of the Soviet people.

One of the features of the 21st Congress was the disclosures connected with the so-called "anti-party group." This has an immediate bearing on Khrushchev's power. The Congress learned something quite startling about the activities of the group, which was a verification of the wild rumors of [redacted] last June that Khrushchev was virtually voted out of office by the all-powerful Party Presidium. Six of its members opposed him and only five supported him. It may even be that the vote was seven to four against him. The exact nature of the proposition on which they voted was not revealed. But when a majority of the Presidium sided against Khrushchev he should have been out.

Word of this got abroad at the time. Khrushchev saved his skin by appealing to the Central Committee of the Party, which is packed with high Party functionaries who are Khrushchev's men. It will be recalled that Marshall Zhukov came to Khrushchev's rescue by flying Central Committee members to Moscow in army planes. This favor, as it turned out, was not to save Zhukov from later catastrophe, because he asked too big a reward and had to go.

[redacted]

What was new in the story, and must have shaken the Congress, was the open admission that six members of the Presidium had been against Khrushchev. Two, whose names had not been officially cited in this role, rose at the Congress to ask forgiveness. They were Pervukhin and Saburov. They did not admit that they had voted with the anti-party group to overthrow Khrushchev, saying they had only differed with him on economic policy. They already had been thrown out of the Presidium, but not otherwise openly disgraced. However, the wheels of vengeance sometimes grind slowly in the Soviet Union, and did even in Stalin's time. Bulganin, now branded a ringleader of the anti-party group, remained Premier for a whole year after the fateful Presidium meeting, and still is a member of the Central Committee. Malenkov, Molotov and Kaganovich were demoted and exiled more quickly. It can be said on Khrushchev's behalf that he has not eliminated his rivals altogether, but this may or may not be a proof of strength.

Now to say that Khrushchev's power is absolute, when he escaped overthrow only by a hairsbreadth twenty months ago, may be factually accurate. But it only emphasizes that absolute power under the Soviet system is highly precarious. Khrushchev's power looks to be tremendous. But as one looks at it, it occasionally seems to tremble, like a piece of stage scenery. He even may be safe for a long time to come. All the same, all Soviet Communists now know officially, that he had a very close call, something the omnipotent do not have.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

Khrushchev gives the impression of being in full control, despite the element of weakness exposed recently for all to see. There may be other elements of weakness---doubtless there are---but in Russia Khrushchev appears all-powerful. And La Rochefoucauld warns, in one of his maxims, "Only in unimportant things do we dare not trust to appearance."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House announces that Secretary of State Dulles is giving up his duties "for a short period" so that he may undergo a hernia operation. Mr. Dulles said in a letter to President Eisenhower, "My doctors advise that I should have an operation for a recently developed hernia and I have not wholly thrown off the effects of the inflammation of the colon, which occurred last December." For this reason, he said, he would also like to devote a few weeks to physical recuperation. He pointed out that in this time...free from other responsibilities...he could concentrate on the "complicated and grave problems" raised by the Soviet threats regarding Berlin. Mr. Dulles will enter Walter Reed Hospital tomorrow for the operation. His duties will be taken over temporarily by Deputy Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon. The position normally would be filled by Under Secretary of State Christian Herter, but Herter is on vacation and Dillon will serve until his return. A reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty whether there is any indication that Dulles may not return to his post. Hagerty said, "He not only has every intention of returning but is going to return." Mr. Dulles was operated on for cancer of the intestine in 1957. Last December...when the intestine again became inflamed...doctors said the two illnesses were unrelated.

Tonight's announcement of Mr. Dulles' new indisposition came immediately after he had reported personally to President Eisenhower on his mission last week to London, Paris and Bonn. Before seeing the President, Dulles also conferred for half an hour with Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin...who is visiting Washington. Brandt says that Dulles gave him "strong new assurances" that the United States would firmly defend its rights in Berlin.

Mr. Dulles told reporters...on returning to Washington this morning...that his talks with British, French and West German leaders had consisted primarily of an exchange of views on the "serious situation created by Soviet threats and repudiations concerning Berlin." Dulles said, "We are resolved that our position in...and access to...West Berlin shall be preserved." There is general agreement, he said, "as to the procedures we shall follow, if physical means are invoked to interfere with our rights." Mr. Dulles did not say what these procedures might be. But he said in his prepared statement, "We do not accept any substitution of East Germans for the Soviet Union in its responsibilities toward Berlin and its obligations to us." Russia has said that it will turn over its control of Allied communications to the East German regime. Dulles said the Western powers will keep in close touch on the German situation. "Their foreign ministers," he said, "contemplate meetings as may be appropriate."

The British Foreign Office was asked to comment today...on Mr. Dulles' recent testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the Western powers would rather risk war than abandon West Berlin to the Communists. A Foreign Office spokesman said that whether there need be any risk of war over Berlin "lies solely with the Soviet government."

President Eisenhower will hold a news conference tomorrow...instead of on Wednesday...because of a heavy Wednesday schedule.

The Administration today sent Congress its program of aid to education. The program is in two parts. School districts...financially unable to build new elementary schools and high schools...would receive about 2-billion dollars on a matching basis over a period of 25 years. The other part of the program would apply to colleges and universities which cannot afford new construction. For these institutions...over a period of 25 years...the Federal Government would provide 500-million dollars. Payments would amount to 25 percent of the total construction cost. The secretary of health, education and welfare...Dr. Arthur Flemming...called the project consistent with the fiscal policies of the Eisenhower Administration. Both phases of the program, he explained, can be handled within the bounds of the 77-billion-dollar budget since no cash payments would be required in the next fiscal year. Any federal loans to a school district are repayable. However, if a district cannot repay a loan after 10 years, the loan is"forgiven."

The Federal Aviation Agency today curtailed the bad weather operation of Electra turbo prop aircraft. It was an Electra turbo-prop which crashed here in New York last Tuesday, claiming 65 lives. The accident occurred in a combination of rain and fog. Pending further investigation, the minimum visibility requirements for Electra aircraft are raised. The aircraft was placed in service last month.

Newspapers in Syria say that two hundred Arab nationalists have been arrested by the Iraqi government...following the mass resignation last week of six anti-Communists from the cabinet of Premier Kassem.

A question of some moment to almost everyone in the world is how strong Nikita Khrushchev really is. He has come through the ordeal of a Party Congress with sensational success. And in the field of foreign affairs he is so strong as to make Secretary Dulles look almost pitiful in contrast. That is, Khrushchev sits in the Kremlin, maps out his moves, times his steps and dominates the preliminaries to the coming negotiations over Germany, while Mr. Dulles has to fly from capital to capital feverishly seeking an elusive accord on Western policy. Mr. Dulles has suffered no setbacks on his last trip, but the job of getting something positive out of a coalition is both complicated and nerve-wracking. The job of Khrushchev as boss of a huge totalitarian empire seems to be dazzlingly simple. This is a reversal of the copybook maxim that things go well for the free, and not so well for the dictators.

And it raises the immediate question of how genuine Khrushchev's power really is. Judged by the all-Party Congress, his control of Soviet affairs is flawless. Not a voice was raised to criticize him or anything he had done. This was all the more impressive since Khrushchev is deliberately basing his power on the Party, and not, as Stalin did, on the army and secret police along with the Party. Stalin did not even bother to call an all-Party Congress for thirteen years. Another copybook maxim is that a ruler who governs by consent is stronger than one who rules by tyranny, which would make Khrushchev stronger than Stalin, even though the Party is only a fraction of the Soviet people.

One of the features of the 21st Congress was the disclosures connected with the so-called "anti-party group." This has an immediate bearing on Khrushchev's power. The Congress learned something quite startling about the activities of the group, which was a verification of the wild rumors of last June that Khrushchev was virtually voted out of office by the all-powerful Party Presidium. Six of its members opposed him and only five supported him. It may even be that the vote was seven to four against him. The exact nature of the proposition on which they voted was not revealed. But when a majority of the Presidium sided against Khrushchev he should have been out.

Word of this got abroad at the time. Khrushchev saved his skin by appealing to the Central Committee of the Party, which is packed with high Party functionaries who are Khrushchev's men. It will be recalled that Marshall Zhukov came to Khrushchev's rescue by flying Central Committee members to Moscow in army planes. This favor, as it turned out, was not to save Zhukov from later catastrophe, because he asked too big a reward and had to go.

What was new in the story, and must have shaken the Congress, was the open admission that six members of the Presidium had been against Khrushchev. Two, whose names had not been officially cited in this role, rose at the Congress to ask forgiveness. They were Pervukhin and Saburov. They did not admit that they had voted with the anti-party group to overthrow Khrushchev, saying they had only differed with him on economic policy. They already had been thrown out of the Presidium, but not otherwise openly disgraced. However, the wheels of vengeance sometimes grind slowly in the Soviet Union, and did even in Stalin's time. Bulganin, now branded a ringleader of the anti-party group, remained Premier for a whole year after the fateful Presidium meeting, and still is a member of the Central Committee. Malenkov, Molotov and Kaganovich were demoted and exiled more quickly. It can be said on Khrushchev's behalf that he has not eliminated his rivals altogether, but this may or may not be a proof of strength.

Now to say that Khrushchev's power is absolute, when he escaped overthrow only by a hairsbreadth twenty months ago, may be factually accurate. Bit it only emphasizes that absolute power under the Soviet system is highly precarious. Khrushchev's power looks to be tremendous. But as one looks at it, it occasionally seems to tremble, like a piece of stage scenery. He even may be safe for a long time to come. All the same, all Soviet Communists now know officially, that he had a very close call, something the omnipotent do not have.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Khrushchev gives the impression of being in full control, despite the element of weakness exposed recently for all to see. There may be other elements of weakness---doubtless there are---but in Russia Khrushchev appears all-powerful. And LaRochefoucauld warns in one of his maxims, "Only in unimportant things do we dare not trust to appearance."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Feb. 10, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today entered Walter Reed Hospital for correction of a hernia condition, to be followed by a few weeks of rest and recuperation./ The hernia operation has been scheduled... tentatively...for sometime this week-end.

President Eisenhower opened his news conference today with a personal tribute to Mr. Dulles...calling him "the most valuable man in public affairs that I have ever known."/ The President said America "needs" Dulles, and he urged Americans to pray for his early recovery./ Mr. Eisenhower said that so far as he knew, Mr. Dulles' illness will not hold up preparations for any Big Four foreign ministers conference dealing with the Berlin question.

→

Regarding the results of Dulles' Europeam mission, the President said he had little to add to what Dulles told reporters yesterday on his return to Washington. Dulles said...at that time...that the four Western powers had "reconfirmed" the unity and firmness of their position.

~~As for visiting Russia, Mr. Eisenhower said that Premier Khrushchev would have to extend "a more persuasive kind of invitation" than that contained in his speech before the Communist Party Congress.~~

A question was asked as to whether American aircraft do not sometimes play "fox and hounds" with Soviet planes along the Turkish frontier as a means of testing Russia's air defense system. The question arose in connection with the shooting down...last September...of an unarmed American transport a few miles inside the Soviet frontier. The President said American airmen are under very strict orders not to engage in such tactics. ~~He believed that "once in a while" there are [illegible] signals transmitted by the Russians that will take an American aircraft off course,~~ but he was ~~quite sure that the [illegible] straying of the transport plane into Russia last September was accidental.~~

Mr. Eisenhower said that cutting foreign aid in order to spend more on domestic programs would be "statesmanship of a very low order." Again, he stressed the importance of a balanced budget. A reporter wanted to know if he had decided that it was more dangerous to run the government into the red than run the risk of inadequate education. The President said he was not sure that one could differentiate. "The human values in America," he said, "are not going to be promoted unless we are sane and sensible in our fiscal policies."

The goverhment reports that 600-thousand more persons were unemployed last month than in December. This raised the total unemployment figure last month to 4-million, 724-thousand....the highest unemployment figure for the month of January since 1941. George Meany, president of the A. F. of L. - C.I.O., says this report shows that unemployment is still "America's No. 1 problem." He accuses the Administration of "putting a balanced budget ahead of jobs and human needs."

The Moscow radio tonight accused the West of trying to stir up a counter-revolution in Iraq. Earlier today, Premier Khrushchev conferred with the Iraqi ambassador in what the Soviet news agency Tass described as "a friendly atmosphere." Last week, six anti-Communists resigned from the Iraqi cabinet, and pro-Nasser forces are reported seeking control.

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey conferred again today on the future of Cyprus. One report from Zurich, Switzerland...where Greek and Turkish leaders are meeting...says that agreement in principle already has been reached. Under the plan, the independence of the island would be guaranteed jointly by Great Britain, Turkey and Greece. Another conference will be held tomorrow.

The British government today announced "a significant increase" in the rate of production of nuclear weapons as the result of an exchange of information with the United States. The announcement was made in the annual British defense report, or White Paper. The report says that plans to end military conscription in Britain by 1962 have made "satisfactory progress." However, the standing ~~mmm~~ volunteer army is to be slightly larger than origihally planned.

President Eisenhower has declared [redacted]

St. Louis a major disaster area...as the result of a tornado which hit the city early today, claiming at least ~~19~~ 20 lives. A major disaster area is eligible for federal relief funds. More than 300 persons were treated in hospitals, and property damage is estimated in the millions of dollars. On the basis of incomplete reports, 17-hundred buildings were damaged and 41 destroyed. The tornado struck without warning...with winds up to 110 miles an hour...out of the southwest. ~~[redacted] Heaviest hit was the predominantly Negro neighborhood in the center of the city. A hole was torn in the roof of the St. Louis Arena, and a few of apartment houses was heavily damaged in the fashionable West End.~~ All day, rescue workers have been searching the debris for more bodies...or for trapped persons who may still be alive.

Nine Negro children entered three previously white schools in Alexandria, Virginia today without disorder. Absenteeism was about 10 percent at all three schools, and school officials say this is normal because many students have been suffering from colds. Extra police were on hand, but they found nothing to do. ~~Two of the schools integrated in Alexandria today are elementary schools---the first in Virginia to admit Negro children since the collapse of the massive resistance laws last month.~~

The Warren County High School...in Front Royal, Virginia...has been ordered to re-open on a desegregated basis on February 18th. The order was issued by Federal Judge John Paul, who turned down the petition of the school board...asking that integration be deferred until next September. The school closed last fall when Judge Paul ruled in favor of the admission of 22 Negro students. ~~Since then, more than 700 of the one thousand white students have been attending make-shift private classes. The suit to have the high school re-opened had been filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, representing the 22 Negro children. The school board indicates that it will appeal.~~

Edward R. Murrow: February 10, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Those who disagree with Secretary Dulles's foreign policy do not on that account lack admiration for his character, devotion and ability. And they join his strongest admirers, in deploring his absence from his desk just as the German crisis comes to a head. He had grasp of the situation as no one else in this country. He had had the privilege of consulting, in turn, Mr. Macmillan, General De Gaulle and Dr. Adenauer, after being the guiding figure at the last NATO Foreign Ministers' meeting. For him to take leave at this moment introduces an element of uncertainty into the conduct of Western policy toward Russia. President Eisenhower cannot take his place either in running the coalition or shaping American policy. He begged off from spending more time than he does on foreign affairs when questioned at his news conference today. Under-Secretary Herter may have the stature to fill Dulles's place but he doesn't have the essential prestige; and he too is not a well man, being handicapped by arthritis. Under-Secretary Dillon, now acting during Mr. Herter's absence, has knowledge, realism and ability, but hardly qualifies as both a national and international pilot at this juncture.

Mr. Dulles obviously feels quite keenly that he is wellnigh irreplaceable at this moment in the East-West conflict, and indeed he seems to be. / No doubt it was this sense that led him to write as he did to the President. / For he said he would continue to be available for consultation with him, and with the Acting Secretary of State, and added that he welcomes the opportunity to have some time free from routine cares, so as to concentrate on the problems of the coming East-West negotiations. / But this letter tends to advertise the serious effect of Mr. Dulles's illness, on the conduct of foreign affairs. For though he has kept a long-standing promise to take leave, the moment he is unable to do his work, he has not really made room for anyone to take his place. / He will go on being the President's chief adviser from his hospital bed, and will keep on guiding his subordinates. / ~~And as for his convalescence, he welcomes it as a chance to perfect his plans~~ for the negotiations ~~with the Russians.~~ / And so long as he says he intends to do this, no one else can gracefully undertake the planning job. / So the wise guidance of American, and Western foreign affairs, depends on the Secretary's ability to go through another surgical operation, and recover from an inflamed colon, and regain his fullest vitality in a few weeks. / This is a gamble. / It may turn out all right. / Mr. Dulles sincerely believes that it will, so does the President. But it is no disparagement of Mr. Dulles's almost fabulous capacity to surmount his disabilities, to say that the odds of the gamble are not overwhelmingly in his favor.

James Reston says in the New York Times that Washington officials are worried for two reasons, one being Mr. Dulles himself, the other being the organization he is setting up. As to his health, the hernia operation is considered minor, but the persistence of the colon infection is regarded as serious. He had a good rest in Jamaica, but the colon condition did not clear up. He has been in constant pain for weeks. Now the addition of the hernia trouble has forced him to submit to another session in the hospital, as the only chance of getting completely well. This is his third incapacity in two years, a disquieting record for a man of seventy.

The anxiety over the organization, Mr. Reston suggests, is that it gives Mr. Herter responsibility without authority. He questions also whether Mr. Herter sees eye-to-eye with Mr. Dulles on German policy, which might be another reason Mr. Dulles wants to keep the reins in his own hands.

Of course the basic trouble is that Mr. Dulles has ~~XXXXXX~~ run a one-man State Department, one can be sure, with the President's full approval. But when the one man has to go off to the hospital, a vacuum is left behind.

Not that Mr. Herter and Mr. Dillon are nonentities, they are far from it. They simply have been denied a sufficient share in originating and conducting policy. If Mr. Dulles gets well in time they can safely remain in his shadow. If he doesn't, delay and uncertainty seem inescapable. And this country and the whole West would be weakened, just when they need to be strong.

Back in a moment, -

George Bryan -

Word for Today

It will be "some weeks" before Mr. Dulles can return to his full duties as secretary of state. / His place will be taken...in the meantime... by experts, but this is not quite the same thing. / Policy is involved, and one is reminded once more of an observation made by Ralph Waldo Emerson. "There is properly no history," he said, "only biography."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today entered Walter Reed Hospital for correction of a hernia condition, to be followed by a few weeks of rest and recuperation. The hernia operation has been scheduled tentatively...for sometime this week-end.

President Eisenhower opened his news conference today with a personal tribute to Mr. Dulles...calling him "the most valuable man in public affairs that I have ever known." The President said America "needs" Dulles, and he urged Americans to pray for his early recovery. Mr. Eisenhower said that so far as he knew, Mr. Dulles' illness will not hold up preparation for any Big Four foreign ministers conference dealing with the Berlin question. Regarding the results of Dulles' European mission, the President said he had little to add to what Dulles told reporters yesterday on his return to Washington. Dulles said...at that time... that the four Western powers had "reconfirmed" the unity and firmness of their position.

A question was asked as to whether American aircraft do not sometimes play "for "fox and hounds" with Soviet planes along the Turkish frontier as a means of testing Russia's air defense system. The question arose in connection with the shooting down...last September...of an unarmed American transport a few miles inside the Soviet frontier. The President said American airmen are under very strict orders not to engage in such tactics.

Mr. Eisenhower said that cutting foreign aid in order to spend more on domestic programs would be "statesmanship of a verylow order." Again, he stressed the importance of a balanced budget. A reporter wanted to know if he had decided that it was more dangerous to run the government into the red than run the risk of inadequate education. The President said he was not sure that one could differentiate. "The human values in America," he said, "are not going to be promoted unless we are sane and sensible in our fiscal policies."

The government reports that 600-thousand more persons were unemployed last month than in December. This raised the total unemployment figure last month to 4-million, 724 thousand...the highest unemployment figure for the month of January since 1941. George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. says this report shows that unemployment is still "America's No. 1 problem." He accuses the Administration of "putting a balanced budget ahead of jobs and human needs."

The Moscow radio tonight accused the West of trying to stir up a counter-revolution in Iraq. Earlier today, Premier Khrushchev conferred with the Iraqi ambassador in what the Soviet news agency Tass described as "a friendly atmosphere." Last week, six anti-Communists resigned from the Iraqi cabinet, and pro-Nasser forces are reported seeking control.

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey conferred again today on the future of Cyprus. One report from Zurich, Switzerland...where Greek and Turkish leaders are meeting...says that agreement in principle already has been reached. Under the plan, the independence of the island would be guaranteed jointly by Great Britain, Turkey and Greece. Anotherconference will be held tomorrow.

The British government today announced "a significant increase" in the rate of production of nuclear weapons as the result of an exchange of information with the United States. The announcement was made in the annual British defense report, or White Paper. The report says that plans to end military conscription in Britain by 1962 have made "satisfactory progress." However, the standing volunteer army is to be slightly larger than originally planned.

President Eisenhower has declared St. Louis a major disaster area...as the result of a tornado which hit the city early today, claiming at least twenty lives. A major disaster area is eligible for federal relief funds. More than 300 persons were treated in hospitals, and property damage is estimated in the millions of dollars. On the basis of incomplete reports, 17-hundred buildings were damaged and 41 destroyed. The tornado struck without warning...with winds up to 110 miles an hour...out of the southwest. All day, rescue workers have been searching the debris for more bodies...or for trapped persons who may still be alive.

Those who disagree with Secretary Dulles's foreign policy do not on that account lack admiration for his character, devotion and ability. And they join his strongest admirers, in deploring his absence from his desk just as the German crisis comes to a head. He had grasp of the situation as no one else in this country. He had had the privilege of consulting, in turn, Mr. Macmillan, General DeGaulle and Dr. Adenauer, after being the guiding figure at the last NATO foreign Ministers' meeting. For him to take leave at this moment introduces an element of uncertainty into the conduct of Western policy toward Russia. President Eisenhower cannot take his place either in running the coalition or shaping American policy. He begged off from spending more time than he does on foreign affairs when questioned at his news conference today. Under-Secretary Herter may have the stature to fill Dulles's place, but he doesn't have the essential prestige; and he too is not a well men, being handicapped by arthritis. Under-Secretary Dillon, now acting during Mr. Herter's absence, has knowledge, realism and ability, but hardly qualifies as both a national and international pilot at this juncture.

Mr. Dulles obviously feels quite keenly that he is wellnigh irreplaceable at this moment in the East-West conflict, and indeed he seems to be. No doubt it was this sense that led him to write as he did to the President. For he said he would continue to be available for consultation with him, and with the Acting Secretary of State, and added that he welcomes the opportunity to have some time free from routine cares so as to concentrate on the problems of the coming East-West negotiations. But this letter tends to advertise the serious effect of Mr. Dulles's illness on the conduct of foreign affairs. For though he has kept a long-standing promise to take leave the moment he is unable to do his work, he has not really made room for anyone to take his place. He will go on being the President's chief adviser from his hospital bed, and will keep on guiding his subordinates. And so long as he says he intends to do this, no one else can gracefully undertake the planning job. So the wise guidance of American and Western foreign affairs depends on the Secretary's ability to go through another surgical operation and recover from an inflamed colon, and regain his fullest vitality in a few weeks. This is a gamble. It may turn out all right. Mr. Dulles sincerely believes that it will, so does the President. But it is no disparagement of Mr. Dulles's almost fabulous capacity to surmount his disabilities, to say that the odds of the gamble are not overwhelmingly in his favor.

James Reston says in the New York Times that Washington officials are worried for two reasons, one being Mr. Dulles himself, the other being the organization he is setting up. As to his health, the hernia operation is considered minor, but the persistence of the colon infection is regarded as serious. He had a good rest in Jamaica, but the colon condition did not clear up. He has been in constant pain for weeks. Now the addition of the hernia trouble has forced him to submit to another session in the hospital, as the only chance of getting completely well. This is his third incapacity in two years, a disquieting record for a man of seventy.

The anxiety over the organization, Mr. Reston suggests, is that it gives Mr. Herter responsibility without authority. He questions also whether Mr. Herter sees eye-to-eye with Mr. Dulles on German policy, which might be another reason Mr. Dulles wants to keep the reins in his own hands.

Of course the basic trouble is that Mr. Dulles has run a one-man State Department, one can be sure, with the President's full approval. But when the one man has to go off to the hospital, a vacuum is left behind. Not that Mr. Herter and Mr. Dillon are nonentities; they are far from it. They simply have been denied a sufficient share in originating and conducting policy. If Mr. Dulles gets well in time they can safely remain in his shadow. If he doesn't, delay and uncertainty seem inescapable. And this country and the whole West would be weakened, just when they need to be strong.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: It will be "some weeks" before Mr. Dulles can return to his full duties as secretary of state. His place will be taken...in the meantime...by experts, but this is not quite the same thing. Policy is involved, and one is reminded once more of an observation made by Ralph Waldo Emerson. "There is properly no history," he said, "only biography."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Feb. 11, 1959

This is the news:

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey today initialed an agreement for solving the Cyprus problem. / The Greek and Turkish foreign ministers have flown to London, for almost certain approval of the plan...although, for the time being, tripartite negotiations will continue. / The Greek foreign minister points out, that the people of Cyprus also must approve the compromise plan, worked out by Greek and Turkish leaders in five days of talks. / Archbishop Makarios...the Greek Cypriot leader who was exiled by the British...said in Athens tonight, that the accord "lays the foundation for an immediate and final solution to the Cyprus issue." / Under the accord, the British island colony, would become an independent republic, with Greek and Turkish Cypriots sharing in the government. (I shall try to outline the agreement further in a few minutes).

—7

The White House today emphatically denied reports that President Eisenhower has discussed with associates the possible retirement of Secretary of State Dulles and the selection of a successor. (Mr. Dulles is in Walter Reed Hospital for his second operation in two years). News Secretary Hagerty told reporters this morning, "I said last night these stories were completely cock-eyed. I want to double it today---double it in spades."

President Eisenhower tonight quoted Abraham Lincoln...in support of his campaign for economy in government. Mr. Eisenhower was speaking at a dinner sponsored by a group of Lincoln admirers in cooperation with the Lincoln Sesquicentennial Commission. The Lincoln quotation was as follows: "The tendency to undue expansion is unquestionably the chief difficulty. How to do something and still not do too much is the question. I would not borrow money," the quotation continued. "I am against an overwhelming, crushing system." Lincoln made the remark while serving in the House of Representatives, before he was President. In another part of his speech,

Mr. Eisenhower said that the spirit of Lincoln is "close at hand as we meet each successive challenge to freedom."

The Western powers reportedly have agreed on a formula whereby representatives of both East and West Germany would be present at a Big Four foreign ministers conference this spring. The report comes from authoritative Washington sources...which say the East and West Germans might attend the conference in an advisory capacity. The West Germans would advise the British, French and American delegations, and representatives of Communist East Germany would be available to advise the Russians. According to these Washington sources, this proposal will be made in an Allied note to Russia, to be delivered sometime next week. The proposal, it is said, in no way implies recognition of the East German regime. It merely recognizes Russia's right to consult representatives of East Germany while the conference is in progress. The note will suggest...further...that the foreign ministers meeting deal with all aspects of the German problem---not just Berlin. And it will reject the Russian bid for a conference attended by 38 countries to plan the confederation of East and West Germany.

Chinese Communist artillery today resumed the bombardment of Quemoy...after a five-day lull due to observance of the Chinese New Year. The Communists fired 240 rounds.

It was announced today that King Hussein of Jordan will visit Formosa next month...and then make a private journey to the United States. The announcement gave no exact dates.

The White House announces that President and Mrs. Eisenhower will fly to Canada on June 26th...to join Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip in ceremonies opening the St. Lawrence Seaway. The Eisenhowers plan to return to Washington the same day.

The government of Tunisia today fired all French nationals employed in its communications system. A Tunisian official said yesterday that fifteen Frenchmen...including nine employes of the postal-telegraph service...had been arrested on suspicion of espionage.

STRAWS

Secretary of Commerce Strauss said today that the general public does not yet appreciate the "serious menace" presented by Russia's "sinister" trade policies. Strauss warned...in a Chicago speech...that Russia was enticing other countries into its "political web" by selling its goods below cost. "It's not in business for business," he said, "but for economic warfare." Strauss said that businessmen can help fight inflation by resisting those wage demands that are "unwarranted". Business, he said, can also help by not calling for any more federal expenditures than are necessary---even if it might benefit.

→

ALL-FURD

Representative Alford of Arkansas complained today that F.B.I. agents are investigating the circumstances surrounding his election in November. In that election, Alford...as a write-in segregationist candidate... defeated former Representative Brooks Hays by 12-hundred votes. Both Hays and Alford are from Little Rock. Alford charged today in a speech on the House floor that the F.B.I. investigation was "politically inspired". "There is no room in America," he said, "for a police state---a Gestapo, if you please---engaged in the political soirees aimed at any who may take issue with those in power." Alford said that within 10 days he would produce evidence...showing that subversive forces are the real "masters of deceit" behind the school integration dispute.

The two United States senators from Georgia---Russell and Talmadge---today addressed a joint session of the Georgia legislature on the subject of public school integration. Senator Russell said there was "no denying that the drive to compel integration is gaining momentum." "Virginia," he said, "yielded more than I expected." Senator Talmadge said he would not vote to confirm another appointment to the Supreme Court until a southern segregationist was named to the bench. Both senators said they would soon introduce legislation dealing with the problem.

Edward R. Murrow: February 11, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Cyprus for years has been a nest of irreconcilable differences. It has been the classic example of a problem for which no solution acceptable to all concerned was possible. To be settled, it seemed that somebody had to win, and somebody else to lose. The British, to whom Cyprus belonged, tried at first to win by brute force. Like other modern powers they were completely stymied by guerilla ~~warfare~~ action. Then they tried conciliation. That also failed. The handsome constitutional concessions they offered the Greek Cypriots came too late, and were rejected. And Greece was not to be wheedled into giving up a popular Nationalist cause.

The existence of a twenty per cent Turkish minority on Cyprus became one of the irreconcilable differences. Still more irreconcilable was the fact that Cyprus lies off the coast of Turkey and in Greek hands would be an intolerable menace to Turkish security. Turkey would never agree to Greece having Cyprus, Greece would never agree to Cyprus being partitioned. The case was carried to the United Nations and was too tough for even that international forum to soften up.

Now the Cyprus problem has been solved. Nobody has won hands down. Nobody has lost his shirt. Cyprus is to be free and self-governing. The Turkish minority is to have veto power over foreign policy and police methods, so the Turks will be just as free as the Greeks on the Island. Cyprus will continue as a NATO base, which means that British, Greek and Turkish troops can be stationed there, thus guaranteeing the settlement. The British will continue to use the air base. There will be a Greek President and a Turkish Vice-President, and a Cypriot Parliament in which both communities are fairly represented.

To say that nobody won hands down is not strictly accurate, for the Cypriots have won their independence, which under the best British offer would not have come for years. The Turks won a share in the power of the Island, and have kept Greece from having a powerful base close to their coast. But it is correct to say that nobody lost his shirt. The British did lose the Island, but its value was primarily military, and it turned out to be less than had been anticipated. The Naval base proved to be virtually useless. The air base does have value, but the British will continue to use it. The Greeks lost little, for the Island hasn't belonged to Greece for seven hundred years.

The solution worked out by the Greek and Turkish Prime Ministers still has to be communicated to Britain and accepted.

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, reports from London that the British do not regard the Greek-Turkish agreement so much a solution as the beginning of a solution. They are glad that a compromise plan was agreed on, but they wonder about the underground resistance organization, EOKA. Will it approve? Kendrick says London is also wondering whether Cyprus will choose to remain within the British Commonwealth. If it decides to stay outside the Commonwealth, will it become another Iceland, with the same internal Communist influence? As a result of these questions, Kendrick says, British gratification over the agreement - although genuine - is not unrestrained.

At this moment, when the other well-nigh irreconcilable differences are dividing the world, the Cyprus agreement is specially heartening. One may even be tempted to say that it shows that with good will and common sense the impossible becomes possible. But it is not being unduly pessimistic to point out that it took more than good will and common sense to produce the settlement. Before the parties concerned were ready for reason and understanding they had to try about everything else and fail. Even if men are assumed to be rational, they usually have to learn the hard way - by trial and error. What is encouraging is that sometimes they learn.

Back in a moment. — George Bryan —

Population, geography and logistics conspired to make the problem of Cyprus virtually insoluble. Now, by trial and error, the seemingly impossible has been achieved, recalling Santayana's definition of the difficult and the impossible. "The difficult," he said, "is that which can be done immediately; the impossible, that which takes a little longer."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey today initialed an agreement for solving the Cyprus problem. The Greek and Turkish foreign ministers have flown to London for almost certain approval of the plan...although, for the time being, tripartite negotiations will continue. The Greek foreign minister points out that the people of Cyprus also must approve the compromise plan worked out by Greek and Turkish leaders in five days of talks. Archbishop Makarios...the Greek Cypriot leader who was exiled by the British...said in Athens tonight that the accord "lays the foundation for an immediate and final souution to the Cyprus issue." Under the accord, the British island colony would become an independent republic, with Greek and Turkish Cypriots sharing in the government. (I shall try to outline the agreement further in a few minutes.)

The White House today emphatically denied reports that President Eisenhower has discussed with associates the possible retirement of Secretary of State Dulles and the selection of a successor. (Mr. Dulles is in Walter Reed Hospital for his second operation in two years.) News Secretary Hagerty told reporters this morning, "I said last night these stories were completely cock-eyed. I want to double it today--- double it in spades."

President Eisenhower tonight quoted Abraham Lincoln...in support of his campaign for economy in government. Mr. Eisenhower was speaking at a dinner sponsored by a group of Lincoln admirers in cooperation with the Lincoln Sesquicentennial Commission. The Lincoln quotation was as follows: "The tendency to undue expansion is unquestionably the chief difficulty. How to do something and still not do too much is the question. I would not borrow money," the quotation continued. "I am against an overwhelming, crushing system." Lincoln made the remark while serving in the House of Representatives, before he was President.

In another part of his speech, Mr. Eisenhower said that the spirit of Lincoln is "close at hand as we meet each successive challenge to freedom."

The Western powers reportedly have agreed on a formula whereby representatives of both East and West Germany would be present at a Big Four foreign ministers conference this spring. The report comes from authoritative Washington sources...which say the East and West Germans might attend the conference in an advisory capacity. The West Germans would advise the British, French and American delegations, and representatives of Communist East Germany would be available to advise the Russians. According to these Washington sources, this proposal will be made in an Alliednote to Russia, to be delivered sometime next week. The proposal, it is said, in no way implies recognition of the East German regime. It merely recognizes Russia's right to consult representatives of East Germany while the conference is in progress. The note will suggest... further...that the foreign ministers meeting deal with all aspects of the German problem...not just Berlin. And it will reject the Russian bid for a conference attended by 38 countries to plan the confederation of East and West Germany.

Chinese Communist artillery today resumed the bombardment of Quemoy...after a five-day lull due to observance of the Chinese New Year. The Communists fired 240 rounds.

It was announced today that King Hussein of Jordan will visit Formosa next month...and then make a privatejourney to the United States. The announcement gave no exact dates.

The White House announces that President and Mrs. Eisenhower will fly to Canada on June 26th...to join Qeeen Elizabeth and Prince Philip in ceremonies opening the St. Lawrence Seaway. The Eisenhowers plan to return to Washington the same day.

Secretary of Commerce Strauss said today that the general public does not yet appreciate the "serious menace" presented by Russia's "sinister" trade policies. Strauss warned...in a Chicago speech....that Russia was enticing other countries into its "political web" by selling its goods below cost. "It's not in business for business," he said, "but for economic warfare." Strauss said that businessmen can help fight inflation by resisting those wage demands that are "unwarranted." Business, he said, can also help by not calling for any more federal expenditures than are necessary---even if it might benefit.

Representative Alford of Arkansas complained today that F.B.I. agents are investigating the circumstances surrounding his election in November. In that election, Alford...as a write -in segregationist candidate...defeated former Representative Brooks Hays by 12-hundred votes. Both Hays and Alford are from Little Rock. Alford charged today in a speech on the House floor that the F.B.I. investigation was "politically inspired."

The two United States senators fron Georgia---Russell and Talmadge---today addressed a joint session of the Georgia legislature on the subject of public school integration. Senator Russell said there was "no denying that the drive to compel integration is gaining momentum." "Virginia," he said, "yielded more than I expected." Senator Talmadge said he would not vote to confirm another appointment to the Supreme Court until a southern segregationist was named to the bench. Both senators said they would soon introduce legislation dealing with the problem.

Cyprus for years has been a nest of irreconcilable differences. It has been the classic example of a problem for which no solution acceptable to all concerned was possible. To be settled, it seemed that somebody had to win, and somebody else to lose. The British, to whom Cyprus belonged, tried at first to win by brute force. Like other modern powers they were completely stymied by guerilla action. Then they tried conciliation. That also failed. The handsome constitutional concessions they offered the Greek Cypriots came too late, and were rejected. And Greece was not to be wheedled into giving up a popular Nationalist cause.

The existence of a twenty percent Turkish minority on Cyprus became one of the irreconcilable differences. Still more irreconcilable was the fact that Cyprus lies off the coast of Turkey and in Greek hands would be an intolerable menace to Turkish security. Turkey would never agree to Greece having Cyprus, Greece would never agree to Cyprus being partitioned. The case was carried to the United Nations and was too tough for even that international forum to soften up.

Now the Cyprus problem has been solved. Nobody has won hands down. Nobody has lost his shirt. Cyprus is to be free and self-governing. The Turkish minority is to have veto power over foreign policy and police methods, so the Turks will be just as free as the Greeks on the Island. Cyprus will continue as a NATO base, which means that British, Greek and Turkish troops can be stationed there, thus guaranteeing the settlement. The British will continue to use the air base. There will be a Greek President and a Turkish Vice-President, and a Cypriot Parliament in which both communities are fairly represented.

To say that nobody won hands down is not strictly accurate, for the Cypriots have won their independence, which under the best British offer would not have come for years. The Turks won a share in the power of the Island, and have kept Greece from having a powerful base close to their coast. But it is correct to say that nobody lost his shirt. The British did lose the Island, but its value was primarily military, and it turned out to be less than had been anticipated. The naval base proved to be virtually useless. The air base does have value, but the British will continue to use it. The Greeks lost little, for the Island hasn't belonged to Greece for seven hundred years.

The solution worked out by the Greek and Turkish Prime Ministers still has to be communicated to Britain and accepted.

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, reports from London that the British do not regard the Greek-Turkish agreement so much a solution as the beginning of a solution. They are glad that a compromise plan was agreed on, but they wonder about the underground resistance organization, EOKA. Will it approve? Kendrick says London is also wondering whether Cyprus will choose to remain within the British Commonwealth. If it decides to stay outside the Commonwealth, will it become another Iceland, with the same internal Communist influence? As a result of these questions, Kendrick says, British gratification over the agreement - although genuine - in not unrestrained.

At this moment, when the other well-nigh irreconcilable differences are dividing the world, the Cyprus agreement is specially heartening. One may even be tempted to say that it shows that with good will and common sense the impossible becomes possible. But it is not being unduly pessimistic to point out that it took more than good will and common sense to produce the settlement. Before the parties concerned were ready for reason and understanding they had to try about everything else and fail. Even if men are assumed to be rational, they usually have to learn the hard way - by trial and error. What is encouraging is that sometimes they learn.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a momett with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Population, geography and logistics conspired to make the problem of Cyprus vrirtally insoluble. Now by trial and error the seemingly impossible has been achieved, recalling Santayana's definition of the difficult and the impossible. "The difficult," he said, "is that which can be done immediately; the impossible that which takes a little longer."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Feb. 12, 1959

This is the news:

Congress met in joint session to observe the 150th anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Every seat in the House chamber...on the floor and in the gallery...was filled. The audience included the foreign diplomatic corps, the justices of the Supreme Court, members of the cabinet and friends. There were old familiar faces. Former Senator

3 Tom Connolly was present, wearing as always his black string tie.

A Coast Guard choir sang "Dixie" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic". Frederic March read the Gettysburg Address, and then Speaker Sam Rayburn introduced Carl Sandburg. Sandburg...poet and biographer...spoke of the "incomparable" Abraham Lincoln, who held in his heart and mind "the paradox of terrible storm and peace unspeakable and perfect."

Sandburg quoted Lincoln...passages such as: "The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate for the stormy present. We must think anew, we must act anew, we must disenthrall ourselves." And, "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending we could better judge what to do."

Sandburg said that today the people of many countries take Lincoln for their own. "He belongs to them," he said. "He stands for decency, honest dealing, plain talk and funny stories." People everywhere talk about Lincoln. "Look where he came from---don't he know all us strugglers and wasn't he a kind of tough struggler all his life, right up to the finish?"

Sandburg guessed that the most enduring memorial to Lincoln "is invisibly there today, tomorrow and for a long time yet to come in the hearts of lovers of liberty---men and women who understand that wherever there is freedom there have been those who fought and sacrificed for it."

Tonight...in Springfield, Illinois...Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin quoted from a speech that Lincoln made in Springfield in 1858...that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Brandt said that the East and West Germans have not accepted...and cannot accept...the division of their country. The free world, he said, should modify its policies to conform to changing circumstances. "But for the days ahead," he said, "firmness, unity and patience are as important as the willingness to adapt."

In London, Prime Minister Macmillan laid a wreath at the statue of Lincoln in Parliament Square and said, "Certainly his ideas have always found a ready echo in our hearts." Macmillan said that inspired by the memory of Lincoln "the peoples of Great Britain and the United States must work together for progress and freedom."

The British government today summoned the governor of Cyprus, Sir Hugh Foot, home for consultations. Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons that Britain "welcomes" the Greek-Turkish agreement for making Cyprus an independent republic. But, he said, there are still "numerous points" to be cleared up. Talks between Britain, Greece and Turkey are expected to get under way on Monday.

The government of Iran announced formally today that its talks with Russia...regarding a possible non-aggression pact...have been broken off. Western leaders...including President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan...reportedly sent messages to the shah of Iran, warning him to beware of Soviet overtures and to stand firm with his allies in the Baghdad Pact. Russia said tonight that the "two-faced insincere policy" of the shah "cannot but have grave results."

Iraq has been a non-active member of the Baghdad alliance since the overthrow of King Feisal last summer. Today, the prime minister of Iraq...Abdel Kassem...was quoted by the state radio as saying, "We are out of all foreign alliances." Kassem said that Iraq has been sending arms to the Algerian rebels. "And," he added, "we will send more."

The State Department...in Washington...said today that the Administration will give "careful attention" to the proposal that East and West Germany hold direct negotiations regarding German reunification. The suggestion was made by Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana, who said that...in his opinion...the creation of a demilitarized zone in Middle Europe also should be considered.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress for prompt approval of an increase...of more than a billion dollars...in this country's contribution to the International Monetary Fund. He also asked that the United States contribution to the World Bank be doubled...saying it was necessary to insure further progress toward realizing a better life for the peoples of the free world."

The State Department announces that Secretary of State Dulles will undergo his hernia operation tomorrow morning. A bulletin on his condition will be issued at Walter Reed Hospital as soon as possible after the operation.

Cuba today formally asked the Dominican Republic to hand over ex-President Batista. The note...requesting extradition...described Batista as "a refugee from justice." Five more persons were executed in Havana today...bringing to an unofficial total of 315 the number of death sentences carried out as a result of the current "war crimes" trials.

~~President Eisenhower has again nominated movie actor Jimmy Stewart for promotion to brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. Stewart...who saw active duty with the Air Force in World War Two...now holds the rank of colonel. Two years ago, his nomination failed to win Senate approval. Also nominated today for promotion to brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve was Republican Senator Goldwater of Arizona...who served during the war in the Far East. His present rank is colonel.~~ said that the underworld was trying to create a coin machine monopoly in the New York metropolitan area. He charged that New York Teamster Local 266 was set up by "dishonest elements" to further this purpose.

The Senate Rackets Committee heard more testimony today in its investigation of the coin machine industry. One witness...Eli Kasper...

—7

Edward R. Murrow: February 12, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Some major points of agreement have been reached by the Western allies and West Germany on the way to deal with the negotiations over the German crisis, that is, if there are to be negotiations. One is that in any talks about Germany, the East Germans are to be present along with the West Germans and are to have equal status with them but on a lower level as advisers. This would not technically be recognition, but it would meet part way the Kremlin demand for talks between the two Germanys.

A further possibility is that machinery will be recommended to deal with the German and European questions on a continuing basis. It is recognized that a Four-Power conference of foreign ministers can only sit for a limited time, not enough to make more than a start at settling anything. So the West will propose setting up a Four-Power committee to which the Foreign Ministers can submit problems they have not been able to solve. When the committee arrives at an agreed conclusion about anything the Foreign Ministers can meet again, adopt the agreements and submit further problems for solution. The discussions might well last indefinitely, not for weeks, but for many months if not for years.

But it is well to point out that the West cannot be sure there will be negotiations at all. It is proposing a meeting of the four Foreign Ministers, in the reply to the last Soviet note. The draft of this answer is now before NATO officials. It suggests examination of the entire German question in the context of European security. But the west does not know whether such a meeting, if held, would be simply a confrontation, or the start of genuine negotiations. If the Russians intend to be tough, they may refuse to talk about anything but the creation of a free city of West Berlin. In this case, the Western Powers would stand on their rights, and their Ministers would go home.

This contingency naturally has been kept in mind in the talks between Western leaders. The West is under explicit pledge to maintain access to West Berlin by force if necessary. This could be done by airlift or by land, and the possibility of sending an armed convoy to West Berlin has had to be considered. One of the ideas discussed has been to test the Russians - if it comes to it - by sending a convoy as far as the control station, and if it is stopped there by force, to withdraw it and immediately submit the issue to the U.N. Security Council. The West would ask the affirmation of its right of access. A Soviet veto in the Council would be expected, whereupon the case would be laid before the Assembly. The West would expect the Assembly to confirm its rights, whereupon the armed convoy could be sent back to Berlin. If it was stopped again, the convoy could go ahead, and if necessary, shoot. Such an action would have a much different effect on world opinion than if there had been shooting the first time.

If any of this came to pass, the Soviet Union might change its mind about denying access to Berlin, or a showdown might be avoided altogether by the United Nations, with its flair for conciliation, coming up with some i[redacted]s way of side-tracking the crisis. This kind of thinking has not reached the point of decision. But it illustrates that there are other ways of dealing with the crisis than of rushing headlong to the brink of war.

The Western note which proposes the Four Power meeting does not mention either time or place. But it is expected that the meeting will come between the first and fifteenth of May. Either Geneva or Vienna would be acceptable to the West as conference cities, but neither Warsaw nor Prague. The West would refuse to go behind the Iron Curtain at this time.

~~The first question that awaits answer is whether the meeting will be simply an occasion for the showing of teeth, or the start of genuine discussions. The first hint of the answer to this question is expected from Prime Minister Macmillan after he has met the Soviet leaders in Moscow. He should be~~ able to ~~judge whether the Russians are in the mood to bargain. If so, he can~~ assure ~~them that the West also is, and will not be found inflexible.~~

6 —

Only if the Kremlin insists on a showdown over Berlin will the West work out finally the strategy of maintaining access to Berlin. And it seems that force will not be used until all the existing machinery for judging the issues and keeping the peace has been exhausted.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryson

Word for Today

On this day...36 years ago...a congressman from Kansas, Homer ~~Kach,~~ Kok told the House of Representatives: "To the mountain and sea and star men turn forever in unwearied homage. And thus with Lincoln, for he was mountain in grandeur of spirit; he was sea in under-voice of mystic loneliness; he was star in steadfast purity of purpose and service. And he, too, abides."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Congress met in joint session to observe the 150th anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Every seat in the House chamber...on the floor and in the gallery...was filled. The audience included the foreign diplomatic corps, the justices of the Supreme Court, members of the cabinet and friends. There were old familiar faces. Former Senator Tom Connolly was present, wearing as always his black string tie. A Coast Guard choir sang "Dixie" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Frederic March read the Gettysburg Address, and then Speaker Sam Rayburn introduced Carl Sandburg. Sandburg...poet and biographer... spoke of the "incomparable" Abraham Lincoln, who held in his heart and mind "the paradox of terrible storm and peace unspeakable and perfect." Sandburg quoted Lincoln...passages such as: "The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate for the stormy present. We must think anew, we must act anew, we must disenthrall ourselves." And, "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending we could better judge what to do." Sandburg said that today the people of many countries take Lincoln for their own. "He belongs to them," he said. "He stands for decency, honest dealing, plain talk and funny stories." People everythere talk about Lincoln. "Look where he came from---don't he know all us strugglers and wasn't he a kind of tough struggler all his life, right up to the finish?" Sandburg guessed that the most enduring memorial to Lincoln "is invisibly there today, tomorrow and for a long time yet to come in the hearts of lovers of liberty---men and women who understand that wherever there is freedom there have been those who fought and sacrificed for it."

Tonight...in Springfield, Illinois...Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin quoted from a speech that Lincoln made in Springfield in 1958...that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Brandt said that the East and West Germans have not accepted...and cannot accept...the division of their country. The free world, he said, should modify its policies to conform to changing circumstances. "But for the days ahead," he said, "firmness, unity and patience are as important as the willingness to adapt."

The British government today summoned the governor of Cyprus, Sir Hugh Foot, home for consultations. Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons that Britain "welcomes" the Greek-Turkish agreement for making Cyprus an independent republic. But, he said, there are still "numerous points" to be cleared up. Talks between Britain, Greece and Turkey are expected to get under way on Monday.

The government of Iran announced formally today that its talks with Russia regarding a possible non-aggression pact...have been broken off. Western leaders including President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan....reportedly sent messages to the Shah of Iran, warning him to beware of Soviet overtures and to stand firm with his allies in the Baghdad Pact. Russia said tonight that the "two faced insincere policy" of the Shah "cannot but have grave results."

Iraq has been a non-active member of the Baghdad alliance since the overthrow of King Feisal last summer. Today, the prime minister of Iraq...Abdel Kassem...was quoted by the state radio as saying, "We are out of all foreign alliances." Kassem said that Iraq has been sending arms to the Algerian rebels. "And," he added, "we will send more."

The State Department...in Washington...said today that the Administration will give "careful attention" to the proposal that East and West Germany hold direct negotiations regarding German reunification. The suggestion was made by Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana, who said that...in his opinion... the creation of a demilitarized zone in Middle Europe also should be considered.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress for prompt approval of an increase...of more than a billion dollars...in this country's contribution to the International Monetary Fund. He also asked that the United States contribution to the World Bank be doubled...saying it was necessary "to insure further progress toward realizing a better life for the peoples of the free world."

The State Department announces that Secretary of State Dulles will undergo his hernia operation tomorrow morning. A bulletin on his condition will be issued at Walter Reed Hospital as soon as possible after the operation.

Cuba today formally asked the Dominican Republic to hand over ex-President Batista. The note...requesting extradition...described Batista as "a refugee from justice." Five more persons were exectued in Havana today...bringing to an unofficial total of 315 the number of death sentences carried out as a result of the current "war crimes" trials.

The Senate Rackets Committee heard more testimnny today in its investigation of the coin machine industry. One witness...Eli Kasper... said that the underworld was trying to create a coin machine monopoly in the New York metropolitan area. He charged that New York Teamster Local 266 was set up by "dishonest elements" to further this purpose.

Some major points of agreement have been reached by the Western allies and West Germany on the way to deal with the negotiations over the German crisis, that is, if there are to be negotiations. One is that in any talks about Germany, the East Germans are to be present along with the West Germans and are to have equal status with them, but on a lower level as advisers. This would not technically be recogniation, but it would meet part way the Kremlin demand for talks between the two Germanys.

A further possibility is that machinery will be recommended to deal with the German and European questions on a continuing basis. It is recognized that a Four-Power conference of foreign ministers can only sit for a limited tmme, not enough to make more than a start at settling anything. So the West will propose setting up a Four-Power committee to which the Foreign Ministers can submit problems they have not been able to solve. When the committee arrives at an agreed conclusion about anything the Foreign Ministers can meet again, adopt the agreements and submit further problems for solution. The discussions might well last indefinitely, not for weeks, but for many months if not for years.

But it is well to point out that the West cannot be sure there will be negotiations at all. It is proposing a meeting of the four Foreign Ministers, in the reply to the last Soviet note. The draft of this answer is now before NATO officials. It suggests examination of the entire German question in the context of European security. But the West does not know whether such a meeting, if held, would be simply a confrontation, or the start of genuine negotiations. If the Russians intend to be tough, they may refuse to talk about anything but the creation of a free city of West Berlin. In this case, the Western Powers would stand on their rights, and their Ministers would go home.

The contingency naturally has been kept in mind in the talks between Western leaders. The West is under explicit pledge to maintain access to West Berlin by force if necessary. This could be done by airlift or by land, and the possibility of sending an armed convoy to West Berlin has had to be considered. One of the ideas discussed has been to test the Russians - if it comes to it - by sending a convoy as far as the control station, and if it is stopped there by force, to withdraw it and immediately submit the issue to the U.N. Security Council. The West would ask the affirmation of its right of access. A Soviet veto in the Council would be expected, whereupon the case would be laid before the Assembly. The West would expect the Assembly to confirm its rights, whereupon the armed convoy could be sent back to Berlin. If it was stopped again, the convoy could go ahead, and if necessary, shoot. Such an action would have a much different effect on world opinion than if there had been shooting the first time.

If any of this came to pass, the Soviet Union might change its mind about denying access to Berlin, or a showdown might be avoided altogether by the United Nations, with its flair for conciliation, coming up with some way of side-tracking the crisis. This kind of thinking has not reached the point of decision. But it illustrates that there are other ways of dealing with the crisis than of rushing headlong to the brink of war.

The Western note which proposes the Four Power meeting does not mention either time or place. But is is expected that the meeting will come between the first and fifteenth of May. Either Geneva or Vienna would be a cceptable to the West as conference cities, but neither Wawsaw nor Prague. The West would refuse to go behind the Iron Curtain at this time.

Only if the Kremlin insists on a showdown over Berlin will the West work out finally the strategy of maintaining access to Berlin. And it seems that force will not be used until all the existing machinery for judging the issues and keeping the peace has been exhausted.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moeent with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: On this day...36 years ago...a congressman from Kansas, Homer Koch, told the House of Representatives, "To the mountain and sea and star men turn forever in unwearied homage.. And thus with Lincoln, for he was mountain in grandeur of spirit; he was sea in under-voice of mystic loneliness; he was star in steadfast purity of purpose and service. And he, too, abides."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 13, 1959

This is the news:

The State Department says that Secretary Dulles had "a comfortable afternoon", after undergoing surgery this morning for a hernia. The operation began at 8 a.m., Washington time, and lasted a little less than an hour. At 10:35 a.m., it was announced that during the course of the operation, tissue had been removed for microscopical examination. Mr. Dulles' post-operative condition was described as "quite satisfactory". The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, said the tissue had been removed for examination "as a precautionary measure, to see if there was any recurrence...or spread...of the earlier malignancy." Dulles underwent an operation for cancer of the intestine in 1956. Doctors will not complete their examination of the removed tissue until tomorrow.

Under Secretary of State Christian Herter will return to Washington from a South Carolina vacation tomorrow, a day ahead of schedule. And President Eisenhower has arranged to confer tomorrow with Douglas Dillon, who has been serving as acting secretary of state, and Loy W. Henderson, deputy under-secretary for administration. / Mr. Eisenhower seldom has business engagements on Saturday. / Today, News Secretary Hagerty again denied reports that the President has been considering possible replacements for Mr. Dulles, should he resign.

In Paris, the permanent NATO Council today approved the Western notes to be sent to Moscow next week. / Their contents was not divulged. However, according to informed sources, the notes call for a four-power foreign ministers conference, to deal with all aspects of the German question. They also suggest that representatives of both East and West Germany attend the conference as advisers, rather than as full participants. The meeting probably would be held sometime in May. Arrangements as to exact time and place are to be negotiated by the American, British and French ambassadors in Moscow. / The State Department says that if developments warrant, the Western foreign ministers may meet in Paris next month.

In Moscow, the Soviet presidium today ratified Russia's agreement with the United Arab Republic to help build the first stage of the Aswan high dam. The agreement...to provide a hundred million dollars on a long-term loan basis...was signed in Cairo in December.

Representstives of the United States and Communist China met for more than two hours today in Warsaw, then adjourned to meet again in four weeks. There was no announcement as to what may have been discussed.

For the first time this month, Quemoy and Matsu were both hit by Communist artillery today. But the shelling was light.

The caretaker prime minister of Burma...General Ne Win...told the Burmese parliament today that he must resign. At the same time, he said that he would like to remain commander-in-chief of the armed forces. The general succeeded U Nu as prime minister in October, to serve not more than six months. After six months---that is, in April---elections were to be held. He now says that because of unstable conditions it will be impossible to hold elections by that date. ~~Parliament could vote to keep him in office, and this is considered a likely next step.~~ A major cause of political instability in Burma is the Communist opposition, which has been waging a guerrilla-type war for more than ten years.

The Japanese cabinet decided today to allow Korean nationals living in Japan to go to Communist North Korea, if they so desire. The Syngman Rhee government has demanded that all Koreans in Japan be repatriated to South Korea...contending that persons going to North Korea would be condemned to "slavery". The Japanese cabinet says that the services of the International Red Cross would be enlisted to see that requests of Koreans wishing to go to the Communist-controlled area are legitimate. Japanese Prime Minister Kishi says the issue will be approached "on the basis of the basic human right to freedom of residence." The foreign minister of South Korea says his country will take "all action necessary to correct the Japanese wrong." And South Korea is threatening to break off current negotiations for establishing diplomatic relations with Japan.

In Caracas today, armed soldiers stood guard as Romulo Betancourt was sworn in as Venezuela's first popularly elected president in ten years. There was no disorder. Betancourt promised cordial relations with the United States, but said he would try to revise in Venezuela's favor existing trade agreements. He will form a coalition cabinet, so as to have broad political support. But Communists will be barred. ~~"The political philosophy of Communism," he said, "is not in our best interests."~~ And he proposed again that dictatorships be excluded from the Organization of American States.

President Eisenhower today declared 13 flood-stricken counties in Indiana to be disaster areas...eligible for federal relief. In West Terre Haute, inmates of a state penal farm joined national guardsmen and volunteers in strengthening a levee, holding the Wabash River back from the city. Two thousand families are homeless, and a forecast of heavy rain tonight and tomorrow is causing new concern.

A colleague of mine...Blair Clark...went to Africa recently on general assignment. He has now reached Accra, the capital of Ghana, where the prime minister has charged a plot against his government... involving kidnaping and possible assassination. The charge is now the subject of a public inquiry. For that story, here is Blair Clark reporting from Accra.

(Tape runs 4:20
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

That was Blair Clark, reporting from Accra on the proceedings dealing with the alleged plot to assassinate Prime Minister Nkhruma.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Archbishop Makarios...the Greek Cypriot leader exiled by the British in 1956...has been invited to come to London to take part in negotiations starting there next week. The subject of these talks will be the Greek-Turkish agreement to make Cyprus an independent republic. All interested parties---Britain, Turkey and Greece---will be taking part in the conversations.

Word for Today

Ghana...a new member of the family of free nations...is in the midst of investigating what Blair Clark referred to as a "still-born revolt", and whether there was a revolt of any kind remains to be proved. Parke Godwin said, "The greatest of all human benefits is independence." Woodrow Wilson said, "Liberty belongs to the individual, or it does not exist."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, February 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... for that story, here is Blair Clark reporting from Accra.

CLARK: The name of France or more exactly of an African serving in the Parliament of a French territory neighboring Ghana was brought into testimony today before the Commission of Inquiry which is looking into the plot to kill or kidnap Ghana's Prime Minister Nkrumah last December. Thus, an international intrigue twist was given to the unfolding story of a plot as strange as any in recent history and according to the evidence presented in a week of hearings, about the most inefficiently organized attempted coup d'etat since Guy Fawkes gunpowder failed to go off. Today's testimony implicating a member of the Parliament of French administered Togoland, which is Ghana's eastern neighbor should probably not be given much international significance at this point, there is far too little testimony on it yet, and in any case, the other circumstances of this strange alleged assassination conspiracy are fascinating enough not to need the added spice of foreign machinations. What the Commission of Inquiry heard today was an account of how one of the chief leaders of the Parliamentary opposition to Nkrumah's ruling party journied to London to buy uniforms with which to equip those who would masquerade as Ghanaian soldiers in order to subvert and overthrow the state. What Mr. Ungpanza, the opposition leader bought last year according to the testimony, makes a fairly quaint military shopping list these nuclear days. There were sand brown belts, 50 of them, officers (indistinct) or insigna and canes or swagger sticks, 45 made of bamboo and five covered with leather, and of course, there was a green hackles or feather cockades which are worn in the wide brimmed hats of officers of the West African frontier fort. In the careful way of British justice as the proceedings here led by Ghana's

English Attorney-General Mr. Bing are thoroughly in the British fair-play tradition, no hint of a conclusion is being drawn yet about what all this adds up to. But, it may be permissable for an outsider aided by the proceedings of a court martial against one senior Ghanaian officer of the army to sum up what this plot against the security of this new state seems to be made of. The case emerging is that of embittered very seniormembers of the opposition United Party last year organised a plot to overthrow Nkrumah's Government. They still had about 1/3rd of the seats in the Parliament but their political hopes seemed to be dimming and they strongly disapproved of what they thought ware Nkrumah's growing addiction to authoritarian rules. So, a small group of the opposition leaders accedding to the testimony organised a group which aimed at subverting this country's very small army, overthrowing the government and seizing power. It came to a climax last December 19th, the day before Nkrumah was to leave Accra for his state visit to India. The idea it is charged was to kidnap or assassinate Nkrumah and several of his cabinet ministers at the airport, using subverted soldiers or conspirators masquerading as Ghana army officers. This plot - if such it was, broke down and was utterly deflated the eve of Nkrumah's departure when it became known to the authroities. It may be asked and indeed it has been asked loudly and angrily, why if all this is true there is not criminal prosecution of those whom the government says were plotting murder and bloody revolution. The answer seems to be that in the judgement of the authorities here in this independent African land, a straight criminal prosecution and a subsequent punishment would not be as affective in an educational way as the present slow, careful inquiry into the details of a stillborn revolt. The Ghana leaders and their top English advisors are doing something it seems extremely sophisticated. They could punish and very severely, instead they are choosing to reveal and to humiliate an opposition they hold in contempt. It looks like a move from almost serene strength. To The 38 members of the opposition who are being held in prison in preventive detention, with no chance of a trial, it looks very different. To them it looks like the end of the freedemocracy they thought they had won with indpendence less than two years ago.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Blair Clark reporting from Accra on the proceedings dealing with the ....

PT/ N.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The State Department says that Secretary Dulles had "a comfortable afternoon" after undergoing surgery this morning for a hernia. The operation began at 8 AM, Washington time, and lasted a little less than an hour. At 10:35 AM, it was announced that during the course of the operation, tissue had been removed for microscopical examination. Mr. Dulles' post-operative condition was described as "quite satisfactory." The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, said the tissue had been removed for examination "as a precautionary measure to see if there was any recurrence...or spread...of the earlier malignancy." Dulles underwent an operation for cancer of the intestine in 1956. Doctors will not complete their examination of the removed tissue until tomorrow.

Under Secretary of State Christian Herter will return to Washington from a South Carolina vacation tomorrow, a day ahead of schedule. And President Eisenhower has arranged to confer tomorrow with Douglas Dillon, who has been serving as acting secretary of state, and Loy W. Henderson, deputy under-secretary for administration. Mr. Eisenhower seldom has business engagements on Saturday. Today, News Secretary Hagerty again denied reports that the President has been considering possible replacements for Mr. Dulles, should he resign.

In Paris, the permanent NATO Council today approved the Western notes to be sent to Moscow next week. Their contents was not divulged. However, according to informed sources, the notes call for a four-power foreign ministers conference to deal with all aspects of the German question. They also suggest that representatives of both East and West Germany attend the conference as advisers, rather than as full participants. The meeting probably would be held sometime in May. Arrangements as to exact time and place are to be negotiated by the American, British and French ambassadors in Moscow. The State Department says that if developments warrant, the Western foreign ministers may meet in Paris next month.

In Moscow, the Soviet presidium today ratified Russia's agreement with the United Arab Republic to help build the first stage of the Aswan high dam. The agreement...to provide a hundred million dollars on a long-term loan basis... was signed in Cairo in December.

For the first time this month, Quemoy and Matsu were both hit by Communist artillery today. But the shelling was light.

The caretaker prime minister of Burma...General NeWin...told the Burmese parliament today that he must resign. At the same time, he said that he would like to remain commander-in-chief of the armed forces. The general succeeded U Nu as prime minister in October, to serve not more than six months. After six months---that is, in April---elections were to be held. He now says that because of unstable conditions it will be impossible to hold elections by that date. A major cause of political instability in Burma is the Communist opposition, which has been waging a guerrilla-type war for more than ten years.

The Japanese cabinet decided today to allow Korean nationals living in Japan to go to Communist North Korea, if they so desire. The Syngman Rhee government has demanded that all Koreans in Japan be repatriated to South Korea... contending that persons going to North Korea would be condemned to "slavery." The Japanese cabinet says that the services of the International Red Cross would be enlisted to see that requests of Koreans wishing to go to the Communist-controlled area are legitimate. Japanese Prime Minister Kishi says the issue will be approached "on the basis of the basic human right to freedom of residence." The foreign minister of South Korea says his country will take "all action necessary to correct the Japanese wrong." And South Korea is threatening to break off current negotiations for establishing diplomatic relations with Japan.

In Caracas today, armed soldiers stood guard as Romulo Betancourt was sworn in as Venezuela's first popularly elected president in ten years. There was no disorder. Betancourt promised cordial relations with the United States, but said he would try to revise in Venezuela's favor existing trade agreements. He will form a coalition cabinet, so as to have broad political support. But Communists will be barred. And he proposed again that dictatorships be excluded from the Organization of American States.

President Eisenhower today declared 13 flood-stricken counties an Indiana to be disaster areas...eligible for federal relief. In West Terre Haute, two thousand families are homeless, and a forecast of heavy rain tonight and tomorrow is causing new concern.

A colleague of mine...Blair Clark...went to Africa recently on a general assignment. He has now reached Accra, the capital of Ghana, where the prime minister has charged a plot against his government...involving kidnaping and possible assassination. The charge is now the subject of a public inquiry. For that story, here is Blair Clark reporting from Accra.

CLARK: The name of France or more exactly of an African serving in the Parliament of a French territory neighboring Ghana was brought into testimony today before the Commission of Inquiry which is looking into the plot to kill or kidnap Ghana's Prime Minister Nkrumah last December. Thus, an international intrigue twist was given to the unfolding story of a plot as strange as any in recent history and according to the evidence presented in a week of hearings, about the most inefficiently organized attempted coup d'etat since Guy Fawkes gunpowder failed to go off. Today's testimony implicating a member of the Parliament of French administered Togoland, which is Ghana's eastern neighbor should probably not be given much international significance at this point, there is far too little testimony on it yet, and in any case, the other circumstances of this strange alleged assassination conspi.racy are fascinating enough not to need the added spice of foreign machinations. What the Commission of Inquiry heard today was an account of how one of the chief leaders of the Parliamentary opposition to Nkrumah's ruling party journied to London to buy uniforms with which to equip those who would masquerade as Ghanian soldiers in order to subvert and overthrow the state. What Mr. Umpanza, the opposition leader bought last year according to the testimony makes a fairly quaint military shopping list these nuclear days. There were sand brown belts, 50 of them officers...or insigna and canes or swagger sticks, 45 of them of bamboo and five covered with leather, and of course, there was a green hackles or feather cockades which are worn in the wide brimmed hats of officers of the West African frontier fort. In the careful way of British justice as the proceedings here led by Ghana's English Attorney-General Mr. Bing are thoroughly in the British fair-play tradition, no hint of a conclusion is being drawn yet about what all this adds up to. But, it may be permissable for an outsider aided by the proceedings of a court martial against one senior Ghaniann officer of the army to sum up what this plot against the security of this new state seems to be made of. The case emerging is that of very embittered senior members of the opposition United Party last year organized a plot to overthrow Nkrumah's Government. They still had about one-third of the seats in the Parliament but their political hopes seemed to be dimming and they strongly disapproved of what they thought were Nkrumah's growing addiction to authoritarian rules. So, a small group of the opposition leaders according to the testimony organized a group which aimed at subverting this country's very small army, overthrowing the government and seizing power. It came to a climax last December 19th, the day before Nkrumah was to leave Accra for his state visit to India. The idea it is charged was to kidnap or assassinate Nkrumah and several of his cabinet ministers at the airport, using subverted soldiers or conspirators masquerading as Ghana army officers. This plot - if such it was, broke down and was utterly deflated the eve of Nkrumah's departure when it became known to the authorities. It may be asked and indeed it has been asked loudly and angrily, why if all this is true there is not criminal prosecution of those whom the government says were plotting murder and bloody revolution. The answer seems to be that in the judgment of the authorities here in this independent African land, a straight criminal prosecution and a subsequent punishment would not be as effective in an educational way as the present slow, careful inquiry into the details of a stillborn revolt. The Ghana leaders and their top English advisors are doing something it seems extremely sophisticated. They could punish and very severely, instead they are choosing to reveal and to humiliate an opposition they hold in contempt. It looks like a move from almost serene strength. To the 38 members of the opposition who are being held in prison in preventive detention, with no chance of a trial, it looks very different. To them it looks like the end of the free democracy they thought they had won with independence less than two years ago.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Blair Clark reporting from Accra on the proceedings dealing with the alleged plot to assassinate Prime Minister Nkrumah.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Ghana...a new member of the family of free nations...is in the midst of investigating what Blair Clark referred to as a "still-born revolt," and whether there was a revolt of any kind remains to be proved. Parke Godwin said, "The greatest of all human benefits is independence." Woodrow Wilson said, "Liberty belongs to the individual, or it does not exist."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Feb. 16, 1959

This is the news:

Fidel Castro tonight was sworn in as prime minister of Cuba...just 47 days after winning the civil war. / The oath of office was administered by Acting President Urrutia (OO-ROO'-TIA) in a ceremony witnessed by members of the cabinet. / Castro...at the age of 32...is the youngest prime minister in the history of the Cuban republic. / He is now expected to undertake his announced program of industrial and agricultural reform.

In Washington, the Senate today confirmed the nomination of Philip Bonsal as the new United States ambassador to Cuba. This morning at a White House meeting President Eisenhower asked Bonsal to convey to the Cuban government his "cordial greetings" and his "heartfelt good wishes for the happiness, prosperity and progress of the Cuban people."

The Senate opened today's session with a silent prayer for "the early and complete recovery" of Secretary of State Dulles...who is suffering from a recurrence of cancer. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen made a speech... praising Mr. Dulles' "Christian conscience, his zeal for good work and sense of mission." Democratic Leader Johnson told his colleagues: "Our hearts and the hearts of free men wverywhere go out to John Foster Dulles as he begins his fight for health. If tenacity and dedication and resoluteness of purpose are allies of medicine, then the prognosis is certainly encouraging." Democratic Leader Johnson conferred during the day with Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. There was informal agreement, Johnson said, that Senate Democrats would cooperate with the Administration in meeting foreign policy problems during Mr. Dulles' absence.

The State Department announces that radiation treatment for Dulles' cancer will start later this week...after a "reasonable" convalescence from the hernia operation he underwent on Friday. Mr. Dulles was able to sit up in a chair for half an hour today, and his post-operative condition is described as "satisfactory". ~~A cancer specialist...Dr. Gordon Zubrod of the National Cancer Institute...has been summoned to assist in the case.~~ ~~ZOO-BROAD~~

Formal notes...proposing a four-power foreign ministers conference on Germany...were sent to Russia today by the United States, Britain and France. West Germany sent a parallel note...saying that the form of German participation in the conference should be decided by the foreign ministers. With regard to disarming West Berlin and making it a "free city"...as proposed by Moscow...the Western powers said again that they reserve the right to maintain their access to Berlin "by all appropriate means." The notes brushed off Russia's bid for a 28-power conference to write a German peace treaty...saying that the Western powers disagreed with the proposal and indicating that they might comment on it later at greater length. But the Western powers are prepared to participate in a foreign ministers conference and are ready "to consider any suggestions as to a date and place." It was suggested that the conference deal with the problem of Germany "in all its aspects"...and that East and West Germans be invited to attend as advisers.

Russia today again denied that Soviet fliers shot down an unarmed American transport last September.

The Defense Department in Washington announces that 7-thousand men will be drafted in April...the lowest monthly draft call since December. Nine thousand men are being drafted this month; eight thousand will be inducted in March.

The Federal Reserve Board reports that industrial production went up again in January...to reach a 15-month high. The production index has now advanced to within 2 percentage points of what it was in August, 1957... before the recession began. Retail sales remained at the record level achieved in December.

A new labor bill was introduced in Congress today by Chairman Barden of the House Labor Committee. The measure is broader than the bills already submitted by either Democratic Senator Kennedy or the Administration. It would...for example...prohibit the use of union funds for political purposes. And union dues could be changed only as the result of a secret vote.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson came under attack today in the Senate Agriculture Committee. Benson spoke in favor of his farm program...which calls for lower, more flexible price supports. A Republican member of the commuttee, Young of North Dakota, told Benson: "You'd break every wheat farmer in the United States." Senator Young cited Administration farm policy as one reason the Republican Party in the last election "didn't receive a majority of the farm votes in a single state."

Committee Chairman Ellender said the Administration was trying to solve the problem of supplus crops "by continuously beating down prices."

Benson said that if his critics would "just look", they could read the answer to the problem "in letters of fire a mile high." And that answer, he said, is to do away with production controls that do not control...and fix price supports at levels that will cause markets to expand. He said that if the United States did not grow one bushel of wheat in 1959, it could still meet all its current domestic needs and have 325-million bushels left over.

Governor Furcolo of Massachusetts called at the White House today and submitted a proposal for expanding higher education. The Democratic governor asked President Eisenhower to explore the possibility of increasing the size of college classes...so that more students might attend, he said, at lower cost. Mr. Eisenhower listened to the proposal, then asked Governor Furcolo to submit it in writing.

A plea for postponement of integration at Warren County High School...in Front Royal, Virginia...was rejected today by Judge Sobeloff of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The school board had argued that the best interests of both white and Negro students would be served if the admittance of 22 Negroes...ordered by a lower Federal Court...were delayed until September. The high school will now be open for registration on Wednesday. School officials indicate, however, that many white students already attending private classes may not show up. [~~The same, they say,~~ may apply to teachers. The Warren County Educational Foundation, which has been conducting the private classes, has 26 of the public school's 42 teachers under contract. Last week, a majority of white parents voted in favor of continuing private instruction.]

4

Edward R. Murrow: February 16, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Now that it is certain that Secretary Dulles cannot at present serve as full-time Secretary of State, it may be assumed that someone else will do so, and start doing it right away. / The need for a full-time Secretary is urgent, to say the least. / The differences with the Soviet Union over Berlin are heading for a showdown in May, and American leadership in Western policy is at stake. / But Mr. Dulles is not to be replaced right away because, for one thing, it still remains to be demonstrated that he cannot resume his full duties in the near future. / He has, as the doctors put it, a fighting chance. The effect of his treatment is to be awaited. / How great his chance is, is shown, however, by the comment of one of the medical experts on the radiation treatments that are to be started soon. / They can prolong Mr. Dulles's life and reduce his suffering. / But he did not say that it is possible to cure him.

The natural thing to have happen, if Mr. Dulles is not replaced right away, is that the President should take charge of foreign affairs. / That is his constitutional function. / But Mr. Eisenhower is in a special position. / After a serious heart attack and a major surgical operation he recovered sufficiently to become a full-time President. / But he is not strong enough to work overtime for an extended period. / That is understood by everyone concerned. It was an implicit condition in his accepting a second term. And when last week the President was asked if he now planned to devote more of his time and energies to foreign affairs he said frankly that he could not.

The question of finding a successor to Mr. Dulles has been much discussed over the week end. Representative Celler has proposed the naming of Adlai Stevenson, an idea that recalls F.D.R.'s appointment of Stimson and Knox to his Cabinet in the summer of 1940. With the Democrats having a majority in Congress it is pointed out that Mr. Stevenson at the State Department would assure a united foreign policy front at a crucial time.

But the appointment of Stimson and Knox was under conditions hardly comparable with those today. World War II had broken out, and Mr. Roosevelt named them to make his own leadership stronger, not with the intention of sharing power with the Opposition. A Democrat at the State Department today could not expect to exercise responsibility with full authority. For that there would need to be a truly national government under a President who delegated full authority to him. Mr. Dulles undoubtedly has had such full authority. Today a national government is neither called for nor desired, and no one can conceive of Mr. Eisenhower putting himself in the hands of Mr. Stevenson as he has been in the hands of Mr. Dulles.

The expectation in Washington is that no new appointment will be made for the present, and that the President with the help of Under-Secretaries Herter and Dillon - and with the bedside advice of Mr. Dulles, will carry on as a caretakers' team. If a new Secretary were to be named and Mr. Herter were well, he undoubtedly would have first call on the job. But he is somewhat crippled with arthritis. It is a glaring fact that all three top men in charge of American foreign policy suffer from physical limitations, the President, Mr. Dulles and Mr. Herter. If a new Secretary is named it may be Herter because of his diplomatic qualifications and because he can have Mr. Dillon as right-hand man. Or it may go to Mr. Dillon, who is reputed to be Mr. Dulles's preference.

3

Other names mentioned are those of Ambassador Lodge, who has a personal claim on President Eisenhower, General Gruenther, who enjoys his close friendship, and Mr. McCloy, who has status in the business world as well as diplomatic experience in Germany.

Whoever is named - unless it were to be Mr. Stevenson - the prestige of American leadership abroad will not be maintained, and the way will be open for some other Western leader to increase his influence. It now appears that Prime Minister Macmillan will be the man whose relative position may be most improved. He is by nature a negotiator, a staunch Conservative, and loyally pro-American.

His day, however, will not come till after his forthcoming visit to Moscow. For he must ~~be scrupulously careful to do no negotiating on this~~ trip. The most he can ~~discover is whether the Russians are prepared to do some genuine bargaining with the West. If so, his chance will come at the next East-West conference.~~ Then he may emerge as the key personality of the West. At any rate, he is not likely to be overshadowed by General De Gaulle, now submerged under his domestic problems, or by President Eisenhower, no matter whom he asks to advise him.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

Word for Today

Yesterday...in a broadcast from London...my colleague Charles Collingwood quoted a British writer on the subject of Mr. Dulles' illness. The writer said, "Many of us have not concealed our consternation at the public attitudes of Mr. Dulles. Yet one respects his stony dedication, his personal honesty, his physical industry and endurance against manifest human pain."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Fidel Castro tonight was sworn in as prime minister of Cuba...just 47 days after winning the civil war. The oath of office was administered by Acting President Urrutia in a ceremony witnessed by members of the cabinet. Castro... at the age of 32...is the youngest prime minister on the history of the Cuban Republic. He is now expected to undertake his announced program of industrial and agricultural reform.

In Washington, the Senate today confirmed the nomination of Philip Bonsal as the new United States ambassador to Cuba. This morning at a White House meeting, President Eisenhower asked Bonsal to convey to the Cuban government his "cordial grretings" and his "heartfelt good wishes for the happiness, prosperity and progress of the Cuban people."

The Senate opened today's session with a silent prayer for "the early and complete recovery" of Secretary of State Dulles...who is suffering from a recurrence of cancer. Democratic Leader Johnson conferred during the day with Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. There was informal agreement, Johnson said, that Senate Democrats would cooperate with the Administration in meeting foreign policy problems during Mr. Dulles' absence.

The State Department announces that radiation treatment for Dulles' cancer will start later this week...after a "reasonable" convalescence from the hernia operation he underwent on Friday. Mr. Dulles was able to sit up in a chair for half an hour today, and his post-operative condition is described as "satisfactory."

Formal notes...proposing a four-power foreign ministers conference on Germany...were sent to Russia today by the United States, Britain and France. West Germany sent a parallel note...saying that the form of German participation in the conference should be decided by the foreign ministers. With regard to disarming West Berlin and making it a "free city"...as proposed by Moscow...the Western powers said again that they reserve the right to maintain their access to Berlin "by all appropriate means." The notes brushed off Russia's bid for a 28-power conference to write a German peace treaty...saying that the Western powers disagreed with the proposal and indicating that they might comment on it later at greater length. But the Western powers are prepared to participate in a foreign ministers conference and are ready "to consider any suggestions as to a date and place." It was suggested that the conference deal with the problem of Germany "in all its aspects"...and that East and West Germans be invited to attend as advisers.

Russia today again denied that Soviet fliers shot down an unarmed American transport last September.

The Defense Department in Washington announces that 7-thousand men will be drafted in April...the lowest monthly draft call since December. Nine thousand men are being drafted this month; eight thousand will be inducted in March.

The Federal Reserve Board reports that industrial production went up again in January...to reach a 15-month high. The production index has now advanced to within 2 percentage points of what it was in August 1957...before the recession began. Retail sales remained at the record level achieved in December.

A new labor bill was introduced in Congress today by Chairman Barden of the House Labor Committee. The measure is broader than the bills already submitted by either Democratic Senator Kennedy or the Administration. It would...for example..prohibit the use of union funds for political purposes. And union dues could be changed only as the result of a secret vote.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson came under attack today in the Senate Agriculture Committee. Benson spoke in favor of his farm program..which calls for lower, more flexible price supports. A Republican member of the committee,

Young of North Dakota, told Benson: "You'd break every wheat farmer in the United States." Senator Young cited Administration farm policy as one reason the Republican Party in the last election "didn't receive a majority of the farm votes in a single state." Committee Chairman Ellender said the Administration was trying to solve the problem of surplus crops "by continuously beating down prices." Benson said that if his critics would "just look" they could read the answer to the problem "in letters of fire a mile high." And that answer, he said, is to do away with production controls that do not control...and fix price supports at levels that will cause markets to expand. He said that if the United States did not grow one bushel of wheat in 1959, it could still meet all its current domestic needs and have 325-million bushels left over.

A plea for postponement of integration at Warren County High School... in Front Royal, Virginia...was rejected today by Judge Sobeloff of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The school board had argued that the best interests of both white and Negro students would be served if the admittance of twenty -two negroes...ordered by a lower Federal Court were delayed until September. The high school will now be open for registration on Wednesday. School officials indicate, however, that many white students already attending private classes may not show up.

Now that it is certain that Secretary Dulles cannot at present serve as full-time Secretary of State, it may be assumed that someone else will do so, and start doing it right away. The need for a full-time Secretary is urgent, to say the least. The differences with the Soviet Union over Berlin are heading for a showdown in May, and American leadership in Western policy is at stake. But Mr. Dulles is not to be replaced right away because, forone thing, it still remains to be demonstrated that he cannot resume his full duties in the near future. He has, as the doctors put it, a fighting chance. The effect of his treatment is to be awaited. How great his chance is, is shown however, by the comment of one of the medical experts on the radiation treatments that are to be started soon. They can prolong Mr. Dulles' life and reduce his suffering. But he did not say that it is possible to cure him.

The natural thing to have happen, if Mr. Dulles is not replaced right away, is that the President should take charge of foreign affairs. That is his constitutional function. But Mr. Eisenhower is in a special position. After a serious heart attack and a major surgical operation he recovered sufficiently to become a full-time President. But he is not strong enough to work overtime for an extended period. That is understood by everyone concerned. It was an implicit condition in his accepting a second term. And when last week the President was asked if he now planned to devote more of his time and energies to foreign affairs, he said frankly that he could not.

The question of finding a successor to Mr. Dulles has been much discussed over the weekend. Representative Celler has proposed the naming of Adlai Stevenson, an idea that recalls F.D.R.'s appointment of Stimson and Knox to his Cabinet in the summer of 1940. With the Democrats having a majority in Congress, it is pointed out that Mr. Stevenson at the State Department would assure a united foreign policy front at a crucial time.

But the appointment of Stimson and Knox was under conditions hardly comparable with those today. World War II had broken out, and Mr. Roosevelt named them to make his own leadership stronger, not with the intention of sharing power with the opposition. A Democrat at the State Department today could not expect to exercise responsibility with full authority. For that there would need to be a truly national government under a President who delegated full authority to him. Mr. Dulles undoubtedly has had such full authority. Today a national government is neither called for nor desired, and no one can conceive of Mr. Eisenhower putting himself in the hands of Mr. Stevenson as he has been in the hands of Mr. Dulles.

The expectation in Washington is that no new appointment will be made for the present, and that the President with the help of Under-Secretaries Herter and Dillon - and with the bedside advice of Mr. Dulles, will carry on as a caretakers' team. If a new Secretary were to be named, and Mr. Herter were well, he undoubtedly would have first call on the job. But he is somewhat crippled with arthritis. It is a glaring fact that all three top men in charge of American foreign policy suffer from physical limitations, the President, Mr. Dulles and Mr. Herter. If a new Secretary is named it may be Herter because of his diplomatic qualifications and because he can have Mr. Dillon as right-hand man. Or it may go to Mr. Dillon, who is reputed to be Mr. Dulles' preference.

Whoever is named - unless it were to be Mr. Stevenson - the prestige of American leadership abroad will not be maintained, and the way will be open for some other Western leader to increase his influence. It now appears that Prime Minister Macmillan will be the man whose relative position may be most improved. He is by nature a negotiator, a staunch Conservative and loyally pro-American.

His day, however, will not come till after his forthcoming visit to Moscow. Then he may emerge as the key personality of the West. At any rate, he is not likely to be overshadowed by General De Gaullle now submerged under his domestic problems, or by President Eisenhower, no matter whom he asks to advise him.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Yesterday...in a broadcast from London...my colleague Charles Collingwood quoted a British writer on the subject of Mr. Dulles' illness. The writer said, "Many of us have not concealed our consternation at the public attitudes of Mr. Dulles. Yet one respects his stony dedication, his personal honesty, his physical industry and endurance against manifest human pain."

Goodnight and good luck

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Feb. 17, 1959

This is the news:

The United States today placed in orbit around the earth a small satellite designed to help predict the weather. It is a Navy satellite called the Vanguard Second. It was launched this morning at Cape Canaveral, weighs twenty-one and a half pounds, and is circling the earth once every two hours and six minutes. The Vanguard Second is different from other artificial satellites in that it carries photo-electric cells...which can record and report back the cloud cover existing over much of the world's surface. The cells...in the present satellite...will operate for only about two weeks, but the satellite itself is expected to orbit the earth for hundreds of years. One scientist says it may continue in orbit "forever".

It has already begun radioing back information...indicating performance "somewhat in excess of what had been expected." / Dr. Richard Porter, who was head of our satellite committee for the International Geophysical Year, calls today's launching "the beginning of a new era in weather research." And President Eisenhower has sent a message of congratulation to all who took part.

The President visited Secretary of State Dulles today in Walter Reed Hospital. / He also saw Dulles on Saturday, after it was announced that Dulles again was suffering from cancer. / Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will hold a news conference, and Republican congressional leaders who called at the White House today report that he will have something to say then about Mr. Dulles' future role. / After his news conference, President Eisenhower will fly to Acapulco, Mexico, for informal talks with the Mexican president.

The Commerce Department reports that personal income in January reached a new all-time high...cancelling out a temporary decline in December.

Chairman McClellan of the Senate Rackets Committee today accused a teamsters union official of turning the union label into "a badge of extortion" in the juke box industry. McClellan made the charge after Joseph DeGrandis, president of New York Local 266, refused to answer questions on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Other union officials and several coin machine operators also pleaded possible self-incrimination.

The president of the bakery workers union, James Cross, today was acquitted of a charge that he lied to the Senate Rackets Committee in 1957. Gross was being tried by a Federal Court jury in Washington. Judge Richmond Keech directed a verdict of acquittal on grounds that regardless of whether what Gross said was true or false, it would not have helped the committee draft new legislation. Judge Keech said it was "elementary" that congressional committees "may not usurp the function of a prosecuting attorney or of a committing magistrate in the guise of legislative investigation."

The Atomic Energy Commission today presented Congress with a new nuclear power program for the next year. No cost estimates were given, but Chairman McCone said the program ~~mih~~ is designed to "take advantage of a number of breakthroughs." The commission will continue its present policy of agreeing to build proto-type reactors, only if private industry fails to submit satisfactory bids. The government, however, will consider giving financial assistance toward the capital cost of reactors constructed by private utilities in certain instances.

→

MEN-DAY-RESS

The London conference on Cyprus recessed today after Premier Menderes of Turkey narrowly escaped death in an air accident. The Turkish airliner bringing Menderes to the three-power talks crashed in a fog near London, killing at least 12 of the 22 persons on board. Menderes suffered minor cuts and bruises. He was coming to London to confer with Prime Minister

KAH-RAH-MAHN-LEES'

Macmillan of Britain and Premier Karamanlis of Greece on the Greek-Turkish plan for making Cyprus an independent republic. The British, Greek and Turkish foreign ministers did meet today...along with the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, and Dr. Kutchuk, leader of the island's Turkish minority. Makarios...reportedly...questioned Britain's demand for "indefinite" sovereignty over its military bases on Cyprus.

KOO'-CHOOK

Later, Makarios conferred privately with the Turkish minority leader---their first meeting face to face. A Turkish spokesman said that they "exchanged views."

In the United Nations today, the trusteeship council approved the plan...drafted by France...for granting independence to the French Cameroons next January first. The only dissenting vote was cast by Russia, which wants the French and British Cameroons in West Africa to be united. The French plan now goes to the General Assembly, which reconvenes on Friday.

Israel today reported two Egyptians killed in a clash with an Israeli patrol, two miles inside Israeli territory. According to an Israeli Army spokesman, the Egyptians belonged to a band of infiltrators who had entered Israel from the Sinai region. He reported no Israeli casualties.

In Cairo, Foreign Minister Fawzi told reporters today that the United Arab Republic is facing the problem of Jewish migration to Israel from Eastern Europe "positively and with vigilance." He indicated that the U.A.R. might approach the Communist governments involved to try to stop the migration. ~~Prime Minister Ben Gurion said [illegible] that the U.A.R. policy might soon allow Russian Jews to emigrate to Israel.~~

In Cuba, Major Jesus Blanco today was condemned to death for the second time after a new trial. Blanco was first convicted as a war criminal on January twenty-third...in a trial conducted before thousands of spectators in the Havana sports palace. He appealed the conviction, and was tried today...and convicted...by the same three-judge court. This time, the trial was conducted in a regular courtroom. The charge against him was murder, incendiarism, looting and robbery.

Edward R. Murrow: February 17, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

President Eisenhower's visit on Thursday and Friday with Mexico's new President, Adolfo Lopez Mateos, will be one of those rarities, a meeting of Heads of State without heavy political overtones. Both, of course, expect better relations between the two countries to be the result. But they will seek them not by conferring or negotiating, but by spending two days together informally. Mr. Eisenhower is happy in such a role. He has great charm and friendliness, and knows how to impart warmth. He played the same role before when he entertained the preceding President of Mexico, Ruiz Cortines, and Prime Minister St. Laurent of Canada at White Sulphur Springs in March, 1956. The three top men of the continent did not meet to make history, but tried only to get to know each other and understand each other's problem.

The visit this week follows logically on the activities of Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, to promote more American interest in the development of democracy in Latin America. It also follows on the unpleasant experiences with Communist demonstrators of Vice President Nixon in Venezuela and Peru. Incidentally, Milton Eisenhower is accompanying the President. One might also point out that this visit follows by three weeks the creation in Moscow of a new "Association for Friendship and Cultural Co-Operation in Latin America." under the nominal leadership of the Soviet composer Katchaturyan. Latin America was long assumed to be our back yard, an idea that does not flatter Latin Americans. Of late the region has broadened into a field of ~~lively~~ rivalry between us and the Communist world, ~~Russia and China in particular.~~

The President's visit at this time is a reminder that not all the major problems raised by the Soviet Union Center in Germany. There is another side to the coin, the danger of Communist penetration in this hemisphere. Our world leadership certainly depends in part on our ability to stay ahead of the Communists in Latin America.

The World Marxist Review, an organ of World Communism published in Moscow, wrote last month: "Latin America is on the threshold of epoch-making changes. cConditions are ripening for building a broad front of struggle for a progressive and patriotic national policy." And a month before, the Soviet Party journal "Kommunist" carried an article by ~~B.N. Ponomarev~~, a leading Party theoretician and member of the Party Central Committee, which in ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ surveying world Communism singled out the Communist parties in Latin America for warmest praise of all. He said the parties had made most gains in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Uruguay, Cuba, Venezuela and Columbia.

The present Communist line for Latin America is to get other parties, Right Wing as well as Radicals, to combine in an anti-Imperialist front, by which is meant an anti-United States front. The other directive is to infiltrate the trade unions. Supporting this political drive lies the unlimited possibility of increasing trade.

Last year, the Soviet Union delivered more than a million tons of oil to Argentina at below-market prices, offered two hundred thousand tons of oil to Brazil, established a mission in Uruguay to buy up a big share of the wool output in exchange for oil, and contracted for twenty thousand tons of copper from Chile. Offers to buy coffee in exchange for machinery were made to Mexico, Panama, Colombia and El Salvador. Poland proposed to buy coffee and cotton from Mexico and to sell coal to Argentina in exchange for wool.

The bulk of this trade is still relatively small, and the resistance to the Communists has been considerable. In Brazil, only two Communists were elected to Parliament in the last election and relations between Communists and their Left Wing associates have worsened. In Chile the Popular Front candidate lost the Presidency last Fall largely because Communists were in the coalition. But the Communist activities are only a beginning, and they could be turned into a major offensive at will. / This offensive is not to be misunderstood as part of the cold war. / It is a permanent feature of what Moscow calls co-existence. / We are not to be fought, we are to be outpaced. And we might not be invulnerable to this kind of rivalry in Latin America. So it is a good step, if only a small one, that the President now is taking. / It can help bring to life the concept of the United States as the good enighbor in hemisphere affairs.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

The Communists are demonstrating...by their economic competition... what they mean by "peaceful coexistence." But as Professor Alfred North Whitehead once remarked, "A clash of doctrines is not a disaster, it is an opportunity. We must produce a great age," he said, "or see the collapse of the upward striving of our race."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The United States today placed in orbit around the earth a small satellite designed to help predict the weather. It is a Navy satellite called the Vanguard Second. It was launched this morning at Cape Canaveral, weighs twenty-one and a half pounds, and is circling the earth once every two hours and six minutes. The Vanguard Second is different from other artificial satellites in that it carries photo-electric cells...which can record and report back the cloud cover existing over much of the world's surface. The cells...in the present satellite...will operate for only about two weeks, but the satellite itself is expected to orbit the earth for hundreds of years. One scientist says it may continue in orbit "forever." It has already begun radioing back information...indicating performance "somewhat inexcess of what had been expected." Dr. Richard Porter, who was head of our satellite committee for the International Geophysical Year, calls today's launching "the beginning of a new era in weather research." And President Eisenhower has sent a message of congratulation to all who took part.

The President visited Secretary of State Dulles today in Walter Reed Hospital. He also saw Dulles on Saturday, after it was announced that Dulles again was suffering from cancer. Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will hold a news conference, and Republican congressional leaders who called at the White House today report that he will have something to say then about Mr. Dulles' future role. After his news conference, President Eisenhower will fly to Acapulco, Mexico, for informal talks with the Mexican president.

The Commerce Department reports that personal income in January reached a new all-time high...cancelling out a temporary decline in December.

Chairman McClellan of the Senate Rackets Committee today accused a teamsters union official of turning the union label into "a badge of extortion" in the juke box industry. McClellan made the charge after Joseph DeGrandis, president of New York Local 266, refused to answer questions on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Other union officials and several coin machine operators also pleaded possible self-incrimination.

The president of the bakery workers union, James Cross, today was acquitted of a charge that he lied to the Senate Rackets Committee in 1957. Gross was being tried by a Federal Court jury in Washington. Judge Richmond Keech directed a verdict of acquittal on grounds that regardless of whether what Gross said was true or false, it would not have helped the committee draft new legislation. Judge Keech said it was "elementary" that congressional committees "may not usurp the function of a prosecuting attorney or of a committing magistrate in the guise of legislative investigation."

The Atomic Energy Commission today presented Congress with a new nuclear power program for the next year. No cost estimates were given, but Chairman McCone said the program is designed to "take advantage of a number of breakthroughs." The commission will continue its present policy of agreeing to build proto-type reactors, only if private industry fails to submit satisfactory bids. The government, however, will consider giving financial assistance toward the capital cost of reactors constructed by private utilities in certain instances.

The London conference on Cyprus recessed today after Premier Menderes of Turkey narrowly escaped death in an air accident. The Turkish airliner bringing Menderes to the three-power talks crashed in a fog near London, killing at least 12 of the 22 persons on board. Menderes suffered minor cuts and bruises. He was coming to London to confer with Prime Minister Macmillan of Britain and Premier Karamanlis of Greece on the Greek-Turkish plan for making Cyprus an independent republic. The British, Greek and Turkish foreign ministers did meet today...along with the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, and Dr. Kutchuk, leader of the island's Turkish minority. Makarios...reportedly...questioned Britain's demand for "indefinite" sovereignty over its military bases on Cyprus. Later Makarios conferred privately with the Turkish minority leader---their first meeting face to face. A Turkish spokesman said that they "exchanged views."

In the United Nations today, the trusteeship council approved the plan... drafted by France...for granting independence to the French Cameroons next January first. The only dissenting vote was cast by Russia, which wants the French and British Cameroons in West Africa to be united. The French plan now goes to the General Assembly, which reconvenes on Friday.

Israel today reported two Egyptians killed in a clash with an Israeli patrol, two miles inside Israeli territory. According to an Israeli Army spokesman, the Egyptians belonged to a band of infiltrators who had entered Israel from the Sinai region. He reported no Israeli casualties.

In Cairo, Foreign Minister Fawzi told reporters today that the United Arab Republic is facing the problem of Jewish migration to Israel from Eastern Europe "positively and with vigilance." He indicated that the U.A.R. might approach the Communist governments involved to try to stop the migration.

In Cuba, Major Jesus Sosa Blanco today was condemned to death for the second time after a new trial. Sosa Blanco was first convicted as a war criminal on January twenty-third...in a trial conducted before thousands of spectators in the Havana sports palace. He appealed the conviction, and was tried today...and convicted...by the same three-judge court. This time, the trial was conducted in a regular courtroom. The charge against him was murder, incendiarism, looting and robbery.

President Eisenhower's visit on Thursday and Friday with Mexico's new President, Adolfo Lopez Mateos, will be one of these rarities, a meeting of Heads of State without heavy political overtones. Both, of course, expect better relations between the two countries to be the result. But they will seek them not by conferring or negotiating, but by spending two days together informally.

Mr. Eisenhower is happy in such a role. He has great charm and friendliness, and knows how to impart warmth. He played the same role before when he entertained the preceding President of Mexico, Ruiz Cortines, and Prime Minister St. Laurent of Canada at White Sulphur Springs in March, 1956. The three top men of the continent did not meet to make history, but tried only to get to know each other and understand each other's problem.

The visit this week follows logically on the activities of Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, to promote more American interest in the development of democracy in Latin America. It also follows on the unpleasant experiences with Communist demonstrators of Vice President Nixon in Venezuela and Peru. Incidentally, Milton Eisenhower is accompanying the President. One might also point out that this visit follows by three weeks the creation in Moscow of a new "Association for Friendship and Cultural Co-Operation in Latin America" under the nominal leadership of the Soviet composer Katchaturyan. Latin America was long assumed to be our backyard, an idea that does not flatter Latin Americans. Of late the region has broadened into a field of rivalry between us and the Communist world.

The President's visit at this time is a reminder that not all the major problems raised by the Soviet Union center in Germany. There is another side to the coin, the danger of Communist penetration in this hemisphere. Our world leadership certainly depends in part on our ability to stay ahead of the Communists in Latin America.

The present communist line for Latin America is to get other parties, Right Wing as well as Radicals, to combine in an anti-Imperialist front, by which is meant an anti-United States front. The other directive is to infiltrate the trade unions. Supporting this political drive lies the unlimited possibility of increasing trade.

Last year, the Soviet Union delivered more than a million tons of oil to Argentina at below-market prices, offered two hundred thousand tons of oil to Brazil, established a mission in Uruguay to buy up a big share of the wool output in exchange for oil, and contracted for twenty thousand tons of copper from Chile. Offers to buy coffee in exchange for machinery were made to Mexico, Panama, Colombia and El Salvador. Poland proposed to buy coffee and cotton from Mexico and to sell coal to Argentina in exchange for wool.

The bulk of this trade is still relatively small, and the resistance to the Communists has been considerable. In Brazil, only two Communists were elected to Parliament in the last election and relations between Communists and their Left Wing associates have worsened. In Chile the Popular Front candidate lost the Presidency last fall largely because Communists were in the coalition. But the Colmunist activities are only a beginning, and they could be turned into a major offensive at will. This offensive is not to be misunderstood as part of the cold war. It is a permanent feature of what Moscow calls co-existence. We are not to be fought, we are to be outpaced. And we might not be invulnerable to this kind of rivalry in Latin America. So it is a good step, if only a small one, that the President now is taking. It can help bring to life the concept of the United States as the good neighbor in hemisphere affairs.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Communists are demonstrating...by their economic competition...what they mean by "peaceful co-existence." But as Professor Alfred North Whitehead once remarked, "A clash of doctrines is not a disaster, it is an opportunity. We must produce a great age," he said, "or see the collapse of the upward striving of our race."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Feb. 18, 1959

This is the news:

The doctors attending Secretary of State Dulles have decided to start [redacted] radiation therapy on Friday. The cancer treatments will be administered externally once a day at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center. The State Department says that Mr. Dulles is continuing to gain strength after his hernia operation. He is walking more each day, and this morning he telephoned the State Department to discuss official business. The conversation lasted about ten minutes.

The first question asked at President Eisenhower's news conference today concerned two reports arising from Mr. Dulles' illness. A reporter wanted to know if it was true that Dulles had tried to resign as secretary of state...and that Mr. Eisenhower had refused. Also, had the President been "sounding out" certain Republican leaders as to a possible successor?

#1 Tape runs 3:02
Ends on cue: "--discussed with anyone the possibility of his successor."

Later in the news conference, a question arose as to the "substance" of the problem facing Secretary Dulles and the West in general. As part of the German reunification "scheme", was the West entertaining the idea of thinning out troops on both sides, or limiting armaments in Central Europe?

#2 Tape runs 1:14
Ends on cue: "--if it will be grasped in good faith."

William Lawrence of the New York Times asked if there was an Allied agreement to use force if necessary to defend our rights in Berlin. Mr. Eisenhower said:

#3 Tape runs 30 seconds
Ends on cue: "--to block our carrying out our responsibilities."

The President was asked about the speech...made by Khrushchev...in which the Soviet leader advised "sabre-rattlers" in the West "to go take a cold shower and calm their nerves." (Khrushchev made the speech yesterday, but it was not reported until this morning by the official Soviet news agency Tass.) He said if the Western powers try to shoot their way through to West Berlin, it would mean "the beginning of war." International issues, he said, can no longer be settled by force of arms. In commenting on this speech, Mr. Eisenhower said:

#4 Tape runs 35 seconds

Ends on cue: "--to undertake way back in 1945."

The President again appealed for a balanced budget. He denied that he had made a "fetish" of it...saying that he had agreed to an unbalanced budget last year when the situation required. But, he said, if we can't live within our income in a period of growing prosperity, when can we?

Mr. Eisenhower denied reports that the resignation of Secretary of Defense McElroy is imminent. McElroy had told him ~~[illegible]~~ when he entered the cabinet in 1957 that "certain factors" might not enable him to go the full term. But McElroy, he said, has not brought up to him ~~[illegible]~~ "any intention to quit at this time." After the news conference, President Eisenhower took off for Mexico by way of Austin, Texas...where he is stopping overnight. Tomorrow...at Alcapulco, Mexico...he will begin two days of informal talks wit the new Mexican president, Lopez Mateos.

→

MAH-TAY'-OS

The White House today confirmed the report that James W. Riddleberger has been chosen by President Eisenhower to head the International Cooperation Administration...the agency in charge of all overseas aid. Riddleberger is now serving as ambassador to Greece. He succeeds James H. Smith, who recently resigned. The State Department had recommended its economic expert, Henry Labouisse, to take over as I.C.A. administrator. But the appointment reportedly was opposed by Meade Alcorn, chairman of the Republican National Committee....on grounds that Labouisse once registered as a Democrat. That was in 1941.

Mr. Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Dr. Willard F.Libby as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission. He said that accepting the resignation was "a difficult task." Dr. Libby had completed less than three years of his five-year term on the commission. He gave no reason for his resignation...except to say that "if I am to remain a scientist, I must return to teaching and research."

Army doctors at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, report that General George Marshall has suffered another stroke...and that his condition is serious. The general is 78.

Twenty-two Negro students registered for classes today at the Warren County High School in Front Royal, Virginia, in accordance with a Federal Court order...but no white students showed up. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People blames the failure of white students to appear, on the county school board. School officials had said they they expected many of the students to continue to attend private classes.. set up after the school was closed last fall, in order to avoid integration. Seven hundred and eighty of the white children are now receiving private instruction. County school officials say they do not know what they can do, if the parents of white children want to continue under the present makeshift private system. The school superintendent said, "My guess is, that the parents do not want to interrupt their education for a second time."

In Miami today, the Dade County school board voted to admit four Negroes to a previously all-white elementary school. This is the first action of the kind taken in Florida, involving a public school.

Back in a Moment —

George Bergman

Word for Today

Mr. Eisenhower has decided...~~with good reason~~...to make use of what he described in his news conference as "the wisdom and knowledge of Secretary of State Dulles in the complicated business of diplomacy." In this, the President would surely agree with Edmund Burke...who said, "Great men are the guide-posts and the landmarks of the state."

Goodnight and good luck!

background of these two reports, I wonder if you could discuss [illegible] us first, the Secretary's condition and how you view [illegible]

A.—Well, I want to start off with a little reminiscing.

I once told General Marshall that there was a certain corps commander in the United States that I wanted to get over into Europe right away; I needed him and the corps needed such a man with such qualifications. And I got a telegram saying, well, sure, he is a very fine man, but he is so crippled out in Walter Reed that the doctors won't assure you that he can move around.

And I said, you send the man and I will send him to battle in a litter, because he can do better that way than most people I know.

Now, I feel this way about Secretary Dulles. The doctors have assured me there is nothing in his disease that is going to touch his heart and his head, and that is what we want.

I am constitutionally responsible for conducting the foreign affairs of the United States, and the man who has been my closest associate, certainly my principal assistant, and on whom all the responsibility for details has been resting, my closest friend and confidant in this whole business, is Secretary Dulles, and I know of no man in my knowledge in the world that has equalled his wisdom and his knowledge in this whole complicated business.

Therefore, as long as Secretary Dulles believes that he is in shape to carry on, he is exactly the person I want.

There is, so far as his offer to resign, I must tell you this is no new thing. His dedication and his selflessness is so great that from the very first day he came into this office, he has constantly said, "If ever, Mr. President, I have been—become for you either a political or a national liability, remember, you have my resignation, always to be accepted at your pleasure."

Well, now, of course, this has been his attitude. There has never been a specific

But I have not supported or have not suggested a constitutional amendment at this moment. That it may come to that, I don't say my mind is closed to it; I just say I haven't done that.

4 CHALMERS M. ROBERTS of The Washington Post and Times-Herald—Mr. President, on the substance of the problem facing Secretary Dulles and the West, in general, could you tell us whether you think the political and military changes in recent years affecting Europe are such that it might now be possible for the West to consider as part of the German reunification scheme some idea of thinning out our troops or troops on both sides [illegible] Central Europe?

A.—Well, [redacted] I am not going here to start talking about the details of the possibilities that may come out of negotiations. The West has shown time and again its readiness to negotiate on the whole problem of Germany and the region, anything reasonable in which both sides can have confidence.

We don't want, and we realize it would be self-defeating, to build up anything that the Soviets could legitimately consider a menace on their border, and we don't want to do that.

[redacted]

I think that the best we can say is this: here we search for a just peace. That just peace is not going to come about until two sides can find some reasonable basis where there can be—these specific problems can be solved, and until that comes about, I think we have to do the best we can, stay strong question.

I would merely say this: Here is one of those places where we hope that the forces within the country that want to live independently and in some measure of freedom will triumph over those where they want to have a dictatorial type of government or Communist type, and by that I mean Communist; and certainly that is the kind of development we want to see come about.

[There was a chorus of "Mr. President."]

A.—Right back there.

7 CHARLES W. ROBERTS of Newsweek—Sir, I would like to ask you two related questions. There have been reports recently that [Defense Secretary Neil H.] McElroy would like to leave the Cabinet this year. Secondly, there have been a lot of reports that you have difficulty getting and keeping people in Government jobs now that you are barred by the Constitution from running again, in the last two years of your Administration. Could you comment on both of those reports?

A.—Well, I will comment on them, yes.

First of all, Mr. McElroy did, when he accepted the job here, indicate there might be certain factors that might not allow him to go to the end of his term.

But I know this: He is dedicated to his job, and he has not brought up to me at this moment any expression of intention to quit at a particular time.

Now, next, about getting good men for this Government: I really believe it is a wrong premise that someone is starting, for this reason: I had a harder time when people thought they might be committed for six years of service than when they were for two. [Laughter]

And I remember this: I believe the average person that takes a position in Government has a feeling that because of others' good opinion or under presuasion the feeling that if he can do something for this country through a governmental job that is

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18—When it comes to whether budgets will be balanced in the future President Eisenhower is no "seventh son of a seventh son."

He said so today at his news conference. He made clear what a "seventh son of a seventh son" was, but not how or where he found the phrase that apparently goes deep into ancient lore.

Commenting on balanced budgets, the President said: "Now, I do not know what is the future, and I can't even beyond the next day; I am not a seventh son of a seventh son."

Standard references trace the phrase to ancient times and associate it with Biblical "sevens," such as seven days of the week, seven graces and seven parts of the Lord's Prayer. Some references say seven was regarded as a "mystic and sacred" number, particularly among the Hebrews, Assyrians and Arabians—and that the "seventh son of a seventh son" was blessed with what the Scots, the Irish and a lot of others have called "second sight." But its exact origin is a mystery.

are going to shoot our way into Berlin.

We say we are just going to go and continue carrying out our responsibilities to those people and the ones that we agreed to undertake way back in 1945. So that if we are stopped it will be somebody else using force.

Now, with respect to your comments on Senator Mansfield's speech, I wouldn't want to say anything at the moment.

9 THOMAS N. SCHROTH of Congressional Quarterly—Mr. President, among the Lincoln Day speeches last week was one by a Republican Senator who said we should not make a fetish out of balancing the budget. There are certain things that he named, the reversal of the economy, or increased mili-

casting Con
dent, sir, in liminary to inflation, the Joint Congr
tee on the I Senator [Pa says that w agreement a ability of th economic p tially full adequate ra growth, and bility of the How do strike you, si tell us what pending com that this c may not do?
A.—Well, talking as objectives? I are talking a United States
Q.—I am r
New York Ti know it, but—
Q.—It is in
But whose these?
Q.—It is in Senator is sp of the countr plying that th
A.—I think exactly those Economic Rep
ter of fact, forget wheth
Economic R
budget or m that the ame act be amend one of our spe
keeping a stal
of course, we stantial full er
we want an e
omy, a healthy that means to anyone, I thin
this thing, a s
So those obje
fectly fine. I
rel with them
Now, what the second par
Q.—The hea
tion, sir, was was any confus
tion between t
mittee's— A.—
Q.—Inquiry a impending inqu
A.—None at ter of fact, wh
is to find out

foreign affairs of the United States, and the man who has been my closest associate, certainly my principal assistant, and on whom all the responsibility for details has been resting, my closest friend and confidant in this whole business, is Secretary Dulles, and I know of no man in my knowledge in the world that has equalled his wisdom and his knowledge in this whole complicated business.

Therefore, as long as Secretary Dulles believes that he is in shape to carry on, he is exactly the person I want.

There is, so far as his offer to resign, I must tell you this is no new thing. His dedication and his selflessness is so great that from the very first day he came into this office, he has constantly said, "If ever, Mr. President, I have been—become for you either a political or a national liability, remember, you have my resignation, always to be accepted at your pleasure."

Well, now, of course, this has been his attitude. There has never been a specific statement ever that he wants to resign, because to be saying that would mean that he was ready to lay down his duties and responsibilities that he believes to be so important.

And so, I just say to you again, as long as he is ready to carry on, he is the man I want.

[There was a chorus of "Mr. President."]

A.—And I have not discussed with anyone the possibility of his successor.

2 WILLIAM McGAFFIN of The Chicago Daily News—Mr. President, the people who are concerned about freedom of information say that your Administration has a bad record for bottling up information which they say the public is entitled to have. They would like to see you take the lead in correcting this situation.

A.—Well, everybody seems to have ideas of many things, in particular, when they have no responsibility.

A President has a very large organization to run. He has given his—and I have given—my beliefs about the need for keeping certain information confidential until it can be published, and as quickly as it can be published, in conformity with the security or other interests of the United States, then it should be given promptly because only with that kind of information can a public make up its mind as to what its own Government should be.

Now, as an example of the kind of information not as security but which cannot be given out as quickly as it reaches the Government is this: Take all of the reports on crops. If you constantly—if you publish this in advance or let it leak to get it before it could be evaluated and brought together, you could dence.

[redacted]

We don't want, and we realize it would be self-defeating, to build up anything that the Soviets could legitimately consider a menace on their border, and we don't want to do that.

[redacted]

I think that the best we can say is this: here we search for a just peace. That just peace is not going to come about until two sides can find some reasonable basis where there can be—these specific problems can be solved, and until that comes about, I think we have to do the best we can, stay strong, but always holding out a hand ready to be grasped if it will be grasped in good faith.

[redacted] at this moment, take the kind of detail of which you are speaking, and talk about it because you are doing it out of context, and you couldn't do that one really, without a longer paper in front of you.

5 W. H. LAWRENCE of The New York Times—Mr. President, may I ask a two-part question, sir?

Is there an allied agreement to use force, if necessary, to defend our rights in Berlin? And, two, if there is the risk of force, would you go to Congress for specific authority to act, as you did in the case of Formosa and the Middle East?

A.—Well, again, Mr. Lawrence, you ask questions on matters that each one of which has to be studied in its context, in other words, the situation at the time.

We have not said we are using force. We are saying we do not abandon our responsibilities. We will continue to carry them out, and it will be the other, the side of the responsibility—the other side, if there is going to be any force, they have to use that to block our carrying out our responsibilities.

6 PETER J. KUMPA of The Baltimore Sun—Sir, in recent weeks we have heard reports that the Communists are gaining power in the Government of Brigadier [Abdul Karim] Kassim in Iraq. I wonder if you could give us your evaluation of the situation, and tell us whether you are worried about it.

A.—Well, I don't say I am worried about it. I don't like the word. Certainly I am concerned about it. And, frankly, the reports are not so

A.—Well, I will comme[illegible] on them, yes.

First of all, Mr. McE[illegible]oy did, when he accepted the job here, indicate there might be certain factors that might not allow him to go to the end of his term.

But I know this: H[illegible] is dedicated to his job, and he has not brought up to me at this moment any expression of intention to quit at a particular time.

Now, next, about getting good men for this Government: I really believe it is a wrong premise that someone is starting, for this reason: I had a harder time when people thought they might be committed for six years of service than when they were for two. [Laughter]

And I remember this: I believe the average person that takes a position in Government has a feeling that because of others' good opinion or under presuasion that feeling that if he can do something for this country through a governmental job, that is a distinction that he rather likes; it is the kind of distinction that he can carry with him through his life, and maybe his children will think of it and, therefore, the very fact that he does not have to look forward to eight years of this kind — [laughter] — sometimes of tough work, is a factor on the other side.

Now, there may be someone who is very politically motivated, who says, "well, if I am going to have a job like that I want to be assured, I want to have it for a longer time," I think that is the minority, and it is not really the kind of person you are looking for.

So I would say the good man that believes, you can persuade him that he has got something to deliver here, some service that he can give us, all of us, well, I don't think that he hesitates because of the fact that he may not have a longer job.

3 DAVID P. SENTNER of the Hearst Newspapers—Mr. Khrushchev said in Moscow yesterday that if we tried to shoot our way into West Berlin after Russia turns over the occupied area to East Germany it would mean the beginning of war.

Mr. Khrushchev is also reported to have said that the recommendations of Senator [Mike] Mansfield are more reasonable, apparently referring especailly to the Senator's suggestion for direct negotiations between East Germany and West Germany.

Would you care to comment on those two [illegible]

A.—Well, I haven't read this speech except in a most abbreviated sort.

I would say this: He must be talking about shooting to stop us from doing our duty. After all, that is what is going to happen if it happens. We are not saying that we blessed with what the Scots, the Irish and a lot of others have called "second sight." But its exact origin is a mystery.

are going to shoot our way into Berlin.

We say we are just going to go and continue carrying out our responsibilities to those people and the ones that we agreed to undertake way back in 1945. So that if we are stopped it will be somebody else using force.

Now, with respect to your comments on Senator Mansfield's speech, I wouldn't want to say anything at the moment.

9 THOMAS N. SCHROTH of Congressional Quarterly—Mr. President, among the Lincoln Day speeches last week was one by a Republican Senator who said we should not make a fetish out of balancing the budget. There are certain things that he named, the reversal of the economy, or increased military threat, could make deficit spending more important than a balanced budget.

Would you say that conditions could change this year to make you change your mind on a balanced budget?

A.—Well I will say this: Very manifestly, last year we didn't have a balanced budget, and we could foresee that it wasn't, and we didn't make any fetish about it. I don't know why suddenly a balanced budget is getting to be a bad word. I think it is rather a good thing to be a

exactly those
Economic Rep
ter of fact,
forget wheth
Economic R
budget or m
that the ame act be amend one of our spe
keeping a stal
of course, we stantial full em
we want an e
omy, a healthy that means to anyone, I thin
this thing, a s

So those obje
fectly fine. I
rel with them

Now, what the second par

Q.—The hea
tion, sir, was
was any confus
tion between t
mittee's— A.-

Q.—Inquiry a
impending inqu

A.—None at ter of fact, wh
is to find out ment can be c can plan now a should be don these objectives

11 ALAN S.
The Water
Mr. President, t
some disappoint York State, sh
you are going t
the St. Lawre opening ceremo ence in the statement was t not be able t
United States
following day.

News Conference in

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18—President Eise
the following main points at his news conferen

Secretary Dulles—He reiterated his hop Dulles' recovery would be such that he could Secretary of State because "as long as Secre believes he is in shape to carry on, he is exactly I want." [Question 1.]

Berlin—The Western powers are determi abandon their responsibilities in Berlin, but resort to force it will be by the Communists in to "block our carrying out our responsibilities." [

Budget Balancing—He reiterated his inten ance the budget, asking if we cannot do it in rising income "when are we going to do it?" H question whether the Federal budget ought twelve-month basis as now, or whether it would plan budgets for a five-year term, roughly th "the ordinary business cycle." [Question 9.]

Unemployment Insurance—He expressed o further extending the length of unemployment coverage "when we are on a curve of rising [Question 16.]

Labor Legislation—He reiterated his view mail picketing was unjustified, that secondar should not be tolerated and said curbs on bot "should be right squarely in the bill" before [Question 19.]

Freedom of Information—Denying his Adm has a "bad record" on bottling up information ought to have, the President said he had given that information be published as quickly as it conformity with the security or other intere United States. [Question 2.]

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The doctors attending Secretary of State Dulles have decided to start radiation therapy on Friday. The cancer treatments will be administered externally once a day at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center. The State Department says that Mr. Dulles is continuing to gain strength after his hernia operation. He is walking more each day, and this morning he telephoned the State Department to discuss official business. The conversation lasted about ten minutes.

The first question asked at President Eisenhower's news conference today concerned two reports arising from Mr. Dulles' illness. A reporter wanted to know if it was true that Dulles had tried to resign as secretary of state...and that Mr. Eisenhower had refused. Also, had the President been "sounding out" certain Republican leaders as to a possible successor?

EISENHOWER: Well, I want to start off with a little reminiscing. I once told General Marshall that there was a certain corps commander in the United States that I wanted to get over into Europe right away; I needed him and the corps needed such a man with such qualifications. And I got a telegram saying, well, sure, he is a very fine man, but he is so crippled out in Walter Reed that the doctors won't assure you that he can move around. And I said, you send the man and I will send him to battle in a litter, because he can do better that way than most people I know. Now, I feel this way about Secretary Dulles. The doctors have assured me there is nothing in his disease that is going to touch his heart and his head, and that is what we want. I am constitutionally responsible for conducting the foreign affairs of the United States, and the man who has been my closest associate, certainly my principal assistant, and on whom all the responsibility for details has been resting, my closest friend and confidant in this whole business, is Secretary Dulles, and I know of no man in my knowledge in the world that has equalled his wisdom and his knowledge in this whole complicated business. Therefore, as long as Secretary Dulles believes that he is in shape to carry on, he is exactly the person I want. There is, so far as his offer to resign, I must tell you this is no new thing. His dedication and his selflessness is so great that from the very first day he came into this office, he has constantly said, "If ever, Mr. President, I have been-become for you either a political or a national liability, remember, you have my resignation, always to be accepted at your pleasure." Well, now, of course, this has been his attitude. There has never been a specific statement ever that he wants to resign, because to be saying that would mean that he was ready to lay down his duties and responsibilities that he believes to be so important. And so, I just say to you again, as long as he is ready to carry on, he is the man I want. And I have not discussed with anyone the possibility of his successor.

MURROW: Later in the news conference, a question arose as to the "substance" of the problem facing Secretary Dulles and the West in general. As part of the German reunification "scheme," was the West entertaining the idea of thinning out troops on both sides, or limiting armaments in Central Europe?

EISENHOWER: Well, I am not going here to start talking about the details of the possibilities that may come out of negotiations. The West has shown time and a again its readiness to negotiate on the whole problem of Germany and the region, anything reasonable in which both sides can have confidence. We don't want and we realize it would be self-defeating, to build up anything that the Soviets could legitimately consider a menace on their border, and we don't want to do that. I think that the best we can say is this: here we search for a just peace. That just peace is not going to come about until two sides can find some reasonable basis where there can be - these specific problems can be solved, and until that comes about, I think we have to do the best we can, stay strong, but always holding out a hand ready to be grasped if it will be grasped in good faith.

MURROW: William Lawrence of the New York Times asked if there was an Allied agreement to use force if necessary to defend our rights in Berlin.

MR. EISENHOWER SAID: Well, again, Mr. Lawrence, you ask questions on matters that each one of which has to be studied in its context, in other words, the situation at the time. We have not said we are using force. We are saying we do not abandon our responsibilities. We will continue to carry them out, and it will be the other, the side of the responsibility - the other side, if there is going to be any force, they have to use that to block our carrying out our responsibilities.

MURROW: The President was asked about the speech...made by Khrushchev...in which the Soviet leader advised "sabre-rattlers" in the West "to go take a cold shower and calm their nerves." Khrushchev made the speech yesterday, but it was not reported until this morning by the official Soviet news agency Tass. He said if the Western powers try to shoot their way through to West Berlin, it would mean "the beginning of war." International issues, he said, can no longer be settled by force of arms. In commenting on this speech,

MR. EISENHOWER SAID: Well, I haven't read this speech except in a most abbreviated sort. I would say this: He must be talking about shooting to stop us from doing our duty. After all, that is what is going to happen, if it happens. We are not saying that we are going to shoot our way into Berlin. We say we are just going to go and continue carrying out our responsibilities to those people and the ones that we agreed to undertake way back in 1945. So that if we are stopped it will be somebody else using force.

MURROW: The President again appealed for a balanced budget. He denied that he had made a "fetish" of it...saying that he had agreed to an unbalanced budget last year when the situation required. But, he said, if we can't live within our income in a period of growing prosperity, when can we? Mr. Eisenhower denied reports that the resignation of Secretary of Defense McElroy is imminent. McElroy had told him when he entered the cabinet in 1957 that "certain factors" might not enable him to go the full term. But McElroy, he said, has not brought up to him "any intention to quit at this time." After the news conference, President Eisenhower took off for Mexico by way of Austin, Texas...where he is stopping overnight. Tomorrow...at Alcapulco, Mexico...he will begin two days of informal talks with the new Mexican president, Lopez Mateos.

The White House today confirmed the report that James W. Riddleberger has been chosen by President Eisenhower to head the International Cooperation Administration....the agency in charge of all overseas aid. Riddleberger is now serving as ambassador to Greece. He succeeds James H. Smith, who recently resigned. The State Department had recommended its economic expert, Henry Labouisse, to take over as I.C.A. administrator. Btt the appointment reportedly was opposed by Meade Alcorn, chairman of the Republican National Committee... on grounds that Labouisse once registered as a Democrat. That was in 1941.

Mr. Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Dr. Willard F. Libby as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission. He said that accepting the resignation was "a difficult task." Dr. Libby had completed less than three years of his five-year term on the commission. He gave no reason for his resignation... except to say that "if I am to remain a scientist, I must return to teaching and research."

Army doctors at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, report that General George Marshall has suffered another stroke...and that his condition is serious. The general is 78.

Twenty-two Negro students registered for classes today at the Warren County High School in Front Royal, Virginia, in accordance with a Federal Court order...but no white students showed up. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People blames the failureof white students to appear on the county school board. School officials had said they expected many of the students to attend private classes set up after the school was closed last fall in order to avoid integration. Seven hundred and eighty of the white children are now receiving private instruction. County school officials say they do not know what they can do if the parents of white children want to continue under the present makeshift private system. The school superintendent said, "My guess is that the parents do not want to interrupt their education for a second time."

In Miami today, the Dade County school board voted to admit four Negroes to a previously all-white elementary school This is the first action of the kind taken in Florida, involving a public school.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower has decided...to make use of what he described in his news conference as "the wisdom and knowledge of Secretary of State Dulles in the complicated business of diplomacy." In this, the President would surely agree with Edmund Burke...who said, "Great men are the guide-posts and the landmarks of the state."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Feb. 19, 1959

This is the news:

The plan for an independent republic of Cyprus was approved in London today, ending 81 years of British rule. / Details of the agreement are to be published on Monday. / They reportedly call for election of a Greek Cypriot president, a Turkish Cypriot vice president and a single-chamber legislature, with the Greek community holding the majority of seats...since there are four times as many Greeks on the island as Turks. / Britain will continue to maintain sovereignty over its military bases. / The agreement was signed by the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, and Dr. Fazil KOO'CHOOK Kutchuk, representing the Turkish minority...and by the British, Greek and Turkish prime ministers. / Premier Menderes of Turkey signed the agreement in a hospital, where he is recovering from injuries received in an airplane accident. / Yesterday, Archbishop Makarios was reported objecting to some provisions of the agreement, but he said today he was satisfied. / What compromise---if any---was made to obtain his approval, was not immediately known. / Makarios was exiled from Cyprus by the British in 1956. / He now plans to return to the island "in a few days." / On Cyprus, news of the agreement has been greeted by cheers, and the ringing of church bells. In four years of revolt...led by the Greek Cypriot underground organization EOKA...more than 600 persons died. / And besides the campaign against the British, there was communal rioting between Greeks and Turks. / Tonight, Greek and Turkish Cypriots are congratulating each other on their common victory.

Twenty-six more Africans died today, in rioting in the streets of Brazzaville, capital of the new Congo Republic. / At least 76 persons have been killed since Monday. / The fighting began as a result of political differences, but now...according to Reuters...it has developed into a struggle between rival tribesmen, with immediate political issues forgotten. The Congo Republic was recently granted independence by France.

Democratic Senator Kennedy today called for more long-range planning in the field of foreign aid. He said...in a Senate speech...that allocation of economic assistance throughout the world on a sporadic "crisis basis" is both expensive and ineffective. Kennedy advocated building up the International Development Fund...so that more long-term loans can be made to underdeveloped countries. The amount of time and money required for carrying out development projects should be determined, he said, and the necessary funds provided.

Kennedy said the 925-million dollars in additional money requested by President Eisenhower for the loan program is not enough. Too often in recent years, he said, the scale of our effort has been based on what the Administration considered to be the "political and budgetary requirements." He warned that unless India gets the kind of help from the West that Communist China has been receiving from Russia, the biggest uncommitted country in the world may go under. Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky joined Kennedy in sponsoring a resolution, proposing a five-power study of India's economic needs. The resolution would put the Senate on record as favoring such a study...conducted by representatives of Canada, Britain, Japan, West Germany and the United States. Their mission would be to canvass the situation...and then chart a course assuring the fulfillment of India's current Five Year Plan.

Representative Daniel Reed of New York died today after a long illness. At the age of 83, Reed was the oldest Republican member of the House. He was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the Republican Congress elected in 1952...and senior Republican member of that committee in the present Congress. He fought for lower taxes and higher tariffs. Tonight, the former speaker of the House...Republican Representative Joe Martin...praised Reed for "standing by his convictions, even if they might temporarily be out of favor." All flags on government buildings were lowered to half mast.

President Eisenhower arrived in Mexico today for two days of informal talks with the new Mexican president, Adolfo Lopez Mateos. MAH-TAY'-OS The two presidents spent the afternoon together...cruising on the waters of Acapulco Bay. The temperature was 90 degrees.

A federal jury in Tacoma, Washington, today found Dave Beck guilty of evading more than 240-thousand dollars in federal income taxes. The jury had received the case against the former president of the teamsters union shortly before noon yesterday. Beck was convicted on all six counts...and faces a possible sentence of five years in prison on each count. He could also be fined 60-thousand dollars. No date has been set for sentencing, and Beck's lawyers say that he will appeal. The trial which just ended lasted more than two months.

The special House subcommittee which investigated the case of Bernard Goldfine was revived today by Chairman Harris of the House Commerce Committee. It was the subcommittee's inquiry into the Goldfine case which led to the resignation of presidential assistant Sherman Adams. Harris indicates that the group will again investigate the possible influencing of federal agencies. He introduced a bill today which would provide jail sentences...and fines...for anyone, including members of Congress, convicted of trying to "improperly influence" a federal regulatory agency.

Edward R. Murrow: February 19, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

When relations between the United States and the Philippines go sour, American prestige is at once hurt, which is something we don't like to have happen. / Prestige is a considerable part of our world power. / Some is based on our having been singularly generous to the Philippines. / They are prize exhibits in our show window. / They prove that we are not a colonial power. / So when we don't get on with the young Philippine Republic, some of the sprkle of our anti-Imperialism is lost.

That makes us susceptible to a special kind of pressure by the Philippine Government, something like the pressure a rich man's son can bring on his father, by publicly airing his grievances. / Some of the difficulties with the Philippine Republic are genuine, and need to be cleared away. / But they are hurting us more than the issues warrant. / We are being blamed mostly for the conditions which the Filipinos themselves have created, and do not take steps to correct. The Filipinos find it easier to stir up feeling against us, than to clean up corruption, or improve the conduct of policies and business. President Eisenhower said yesterday that differences with the Philippines are mainly psychological, and questions of pride. / He gave the impression that the negotiations now underway can settle them with good will. Ambassador Bohlen is still in Washington, but is returning to Manila tomorrow with new instructions. He is one of our ablest diplomats. Ambassador Romulo, also a first-rate diplomat, who has been under fire at home for being too pro-American, also is returning to his post.

As in the case of the rich man's son, money is the root of most of the Philippine grievance. The country suffers from an acute shortage of foreign exchange. The Republic makes an omnibus claim against the United States for nearly a billion dollars. Much of this is put in for bargaining purposes, such as back pay for guerillas who fought the Japanese after Pearl Harbor up to V-J Day, and compensation for Filipino prisoners in Japanese camps. At the end of the war the United States examined all these cases, satisfied some, rejected others and considers the books closed.

But there are other items such as one for $23,800,000, the loss suffered in the Philippines when the dollar was devalued to sixty-three cents in 1934. It is not an empty claim, and an accord on it may be forthcoming. Another claim arises from what Manila considers an overcharge on surplus army supplies bought after the war.

There are genuine differences over the military bases we have retained on the Islands. Rights to them were granted us for ninety-nine years, and we have the freedom to give them up at any time, whereas the Philippine Republic has no power of termination. Our bases in NATO countries run for four years and are cancellable by either side. Spain has a cancellation right on our bases after ten years.

We are not using several of our Philippine naval bases, because the nature of war has changed, but are hanging on to them. The Republic wants them back. It considers that three of our five major bases are much too large. The Subic Base covers 160,000 acres. Clark Field and Port Stotsemberg cover 175,000 acres. We have agreed to let the Filipinos develop the mineral resources on this property, but they also want much of the land back for farming.

The touchiest question deals with the jurisdiction over American soldiers accused of crimes against Filipinos at the bases. We have conceded to our NATO allies the right to deal with such crimes if committed by soldiers off duty. The Filipinos want the same right.

The favorite complaint in Manila is that we take the Philippines for granted and are much more generous to neutrals like India. President Garcia has been hinting at a new orientation in policy. But it is not easy to see where he could go. His country is strongly anti-Communist and cannot snuggle up to the Soviet Union or Red China. The strongest free world neighbor is Japan, but memories of Japanese tyranny and depredations are too vivid to make a close liaison with Tokyo attractive. After all, the United States is answerable for the Republic's defense. We are donors of its freedom, and we can and do supply many of its needs in trade and loans.

That being so, it may seem odd that there should be irritation. Some of it, no doubt, is the fault of our indifference. We do take the Philippines for granted. But most of it is due to the troubles the Filipinos have had governing themselves. They have the freedom to do it badly, which at present they do. And being human, they like to blame us before they blame themselves.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

As in most disagreements, there is, in the negotiations now going on between the United States and the Philippines, much to be said for both sides. For both countries, early agreement is desirable. We are natural allies...with ties going far back. As Hans J. Morgenthau once said, "It is statesmanship...not medicineman-ship...which is required."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The plan for an independent republic of Cyprus was approved in London today, ending 81 years of British rule. Details of the agreement are to be published on Monday. They reportedly call for election of a Greek Cypriot president, a Turkish Cypriot vice president and a single-chamber legislature, with the Greek community holding the majority of seats...since there are four times as many Greeks on the island as Turks. Britain will continue to maintain sovereignty over its military bases. The agreement was signed by the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, and Dr. Fazil Kutchuk, representing the Turkish minority....and by the British, Greek and Turkish prime ministers. Premier Menderes of Turkey signed the agreement in a hospital, where he is recovering from injuries received in an airplane accident. Yesterday, Archbishop Makarios was reported objecting to some provisions of the agreement, but he said today he was satisfied. What compromise---if any---was made to obtain his approval was not immediately known. Makarios was exiled from Cyprus by the British in 1956. He now plans to return to the island "in a few days." On Cyprus news of the agreement has been greeted by cheers and the ringing of church bells. In four years of revolt...led by the greek Cypriot underground organization EOKA... more than 600 persons died. And besides the campaign against the British, there was communal rioting between Greeks and Turks. Tonight, Greek and Turkish Cypriots are congratulating each other on their common victory.

Twenty-six more Africans died today in rioting in the streets of Brazzaville, capital of the new Congo Republic. At least 76 persons have been killed since Monday. The fighting began as a result of political differences, but now...according to Reuters...it has developed into a struggle between rival tribesmen with immediate political issues forgotten. The Congo Republic was recently granted independence by France.

Democratic Senator Kennedy today called for more long-range planning in the field of foreign aid. He said...in a Senate speech...that allocation of economic assistance throughout the world on a sporadic "crisis basis" is both expensive and ineffective. Kennedy advocated building up the International Development Fund...so that more long-term loans can be made to underdeveloped countries. The amount of time and money required for carrying out development projects should be determined, he said, and the necessary funds provided. Kennedy said the 925 million dollars in additional money requested by President Eisenhower for the loan program is not enough. Too often in recent years, he said, the scale of our effort has been based on what the Administration considered to be the "political and budgetary requirements." He warned that unless India gets the kind of help from the West that Communist China has been receiving from Russia, the biggest uncommitted country in the world may go under. Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky joined Kennedy in sponsoring a resolution, proposing a five-power study of India's economic needs. The resolution would put the Senate on record as favoring such a study...conducted by representatives of Canada, Britain, Japan, West Germany and the United States. Their mission would be to canvass the situation...and then chart a course assuring the fulfillment of India's current Five Year Plan.

Representative Daniel Reed of New York died today after a long illness. At the age of 83, Reed was the oldest Republican member of the House.

President Eisenhower arrived in Mexico today for two days of informal talks with the new Mexican president, Adolfo Lopez Mateos. The two presidents spent the afternoon together...cruising on the waters of Acapulco Bay. The temperature was 90 degrees.

A federal jury in Tacoma, Washington, today found Dave Beck guilty of evading more than 240 thousand dollars in federal income taxes. The jury had received the case against the former president of the teamsters union shortly before noon yesterday. Beck was convicted on all six counts...and faces a possible sentence of five years in prison on each count. He could also be fined 60-thousand dollars. No date has been set for sentencing, and Beck's lawyers say that he will appeal. The trial which just ended lasted more than two months.

The special House subcommittee which investigated the case of Bernard Goldfine was revived today by Chairman Harris of the House Commerce Committee. It was the subcommittee's inquiry into the Goldfine case which led to the resignation of presidential assistant Sherman Adams. Harris indicates that the group will again investigate the possible influencing of federal agencies. He introduced a bill today which would provide jail sentences...and fines...for anyone, including members of Congress convicted of trying to "improperly influence" a federal regulatory agency.

When relations between the United States and the Philippines go sour, American prestige is at once hurt, which is something we don't like to have happen. Prestige is a considerable part of our world power. Some is based on our having been singularly generous to the Philippines. They are prize exhibits in our show window. They prove that we are not a colonial power. So when we don't get on with the young Philippine Republic, some of the sparkle of our anti-Imperialism is lost.

That makes us susceptible to a special kind of pressure by the Philippine Government, something like the pressure a rich man's son can bring on his father by publicly airing his grievances. Some of the difficulties with the Philippine Republic are genuine, and need to be cleared away. But they are hurting us more than the issues warrant. We are being blamed mostly for the conditions which the Filipinos themselves have created and do not take steps to correct. The Filipinos find it easier to stir up feeling against us, than to clean up corruption or improve the conduct of politics and business. President Eisenhower said yesterday that differences with the Philippines are mainly psychological and questions of pride. He gave the impression that the negotiations now underway can settle them with good will. Ambassador Bohlen is still in Washington, but is returning to Manila tomorrow with new instructions. He is one of our ablest diplomats. Ambassador Romulo, also a first-rate diplomat, who has been under fire at home for being too pro-American also is returning to his post.

As in the case of the rich man's son, money is the root of most of the Philippine grievance. The country suffers from an acute shortage of foreign exchange. The Republic makes an omnibus claim against the United States for nearly a billion dollars. Much of this is put in for bargaining purposes, such as back pay for guerillas who fought the Japanese after Pearl Harbor up to V-J Day, and compensation for Filipino prisoners in Japanese camps. At the end of the war, the United States examined all these cases, satisfied some, rejected others and considers the books closed.

But there are other items such as one for $23,800,000, the loss suffered in the Philippines when the dollar was devalued to sixty-three cents in 1934. It is not an empty claim, and an accord on it may be forthcoming. Another claim arises from what Manila considers an overcharge on surplus army supplies bought after the war.

There are genuine differences over the military bases we have retained on the Islands. Rights to them were granted us for ninety-nine years, and we have the freedom to give them up at any time, whereas the Philippine Republic has no power of termination. Our bases in NATO countries run for four years and are cancellable by either side. Spain has a cancellation right on our bases after ten years.

We are not using several of our Philippine naval bases, because the nature of war has changed, but are hanging on to them. The Republic wants them back. It considers that three of our five major bases are much too large. The Subic Base covers 160,000 acres. Clark Field and Port Stotsemberg cover 175,000 acres. We have agreed to let the Filipinos develop the mineral resources on this property, but they also want much of the land back for farming.

The touchiest question deals with the jurisdiction over American soldiers accused of crimes against Filipinos at the bases. We have conceded to our NATO allies the right to deal with such crimes if committed by soldiers off duty. The Filipinos want the same right.

The favorite complaint in Manila is that we take the Philippines for granted and are much more generous to neutrals like India. President Garcia has been hinting at a new orientation in policy. But it is not easy to see where he could go. His country is strongly anti-Communist and cannot snuggle up to the Soviet Union or Red China. The strongest free world neighbor is Japan, but memories of Japanese tyranny and depredations are too vivid to make a close liaison with Tokyo attractive. After all, the United States is answerable for the Republic's defense. We are donors of its freedom, and we can and do supply many of its needs in trade and loans.

That being so, it may seem odd that there should be irritation. Some of it, no doubt, is the fault of our indifference. We do take the Philippines for granted. But most of it is due to the troubles the Filipinos have had governing themselves. They have the freedom to do it badly, which at present they do. And being human, they like to blame us before they blame themselves.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: As in most disagreements, there is in the negotiations now going on between the United States and the Philippines much to be said for both sides. For both countries, early agreement is desirable. We are natural allies...with ties going far back. As Hans J. Morgenthau once said, "It is statesmanship...not medicinemanship...which is required."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 20, 1959

This is the news:

Canada is revising its air defense program in cooperation with the United States. Prime Minister Diefenbaker told the House of Commons today that his government is scrapping a new jet interceptor...called the "Arrow"... which would not be operational until the middle of 1962. Canada already has spent 400-million dollars in the development of this aircraft, but Diefenbaker said that...by then...it would be obsolete in the missile age. The Arrow would operate against other aircraft. In 1962, he said, the real threat will be from intercontinental ballistic missiles.

Diefenbaker announced that Canada and the United States will NOW set up two new anti-aircraft missile bases which they hope to have operational by 1961. These two bases will be in Northern Ontario and Quebec, and they will be part of the North American Air Defense Command. The missile used will be the Bomarc, a supersonic guided weapon capable of firing a nuclear warhead three hundred miles. Diefenbaker said that negotiations are under way in Washington to obtain these nuclear warheads. The warheads would be stored in Canada, and the bases would be manned by Canadians. But the nuclear warheads...according to United States law... would remain in American custody. It was understood, the prime minister said, that the United States would pay two-thirds of the cost of the bases by providing the expensive technical equipment. As its one-third contribution, Canada would pay for the actual building of the bases.

→

President Eisenhower today continued his informal talks with President Lopez Mateos (MAH-TAY'-OS) of Mexico. Mr. Eisenhower is expected to fly back from Mexico around midnight tonight...and a communique on the talks will be issued about the time that he leaves. It still is not definite whether he will fly directly back to Washington or to Augusta, Georgia, for a weekend of golf. It depends a good deal on the weather.

President Eisenhower today sent cables of congratulation to the prime ministers of Britain, Greece and Turkey...on their agreement to make Cyprus an independent republic. / On Cyprus itself, young Turkish Cypriots demonstrated against the agreement today...calling again for partition of the island between Turkey and Greece.

-7

Secretary of State Dulles today began receiving radiation treatment for abdominal cancer. / The initial exposure to radiation lasted about a minute, and a medical bulletin says that the treatment was "well tolerated", which is to say, that Mr. Dulles was not made ill by the X-ray bombardment as is sometimes the case. Radiation treatments will continue daily---with the exception of Sunday---for possibly three to four weeks.

A government scientist testified today that Russia is "likely" to beat this country in placing a man in outer space. It is necessary, he said, to prepare the American people for this fact. / The testimony was given before a Senate committee by Dr. Hugh Dryden, deputy director of the National Space Administration. / Dr. Dryden is confident the United States will be able to put a manned satellite in orbit, within a few years, but Russia, he said, already has rockets powerful enough to do the job.

—7

He told the committee, "We are not willing to put a man into space until we know we can get him back." Many preliminary trials with animals will first be made.

The board of governors of the American Bar Association today officially accepted the resignation...from the association...of Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court. The board of governors gave no cause for the resignation. It said, however, that the action "was in no way related to dues."

The government reports that...during January...the cost of living went up one-tenth of one percent. The increase in attributed primarily to higher prices for beef and poultry. In nine months, the consumer price index has not varied more than three-tenths of one percent.

Here in New York today, a federal judge ordered the citizenship of gambler Frank Costello revoked. Costello is a native of Itaky. In a 35-page decision, Judge Archie Dawson said that in obtaining citizenship in 1925, Costello "willfully misrepresented and concealed material facts." One of the "facts" was that Costello...at the time...was engaged in bootlegging.

White students today continued to boycott the Warren County high school in Front Royal, Virginia...which was desegregated on Wednesday by Federal Court order. Two of the 23 Negro students admitted to the previously all-white school have dropped out. And most of the white students, who would normally go to the school, are attending private classes elsewhere on a segregated basis.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People charged today that six of its members in Front Royal have lost their jobs because of the school issue. The N.A.A.C.P. said that Local 371 of the Textile Workers Union has refused to take up the grievances of the six Negroes. It also complained that the meeting hall of the union local was being used for conducting segregated classes...and that officers of the local were collecting funds for carrying on private instruction. Roy Wilkins, executive director of the N.A.A.C.P., made this complaint in a telegram to William Pollock, international president of the Textile Workers Union. The N.A.A.C.P. says that it has received a message from Pollock...expressing his "deep concern" over the developments in Front Royal. Pollock is quoted as saying, however, that no union dues are being used to maintain segregation....that whatever contribution textile workers may be making "is the result of individual action, outside our control." Union pressure, he said, had forced the local to rescind an assessment for support of the private schools.

When Warren County High School reopened on Wednesday, the story was covered by CBS News Correspondent Neil Strawser. For his follow-up on the story, we switch now to Washington.

(Tape runs
Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y.")

That was my colleague, Neil Strawser, reporting some of the feeling behind the Front Royal story...and what may happen.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause* First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Archibald MacLeish said, in one of his poems..~~Land of the Free~~..."We wonder if the liberty's done; the dreaming is finished. We can't say; we aren't sure. ~~man~~ Or if there is something different men can dream, or if there is something different men can mean by liberty. We wonder--- we don't know---we are asking."

Goodnight and good luck!

~~Word for Today~~

This reporter intends to depart this microphone for a couple of weeks in search of sunshine. And while I am gone, this program will be in the hands of my old wartime colleague and friend, Larry Lesueur.

KOUI-PEP

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, February 20, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... FOR his followup on the story, we switch now to Washington.

STRAWBER: A big square brick building, Warren County's only public high school stands as a festering sore to both sides in this latest desegragation controversy Ed. The 21 negro students who attended classes there today could scarcely fill even one of the 33 rooms, they had gained a point - the right to attend the nearest public high school, the right to go home at night to their parents instead of being transported 50 miles or more by bus to attend negro high schools in other counties, spending the week in dormatories far from home. But, they still were segregated by the yawning immensity of echoing hallways where 1100 white students once moved. As for the white people of this blue ridge mountain community, some at least compared the makeshift classrooms of their private school with the facilities of a public high school and there irritation may grow For the moment, the dominant feeling appears to be what one official described as quiet and dignified satisfaction at what occured. That is, no white student has registered to attend the public high school Some of the satisfaction is expressed in bitter glee at what some town's people consider the plight of Oliver Hill, the NAACP attorney who won the court order admitting the negros. They imagined him knashing his teeth at an empty victory. Hill has become a personal symbol of this community's resentment at being forced to do something against his will. There is a race factor as well, though long dormant because of the relatively small number of negros. All of the high school aged negros in the county number about 115. But, now, reawakened, this feeling has been helped along by extortions from elsewhere in the South and by editorals in the area newspaper. The newspaper,

THE NORTHERN VIRGINIAN DAILY, tells the people that, "The south's cause against mongrelization of the races rests in the hands of the Warren County people." There is also the genuine feeling on the part of many that it was simply better to continue the private school to avoid disrupting the school year for the students. The Warren County Educational Foundation started the private school last fall when the public school was closed by a now outmoded state law to prevent integration.

Whatever the reason, the result has been a 100% white boycott of the newly reopened Warren County High School, but it appears it will last perhaps only through the end of the school year. Beyond taht, financial support and facilities may not be available. But, by next year, the County will have rushed to completion a long planned high school intended for the County's negro students and some officials obviously hope that a pupil assignemnt plan can then be devised to continue with segregation or at least put the matter back into the courts. Most of the white citizens, however, do not appear to have looked on to next year as yet. The satisfaction that the battle won seems to rule for the moment. Whether it becomes a long war, whether Front Royal becomes the Little Rock of Virginia seems to depend on how much that festering sore - the almost empty public high school hurts. There is no suggestion of violence, there is some talk of economic reprisal. One filling station has put up a sign warning negros to keep out. The NAACP today charges discrimination at the local textile plant. Reprisal does not yet seem to be the rule, there is talk there may be more if the NAACP does not let the situation rest. For his part, Oliver Hill teals CBS News he is not satisfied with the continuance in effect of segregated schooling, but he says no further legal moves are planned at the moment. The children are in school says Hill, we'll give the school board an opportunity to provide them an education. That is the fact of the matter in Front Royal, the children are in school. The negros in a too big public school, the whites in crowded private classes, a situation satisfactory to neither side, but unless one decides that his victory has been hollowed than it first seemed it may go on this way at least until June.

Back now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Neil Strawser ....

PT/ n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Canada is revising its air defense program in cooperation with the United States. Prime Minister Diefenbaker told the House of Commons today that his government is scrapping a new jet interceptor...called the "Arrow"...which would not be operational until the middle of 1962. Canada already has spent 400-million dollars in the development of this aircraft, but Diefenbaker said that...by then...it would be obsolete in the missile age. The Arrow would operate against other aircraft. In 1962, he said, the realthreat will be from intercontinental ballistic missiles. Diefenbaker announced that Canada and the United States will now set up two new anti-aircraft missile bases which they hope to have operational by 1961. These two bases will be in Northern Ontario and Quebec, and they will be part of the North American Air Defense Command. The missile used will be the Bomarc, a supersonic guided weapon capable of firing a nuclear warhead three hundred miles. Diefenbaker said that negotiations are underway in Washington to obtain these nuclear warheads. The warheads would be stored in Canada, and the bases would be manned by Canadians. But the nuclear warheads...according to United States law...would remain in American custody. It was understood, the prime minister said, that the United States would pay two-thirds of the cost of the bases by providing the expensive technical equipment. As its one-third contribution, Canada would pay for the actual building of the bases.

President Eisenhower today continued his informal talks with President Lopez Mateos of Mexico. Mr. Eisenhower is expected to fly back from Mexico around midnight tonight...and a communique on the talks will be issued about the time that he leaves. It still is not definite whether he will fly directly back to Washington or to Augusta, Georgia, for a weekend of golf. It depends a good deal on the weather.

President Eisenhower today sent cables of congratulation to the prime ministers of Britain, Greece and Turkey...on their agreement to make Cyprus an independent republic. On Cyprus itself, young Turkish Cypriots demonstrated against the agreement today...calling again for partition of the island between Turkey and Greece.

Secretary of State Dulles today began receiving radiation treatment for abdominal cancer. The initial exposure to radiation lasted about a minute, and a medical bulletin says that the treatment was "well tolerated," which is to say, that Mr. Dulles was not made ill by the X-ray bombardment as is sometimes the case. Radiation treatments will continue daily---with the exception of Sunday---for possbbly three to four weeks.

A government scientist testified today that Russia is "likely" to beat this country in placing a man in outer space. It is necessary, he said, to prepare the American people for this fact. The testimony was given before a Senate committee by Dr. Hugh Dryden, deputy director of the National Space Administration. Dr. Dryden is confident the United States will be able to put a manned satellite in orbit within a few years, but Russia, he said, already has rockets powerful enough to do the job. He told the committee, "We are not willing to put a man into space until we know we can get him back." Many preliminary trials with animals will first be made.

The board of governors of the American Bar Association today officially accepted the resignation...from the Association...of Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court. The board of governors gave no cause for the resignation. It said however, that the action "was in no way related to dues."

The government reports that...during January...the cost of living went up one-tenth of one percent. The increase is attibuted primarily to higher prices for beef and poultry. In nine months, the consumer price index has not varied more than three-tenths of one percent.

Here in New York today, a federal judge ordered the citizenship of gambler Frank Costello revoked. Costello is a native of Italy. In a 35-page decision, Judge Archie Dawson said that in obtaining citizenship in 1925, Costello "willfully misrepresented and concealed material facts." One of the "facts" was that Costello...at the time...was engaged in bootlegging.

White students today continued to boycott the Warren County high school in Front Royal, Virginia...which was desegregated in Wednesday by Federal Court order. Two of the 23 Negro students admitted to the previously all-white school have dropped out. And most of the white students, who would normally go to the school, are attending private classes elsewhere on a segregated basis.

The National Association of the Advancement of Colored People charged today that six of its members in Front Royal have lost their jobs because of the school issue. The N.A.A.C.P. said the Local 371 of the Textile Workers Union has refused to take up the grievances of the six Negroes. It also complained that the meeting hall of the union local was being used for conducting segregated classes...and that officers of the local were collecting funds for carrying on private instruction. Roy Wilkins, executive director of the M.A.A.C.P. made this complaint in a telegram to William Pollock, international president of the Textile Workers Union. The N.A.A.C.P. says that it has received a message from Pollock...expressing his "deep concern" over the developments in Front Royal. Pollock is quoted as saying, however, that no union dues are being used to maintain segregation...that whatever contribution textile workers may be making "is the result of individual action, outside our control." Union pressure, he said, had forced the local to rescind an assessment for support of the private schools.

When Warren County High School reopened on Wednesday, the story was covered by CBS News Correspondent Neil Strawser. For his follow-up on the story, we switch now to Washington.

STRAWSER: A big square brick building, Warren County's only public high school stands as a festering sore to both sides in this latest desegration controversy Ed. The 21 negro students who attended classes there today could scarcely fill even one of the 33 classrooms, they had gained a point - the right to attend the nearest public high school, the right to go home at night to their parents instead of being transported 50 miles or more by bus to attend negro high schools in other counties, spending the week in dormatories far from home. But, they still were segregated by the yawning immensity of echoing hallways where 1,100 white students once moved. As for the white people of this blue ridge mountain community, some at least compared the makeshift classrooms of their private school with the facilities of a public high school and there irritation may grow. For the moment, the dominant feeling appears to be what one official described as quiet and dignified satisfaction at what occurred. That is, no white student has registered to attend the public high school. Some of the satisfaction is expressed in bitter glee at what some town's people consider the plight of Oliver Hill, the NAACP attorney who won the court order admitting the negroes. They imagined him gnashing his teeth at an empty victory. Hill has become a personal symbol of this community's resentment at being forced to do something against its will. There is a race factor as well, though long dormant because of the relatively small number of negroes. All of the high school aged negroes in the county number about 115. But, now, reawakened, this feeling has been helped along by extortions from elsewhere in the South and by editorials in the area newspaper. The newspaper, THE NORTHERN VIRGINIAN DAILY, tells the people that, "The South's cause against mongrelization of the races rests in the hands of the Warren County people." There is also the genuine feeling on the part of many that it was simply better to continue the private school to avoid disrupting the school year for the students. The Warren County Educational Foundation started the private school last fall when the public school was closed by a now outmoded state law to prevent integration.

Whatever the reason, the result has been a 100% white boycott of the newly reopened Warren County High School, but it appears it will last perhaps only through the end of the school year. Beyond that, financial support and facilities may not be available. But by next year, the County will have rushed to completion a long-planned high school intended for the County's negro students and some officials obviously hope that a pupil assignment plan can then be devised to continue with segregation or at least put the matter back into the courts. Most of the white citizens, however, do not appear to have looked on to next year as yet. The satisfaction that the battle won seems to rule for the moment. Whether it becomes a long war, whether Front Royal becomes the Little Rock of Virginia seems to depend on how much that festering sore, the almost empty public high school hurts. There is no suggestion of violence, there is some talk of economic reprisal. One filling station has put up a sign warning negroes to keep out. The NAACP today charges discrimination at the local textile plant. Reprisal does not yet seem to be the rule, there is talk there may be more if the NAACP does not let the situation rest. For his part, Oliver Hill tells CBS news he is not satisfied with the continuance in effect of segregated schooling, but he says no further legal moves are planned at the moment. The children are in school says Hill, we'll give the school an opportunity to provide them an education. That is the fact of the matter in Front Royal the children are in school. The negroes in a too big public school, the whites in crowded private classes, a situation satisfactory to neither side, but unless one decides that his victory has been hollowed than it first seemed, it may go on this way at least until June.

Now backto Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Neil Strawser, reporting some of the feeling behind the Front Royal story...and what may happen.

This reporter intends to depart this microphone for a couple of weeks in search of sunshine. And while I am gone, this program will be in the hands of my old wartime colleague and friend, Larry LeSueur.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Archibald MacLeish said in one of his poems, "We wonder if the liberty's done; the dreaming is finished. We can't say; we aren't sure. Or if there is something different men can dream, or if there is something different men can mean by liberty. We wonder---we don't know---we are asking."

Goodnight and good luck!

LeSueur for Murrow Mon., Feb. 23, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

An historic, 15-page "white paper"...revealing the terms for Cypriot independence...was published simultaneously in Britain, Turkey and Greece. The document also was distributed on Cyprus itself...where it was snatched-up by crowds eager to learn "precisely" under what conditions they had been granted freedom after 81 years of British rule. The demand for copies of the "white paper"...on the part of Greek and Turkish Cypriots...is described as "fantastic." Government offices making the distribution were virtually mobbed. The plan for an independent republic of Cyprus was approved in London last Thursday...and signed by the British, Greek and Turkish prime ministers. The agreement also was initialed by the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, and Dr. Fazil Kutchuk, representing the Turkish minority. And the return of both these important figures to Cyprus is expected momentarily. In the case of Archbishop Makarios, it will mark the end of nearly three years of exile.

—>

KOO'-CHOOK

According to today's "white paper", the Republic of Cyprus is to come into existence within twelve months...with its independence guaranteed by Britain, Turkey and Greece. Great Britain will retain control of two military bases on the island. But the republic will have its own army of about 2-thousand men...60 percent will be Greek Cypriots and the remaining 40 percent Turks. The president...as reported earlier... will be a Greek Cypriot, and the vice president a Turkish Cypriot. Both will serve for five years, and both will have power to veto any action taken by parliament. Members of the one-chamber parliament also will serve five-year terms. Seventy percent of the deputies will be elected by the Greek community on the island, and thirty percent by the Turkish community...an arrangement stemming from the fact that there are about four times as many Greeks as Turks. There is also to be a Supreme Court...made up of one Greek Cypriot and one Turkish Cypriot...and a neutral. And in any dispute between national groups on the island, this court will act as referee. IT is to be the final arbiter.

The first step toward putting this plan in operation will be the creation of a committee...or commission...to draft a constitution. The commission will comprise not only representatives of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities but representatives of the Greek and Turkish governments as well.

Publication of (these DETAILS) has brought neither cheers of jubilation nor demonstrations of protest in Cyprus tonight. A Reuters correspondent describes the impact on the island as "sober". In London, Turkish Premier Menderes was able to leave hospital today for the first time since the air crash last week in which he was injured and in which fifteen other persons died. Menderes took a brief walk through Hyde Park...and then returned to the hospital. He is expected to be fully recovered in two or three days.

British Prime Minister Macmillan had a two-and-a half hour talk with Premier Khrushchev today in the Kremlin. The Soviet foreign ministry says simply that "questions of mutual interest" were considered. (And certainly one of those questions would be Berlin). An informed British source adds that...in his opinion...today's meeting "went off very well indeed." And there is a report that Khrushchev and Macmillan agreed to start work on a new cultural agreement. But there is nothing official on that. It's still just a report.

—)

This working conference was in the morning. In the afternoon, Prime Minister Macmillan took time out to visit Moscow University...and gave several informal talks. Crowds of students lined the corridors, and one Russian girl shouted proudly that in the university library there were 5-million books. Macmillian said...in one of his speeches...that he wished more Russian students would visit England...and that more young British people could visit Russia. The dispatches tell us he was warmly received.

Tonight, the prime minister had Khrushchev as his dinner guest at the British Embassy. Macmillan made a little speech praising Russia's role in winning World War Two. He said, "When I ponder the present state of the world, I ask myself whether we have not today a common interest of at least "equal degree." This common interest, Macmillan said, is peace. Khrushchev...in reply...praised the prime minister's "frankness and understanding." He said, "I think the conversations between us will bring results."

Macmillan was to have gone on a hunting trip tomorrow. Now it is reported that...instead of going hunting...he and Khrushchev will have an additional private talk.

President Eisenhower visited Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed Hospital today for the fourth time in eight days. TODAY'S [redacted] meeting lasted about half an hour, and the State Department says that they discussed international affairs in general. Later in the day, Mr. Dulles conferred by telephone with Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter.

Secretary Dulles received his third radiation treatment this morning, and a medical bulletin says there is still no sign of "adverse reaction" [redacted] at this stage. The doctors describe this as "very gratifying". Accordingly, there has been a gradual increase in the duration of the treatments. [redacted] The first treatment on Friday lasted one minute. The length of the treatment today is not revealed.

35

In Rio de Janeiro, an official of the Brazilian Foreign Office says that the appointment of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as United States ambassador to Brazil has been accepted by his government. There is no confirmation in Washington, but such acceptance is customary before the appointment of a new ambassador is announced.

The executive council of the AFL-CIO asked Congress today to lower the 40-hour work week to 35 hours. This would mean amending the Fair Labor Standards Act. The council points out that the 40-hour week was established 21 years ago. Since then, it says, America has made "tremendous technological progress" which justifies a change.

Among the effects of Secretary of State Dulles's illness is the [redacted] fact that Prime Minister [redacted] MacMillan has now moved front-center on the international stage... His talks with Premier Kruschev in Moscow this [redacted] week, may make MacMillan dominant in [redacted] future western councils on the [redacted] Berlin crisis and the German question..

There is, of course, "doubt" that Mr. Dulles will ever resume his predominant role in Western Diplomacy, And there are question marks [redacted] about the other two West [redacted] European leaders... ~~of the West~~ [redacted]... Chacellor Adenauer, because of his age, and De Gaulle, because of the French economic instability...

It's therefore of capital importance that MacMillan should be undertaking the initial explorations of [redacted] Russian intentions about Berlin and Germany.. Its no secret that the British have never been as strongly against dealing with the East German regime, as the west [redacted] german's and French leaders... The British have never been entirely convinced that the East Germans, particularly the people, are as thourough-going communists as [redacted] Moscow's East German puppet-government would have [redacted] the rest of the world believe..

Now British tradition on the whole, is not [redacted] one of merely planning from crisis to crisis..[redacted] As befits their long history they're notable for thinking in terms of [redacted] a long-range future... And no British diplomat that this reporter has talked to, is convinced that the East German communist government has popular support...No thinking diplomat, of course, discounts the ability of a modern police state to keep its people in line.. [redacted] Methodical and systematic secret police operations can go a long way to curb popular unrest...But it is most successful when conditions are [redacted] fairly tranquil...The East German riots of 1953 proved that the East German communist machine cannot afford to relax, even when things seems to be going [redacted] fairly well...But even today, [redacted] East germany is the one state [redacted] in Europe which is losing population. [redacted] Even with an encouraged birth-rate... its subjects are deserting at a rate of 4 to 5 thousand a week...

[redacted] Such a regime may be able to control its People ~~population~~ by stringent police measures...

But if it tries to whip up a crisis atmosphere, it's running the risk of panic and possibly serious political unrest... Such a state cannot afford to provoke its enemies too far...

The Russian position thus far has been somewhat contradictory... they threaten to meet force-with-force, if their East German allies are [redacted] interfered with [redacted] ce[redacted]s... Then in another voice, the russians say they are going to withdraw from East Germany... And then again they hint that THEY will sign a separate peace treaty, making east germany a sovereign state..

It's plain that the Russians are not sure just how far they can proceed with their threats... Thus far the threats have come in alternate speeches like the shelling of Kimmoy on alternate days...

XXX Premier Kruschchev's [redacted] ULTIMATE objective is [redacted] PLAIN...

He wishes to move another great step beyond Stalin's military [redacted] victories.. to obtain western recognition of the communist conquests in Europe, not just as [redacted] an irreversible military fact, but as an irreversible political fact... That is what he really means by "ending the cold war."

His immediate objective [redacted] is to secure recognition of the East German regime... It may be that Kruschev now believes that he is strong enough to force that recognition on the West... And certainly the Russians have followed a very strong line EVER [redacted] since they launched their first sputnick... I[redacted]f...It was obviously THAT thought to which Prime Minister MacMillan addressed himself at the Kremlin dinner last night, HE [redacted] warned that there was "greater danger of war from a miscalculation [redacted] than from calculated aggression."...A warning to Kruschchev not to press a bluff too far....It's clear to MacMillan as well as to Kruschev, that West Berlin is not readily defensible By us. But it's just as obvious that an attack on [redacted] the small western garrison there, means the risk of a world war...

It would seem [redacted] that Mr. MacMillan concieves his mission as an effort to get the Russians into conference on the Berlin situation at the Foreign Ministers level....It also appears that the Russians don't want this. And that their [redacted] first line of retreat would be to demand a summit conference...But no matter at what level the talks take place, it's a good BET [redacted] that if the Russians are negotiating with the West, [redacted] when the Berlin deadline expires on MAY 27th, Russian recognition of world opinion will curb ANY sudden move in West Berlin..)) (NOT WHILE They're talking!)

.. ..

5

This is Larry LeSueur..I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...(pause) 2 beats but first a word from George Bryan on the Weather.

the first celebration of George Washington's Birthday was held in Boston one hundred and 80 years ago, on February 11th...the actual day of his birth.. the British Parliament would have it otherwise.. They imposed the gregorian calendar on all their possessions, including the American colonies, in 1752... The American colonists ignored Parliament.. And it wasn't untill well into the 19th century, That They added 11 days to the old style calaendar, and celebrated Washington's birthday on the 22nd..

This is Larry LeSueur--goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

An historic, 15 page "white paper"...revealing the terms for Cypriot independence...was published simultaneously in Britain, Turkey and Greece. The document also was distributed on Cyprus itself...where it was snatched up by crowds eager to learn precisely under what conditions they had been granted freedom after 8½ years of British rule. The demand for copies of the "white paper"...on the part of Greek and Turkish Cypriots...is described as fantastic. Government offices making the distribution were virtually mobbed. The plan for an independent republic of Cyprus was approved in London last Thursday...and signed by the British, Greek and Turkish prime ministers. The agreement also was initialed by the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, and Dr. Fazil Kutchuk, representing the Turkish minority. And the return of both these important figures to Cyprus is expected momentarily. In the case of Archbishop Makarios, it will mark the end of nearly three years of exile.

According to today's "white paper," the Republic of Cyprus is to come into existence within twelve months...with its independence guaranteed by Britain Turkey and Greece. Great Britain will retain control of two military bases on the island. But the republic will have its own army of about 2-thousand men... 60 percent will be Greek Cypriots and the remaining 40 percent Turks. The president...as reported earlier...will be a Greek Cypriot and the vice president a Turkish Cyrpiot. Both will serve for five years, and both will have power to veto any action taken by parliament. Members of the one-chamber parliament also will serve five-year terms. Seventy percent of the deputies will be elected by the Greek community on the island, and thirty percent by the Turkish community... an arrangement stemming from the fact that there are about four times as many Greeks as Turks. There is also to be a Supreme Court...made up of one Greek Cypriot and one Turkish Cypriot...and a neutral. And in any dispute between national groups on the island, this court will act as referee. It is to be the final arbiter.

The first step toward putting this plan in operation will be the creation of a committee...or commission... to draft a constitution. The commission will comprise not only representatives of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities but representatives of the Greek And Turkish governments as well.

Publication of these details has brought neither cheers of jubilation nor demonstrations of protest in Cyprus tonight. A Reuters correspondent describes the impact on the island as "sober." In London, Turkish Premier Menderes was able to leave hospital today for the first time since the air crash last week in which he was injured and in which fifteen other persons died. Menderes took a brief walk through Hyde Park...and then returned to the hospital. He is expected to be fully recovered in two or three days.

British Prime Minister Macmillan had a two and a half hour talk with Premier Khrushchev today in the Kremlin. The Soviet foreign ministry says simply that questions of mutual interest were considered, (and certainly one of those questions would be Berlin.) An informed British source adds that...in his opinion today's meeting "went off very well indeed." And there is a report that Khrushchev and Macmillan agreed to start work on a new cultural agreement. But there is nothing official on that. It's still just a report.

This working conference was in the morning. In the afternoon, Prime Minister Macmillan took time out to visit Moscow University...and gave several informal talks. Crowds of students lined the corridors, and one Russian girl shouted proudly that in the university library there were 5-million books. Macmillan said..in one of his speeches, that he wished more Russian students would visit England...tnd that more young British people could visit Russia. The dispatches tell us he was warmly received.

Tonight, the prime minister had Khrushchev as his dinner guest at the British Embassy Macmillan made a little speech praising Russia's role in winning World War Two. He said, "When I ponder the present state of the world, I ask myself whether we have not today a common interest of at least equal degree." This common interest, Macmillan said, is peace. Khrushchev...in reply...praised the prime minister's "frankness and understanding." He said, "I think the conversations between us will bring results."

Macmillan was to have gone on a hunting trip tomorrow. Now it is reported that...instead of going hunting...he and Khrushchev will have an additional private talk.

President Eisenhower visited Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed Hospital today for the fourth time in eight days. Today's meeting lasted about half an hour, and the State Department says that they discussed international affairs in general. Later in the day, Mr. Dulles conferred by telephone with Acting Secr tary of State Christian Herter.

Secretary Dulles received his third radiation treatment this morning, and a medical bulletin says there is still no sign of "adverse reaction" at this stage. The doctors describe this as "very gratifying." Accordingly, there has been a gradual increase in the duration of the treatments. The first treatment on Friday lasted one minute. The length of the treatment today is not revealed.

In Rio de Janeiro, an official of the Brazilian Foreign Office says that the appointment of Mrs. Clare BootheLuce as United States ambassador to Brazil has been accepted by his government. There is no confirmation in Washington, but such acceptance is customary before the appointment of a new ambassador is announced.

The executive council of the AFL-CIO asked Congress today to lower the 40-hour work week to 35 hours. This would mean amending the Fair Labor Standards Act. The council points out that the 40-hour week was established 21 years ago. Since then, it says, America has made "tremendous technological progress" which justifies a change.

Among the effects of Secretary of State Dulles' illness is the fact that Prime Minister Macmillan has now moved front-center on the international stage... His talks with Premier Khrushchev in Moscow this week, may make Macmillan dominant in future western councils on the Berlin crisis and the German question.

There is of course doubt that Mr. Dulles will ever resume his predominant role in Western Dipolmacy, and there are question marks about the other two West European leaders, Chancellor Adenauer, because of his age, and De Gaulle because of the French economic instability.

It's thereforeof capital importance that Macmillan should be undertaking the initial explorations of Russian intentions about Berlin and Germany. It's no secret that the British have never been as strongly against dealing with the East German regime as the West Germans and French leaders...The British have never been entirely convinced that the East Germans, particularly the people are as thorough-going communists as Moscow's East German puppet-governement would have the rest of the world believe.

Now British tradition on the whole, is not one of merely planning from crisis to crisis. As befits their long history, they're notable for thinking in terms of a long-range future. And no British diplomat that this reporter has talked to, is convinced that the East German communist government has popular support. No thinking diplomat, of course, discounts the ability of a modern police state to keep its people in line. Methodical and systematic secret police operations can go a long way to curb popular unrest. But it is most successful when conditions are fairly tranquil. The East German riots of 1953 proved that the East German communist machine cannot afford to relax, even when things seems to be going fairly well. But even today, East Germany is the one state in Europe which is losing population. Even with an encouraged birth-rate...its subjects are deserting at a rate of 4 to 5 thousand a week.

Such a regime may be able to control its people by stringent police measures, but if it tries to whip up a crisis atmosphere, it's running the risk of panic and possibly serious political unrest. Such a state cannot afford to provoke its enemies too far.

The Russian position thus far has been somewhat contradictory. They threaten to meet force with force, if their East German allies are interfered with. Then in another voice, the Russians say they are going to withdraw from East Germany. And then again they hint that they will sign a separate peace treaty, making East Germany a sovereign state.

It's plain that the Russians are not sure just how far they can proceed with their threats. Thusfar the threats have come in alternate speeches like the shelling of Quemoy on alternate days.

Premier Khrushchev's ultimate objective is plain. He wishes to move another great step beyond Stalin's military victories to obtain western recognition of the communist conquests in Europe, not just as an irreversible military fact, but as an irreversible political fact. That is what he really means by "ending the cold war." His immediate objective is to secure recognition of the East German regime. It may be that Khrushchev now believes that he is strong enough to force that recognition on the West...and certainly the Russians have followed a very strong line ever since they launched their first sputnik. It was obviously that thought to which Prime Minister Macmillan addressed himself at the Kremlin dinner last night. He warned that there was "greater danger of war from a miscalculation than from calculated aggression"...a warning to Khrushchev not to press a bluff too far. It is clear to Macmillan as well as to Khrushchev, that West Berlin is not readily defensible by us. But it's just as obvious that an attack on the small western garrison there, means the risk of a world war.

It would seem that Mr. Macmillan conceives his mission as an effort to get the Russians into conference on the Berlin situation at the Foreign Ministers level. It also appears that the Russians don't want this and that their first line of retreat would be to demand a summit conference. But no matter at what level the talks take place, it's a good bet that if the Russians are negotiating with the West, when the Berlin deadline expires on May 27th, Russian recognition of world opinion will curb any sudden move in West Berlin.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: The first celebration of George Washington's birthday was held in Boston one hundred and eighty years ago, on February 11th...the actual day of his birth. The British Parliament would have it otherwise. They imposed the gregorian calendar on all their possessions, including the American colonies in 1752. The American colonists ignored Parliament, and it wasn't until well into the 19th century that they added 11 days to the old style calandar and celebrated Washington's birthday on the 22nd.

This is Larry LeSueur---goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Tues., Feb. 24, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders "HE will decide how long Mr. Dulles should continue as secretary of state. Two Democratic senators---Symington of Missouri and Humphrey of Minnesota--have suggested that Mr. Eisenhower name a successor to Mr. Dulles without delay. But the President made it clear...at today's meeting with Republican leaders...that he does not intend to be pressured. Senator Dirksen quotes him as saying, "What eventuates in the future is certainly my responsibility."

Secretary Dulles underwent radiation treatment this morning for the fourth time. And a medical bulletin says that his appetite has improved. Tomorrow will be his 71st birthday. ///

The Moscow talks...between Premier Khrushchev and British Prime Minister Macmillan...were recessed today while Macmillan went a few miles outside the city to visit a nuclear research center. Khrushchev addressed a local political rally, and apparently turned-down the Western proposal for a Big Four foreign ministers conference on Germany...said such a conference would be "obsolete" and called again for a meeting at the summit. The summit meeting, he said, should cover the whole range of East-West differences, including the disagreement on how to control a ban on nuclear tests. Khrushchev renewed his warning that any use of force...in the Berlin dispute...would lead to war. He hinted that the shah of Iran...who has stood by the West, might soon be overthrown and murdered like the king of Iraq. And he offered Britain a long-term non-aggression pact.

Tonight...at a reception in the British Embassy...Western diplomats tried to get Khrushchev to expand on these remarks...to say definitely whether he was rejecting the Western proposal for a foreign ministers meeting. But he would say no more on the subject. Deputy Premier Mikoyan...who was at the reception...told Western correspondents that what Khrushchev's speech "amounted to" was "an affirmation of the need for a summit conference."

In Washington, the State Department declined comment---except to say that it was awaiting a "reasoned" reply to its formal note of February 16th. In other words, what Khrushchev told a political rally in Moscow is not being taken as a final and official REPLY.

There is some question tonight whether Mr. Macmillan will be able to confer with Khrushchev tomorrow. The prime minister has a bad cold.

In London today the British government formally notified Archbishop Makarios that he is free to return to Cyprus at any time. Makarios...whom the British exiled in 1946...now plans to fly back to the island on Saturday. An agreement to grant independence to Cyprus was signed in London last week.

Italy's new premier...Antonio Segni...went before parliament today to ask for a vote of confidence in his minority government, composed entirely of Christian Democrats. In asking for approval of his new government, Segni promised a large-scale "public works program" and pledged adherence to the Atlantic Pact. A vote is expected tomorrow.

In Nyasaland...in Southeast Africa...British-led troops opened fire today on African rioters for the first time since the demonstrations began five days ago. One African is reported killed and two others were wounded. The troops acted after an African policeman was stabbed.

The United States Navy announces that it is scrapping 43 warships, all of which have been laid up in mothballs for more than ten years. Twenty-three of the outmoded vessels are cruisers. Five are battleships, including the U.S.S. Tennessee, that was commissioned in 1920. Originally, the warships cost nearly 700-million dollars. The Navy hopes to get about [redacted] 30-million dollars of this back when they are sold for scrap.

The Supreme Court [redacted] handed down a series of decisions today... strengthening the hand of the states in disputes dealing with the right to tax. The issues are highly [redacted] complex, as tax matters usually are. However, in brief, [redacted] what the Supreme Court said [redacted] was that states have the right to levy taxes on the income of out-of-state firms...IF the business done by those firms [redacted] inside the state consists solely of taking orders. The high court also upheld the right of states...and cities...to impose property taxes on materials imported to meet current manufacturing needs.

The Supreme Court postponed until its next term the hearing of arguments in the perennial dispute over tidelands oil. The Justice Department contends...in a suit pending before the court...that state ownership of ~~XXX~~ submerged lands along the coast be limited to a distance of three miles from shore. Five states...along the Mexican Gulf...contend that in some instances their historic boundaries extend as much as "twenty miles to sea." These states are Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. And the hearing of arguments has been set for next October 12th.

The American Bar Association called on Congress today "to correct legislative defects existing in the field of internal security." It did this in a resolution...approved by the association's policy-making body, the House of Delegates, meeting in Chicago. Earlier, the Board of Governors of the bar association had approved a statement saying ~~that~~ it "did not in any way intend to indicate censure of the Supreme Court, nor an attack UPON ~~upon~~ the independence of the judiciary." However, the association report in general asks Congress to take a new look at some recent Supreme Court decisions dealing with internal security...and then amend the laws involved in order, it said, to remove any doubt about what Congress may have had in mind. The report voices opposition to any proposals that would limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. But it says...at the same time...that certain decisions concerning Communism in America have...in its phrase...

(45)

"been severely criticized and deemed unsound by many responsible authorities." The resolution ---passed after stormy debate--- runs more than 50 pages. In Washington, Chairman Celler of the House Judiciary Committee calls the action by the American Bar Association "irresponsible". The delegates, he claims, were "obsessed with security and oblivious of individual liberty." Two other members of the judiciary committee--Republican Representative McCulloch of Ohio and Democratic Representative Ashmore of South Carolina--- congratulated the bar association...and predicted that its proposal will receive a friendly reception in Congress. Ashmore said he was glad the association delegates "finally have come to feel that the Supreme Court is not above criticism."

WED

In the welter of discussion about Secretary of State Dulles, its plain that President Eisenhower is "hoping against hope," that the course of Mr. Dulles's disease can be arrested...and that the extraordinary [redacted] constitution of this man who will be 71 years old TOMORROW, will enable him to carry on..if not as actively as before, at least, as senior advisor on foreign affairs.. The President's own medical history does give rise to hope that a man once stricken, can recover sufficiently to carry on his duties adequately..

[redacted] The President OF COURSE can only rely on the staff of physicians now treating Mr. Dulles for their opinion and prognosis as to [redacted] how Mr. Dulles is faring and the chances of his recovery.

Thus far, the doctors profess to be encouraged by the way in which Mr. Dulles has tolerated [redacted] his radiation treatment, and plan to increase the [redacted] dosage..

No one but the physicians are in a position to estimate the chances of Mr. Dulles' recovery..But it would appear unlikely that the Secretary of State will be able to carry out his vital office in the future, as he has in the past..

NOW. During his conquest of western europe, General Eisenhower brooked few mistakes on the part of his divisional COMMANDERS. [redacted]..There "were" probably more replacements of divisional GENERALS [redacted] in the United States army in the European theater, than in any major war [redacted] this nation has ever FOUGHT. [redacted], with the possible exception of the Civil War.

General Eisenhower, through [redacted] his chief of staff, Bedell Smith, [redacted] was exceedingly tough on divisional commanders who failed to complete their missions. [redacted]..

[redacted] At a recent news conference the President did bring up the case of a general who was hospitalized with an arthritic knee, [redacted] told how he had demanded the General's presence on the battlefield, "even if he had to come on a litter," [redacted] said the President: "I SAID he can do better that way than most people I know.../The General was later idenfified as the redoubtable [redacted] General Troy Middleton, commander of the spear-heading [redacted] Fifth Corps on D.-day..

I recall seeing General Middleton many times during the early days in Normandie and the breakout from St. [redacted] Lo.// If he WAS [redacted] troubled by a bad knee, he concealed it very well.//.In his present POST [redacted] as president of Louisiana State University, General Middleton is quoted as saying that his knee now gives him "no trouble at all", except when IT'S "cold" outside. But there's a considerable difference between arthritis and cancer. President Eisenhower did NOT mention all the other generals he retired from the battlefield, including corps commanders, under the general HEADING of "Ill health".

Now this reporter has long been an admirer of Secretary of State Dulles. WE THINK this own country owes a debt of gratitude to this man of so many years and so much courage... Particularly because Mr. Dulles has had the strength to say "NO" when it was unpopular to do so... As one of the world's most accomplished negotiators, Mr. Dulles has safeguarded the interests of this country and the western world, at a time when Russia wants to throw its sputnick-laden weight around THE BARGAINING TABLE... in modern history, few secretaries of state (or foreign ministers) have ever been the target of such concentrated attack from ALLIES AND POTENTIAL ENEMIES as Mr. Dulles has been, because of his stuboorn ability to say "NO," when he felt it was in his country's interest.

It has always seemed remarkable to me that two highest compliments I have heard paid to Mr. Dulles came from the Ambassadors of such dis-similar STATES as Yugoslavia and Isreal...The Yugoslav said that Mr. Dulles was one of the few men who believed him, when he said Yugoslavia would never go over the hill to Moscow...The Isreali said he was convinced that Mr. Dulles was the only man who WOULD say "NO" to both Kruschev and Nasser..

Mr. Dulles has dominated the foreign affairs of the western world, at a time when Russia WAS flexing its missiles.. ...Mr. Dulles was convinced that this was not the time to bargain at the Summit..

Yet despite his extraordinary exertions, Mr. Dulles has not been a well-man for months. It is most unfortunate that now that the cold war is intensifying, we have a sick man calling the plays on foreign policy.. Pessimists may recall that Franklin D. Roosevelt was not a well man during the later period of his conduct of United States Foreign policy..

President Eisenhower can hardly shut his eyes to this.. Nor hesitate too long, in the interests of his country, when the struggle for Germany is BEING WAGED AGAIN - THIS TIME on the diplomatic battlefield...

This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...But first a world from George Bryan--on the weather.

Premier Kruschev chose an unusual forum today to make his speech torpedoing the western proposals for a four-power foreign minister's conference on Germany... He spoke to a political rally in the courtyard of the Kremlin, to members of his Moscow election district...

The Russian Premier didn't wait for them to applaud.. To their surprise, He applauded them... ...."I am applauding YOU," said Nikita Kruschev to his audience, " Because I EXPECT you to vote for me..."

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders "he" will decide how long Mr. Dulles should continue as secretary of state. Two Democratic senators---Symington of Missouri and Humphrey of Minnesota---have suggested that Mr. Eisenhower name a successor to Mr. Dulles without delay. But the President made it clear...at today's meeting with Republican leaders...that he does not intend to be pressured. Senator Dirksen quotes him as saying, "What eventuates in the future is certainly my responsibility."

Secretary Dulles underwent radiation treatment this morning for the fourth time. And a medical bulletin says that his appetite has improved. Tomorrow will be his 71st birthday.

The Moscow talks...between Premier Khrushchev and British Prime Minister Macmillan...were recessed today while Macmillan went a few miles outside the city to visit a nuclear research center. Khrushchev addressed a local political rally, and apparently turned down the Western proposal for a Big Four foreign ministers conference on Germany...said such a conference would be "obsolete" and called again for a meeting at the summit. The summit meeting, he said, should cover the whole range of East-West differences, including the disagreement on how to control a ban on nuclear tests. Khrushchev renewed his warning that any use of force...in the Berlin dispute...would lead to war. He hinted that the Shah of Iran...who has stood by the West...might soon be overthrown and murdered like the King of Iraq. And he offered Britain a long-term non-aggression pact. Tonight...at a reception in the British Embassy...Western diplomats tried to get Khrushchev to expand on these remarks...to say definitely whether he was rejecting the Western proposal for a foreign ministers meeting. But he would say no more on the subject. Deputy Premier Mikoyan...who was at the reception...told Western correspondents that what Khrushchev's speech "amounted to" was "an affirmation of the need for a summit conference." In Washington, the State Department declined comment---except to say that it was awaiting a "reasoned" reply to its formal note of February 16th. In other words, what Khrushchev told a political rally in Moscow is not being taken as a final and official reply.

There is some question tonight whether Mr. Macmillan will be able to confer with Khrushchev tomorrow. The prime minister has a bad cold.

In London today, the British government formally notified Archbishop Makarios that he is free to return to Cyprus at any time. Makarios...whom the British exiled in 1946...now plans to fly back to the island on Saturday. An agreement to grant independence to Cyprus was signed in London last week.

Italy's new premier...Antonio Segni...went before parliament today to ask for a vote of confidence in his minority government, composed entirely of Christian Democrats. In asking for approval of his new government, Segni promised a large-scale "public works program" and pledged adherence to the Atlantic Pact. A vote is expected tomorrow.

In Nyasaland...in Southeast Africa...British-led troops opened fire today on African rioters for the first time since the demonstrations began five days ago. One African is reported killed and two others were wounded. The troops acted after an African policemen was stabbed.

The United States Navy announces that it is scrapping 43 warships, all of which have been laid up in mothballs for more than ten years. Twenty-three of the outmoded vessels are cruisers. Five are battleships, including the U.S.S. Tennessee, that was commissioned in 1920. Originally, the warships cost nearly 700-million dollars. The Navy hopes to get about 30-million dollars of this back when they are sold for scrap.

The Supreme Court handed down a series of decisions today...strengthening the hand of the states in disputes dealing with the right to tax. The issues are highly complex, as tax matters usually are. However, in brief, what the Supreme Court said was that states have the right to levy taxes on the income of out-of-state firms...if the business done by those firms inside the state consists solely of taking orders. The high court also upheld the right of states...and cities... to impose property taxes on materials imported to meet current manufacturing needs.

The Supreme Court postponed until its next term the hearing of arguments in the perennial dispute over tidelands oil. The Justice Department contends...in a suit pending before the court...that state ownership of submerged lands along the coast be limited to a distance of three miles from shore. Five states...along the Mexican Gulf...contend that in some instances their historic boundaries extend as much as "twenty miles to sea." These states are Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. And the hearings of arguments has been set for next October 12th.

The American Bar Association called on Congress today "to correct legislative defects existing in the field of internal security." It did this in a resolution...approved by the association's policy-making body, the House of Delegates, meeting in Chicago. Earlier, the Board of Governors of the bar association had approved a statement saying it "did not in any way intend to indicate censure of the Supreme Court, nor an attack upon the independence of the judiciary." However, the association report in general asks Congress to take a new look at some recent Supreme Court decisions dealing with internal security... and then amend the laws involved in order, it said, to remove any doubt about what Congress may have had in mind. The report voices opposition to any proposals that would limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. But it says, at the same time...that certain decisions concerning Communism in America have...in its phrase.. "been severly criticized and deemed unsound by many responsible authorities." The resolution passed after stormy debate runs more than 50 pages. In Washington, Chairman Celler of the House Juciciary Committee calls the action by the American Bar Association "irresponsible." The delegates, he claims, were "obsessed with security and oblivious of individual liberty." Two other members of the judiciary committee---Republican Representative McCulloch of Ohio and Democratic Representative Ashmore of South Carolina---congratulated the bar association...and predicted that its proposal will receive a friendly reception in Congress. Ashmore said he was glad the association delegates "finally have come to feel that the Supreme Court is not above criticism."

Well, in the welter of discussion about Secretary of State Dulles, it's plain that President Eisenhower is hoping against hope that the course of Mr. Dulles' disease can be arrested...and that the extraordinary constitution of this man who will be 71 years old tomorrow, will enable him to carry on...if not as actively as before, at least as senior advisor on foreign affairs. The President's own medical history does give rise to hope that a man once stricken, can recover sufficiently to carry on his duties adequately.

The President of course can only rely on the staff of physicians now treating Mr. Dulles for their opinion and prognosis as to how Mr. Dulles is faring and the chances of his recovery. Thus far, the doctors porfess to be encouraged by the way in which Mr. Dulles has tolerated his radiation treatment and plan to increase the dosage. No one but the physicians are in a postion to estimate the chances of Mr. Dulles' recovery. But it would appear unlikely that the Secretary of State will be able to carry out his vital office in the future as he has in the psst.

Now, during his conquest of Western Europe, General Eisenhower brooked few mistakes on the part of his divisional commanders. There were probably more replacements of divisional generals in the United States army in the European theater, than in any major war this nation has ever fought with the possible exception of the Civil War. General Eisenhower through his chief of staff, Bedell Smith, was exceedingly tough on divisional commanders who failed to complete their missions.

At a recent news conference, the President did bring up the case of a general who was hospitalized with an arthritic knee, told how he had demanded the General's presence on the battlefield, "even if he had to come on a litter." Said the President: "I said he can do better that way than most people I know." The General was later identified as the redoubtable General Troy Middleton, commander of the spear-heading Fifth Corps on D-Day. I recall seeing General Middleton many times during the early days in Normandie and the breakout from St. Lo. If he was troubled by a bad knee, he concealed it very well. In his present post as president of Louisiana State University, Genraal Middleton is quoted as saying that his knee now gives him "no trouble at all," except when it's cold outside...but there's a considerable difference between arthritis and cancer. President Eisenhower did not mention all the other generals he retired from the battlefield including corps commanders under the general headline of "ill health."

Now this reporter has long been an admirer of Secretary of State Dulles. We think this own country owes a debt of gratitude to this man of so many years and so much courage...particularly because Mr. Dulles has had the strength to say "no" when it was unpopular to do so. As one of the world's most accomplished negotiators, Mr. Dulles has safeguarded the interests of this country and the western world at a time when Russia wants to throw its sputnik-laden weight around the bargaining table. In modern history, few secretaries of state or foreign ministers have ever been the target of such concentrated attack from allies and potential enemies as Mr. Dulles has been, because of his stubborn ability to say "no" when he felt it was in his country's interest. It has always seemed remarkable to me that two highest compliments I have heard paid to Mr. Dulles came from the Ambassadors of such dissimilar states as Yugoslavia and Israel...The Yugoslav said that Mr. Dulles was one of the few men who believed him, when he said Yugoslavia wolud never go over the hill to Moscow. The Israeli said he was convinced that Mr. Dulles was the only man who would say "no" to both Khrushchev and Nasser. Mr. Dulles has dominated the foreign affairs of the western world at a time when Russia was flexing its missiles. Mr. Dulles was convinced that this was not the time to bargain at the Summit.

Yet despite his extraordinatry exertions, Mr. Dulles has not been a well man for months. It is most unfomtunate that now that the cold war is intensifying we have a sick man calling the plays on foreign policy. Pessimists may recall that Franklin D. Roosevelt was not a well man during the later period of his conduct of United States Foreign policy. President Eisenhower can hardly shut his eyes to this, nor hesitate too long in the interests of his country when the struggle for Germany is being waged agiin this time on the diplomatic battlefield.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...but first a word from George Bryan---on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: Premier Khrushchev chose an unusual forum today to make his speech torpedoing the western proposals for a four-power foreign ministers' conference on Germany. He spoke to a politicalrally in the courtyard of the Kremlin to members of his Moscow election district. The Russian premier didn't wait for them to applaud...To their surprise, he applauded them. "I am applauding you," said Nikita Khrushchev to his audience, "because I expect you to vote for me."

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Wednesday, February 25, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: (PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT) Now, here is Larry LeSueur.

LE SUEUR: Good evening everyone. Here is what happened today: A chill has settled over the Moscow talks between British Prime Minister MacMillan and Soviet Premier Khrushchev. The chill was induced by Khrushchev's speech yesterday when he rejected the Western proposal for a foreign minister's meeting, accused the West of attempting to dictate a German policy to Russia and charged the United States and Britain with trying to wreck the Geneva Conference on banning nuclear weapons tests. The two leaders are believed to have discussed the implications of Khrushchev's speech at a four hour session today, a session that was held at a country villa being occupied by the British visitor 25 miles outside Moscow. A British spokesman described the atmosphere of today's meeting as fairly cool, calm and collected. The Soviet News Agency Tass said only that an exchange of opinion was continued on questions of mutual interest. Tonight, Khrushchev and MacMillan returned to Moscow to attend a performance of Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet at the famed Bolshoi Theatre. They were applauded again when they shook hands.

There will be another round of formal talks at the Kremlin tomorrow morning and later on an airplane with Khrushchev accompanying the Britons were scheduled to take that trip alone.

Pres. Eisenhower was asked at his news conference today about Khrushchev's rejection of a foreign minister's conference on Germany at a time when MacMillan was in Moscow to discuss that very matter. Here is what the President had to say:

PRES. EISENHOWER: The obviously, palpably intransigent attitude of Mr. Khrushchev is, of course, not only - it has not only been well known, but it seems really to have been emphasized. And at the moment when the logical purpose of Mr. Macmillan's visit was to try to create an atmosphere in which negotiations would be possible, this development is not one that, certainly, you could call hopeful.

This is the only logical attitude that the United States and the West, as I see it, can take: First, that we are not going to give one single inch in the preservation of our rights, and of discharging our responsibilities in this particular region, especially Berlin. There can be no negotiation on this particular point of right, and of retention of responsibility.

Now, the United States has always made clear, we are always ready to negotiate when the other person will give us the slightest area or region in which to negotiate; but if there is to be a positive answer and a negative answer to give to any question before you do attempt to negotiate, then I can't see very well very much use for conference. Indeed, if the same kind of attitude is shown insistently and always, why, I must say the future doesn't seem to hold for negotiation, doesn't seem to hold much promise.

Now this, in spite of the fact that there have been a number of things have occurred. You will recall way back there was a refusal to negotiate respecting the ~~xxxxfix~~ reunification of Austria. Well, that was accomplished. And down the road with respect to West Germany and so on, there have been other concessions; but they certainly come very rarely and from our viewpoint, at least, the refusals are so illogical that they do not promise a great deal for the establishment of a just peace. But, as I say, we have got to be ready, alert to opportunities to negotiate when there is any real promise of success, just as we are going to be strong, and are strong and alert in making certain that others cannot take advantage of us or divide us by any kind of threat.

LESUEUR: Mr. Eisenhower also was asked what he thought about holding a summit conference with the Russians and this was his reply:

EISENHOWER: Well, I would say this: All of you people are quite well acquainted with the constitutional difficulties that a President incurs when he goes abroad for one of these long conferences. But on top of that, there is this very great psychological reason: When the people of the United - the people of the world understand there is going to be a head of government, a head of state or a head of government summit conference, they expect something to come out of it, and a feeling of ~~pessimismxxxxx~~ pessimism and, in a way, hopelessness, I think, would be increased if you entered such a meeting and then nothing really came out of it, as did not come - I mean, as it did, indeed, was the case at Geneve.

We used a great deal of talk about the spirit of Geneva but, frankly, before we went there, while we were there and afterward, our Government said one thing - the proof othe sanity and the value of this Geneva meeting is going to be shown within the next few months when we went down to the concrete problems,and there we went over in October, the Foreign Ministers did, and we got exactly zero progress.

Now, I think it would be a very grave mistake to go to a national - I mean to a summit conference -unless there was kind of preparation so that you could know, the world could recognize the progress made.

LE SUEUR: When asked about criticism of his defense program, the President replied somewhat sharply that he believed he was better qualified to decide those matters than any of the service chiefs. He said hat just spending money doesn't make the country stronger. He said that if you spend too much money, you will make us weaker.

The President struck back at Congressional critics and against what he called a demagogic talk about his defense program saying he was the final arbiter in the Executive Branch of the Government on that score.

As for Secretary of State Dulles who underwent his fifth radiation treatment today at Walter Reed Army Hospital, the President said that Mr. Dulles himself will decide whether he is physically able to continue in his post. The President said Mr. Dulles would reach his decision soon after his present treatment is completed.

Mr. Dulles turned 71 years old today and got a birthday present from his doctors in the form of their most optimistic statement thus far on his fight against cancer. The doctors said that they were very satisfied with the progress Mr. Dulles is making, described his spirits as high, said he is receiving an increasing amount of x-ray and has shown no ill effects from the treatment. They also said his appetite continues to improve.

Republican National Committee Chairman Meade Alcorn conferred with President Eisenhower for an hour today and then announced the formation of a 44 member committee to study the long range objectives and principles of the GOP. Alcorn said the plan had the enthusiastic support of the President and that the Committee will include all segments of Republican thinking.

In Geneva the United States asked Russia whether there was any point in continuing the conference on banning nuclear tests in view of Premier Khrushchev's sharp attack on the Western position yesterday. The Soviet delegate, Semyon Tsarapkin, replied that it was up to the West and that the conference needn't fail if the West adopted what he called a more realistic attitude towards the negotiations. They will meet again.

Unrest continued in Africa today as anti-white demonstrations spread. Leaders seized a customs post in Northern Nyasaland and went on strike at the huge Kariba Dam near Salisbury in Southern-Rhodesia to back demands for higher wages. On the East African Coast, Nationalist rioting broke out in Somalia. Police were called out to put down the disorders and one person is reported killed, 15 injured.

In Mexico, 70,000 workers went on strike today against the government owned national railways paralyzing all rail service throughout the country. An additional 47,000 workers on privately owned rail lines are reported ready to join the walkout.

Senate Rackets Committee Chairman McClelland said today that the United States is threatened from within by underworld penetration into various industries. McClellan made this statement as the committee suspended until March 10th its hearings on a juke box, coin machine industry in New York and Chicago.

The House Banking Committee by a vote of 19 to 7 has approved a two billion one-hundred million dollar housing bill. Republicans immediately attacked it as a budget busting bill, showing that the total new spending authorized by the measure amounted to almost six billion dollars instead of the two billion estimated by its sponsors.

The bill is about half a billion dollars less than the housing measure already passed by the Senate and is about half a billion more than the figure requested by the Administration over a six year period.

This is Larry Le Sueur. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news. But first a word from George Bryan about the weather.

BRYAN: (PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT)

...now here's Mr. Le Sueur with his footnote to the news:

LE SUEUR: British Defense Minister Duncan Sandys told Parliament today that Britain will end its military draft for the first time in twenty years. "British defense policy," he said, "is based on complete replacement of atomic bombers by a guiding missile called the 'Blue Streak'. "Since we can't put our money on all the horses in the race like the Americans can," said Sandys, "we'll have to back our fancy; we have chosen the 'Blue Streak'."

This is Larry Le Sueur. Good night.

PT/rs

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening everyone. Here is what happended today:

A chill has settled over the Moscow talks between British Prime Minister Macmillan and Soviet Premier Khrushchev. The chill was induced by Khrushchev's speech yesterday when he rejected the Western proposal for a foreign ministers' meeting, accused the West of attempting to dictate a German policy io Russia and charged the United States and Britian with trying to wreck the Geneva conference on banning nuclear weapons tests. The two leaders are believed to have discussed the implications of Khrushchev's speech at a four-hour session today, a session that was held at a country villa being occupied by the British visitor 25 miles outside Moscow. A British spokesman described the atmosphere of today's meeting as fairly cool, calm and collected. The Soviet News Agency Tass said only that an exchange of opinion was continued on questions of mutual interest. Tonight, Khrushchev and Macmillan returned to Moscow to attend a performance of Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet at the famed Bolshoi Theatre. They were applauded again when they shook hands.

There will be another round of formal talks at the Kremlin tomorrow morning and later on an airplane with Khrushchev accompanying the Britains were scheduled eo take the trip alone.

President Eisenhower was asked at his news conference today about Khrushchev's rejection of a foreign ministers' conference on Germany at a time when Macmillan was in Moscow to discuss that very matter. Here is what the President had to say:

PRES. EISENHOWER: The obviously, palpably intransigent attitude of Mr. Khrushchev is of course, not only - it has not only been well known, but it seems really to have been emphasized. And at the moment when the logical purpose of

Mr. Macmillan's visit was to try to create an atmosphere in which negotiations would be possible, this development is not one that, certainly, yuu could call hopeful.

This is the only logical attitude that the United States and the West, as I see it, can take: First, that we are not going to give one single inch in the preservation of our rights, and of discharging our responsibilities in this particular region, especially Berlin. There can be no negotiation on this particular point of right, and of retention of responsibility.

Now, the United States has always made clear, we are always ready to negotiate when the other person will give us the slightest area or region in which to negotiate, but if there is to be a positive answer and a negative answer to give to any question before you do attempt to negotiate, then I can't see very well very much use for conference. Indeed, if the same kind of attitude is shown insistently and always, why I must say the future doesn't seem to hold for negotiation, doesn't seem to hold much promise.

Now this, in spite of the fact that there have been a number of things have occurred. You will recall way back there was a refusal to negotiate respecting the reunification of Austria. Well, that was accomplished. And down the road with respect to West Germany and so on, there have been other concessions but they certainly come very rarely and form our viewpoint, at least the refusals are so illogical that they do not promise a great deal for the establishment of a just peace. But, as I say, we have got to be ready, alert to opportunities to negotiate when there is any real promise of success, just as we are going to be strong, and are strong and alert in making certain that others cannot take advantage of us or divide us by any kind of threat.

LESUEUR: Mr. Eisenhower also was asked what he thought abuut holding a summit conference with the Russians and this was his reply:

EISENHOWER: Well, I would say this: All of you people are quite well acquainted with the constitutional difficulties that a President incurs when he goes abroad for one of these long conferences. But on top of that, there is this very great psychological reason: When the people of the United - the people of the world understand there is going to be a head of government, a head of state or a head of government summit conference, they expect something to come out of it, and a feeling of pessimism and, in a way, hopelessness, I think, would be increased if you entered such a meeting and then nothing really came out of it, as did not come - I mean, as it did, indeed, was the case at Geneva.

We used a great deal of talk about the spirit of Geneva but, frankly, before we went there, while we were there and afterward, our Government said one thing - the proof of the sanity and the value of this Geneva meeting is going to be shown within the next few months when we went down to the concrete problems, and there we went over in October, the Foreign Ministers did, and we got exactly zero progress.

Now, I think it would be a very grave mistake to go to a national - I mean to a summit conference - unless there was kind of preparation so that you could know, the world could recognize the progress made.

LESUEUR: When asked about criticism of his defense program, the President replied somewhat sharply that he believed he was better qualified to decide those matters than any of the service chiefs. He said that just spending money doesn't make the country stronger. He said that if you spend too much money, you will make us weaker.

The President struck back at Congressional critics and against what he called a demogogic talk about his defense program saying he was the final arbiter in the Executive Branch of the Government on that score.

As for Secretary of State Dulles who underwent his fifth radiation treatment today at Walter Reed Army Hospital, the President said that Mr. Dulles himself will decide whether he is physically able to continue in his post. The President said Mr. Dulles would reach his decision soon after his present treatment is completed.

Mr. Dulles turned 71 years old today and got a birthday present from his doctors in the form of their most optimistic statement thusfar on his fight against cancer. The doctors said that they were very satisfied wtth the progress Mr. Dulles is making, described his spirits as high, said he is receiving an increasing amount of X-ray and has shown no ill effects from the treatment. They also said his appetite continues to improve.

Republican National Committee Chairman Meade Alconr conferred with President Eisenhower for an hour today and then announced the formation of a 44 member committee to study the long-range objectives and principles of the G.O.P. Alcorn said the plan had the enthusiastic support of the President and that the Committee will include all segments of Republican thinking.

In Geneva the United States asked Russia whether there was any point in continuing the conference on banning nuclear tests in view of Premier Khrushchev's sharp attack on the Western position yesterday. The Soviet delegate, Semyon Tsarapkin, replied that it was up to the West and that the conference needn't fail if the West adopted what he called a more realistic attitude towards the negotiations. They will meet again.

Unrest continued in Africa today as anti-white demonstrations spread. Leaders seized a customs post in Northern Nyasaland and went on strike at the huge Kariba Dam near Salisbury in Southern Rhodesia to back demands for higher wages. On the East African Coast, Nationalist rioting broke out in Somalia. Police were called out to put down the disorders and one person is reported killed, 15 injured.

In Mexico, 70,000 workers went on strike today against the government owned national railways paralyzing all rail service throughout the country. An additional 47,000 workers on privately owned rail lines are reported ready to join the walkout.

Senate Rackets Committee Chairman McClellan said today that the United States is threatened from within by underworld penetration into various industries. McClellan made this statement as the committee suspended until March 10th its hearings on a juke box, coin machine industry in New York and Chicago.

The House Banking Committee by a vote of 19 to 7 has approved a two billion one-hundred million dollar housing bill. Republicans immediately attacked it as a budget busting bll, showing that the total new spending authorized by the measure amounted to almost six billion dollars instead of the two billion estimated by its sponsors. The bill is about half a billion dollars less than the housing measure already passed by the Senate and is about half a billion more than the figure requested by the Administration over a six year period.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news. But first a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BYYAN

LESUEUR: British Defense Minister Duncan Sandys told Parliament today that Britain will end its military draft for the first time in twenty years. "British defense policy," he said, "is based on complete replacement of atomic bombers by a guided missile called the 'Blue Streak.' Since we can't put our money on all the horses in the race like the Americans can," said Sandys, "we'll have to back our fancy; we have chosen the 'Blue Streak.'"

This is Larry LeSueur. Goodnight.

7:45 pm het
2/26/59

LeSueur-Picker

Good evening everyone. Here's what happened today:

An international incident involving this country and Russia developed today 120 miles northeast of Newfoundland. At that point in the Atlantic Ocean, U.S. navy men of the radar-picket ship Roy D. Hale boarded the Soviet trawler Novorossisk -- TO INVESTIGATE the recent breaking of four transatlantic cables. The AMERICANS boarded the Russian ship about noon, and left it SHORTLY AFTER SIX OCLOCK tonight. During THAT time, planes from the U.S. naval air station at Argentia, Newfoundland, were flying over the area. (Afterwards, the American vessel headed toward Argentia, and the Russian ship proceeded in a northerly direction. The boarding ACTION WAS TAKEN under an international agreement -- signed by the United States, Russia and other nations -- known as "the convention for protection of submarine cables of 1884." This agreement, the Defense Department says, authorizes investigations by naval VESSELS of other ships "suspected of damaging and interfering with cables under the high seas. [trawlers sometimes cut cables by accident, during the course of fishing activities.] [Yesterday Western Union reported that three of its ten cables were broken -- and one cable of the American Telephone and Telegraph company also was SEVERED.]

~~7:45 [redacted] LeSueur-Picker~~
~~2/28/59~~

~~[redacted]~~

For all practical purposes, the Moscow talks between British Prime Minister MacMillan and Soviet Premier Khrushchev ended today -- on a very bleak note. There will be a final meeting on Monday -- to draw-up a formal communique. But the actual talks wound-up today -- with MacMillan warning Khrushchev that any interference with the western powers' "rights in Berlin" would lead to a dangerous situation." A British spokesman said that "Khrushchev is not budging an inch, and MacMillan is not budging an inch, either." Yesterday President Eisenhower told his news conference that none of the western powers would budge an inch, in preserving their rights ~~[redacted]~~ in Berlin.

~~This latest chill in East-West relations~~ WAS STARTED ~~[redacted]~~ ~~[redacted]~~ ~~by Khrushchev's speech ridiculing the western proposal for a foreign ministers conference~~ ON THE BERLIN CRISIS. ~~[redacted]~~ ~~British sources revealed today that MacMillan~~ was so ~~stung~~ ANGERED by that speech -- that he thought of packing-up then and there, and returning to London. But on second thought, he decided that he might as well follow his original schedule, and see Russia. Despite Khrushchev's speech, a British spokesman says that Mr. MacMillan does not be~~lieve the soviet leader has closed the door on a foreign ministers'~~ conference. The British spokesman said that Khruschev "left the door open" ~~-- saying that "it was a small door, but the "light" is going through."~~ //

After today's meeting, MacMillan boarded a plane and flew to the Russian city of Kiev. Khruschev was SLATED TO GO ALONG -- but at the last minute he decided to stay in Moscow -- saying he had a tooth that required attention. However, Khrushchev's DIPLOMATIC toothache didn't prevent him from receiving a delegation from Iraq.

The Berlin crisis has touched off serious discussion in Washington. Democratic Senator Dodd of Connecticut -- warning that Russia may start a war over Berlin -- called for an urgent 90-day program to prepare this nation for any eventuality. He also called for swift passage of a resolution supporting the Administration's stand on Berlin -- THAT any agreement on THAT CITY MUST be part of an over-all settlement of the entire German ISSUE.

Another democrat, chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he was disturbed by reductions in the army -- and other signs pointing to the fact that, instead of strengthening our defenses, "we are going in the opposite direction." ...A third democrat,

Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts -- said this country is approaching a climax in its relations with the Soviet Union -- and that "an increased defense posture" must be part of our preparedness on the Berlin crisis. ..On the other hand, three republican senators said -- after a talk with President Eisenhower, that firm plans have been made to meet any Russian move to force the allies out of Berlin. The three G-O-P senators ~~are~~ were Scott of Pennsylvania, Keating of New York, and Prouty of Vermont. Keating added that he found no trace of gloom in the President's attitude toward Berlin.

Secretary of State Dulles called three top state department officials to Walter Reed [redacted] Hospital today -- and conferred with them for an hour or more on the Berlin ~~problem~~ CASE. It was the longest and largest meeting Mr. Dulles has taken part in since he entered [redacted] hospital on February tenth. Those present were: Acting Secretary Christian Herter -- deputy undersecretary Robert Murphy -- and assistant secretary Livingston Merchant.

Mr. Dulles had another X-ray treatment [redacted] today -- and a spokesman said the treatments, which were started last Friday, would continue for another two or three weeks. His [redacted] personal secretary, Phyllis Bernau, said ~~[redacted]~~ Mr. Dulles is counting on overcoming his condition sufficiently ~~and~~ TO get~~[redacted]~~ back to his desk.

55

The government of the British territory of Southern Rhodesia today declared a "state of emergency" and outlawed the African National Congress. From 250 to 5-hundred AFRICANS were arrested -- many of them leaders in the native movement aimed at breaking white political control of the area. They were CHARGED WITH trying to undermine the loyalty of the government's African employes. Under the state of emergency, the government can detain anyone for a month. It also sets a curfew and forbids gatherings of more than three persons.

~~In Cairo, World Bank President Eugene Black has announced that a British-Egyptian financial settlement is ready to be signed -- probably on Saturday. The agreement is designed to settle claims and counter-claims resulting from the British-French invasion of Suez in 1956. Under it, Britain will release Egypt's sterling balances, and Egypt will pay 77-million dollars for property it nationalized.~~

An explosion rocked Britain's big H-bomb factory at Aldermaston -- 45 miles west of London, today -- killing two men and injuring another. The blast shook windows of homes two miles away. Officials said it was caused by conventional explosives -- and THAT there was no RADIATION DANGER. It was the sixth accident at the plant in the past four years.

Cuba has asked the Dominican republic to arrest eight high officials of the [redacted] Batista regime -- on charges of robbery and misuse of public funds. All eight are in exile in the Dominican Republic, together with Batista. So far, the Cuban government has tried, but failed to obtain the extradition of [redacted]. The ousted President

Republican Representative Bennett of Michigan has introduced a bill to regulate the television networks. Bennet says that, under present law, television networks "have no responsibility" for balanced programming. He says his bill outlines certain steps that should be taken to require the networks to meet what he calls "the public interest test."

The House Commerce Committee has approved a four-year, 297 million dollar program of federal aid for airports. It's about one Hundred ~~100~~-million dollars more than the President requested -- but about one Hundred and 65 MILLION ~~165~~ [redacted] dollars less than provided in a measure approved by the Senate. Last year, the President vetoed a bill similar to the senate version.

President Eisenhower has named Clare Boothe Luce to be Ambassador to Brazil. The wife of the TIME-LIFE PUBLISHER [redacted] was Ambassador to Italy from 1953 to 1957. If confirmed by the Senate, as expected, she will succeed Ellis Briggs -- who may be assigned to Greece.

92

The men's tailor's of London were described as gleeful, when their elegant Prime Minister MacMillan donned a tall, gray Astrakhan hat, for his mission to Moscow... They hoped it might "catch on," as a new style.. But it's now most unlikely to become as notorious as Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's umbrella.. There's seems little danger, that Mr. MacMillan's trip to Moscow will recall the [redacted] mission of Neville Chamberlain to Munich, [redacted] 20 years ago...

Tomorrow does mark the half-way point, in elapsed time, since Kruschev's [redacted]s november 27th declaration, that in six months, West Berlin's communications would be "handed over" to the East Germans..

TODAY [redacted] the first western exploration of Moscow's attitude has apparantly resulted in a complete stand-off.., With American, BRITISH [redacted] and RUSSIAN [redacted] spokesman all repeating the same phrase.. "We will not budge an inch.."

No diplomat in modern times [redacted] has had the rug pulled-out from under him like Prime Minister MacMillan... [redacted] Premier Kruschev's [redacted] public speech in the very midst of the Britisher's visit, rejecting a foreign minister's conference, was a STUNNING BLOW.

IT was hardly calculated to endear Premier Kruschev to MacMillan or to the British people, who have an acute sense of the traditions of diplomatic protocol. // No matter how strong Mr. MacMillan's labor PARTY opposition may be in Britain, politics on that "influential" little island, have a way of stopping at the water's edge.. //

Its to be remembered that when Premier Kruschev made his state visit to Britain three years ago, he TOO fared badly. AT A luncheon tended him by labor party members of the House of Commons. They insisted upon asking him some awkward questions about the treatment of FELLOW socialists behind the iron curtain.

It may be that Premier Kruschev, was evening a few scores by his brutal diplomatic treatment of PRIME MINISTER MACMILLAN. .... And yet, although Macmillan's mission to Moscow has ended in a frigid atmosphere, it MAY be wrong to say that his trip has been valueless..

It's an old rule of diplomacy and OF negotiating that few important compromises are ever made at the preliminary bargaining sessions... The big breaks rarely come until the deadline IS REACHED. IS REACHED.

Before he left for Moscow, Mr. MacMillan described his visit as a "reconnaissance mission." He was not prepared to negotiate over the heads of his NATO allies, but to bring back information on the Soviet attitude. In a way, his visit was not unlike that of Deputy Premier Mikoyan to this country. AND [redacted]... As we recall, Mr. Mikoyan left Washington, without rejoicing at the official attitude..

ONE [redacted] explanation of Mikoyan's visit to this country was that he was trying to go over the heads of our government to TRY TO cultivate [redacted] a friendly atmosphere toward Russia... Premier Kruschev's undiplomatic treatment of Prime Minister MacMillan, may have been still another RUSSIAN [redacted] attempt to go over the heads of western officialdom, [redacted] in the hope of bringing public pressure on their polities.. This is a familiar move by communist leaders, since they are apparently convianced by their own propaganda, that every free country squirms under the yoke of [redacted] what the communists call: "the ruling circles.."

NOW [redacted] This reporter was aware of rumors, mainly from French and German sources, that the British were the least firm of the western allies, on their attitude toward Berlin and the East german regime.

These may have come about Because of Mr. MacMillan's nation-wide broadcast a year ago, in which he proposed that the West seek a "solemn pact of non-aggression" with Russia, as the first step in relieving world tension. This caused some uneasiness among Britain's allies at the time..

Premier Kruschev made mention of such a long-term non-aggression pact with Britain, during his recent speech bidiculing a foreign minister's conference on Berlin.. But there is no indication that MacMillan took him up on it.. In fact, Mr. MacMillan is described as so stung by Kruchev's treatment, that the British Prime Minister now emerges as a western figure capable of dealing with the Russians, without having the word "Munich" thrust at him... One of Secretary of State Dulles's great values is that he would be able to offer concessions to the Russians over Germany, without appearing weak either to the Russians or to the West... It would be difficult for a successor to Mr. Dulles to do this.

But if nothing else happened in Moscow this week, Prime Minister MacMillan will return to The WEST, with a new reputation for being tough with the Russians..

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news....(pause) first a word from George Bryan.. ON THE WEATHER.

President Eisenhower issued a proclamation today, calling for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the signing of the North Atlantic treaty. ..The President said the NATO organization of 15 countries is a "mainstay of "peace", and a "shield" of freedom..

Mr. Eisenhower said the NATO treaty " has resulted in the collaboration for the common defense, and in political collaboration among the North Atlantic peoples, [redacted] to a degree unprecedented in history..."

This is Larry LeSueur (goodnite.)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FEBRUARY 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening everyone. Here's what happened today:

An international incident involving this country and Russia developed today 120 miles northeast of Newfoundland. At that point in the Atlantic Ocean, U.S. Navy men of the radar-picket ship Roy D. Hale boarded the Soviet trawler Novorossisk---to investigate the recent breaking of four transatlantic cables. The Americans boarded the Russian ship about noon, and left it shortly after six o'clock tonight. During that time, planes from the U.S. Naval air station at Argentia, Newfoundland, were flying over the area. Afterward, the American vessel headed toward Argentia, and the Russian ship proceeded in a northerly direction. The boarding action was taken under an international agreement---signed by the United States, Russia and other nations---known as "the convention for protection of submarine cables of 1884." This agreement, the Defense Department says, authorizes investigations by naval vessels of other ships suspected of damaging and interfering with cables under the high seas. Trawlers sometimes cut cables by accident, during the course of fishing activities. Yesterday, Western Union reported that three of its ten cables were broken---and one cable of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company also was severed.

For all practical purposes, the Moscow talks between British Prime Minister Macmillan and Soviet Premier Khrushchev ended today---on a very bleak note. There will be a final meeting on Monday...to draw up a formal communique. But the actual talks wound up today with Macmillan warning Khrushchev that any interference with the western powers' rights in Berlin would lead to a dangerous situation." A British spokesman said that "Khrushchev is not budging an inch, and Macmillan is not budging an inch, either." Yesterday President Eisenhower told his news conference that none of the western powers would budge an inch, in preserving their rights in Berlin.

After today's meeting, Macmillan boarded a plane and flew to the Russian city of Kiev. Khrushchev was slated to go along, but at the last minute, he decided to stay in Moscow---saying he had a tooth that required attention. However, Khrushchev's diplomatic toothache didn't prevent him from receiving a delegation from Iraq.

The Berlin crisis has touched off serious discussion in Washington. Democratic Senator Dodd of Connecticut---warning that Russia may start a war over Berlin---called for an urgent 90-day program to prepare this nation for any eventuality. He also called for swift passage of a resolution supporting the Administration's stand on Berlin---that any agreement on that city must be part of an over-all settlement of the entire German issue.

Another democrat, Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he was distrubed by reduction in the army---and other signs pointing to the fact that, instead of strengthening our defenses, "we are going in the opposite direction." A third democrat, Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts said this country is approaching a climax in its relations with the Soviet Union and that "an increased defense posture" must be part of our preperedness on the Berlin crisis. On the other hand, three republican senators said, after a talks with President Eisenhower, that firm plans have been made to meet any Russian move to force the allies our of Berlin. The three G.O.P. senators were Scott of Pennsylvania, Keating of New York, and Prouty of Vermont. Keating added that he found no trace of gloom in the President's attitude toward Berlin

Secretary of State Dulles called three top state department officials to Walter Reed Hosptial today, and conferrred with them for an hour or more on the Berlin case. It was the longest and largest meeting Mr. Dulles has taken part in since he entered hospital on February tenth. Those present were: Acting Secretary Christian Herter, Deputy Undersecretary Robert Murphy, and Assistant Secretary Livingston Merchant.

Mr. Dulles had another X-Ray treatment today---and a spokesman said the treatments, which were started last Friday, would continue for another two or three weeks. His personal secretary, Phyllis Bernau said Mr. Dulles is counting on overcoming his condition sufficently to get back to his desk.

The government of the British territory of Southern Rhodesia today declared a state of emergency and outlawed the African National Congress. From 250 to 500 Africans were arrested---many of them leaders in the native movement aimed at breaking white political control of the area. They were charged with trying to undermine the loyalty of the government's African employees. Under the state of emergency, the government can detain anyone for a month. It also sets a curfew and forbids gatherings of more than three persons.

An explosion rocked Britain's big H-Bomb factory at Aldermaston, 45 miles west of London today---killing two men and injuring another. The blast shook windows of homes two miles away. Officials said it was caused by conventional explosives---and that there was no radiation danger. It was the sixth accident at the plant in the past four years.

Republican Representative Bennet of Michigan has introduced a bill to regulate the television networks. Bennet says that, under present law, television networks "have no responsibility" for balanced programming. He says his bill outlines certain steps that should be taken to require the networks to meet what he calls "the public interest test."

President Eisenhower has named Clare Boothe Luce to be Ambassador to Brazil. The wife of the Time and Life publisher was Ambassador to Italy from 1953 to 1957. If confirmed by the Senate, as expected, she will succeed Ellis Briggs---who may be assigned to Greece.

The men's tailors of London were described as gleeful, when their elegant Prime Minister Macmillan donned a tall, gray Astrakhan hat for his mission to Moscow. They hoped it might catchon, as a new style. But it's now most unlikely to become as notorious as Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's umbrella. There seems little danger that Mr. Macmillan's trip to Moscow will recall the mission of Neville Chamberlain to Munich 20 years ago.

Tomorrow does mark the half-way point in elapsed time since Khrushchev's November 27th declaration, that in six months, West Berlin's communications would be handed over to the East Germans.

Today the first western exploration of Moscow's attitude has apparently resulted in a complete stand-off. With American, British and Russian spokesmen all repeating the same phrase, "We will not budge an inch."

No diplomat in modern times has had the rug pulled out from under him like Prime Minister Macmillan. Premier Khrushchev's public speech in the very midst of the Britisher's visit, rejecting a foreign ministers' conference was a stunning blow. It was hardly calculated to endear Premier Khrushchev to Macmillan or to the British people, who have an acute sense of the traditions of diplomatic protocol. No matter how strong Mr. Macmillan's labor party opposition may be in Britain, politics on that influential little island have a way of stopping at the water's edge.

It's to be remembered that when Premier Khrushchev made his state visit to Britain three years ago, he too fared badly. At a luncheon tended him by labor party members of the House of Commons, they insisted upon asking him some awkward questions about the treatment of fellow socialists behind the iron curtain.

It may be that Premier Khrushchev was evening a few scores by his brutal diplomatic treatment of Prime Minister Macmillan. And yet, although Macmillan's mission to Moscow has ended in a frigid atmosphere, it may be wrong to say that his trip has been valueless.

It's an old rule of diplomacy and of negotiating that few important compromises are ever made at the preliminary bargaining sessions. The big breaks rarely come until the deadline is reached. Before he left for Moscow,

Mr. Macmillan described his visit as a "reconnaissance mission." He was not prepared to negotiate over the heads of his NATO allies, but to bring back information on the Soviet attitude. In a way, his visit was not unlike that of Deputy Premier Mikoyan to this country. And as we recall, Mr. Mikoyan left Washington without rejoicing at the official attitude.

One explanation of Mikoyan's visit to this country was that he was trying to go over the heads of our government to try to cultivate a friendly atmosphere toward Russia...Premier Khrushchev's undiplomatic treatment of Prime Minister Macmillan may have been still another Russian attempt to go over the heads of western officialdom, in the hope of bringing public pressure on their policies. This is a familiar move by communist leaders, since they are apparently convinced by their own propaganda,tthat every free country squirms under the yoke of what the communists call: "The ruling circles."

Now this reporter was aware of rumors, mainly from French and German sources, that the British were the least firm of the western allies, on their atttiude toward Berlin and the East German regime.

These may have come about because of Mr. Macmillan's nation-wide broadcast a year ago, in which he proposed that the West seek a "solemn pact of non-aggression" with Russia, as the first step in relieving world tension. This caused some uneasiness among Britain's allies at the time.

Premier Khrushchev made mention of such a long-term non-aggression pact with Britain during his recent speech ridculing a foreign ministers' conference on Berlin. But there is no indication that Macmillan took him up on it. In fact, Mr. Macmillan is described as so stung by Khrushchev's treatment that the British Prime Minister now emerges as a western figure capable of dealing with the Russians, without having the word "Munich" thrust at him. One of Secretary of State Dulles' great values is that he would be able to offer concessions to the Russians over Germany, without appearing weak either to the Russians or to the West. It would be difficult for a successor to Mr. Dulles to do this.

But if nothing else happened in Moscow this week, Prime Minister Macmillan will return to the West with a new reputation for being tough with the Russians.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: President Eisenhower issued a proclamation today, calling for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the signing of the North Atlantic Treaty. The President said the NATO organization of 15 countries is a "mainstay of peace, and a shield of freedom."

Mr. Eisenhower said the NATO treaty "has resulted in collaboration for the common defense, and in political collaboration among the North Atlantic peoples, to a degree unprecendented in history."

This is Larry LeSueur...goodnite.

Good evening everyone. Here's what happened today: 2/27/59 7:45 pm net Picker LeSueur-

British Prime Minister MacMillan told the Russians tonight [redacted] "it is not enough to "wish" for peace or even to "talk" about it -- it is the duty of "all" countries to "work" for it." MACMILLAN made "this" statement in a toast at a formal dinner ending his visit to the UKRAINIAN [redacted] city of Kiev. He went on to say that when misunderstandings arise between nations, it is the "duty" of statesmen to settle them by negotiations -- so as to reduce [redacted] and not [redacted] increase international tension. But, he said, such negotiations "must" be conducted with a "genuine desire" to reach "fair" agreement. The British leader described [redacted] his talks with soviet leaders in the Kremlin as "a valuable preparation for "wider" international negotiations which "must" follow." However, British sources SAY [redacted] that MacMillan ACTUALLY HAS [redacted] given up "hope" of bringing East and West closer together on the Berlin ISSUE, [redacted], in view of [redacted] Premier Khruschev's uncompromising position. A final [redacted] meeting between MacMillan and Khrushchev is scheduled [redacted] in Moscow on Monday -- but this is expected to deal "only" with drafting a formal communique.

Soviet [redacted] deputy Premier Mikoyan, commenting on the Kremlin talks, SAID [redacted] tonight that MacMillan had taken a "tough" line on the German question. Mikoyan said that MacMillan was "possibly" weighed down by his Allied commitments." Mikoyan charged that the western powers want to draw-out negotiations on Berlin by attempting to replace a meeting of chiefs of State with a foreign ministers conference. And he warned that if the western powers do not "conclude" a peace treaty with Germany, Russia will be "compelled" to sign a peace treaty with the EAST GERMAN REGIME.

~~Mikoyan said the Kremlin talks got off to a "good" start, saying that MacMillan had "displayed initiative by advancing several proposals for trade and cultural exchange." But the Soviet deputy premier indicated the talks bogged-down when they got around to the German question.~~

Today marks the halfway point in the six-month notice Russia has given the Big Three western powers to accept the soviet formula for West Berlin. The Russian plan calls for the withdrawal of Allied occupation forces -- and the TURNING OF West Berlin INTO an unarmed, so-called "free city," under POSSIBLE U.N. supervision. What the West Germans themselves think of the situation -- in the light of the apparent failure of the MacMillan Kruschev talks -- is told now by CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser -- reporting direct from Berlin.

(Tape runs 4:05)

ending: "...now back to Larry LeSueur in New York."

In London, British government sources take the view that MacMillan's trip hasn't been a "failure" -- because he didn't expect much to come of it in the first place. They note that MacMillan described his ~~trip~~ Moscow visit in advance as a reconnaissance -- an attempt to learn what was in the minds of the Russian leaders. And even though disagreeing with them, he has found where the soviet leaders stand. The important thing, say the British sources, is that the Prime Minister "tried."

~~In~~ Washington officials ~~[illegible]~~ say they are waiting for the ~~[illegible]~~ Kremlin meeting on Monday -- before making a "final" judgement on the results of MacMillan's visit.

President Eisenhower paid another visit today to Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed ~~[illegible]~~ Hospital. Mr Dulles is AGAIN KEPT ~~[illegible]~~ in close touch with world affairs -- including the Berlin crisis -- while ~~undergoing~~ continuing his weeklong radiation treatments for cancer.

The soviet ~~[illegible]~~ news agency TASS tonight described as an "unlawful act" -- ~~the~~ yesterday's boarding of a Russian trawler 120 miles off the coast of Newfoundland FIN by ~~[illegible]~~ the U.S. NAVY. Earlier, ~~[illegible]~~ Moscow Radio gave ~~a [illegible]~~ A MATTER OF FACT account of ~~the~~ yesterday's boarding action ~~[illegible]~~ -- which was undertaken to investigate the breaking of transatlantic cables. State Department spokesman Lincoln White SAYS the boarding was not a hostile action -- but an investigation clearly provided for under the terms of an 1884 treaty, designed for the protection of underseas cables. After the boarding, the U.S. radar picket ship Roy Hale reported there were "no indications of intentions other than fishing" on the part of the SOVIET vessel.

55

In southern Africa, government forces in Nyasaland used guns and tear gas to break up ANOTHER African demonstration. One African was killed and three wounded. British authorities SAY the trouble started when 2-hundred Africans gathered "outside" a courthouse -- and demanded the release of two African National Congress officials HELD FOR TRIAL.

~~In southern Rhodesia, the British~~ CONTINUED TO ARREST ~~scores of African nationalists.~~

On the Mediterranean island of Malta, thousands of dockyard workers rioted in protest against dismissal notices. The rioters stoned a British admiral, set HUGE fires in the British navy shipyard, and fought an hour-long battle with police. After the rioting, the men went back to work and were sent home at the "usual" quitting time.

Violence also flared in Beirut, capital of Lebanon -- between supporters and opponents of United Arab Republic President Nasser. There was some shooting, and five persons were reported injured. Twenty persons were arrested before order was restored.

75

The democratic national committee -- meeting in Washington -- today picked the city of Los Angeles for its 1960 presidential nominating convention. The committee voted 71 to 35 for the West Coast city after turning down the bids of Philadelphia and Chicago. The decision came at the end of an ARGUING session that lasted five hours. The democrats' "subcommittee" had picked Los Angeles IN January.

Top republican leaders in Philadelphia have asked Harold Stassen to be the G-O-P candidate for mayor this year. Stassen -- formerly President Eisenhower's disarmament advisor -- said he would run if the leaders could prove there was sufficient rank-and-file support for him. He said he would give a definite reply next Wednesday.

New York's republican governor Nelson Rockefeller suffered his first setback today since his election -- when rebel republicans gained enough votes to force a cut in his record two-billion dollar budget The G-O-P defection in the state legislature CLIMAXED mounting opposition to the huge spending program, which calls for 277-million dollars more in taxes.

At Cape Canaveral, United Press International reports that the Army is expected to launch a moon-shot over the weekend. The satellite is described as a gold-plated one. Today the Army sent a Jupiter missile into the skies. The Navy followed with a Polaris test missile -- but officials SAY it may have broken-up soon after launching.

Former Teamster President Dave Beck was sentenced today to five years in prison and fined 60-thousand dollars -- for income tax evasion. Beck was also ordered to pay almost 11-thousand dollars in court costs. In mid-afternoon, Beck posted the money and was released, pending an appeal. In sentencing him, federal district judge George Boldt said, in Tacoma, Washington, that the exposure of Beck's "insatiable greed" was a shocking story. Beck was found guilty of evading almost a quarter of a million dollars in income taxes.

President Eisenhower's top economist, Dr. Raymond J. Saulnier, has predicted a reduction in unemployment to a level close to three-million by next December. He also forecast a 30-billion dollar increase in the nation's production rate this year.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News — First a word from George Bryan on the weather

General Charles de Gaulle of France made it today...The President of the French Republic took his place among the famous personalities of the world, as a wax figure in Madame Tussaud's museum in London..

" We have always tried to have a french statesman in [redacted] the collection", said a spokesman for Madame Tussaud's. "But since the war, french prime minister's changed faster than we could model them."

But now we're convinced President De Gaulle represents a stability which will not be subject to change..

this is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, February 27, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: ... correspondent Ernest Leiser reporting direct from Berlin.

LEISER: The people in power in Western Germany would be taking grim satisfaction from the apparent failure of the MacMillan mission to Moscow, that is, if they weren't so desperately worried about the prospects ahead for Berlin. The appraisal of MacMillan's trip and the Khrushchev speech that so rudely punctuated it is decidedly schizophrenic here in Germany. The old man, 83 year old Chancellor Konrad Adenauer was dead set against the British Prime Minister's expedition in the first place. Adenauer didn't feel that he could afford to say so publicly but he let it leak out that he feared this might be the beginning of a sell-out in Berlin. Adenauer regards the British as the weakest link in the chain of Allied unity on the whole German question and he emphatically did not like the British Prime Minister carrying the ball for the West in the absence of Secretary Dulles. Thus, there was a carious track of relief in the West German Government when Khrushchev's immovable position and diplomatic bad manners made it impossible for MacMillan to (indistinct) concessions even if he hadhad any in mind. Relief has been coupled with another reaction here. There's a german word that has no real equivalent in any other language although the feeling it describes is perhaps not uniquely German, the word is (german word) which means approximately, taking pleasure in somebodyélse's discomforture, and the West Germans have done just that on the MacMillan visit. A not un-typical example was the cartoon in the important newspaper Die Welt today. It shows MacMillan and Khrushchev dancing together, Khryshchev is all bouncing affability, the sick and Chamberlin-like MacMillan is in tears, ~~pu~~ presumably because Khrushchev is tropping all over his feet. But relief and ridicule are fighting against another emotion here and they appear to be losing the fight. The other emotion is just plain fear. The old Chancellor has said that if the Allies stand firm, the Soviets will not permit their East German satellites to risk a war by trying to get the West out of Berlin. But his own subordinates are by no means so certain. This reporter was at a dinner with some West German officials last night and they were asking me with an undercurrent almost of panic in their voices, what happens next, what do we do now? The editor of Der Spiegel, the West German news magazine that takes professional delight in poking its fixed ideas warns the United States this week that Europe - including West Germany would leave us in the lurch if we tried to fight our way into Berlin. At least, he said, we would be deserted unless we had first given East Germany the diplomatic recognition that it demands. Surprisingly, his broaching of the subject that has been (indistinct) in West Germany - even among the Socialist opposition aroused none of the indignation that it would have/just a few months ago. In fact, in the corriders of the Bundashous, where the West German Parliament meets, representatives could be heard this week saying that it may come to that, to at least de facto recognition of East Germany. And, there are some Western diplomats in Germany who also for the first time are raising recognition as a serious possibility. It's realized that the United States or Britain or France could not effectively propose this spurt without German charges again on a sell-out. But, it's felt that the West Germans may be driven to ~~xxx~~ initiate such a proposal themselves/if it reaches a point at which war appears to be the only alternative. It may be too big a switch for Adenauer to make. He has become the symbol of inflexability even to his ~~xxxxx~~ stanchest supporters, but it is likely that he'll be under increasing pressure to deal with East Germany at a government level. In any event, no body in his government has figured out any other solution on the Berlin crisis that the Communists might be disposed to adopt. This is Ernest Leiser in Berlin. Now back to Larry Lesueur in NY.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY ~~THURSDAY,~~ FEBRUARY 27, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening everyone. Here's what happened today:

British Prime Minister Macmillan told the Russians tonight, "It is not enough to wish for peace or even to talk about it---it is the duty of all countries to work for it." Mr. Macmillan made this statement in a toast at a formal dinner ending his visit to the Ukrainian city of Kiev. He went on to say that when misunderstandings arise between nations, it is the duty of statesmen to settle them by negotiations---so as to reduce and not increase international tension. But, he said, such negotiations must be conducted with a genuine desire to reach fair agreement. The British leader described his talks with Soviet leaders in the Kremlin as "a valuable preparation for wider international negotiations which must follow." However, British sources say that Macmillan actually has given up hope of bringing East and West closer together on the Berlin issue, in view of Premier Khrushchev's uncompromising position. A final meeting between Macmillan and Khrushchev is scheduled in Moscow on Monday---but this is expected to deal only with drafting a formal communique.

Soviet deputy Premier Mikoyan commenting on the Kremlin talks said tonight that Macmillan had taken a tough line on the German question. Mikoyan said that Macmillan was "possibly weighed down by his Allied commitments." Mikoyan charged that the western powers want to draw out negotiations on Berlin by attempting to replace a meeting of chiefs of state with a foreign ministers conference. And he warned that if the western powers do not conclude a peace treaty with Germany, Russia will be compelled to sign a peace treaty with the East German regime.

Today marks the halfway point in the six-month notice Russia has given the Big Three western powers to accept the soviet formula for West Berlin. The Russian plan calls for the withdrawal of Allied occupation forces---and the turning of West Berlin into an unarmed, so-called free city, under possible U.N. supervisions. What the West Germans themselves think of the situation---in the light of the apparent failure of the Macmillan Khrushchev talks---is told now by CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reporting direct from Berlin.

LEISER: The people in power in Western Germany would be taking grim satisfaction from the apparent failure of the Macmillan mission to Moscow, that is, if they werem't so desperately worried about the prospects ahead for Berlin. The appraisal of Macmillan's trip and the Khrushchev speech that so rudely punctuated it is decidedly schizophrenic here in Germany. The old man, 83 year old Chancellor Konrad Adenauer was dead set against the British Prime Minister's expedition in the first place. Adenauer didn't feel that he could afford to say so publicly but he let it leak out that he feared this might be the beginning of a sell-out in Berlin. Adenauer regards the British as the weakest link in the chain of Allied unity on the whole German question and he emphatically did not like the British Prime Minister carrying the ball for the West in the absence of Secretary Dulles. Thus, there was a carious track of relief in the West German Government when Khrushchev's immovable position and diplomatic bad manners made it impossible for Macmillan to (indistinct) concessions even if he had had any in mind. Relief has been coupled with another reaction here. There's a German word that has no real equivalent in any other language although the feeling it describes is perhaps not uniquely German, the word is....which means approximately, taking pleasure in somebodyelse's discomforture, and the West Germans have done just that on the Macmillan visit. A not un-typical example was the cartoon in the important newspaper Die Welt today. It shows Macmillan and Khrushchev dancing together, Khrushchev is all bouncing affability, the sick and Chamberlin-like Macmillan is in tears, presumably because Khrushchev is tropping all over his feet. But relief and ridicule are fighting against another emotion here and they appear to be losing the fight. The other emotion is just plain fear. The old Chancellor has said that if the Allies stand firm, the Soviets will not permit their East German satellites to risk a war by trying to get the West out of Berlin. But his own subordinates are by no means so certain. This reporter was at a dinner with some West German officials last night and they were asking me with an under /current almost of panic in their voices, what happens next, what do we do now? The editor of Der Spiegel, the West German news magazine that takes professional delight in poking its fixed ideas warns the United States this week that Europe - including West Germany would leave us in the lurch if we tried to fight our way into Berlin. At least, he said, we would be deserted unless we had first given East Germany the diplomatic recognition that it demands. Surprisingly, his broaching of the subject that has been (indistinct) in West Germany - even among the Socialist opposition aroused none of the indignation that it would have just a few months ago. In fact, in the corridors of the Bundeshaus, where the West German Parliament meets, representatives could be heard this week saying that it may come to that, to at least de facto recognition of East Germany. And, there are some Western diplomats in Germany who also for the first time are raising recognition as a serious possibility. It's realized that the United States or Britain or France could not effectively propose this spurt without German charges again on a sell-out. But, it's felt that the West Germans may be driven to initiate such a proposal themselves if it reaches a point at which war appears to be the only alternative. It may be too big a switch for Adenauer to make. He has become the symbol of inflexibility even to his staunchest supporters, but it is likely that he'll be under increasing pressure to deal with East Germany at a government level. In any event, nobody in his government has figured out any other solution on the Berlin crisis that the Communists might be disposed to accept. This is Ernest Leiser in Berlin. Now back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: President Eisenhower paid another visit today to Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed Hospital. Mr. Dulles again kept in close touch with world affairs---including the Berlin crisis---while continuing his weeklong radiation treatment for cancer.

The Soviet news agency Tass tonight described as an unlawful act, yesterday's boarding of a Russian trawler 120 miles off the coast of Newfoundland by the U.S. Navy. Earlier, Moscow Radio gave a matter of fact account of yesterday's boarding action---which was undertaken to investigate the breaking of transatlantic cables. State Department spokesman Lincoln White says the boarding was not a hostile action--but an investigation clearly provided for under the terms of an 1884 treaty designed for the protection of underseas cables. After the boarding, the U.S. radar picket ship Roy Hale reported there was "no indication of intentions other than fishing" on the part of the Soviet vessel.

In southern Africa, government forces in Nyasaland used guns and tear gas to break up another African demonstration. One African was killed and three wounded. British authorities say the trouble started when 2-hundred Africans gathered outside a courthouse---and demanded the release of two African National Congress officials held for trial.

On the Mediterranean island of Malta, thousands of dockyard workers rioted in protest against dismissal notices. The rioters stoned a British admiral, set huge fires in the British navy shipyard, and fought an hour-long battle with police. After the rioting, the men went back to work and were sent home at the usual quitting time.

Violence also flared in Beirut, capital of Lebanon---between supporters and opponents of United Arab Republic President Nasser. There was some shooting, and five persons were reported injured. Twenty persons were arrested before order was restored.

The Democratic National Committee, meeting in Washington, today picked the city of Los Angeles for its 1960 presidential nominating convention. The committee voted 71 to 35 for the West Coast city after turning down the bids of Philadelphia and Chicago. The decision came at the end of an arguing session that lasted five hours. The Democrats subcommittee had picked Los Angeles in January.

Top Republican leaders in Philadelphia have asked Harold Stassen to be the GOP candidate for mayor this year. Stassen, formerly President Eisenhower's disarmament advisor, said he would run if the leaders could prove there was sufficient rank and file support for him. He said he would give a definite reply next Wednesday.

New York's Republican governor Nelson Rockefeller suffered his first setback today since his election---when rebel Republicans gained enough votes to force a cut in his record two-billion dollar budget. The GOP defection in the state legislature climaxed mounting opposition to the huge spending program, which calls for 277-million dollars more in taxes.

At Cape Canaveral, United Press International reports that the Army is expected to launch a moon shot over the weekend. The satellite is described as a gold-plated one. Today the Army sent a Jupiter missile into the skies. The Navy followed with a Polaris test missile, but officials say it may have broken up soon after launching.

Former Teamster President Dave Beck was sentenced today to five years in prison and fined 60-thousand dollars for income tax evasion. Beck was also ordered to pay almost 11-thousand dollars in court costs. In mid-afternoon, Beck posted the money and was released, pending an appeal. In sentenging him, federal district judge George Boldt said, in Tacoma, Washington, that the exposure of Beck's "insatiable greed"was a shocking story. Beck was found guilty of evading almost a quarter of a million dollars in income taxes.

President Eisenhower's top economist, Dr. Raymond Saulnier, has predicted a reduction in unemployment to a level close to three million by next December. He also forecast a 30-billion dollar increase in the nation's production rate this year.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a foot note to the news. First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: General Charles de Gaulle of France made it today...The President of the French Republic took his place among the famous personalities of the world, as a wax figure in Madame Tussaud's museum in London. "We have always tried to have a Fencch statesman in the collection," said a spokesman for Madame Tussaud's. Bu "But since the war, French prime ministers changed faster than we could model them." "But now,"he said,'we're convinced President de Gaule represents a stability which will not be subject to change.

This is Larry LeSueur. Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Mon., March 2, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Russia agreed "conditionally" to a foreign ministers meeting on Berlin...the new position WAS revealed in a series of formal notes delivered in Moscow to the ambassadors of the United States, Britain, FRANCE and WEST GERMANY.

Only last week, in a "political" speech, Premier Khrushchev called for a summit conference...claiming that any meeting AT the foreign ministers level would be "a waste of time." He STILL says a "summit conference" would be preferable. But he suggests that if the West is "not ready" for a meeting of heads of government, then let's have a foreign ministers conference next month. After saying this, Khrushchev lays down his conditions. One is that the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, Russia and France be joined by the ministers of Czechoslovakia and Poland. so that an equal number of Communist and non-Communist STATES would be represented. Another condition is that East and West Germany be allowed to attend the talks and have "active participation"--whatever that means. We have suggested that representatives of East and West Germany be permitted to attend in an "advisory" capacity. Khrushchev agrees that either VIENNA OR GENEVA would be a SUITABLE place for the foreign ministers to meet. And he proposes a meeting of "not more than two or three months." Khrushchev warns AGAIN that any attempt to apply force in the Berlin situation would result in war. a war, he says, "a hundred times more serious in its consequences than all previous wars." And he insists that the problem of German reunification "must" be solved by the Germans themselves. According to the summary of the Soviet note--as broadcast by Moscow radio--Russia is proposing that the foreign ministers conference limit itself to the problem of Berlin and the question of a German peace treaty... then if headway is made in dealing with THESE problems, that a summit meeting be held to deal with the broader questions of European security, such as disarmament and the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests.

—>

The Soviet Union also sent a note today to the East German Communists, and there are reports that a separate peace treaty between Russia and East Germany may be in the works. The text of "this" note has not been DIVULGED. But Premier Khrushchev IS going to East Germany on Wednesday to make a speech at the Leipzig trade fair. His visit is expected to last three or four days. //

A communique will be issued in Moscow tomorrow.//..summing-up the talks by British Prime Minister Macmillan AND The Soviet leaders. Mr. Macmillan saw Khrushchev today for nearly two hours//..and a British spokesman says the atmosphere of the meeting was "all honey" and flowers." At a farewell reception tonight, Khrushchev said that his talks with the British prime minister had taken place at "different temperatures"...but "he thought" they had been "worthwhile." Macmillan expressed hope that their conversations would help clarify the negotiations yet to come.

Prime Minister Macmillan also spoke to the Russian people over television.//.and called for a restoration of confidence between their two countries. "Words," he said, "are not enough." He warned against acts of "aggrandizement"...and said, "Let us work together with patience and understanding."

→

Secretary of State Dulles has had all available text of the Russian note to the United States delivered to him at Walter Reed Hospital. Mr. Dulles received further radiation treatment today. And a medical bulletin says his progress is "satisfactory".

The State Department has not commented on the Soviet note...pending careful study.

The United Arab Republic has agreed to give Britain 77-million dollars in compensation for British properties seized by Egypt after the Anglo-French invasion of 1956. Britain, in turn, will release more than 200-million dollars in Egyptian assets "frozen" SINCE that time, in London. Terms of the agreement were announced today in the British House of Commons.

The Iranian government has informed Russia that it regards as "no longer valid" those articles of a 38-year-old treaty giving Soviet troops the right to enter Iran under certain conditions. Iran is a member of the Baghdad Pact. and, at the present time, it is negotiating a new defense agreement with the United States.

In Algeria, a battle between French troops and Algerian rebel forces is reported raging IN its third day. French authorities say the action began when a rebel unit was discovered shortly after it entered Algeria through the electrified barbed wire strung along the Tunisian frontier. The French report 88 Algerian nationalists "put out of action" thus far. French losses are listed as four dead and one wounded.

Secretary of Defense McElroy testified today before the House Space Committee. said that the United States does not "visualize" a defense against incoming ballistic missiles "for some years." Meantime, he said, the Administration is developing a defense system on a top-priority basis...one based, he said, on the Nike-Zeus. McElroy said he turned down the Army's request for 730-million dollars with which to start production on the Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile---not in order to economize---but because the complicated weapon is not yet ready, according to the best scientific advice. The House Democratic leader, John McCormack, asked McElroy whether it is still United States policy not to strike the first blow in any future war. McElroy said "yes." Then he added, "Whether that always will be true is another matter." Mr. McElroy indicated that he may step down as defense secretary sometime before the END OF THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION

A~~dministration~~on. He said, "I do not plan to leave office unless the President decides that he wants me to in the next few months."

At Cape Canaveral, Army missilemen reportedly will try again tonight to launch a rocket in the direction of the moon. Technical difficulties, said to have consisted of a power failure, forced the Army to call off the "shoot" scheduled for last night.

Northern California was jolted by an earthquake a little more than an hour ago...but there is no report of any serious damage. Windows were rattled over an area [redacted] extending several hundred square miles.

WCD

Soviet Russia's agreement to a foreign minister's conference on Berlin, is not likely to cause any dancing in the streets in Washington, yet this minor shifting of the soviet stand on Berlin, at least gives us a little more TIME in which to breathe..

The Russian proposal that a foreign minister's conference start in April, and last perhaps two or three months, would seem to advance the May 27th deadline for turning over soviet occupation functions in Berlin to the East Germans. The OFFICIAL SOVIET NOTE, as broadcast by Moscow radio, make no mention of the six months deadline, orginally fixed by Premier Kruschev last November 27th.. NOR did today's soviet note apparently spell out whether that deadline could be ignored..

Nevertheless, by this unusual suggestion of such a long foreign minister's session, the Kremlin appears to have called at least a temporary stop in the Berlin count-down. Just when the fuze had sputtered HALF-WAY DOWN ITS SIX-MONTH LENGTH.

Premier Kruschev's reasons for temporarily halting the count-down on Berlin, are CLOAKED as usual...But this show of FLEXIBILITY is not a novel tactic BY THE RUSSIANS.

Its part of the [redacted] "familiar" war of nerves... FOR By taking some of the anxiety out of the international situation, [redacted] Kruschev gets a cheaply-won reputation for being "reasonable" [redacted] even appears to be showing some solicitude over the illness of Secretary of State Dulles..

[redacted] Yet what is probably more certain "IS" that the [redacted] Kremlin realized that Premier Kruschev's so-called "political speech" to his Moscow consitituents, was putting a little more "chill" into the cold war" than the Russians actually want at this time..

[redacted] The basic facts of the Berlin situation [redacted] have not changed.. Moscow still maintains the diplomatic initiative... This country didn't want a foreign minister's conference on Berlin, anymore than it wants a summit conference.. We agreed to propose a foreign minister's meeting before Mr. Dulles went to the Hospital, only at the behest of our western allies. (who live closer to Russia than we do). And [redacted] the Western powers agreed, only because they were reacting to a soviet initiative..

As far as the West is concerned, the four-power [redacted] occupation of Berlin is not the "most" satisfactory solution, fourteen years after the end of the war.. But at least we can live with it..

[redacted]

The soviet Union IS, in effect, saying that it cannot abide with THAT situation whereby the NATO forces are in the center of Europe,... Because this represents a constant threat to their control of The eastern satellites, and provides a CONTINUAL source of encouragement TO the captured peoples..

Moreover, Mr. Mikoyan recently said in so many words, that Russia fears a west Germany armed with atomic weapons... The Russians freely concede their traditional fear of a Germany armed against them..

Premier Kruschev's previous anger at Prime Minister MacMillan was also expressed by his first deputy Mikoyan... IT WAS chiefly because MacMillan offered no counter-proposals to the Russian demands that we get out of Berlin... Mikoyan ascribed Mr. MacMillan's position as perhaps due to the influence of his western allies... In other words, Mikoyan was blaming MacMillan FOR TAKING THE COURSE OF tactics laid down by Secretary of State Dulles...

Mr. Dulles's long experience as a negotiator dictated a western stand WHERE-IN WE WOULD TALK to the Russians, but not concede anything. IN ADVANCE. For the Western powers to offer any counter-proposals to the Kruschev demands, would mean they were agreeing in advance that the situation in Berlin "should" be changed..

And this t[redacted] The West is not prepared to do...For to agree to make changes in West Berlin, while the Russian's refuse [redacted] any changes in East Berlin, would simply mean that we were agreeing to open negotiations on our own property, THUS leaving the Russians with everything to gain, and nothing to lose..

[redacted] Its only fair to say at this point, that [redacted] Prime Minister MacMillan's "mission to Moscow," has turned from APPARENT failure to [redacted] at least "partial" success...Few diplomats have been subjected to such a "war of nerves" since the days of Adolf Hitler...At stake, was not only western UNITY, but the British Prime Minister's own position, in the light of the [redacted] COMING British elections... The Russians obviously [redacted] WOULD gain internationally from MacMillan's defeat by the British labor party. since the British socialists have already made known they favor some of the communist proposals for AN atom-free neutral-zone in Central Europe..

But MacMillan's UNSHAKABLE firmness in the face of "staggering" diplomatic [redacted] insults, has carried him and the West through at least one Russian test of strength. [redacted] went TO THE [redacted]al.. This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... (cue) First a word from George Bryan on the westher.

In a farewell broadcast in Moscow, [redacted] Prime Minister MacMillan gave the russians some typically under-stated British philosophy, [redacted] ~~free elections~~... Said:"[redacted]", Ive been a candidate in TEN Parliamentary elections. Sometimes, I won, sometimes, I lost. ~~When I won I thought to myself, the system was excellent. When I lost~~, perhaps ~~I had my doubts.~~ All the same, he said, our system works well, ~~and [redacted]~~..Its fundamentals are "free and secret elections, and the freedom to discuss and argue.." This system, he pointed out, has spread thru "many" parts of the world..

this is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Russia agreed conditionally to a foreign ministers meeting on Berlin... the new position was revealed in a series of formal notes delivered in Moscow to the ambassadors of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany. Only last week, in a political speech, Premier Khrushchev called for a summit conference... claiming that any meeting at the foreign ministers level would be "a waste of time." He still says a summit conference would be preferable. But he suggests that if the West is not ready for a meeting of heads of government, then let's have a foreign ministers conference next month. After saying this, Khrushchev lays down his conditions. One is that the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, Russia anf France be joined by the ministers of Czechoslovakia and Poland...so, that an equal number of Communist and non-Communist states would be represented. Another condition is that East and West Germany be allowed to attend the talks and have "active participation"---whatever that means. We have suggested that representatives of East and West Germany be permitted to attend in an "advisory" capacity. Khrushchev agrees that either Vienna or Geneva would be a suitable place for the foreign ministers to meet. And he proposes a meeting of "not more than two or three months." Khrushchev warns again that any attempt to apply force in the Berlin situation would result in war...a war, he says, "a hundred times more serious in its consequences than all previous wars." And he insists that the problem of German reunification must be solved by the Germans themselves. According to the summary of the Soviet note---as broadcast by Moscow radio--- Russia is proposing that the foreign ministers conference limit itself to the problem of Berlin and the question of a German peace treaty...then if headway is made in dealing with these problems, that a summit meeting be held to deal with the broader questions of European security, such as disarmament and the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests.

The Soviet Union also sent a note today to the East German Communists, and there are reports that a separate peace treaty between Russia and East Germany may be in the works. The text of this note has not been divulged. But Premier Khrushchev is going to East Germany on Wednesday to make a speech at the Leipzig trade fair. His visit is expected to last three or four days.

A communique will be issued in Moscow tomorrow....summing up the talks by British Prime Minister Macmillan and the Soviet leaders. Mr. Macmillan saw Khrushchev today for nearly two hours...and a British spokesman says the atmosphere of the meeting was "all honey and flowers." At a farewell reception tonight, Khrushchev said that his talks with the British prime minister had taken place at "different temperatures"...but he thought they had been worthwiile. Macmillan expressed hope that their conversations would help clarify the negotiations yet to come.

Prime Minister Macmillan also spoke to the Russian people over television... and called for a restoration of confidence between their two countries. "Words," he said, "are not enough." He warned against acts of aggrandizement...and said, "Let us work together with patience and understanding."

Secretary of State Dulles has had all available text of the Russian note to the United States delivered to him at Walter Reed Hospital. Mr. Dulles received further radiation treatment today. And a medical bulletin says his progress is "satisfactory."

The State Department has not commented on the Soviet note...pending careful study.

The United Arab Republic has agreed to give Britain 77-million dollars in compensation for British properties seized by Egypt after the Anglo-French invasion of 1956. Britain, in turn, will release more than 200-million dollars in Egyptian assets "frozen" since that time in London. Terms of the agreement were announced today in the British House of Commons.

The Iranian government has informed Russia that it regards as no longer valid those articles of a 38-year old treaty giving Soviet troops the right to enter Iran under certain conditions. Iran is a member of the Baghdad Pact...and, at the present time, it is negotiating a new defense agreement with the United States.

In Algeria, a battle between French troops and Algerian rebel forces is reported raging in its third day. French authorities say the action began when a rebel unit was discovered shortly after it entered Algeria through the electrified barbed wire strung along the Tunisian frontier. The French report 88 Algerian nationalists "put out of action" thus far. French losses are listed as four dead and one wounded.

Secretary of Defense McElroy testified today before the House Space Committee...said that that the United States does not "visualize" a defense against incoming ballistic missiles "for some years." Meantime, he said, the Adminis- tration is developing a defense system on a top priority basis...one based, he said, on the Nike-Zeus. McElroy said he turned down the Army's request for 730-million dollars with which to start production on the Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile...not in order to economize...but because the complicated weapon is not yet ready according to the best scientific advice. The House Democratic leader, John McCormack, asked McElroy whether it is still United States policy not to strike the first blow in any future war. McElroy said yes. Then he added, "Whether that always will be true is another matter." Mr. McElroy indicated that he may step down as defense secretary sometime before the end of the Eisenhower Administration. He said, "I don't plan to leave office unless the President decides that he wants me to in the next few months."

At Cape Canaveral, Army missilemen reportedly will try again tonight to launch a rocket in the direction of the moon. Technical difficulties, said to have consisted of power failure, forced the Army to call off the "shoot" scheduled for last night.

Northern California was jolted by an earthquake a little more than an hour ago...but there is no report of any serious damage. Windows were rattled over an area extending several hundred square miles.

Well Soviet Russia's agreement to a foreign ministers' conference on Berlin is not likely to cause any dancing in the streets in Washington; yet this minor shifting of the Soviet stand on Berlin, at least gives us a little more time in which to breathe.

The Russian proposal that a foreign ministers' conference start in April, and last perhaps two or three months, would seem to advance the May 27th deadline for turning over Soviet occupation functions in Berlin to the East Germans. The official Soviet note as broadcast by Moscow radio makes no mention of the six months deadline, originally fixed by Premier Khrushchev last November 27th...nor did today's Soviet note apparently sepll out whether that deadline could be ignored.

Nevertheless, by this unusual suggestion of such a long foreign ministers' session, the Kremlin appears to have called at least a temporary stop in the Berlin count-down...just when the fuse had sputtered half-way down its six-month length.

Premier Khrushchev's reasons for temporarily halting the count-down on Berlin are cloaked as usual. But this show of flexibility is not a novel tactic by the Russians.

It's part of the familiar war of nerves for by taking some of the anxiety out of the international situation, Khrushchev gets a cheaply won reputation for being "reasonable" even appears to be showing some solicitude over the illness of Secretary of State Dulles.

Yet what is probably more certain is, that the Kremlin realized that Premier Khrushchev's so-called "political speech" to his Moscow constituents, was putting a little more "chill" into the cold war" than the Russians actually want at this time.

The basic facts of the Berlin situation have not changed. Moscow still maintains the diplomatic initiative. This country didn't want a foreign ministers' conference on Berlin, anymore than it wants a summit conference. We agreed to propose a foreign ministers'meeting before Mr. Dulles went to the hospital, only at the behest of our western allies...who live closer to Russia than we do. And the Western powers agreed, only because they were reacting to a Soviet initiative.

As far as the West is concerned, the four-power occupation of Berlin is not the most satisfactory solution, fourteen years after the end of the war. But at least we can live with it.

The Soviet Union is, in effect, saying that it cannot abide with that situation whereby the NATO forces are in the center of Europe, because this represents a constant threat to their control of the eastern satellites, and provides a continual source of encouragement to the captured peoples.

Moreover, Mr. Mikoyan recently said in so many words, that Russia fears a West Germany armed with atomic weapons...the Russians freely concede their traditional fear of a Germany armed against them.

Premier Khrushchev's previous anger at Prime Minister Macmillan was also expressed by his first deputy Mikoyan. It was chiefly because Macmillan offered no counter-proposals to the Russian demands that we get out of Berlin...Mikoyan ascribed Mr. Macmillan's position as perhaps due to the influence of his western allies. In other words, Mikoyan was blaming Macmillan for taking the course of tactics laid down by Secretary of State Dulles.

Mr. Dulles' long experience as a negotiator dictated a western stand wherein we would talk to the Russians, but not concede anything in advance. For the Western powers to offer any counter-propssals to the Khrushchev demands, would mean they were agreeing in advance that the situation in Berlin should be changed. And this the West is not prepared to do. For to agree to make changes in West Berlin, while the Russians refuse any changes in East Berlin, would simply mean that we were agreeing to open negotiations on our own property thus leaving the Russians with everything to gain and nothing to lose.

It's only fair to say at this point, that Prime Minister Macmillan's mission to Moscow, has turned from apparent failure to at least partial success. Few diplomats have been subjected to such a "war of nerves" since the days of Adolf Hitler. At stake, was not only western unity, but the British Prime Minister's own position in the light of the coming British elections. The Russians obviously would gain internationally from Macmillan's defeat by the Btitish labor party...since the British socialists have already made known they favor some of the communist proposals for an atom-free neutral zone in Central Europe.

But Macmillan's unshakable firmness in the face of staggering diplomatic insults, has carried him and the West through at least one Russian test of strength.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: In a farewell broadcast in Moscow, Prime Minister Macmillan gave the Russians some typically under-stated British philosophy. Said: "I've been a candidate in ten Parliamentary elections. Sometimes, I won, sometimes, I lost. All the same," he said, "our system works well. Its fundamentals are free and secret elections, and the freedom to discuss and argue." This system, he pointed out, has spread through many parts of the world.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

LeSueur for Murrow Tues., March 3, 1959

The State Department informed the Bolivian ambassador in Washington that it views the anti-American rioting in Bolivia with "grave concern"...and that it expects the Bolivian government to take "all possible measures" for safeguarding American lives and property. The government of Bolivia says that firm steps ARE being taken to deal with any new attempt to create disorder.

Yesterday's riot in La Paz, capital of Bolivia, was set off by an article in the Latin American edition of Time Magazine. The article discussed Bolivia's economic difficulties...then quoted an unnamed official attached to the U.S. Embassy in La Paz as saying that the "only solution" to Bolivia's problems is to "abolish Bolivia."... "Let her neighbors divide up the country AND the problems." The article said the unidentified U.S. embassy official made this statement as a "wisecrack". Copies of the magazine were burned by a mob that gathered in front of the United States Embassy. Stones were hurled, smashing windows in the embassy. An American flag was burned, and the United States Information Center was broken into and books and magazines destroyed. Today, all approaches to the embassy were guarded by Bolivian troops, and there was no new disorder. As a safety precaution, U.S. nationals in La Paz were evacuated to an undisclosed suburban area. In Congress, Republican Senator Bridges suggested that American troops be sent to Bolivia, if necessary, and that American aid to the Latin American country be cut-off. Henry R. Luce, editor-in-chief of Time Magazine, said he "very much regretted" that the story should have been "the occasion for expressions of unfriendliness toward the United States." Nevertheless, he said, the story in Time was "a factual analysis of Bolivia's economic difficulties."

A new outbreak of violence today in the British protectorate of Nyasaland, in Southeast Africa, in which at least 23 Africans were killed. The fresh outbreak occurred after the British governor declared a state of emergency. and members of the African National Congress were placed under arrest. In one community, security police opened fire when a crowd tried to storm a JAIL and set the prisoners free. Seventeen Africans died in THAT incident.

In Tanganyika, police fired on another crowd of rioting Africans... killing two and wounding seven.

The British colonial secretary... Alan Lennox-Boyd... defended the action in Nyasaland, during the course of questioning today in the House of Commons. He had secret information, he said, that African leaders in the protectorate had planned a massacre.

Prime Minister Macmillan returned to Britain today from his "mission to Moscow." He told a cheering crowd at London Airport that his trip to Russia had been "worthwhile"...said that if he and Premier Khrushchev did not see eye-to-eye on "some" points, they DID agree that the problems of Europe should be settled by negotiation and "not" by force. The prime minister told reporters, "There are "lots" of difficulties ahead--no one would deny that. But," he said, "without trying to sound egotistical, I believe we in Britain should try to give a lead to finding a way through."

Shortly before Macmillan left Moscow, he and Khrushchev "signed" a communique...acknowledging the need for early negotiations on the German problem. The communique said that by talking they had furthered THOSE negotiations. There had been, it said, a "valuable" exchange of views. The two statesmen not only had discussed the German situation, but had reviewed the course of the Geneva talks looking toward a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests. They recognized, the communique said, the great importance of an "effective" system of international inspection and control. And they looked forward to an expansion of trade. One paragraph of the communique is attracting special attention. This paragraph says that...in laying the foundation for a stable European security system...it COULD be useful to examine how forces AND weapons might be limited in "an agreed area". [redacted] the question immediately arises whether the so-called Rapacki Plan is being revived. This is the plan advanced by Polish Foreign Minister Rapacki...calling for the creation of a neutral, demilitarized zone on both sides of the Iron Curtain. Prime Minister Macmillan will be filling IN other Western leaders, on the details when he makes a flying trip next week to Paris and Bonn, germany. President Eisenhower also has invited him to visit Washington. But, so far, no date has been set.

Russia sent a note to Poland today...saying it was "indispensable" that Polish and Czech representatives attend "any" conference on Germany. The note plugs again for a summit meeting, although only yesterday Russia seemed to agree "conditionally" to a conference of foreign ministers. The new Soviet note reiterates Russia's intention to turn the transportation routes to West Berlin over to East German control. Khrushchev will visit East Germany tomorrow and make a speech.

Mr. Macmillan has, on occasion, been accused of wanting to adopt a policy toward Russia that is too flexible. Tomorrow, the two relatively "inflexible" leaders of the Allied camp...Adenauer and DeGaulle...will be meeting in the French capital. For a report on what may come of their discussions, we switch now to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

—)

Tape runs 4:10
Ends on cue: "--to Larry Lesueur in N.Y."

In Walter Reed Hospital today, the doctors gave Secretary of State Dulles an injection of "radio-active gold..in a "new" effort to control his abdominal cancer. The regular X-ray treatments will be resumed in a few days.

Pioneer FOUR the 13-pound, gold-plated satellite launched at Cape Canaveral last midnight..has now streaked more than 120-thousand miles into space. Traveling at a speed of better than 5-thousand miles an hour, it is expected to pass the moon shortly after noon tomorrow and then fall into orbit around the sun. There, it would join Russia's "Mechta" satellite, which was sent up in January. The Russians say THEIR one-and-a-half ton artificial planet passed within 4-thousand miles of the moon. Our Pioneer is not expected to come THAT close. ~~because of the angle at which it was fired. But otherwise the launch is described as "nearly perfect". President Eisenhower sent a message today to Dr. Keith Glennan, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration,~~ extending his "warm congratulations" to all who contributed to "this splendid achievement." Mr. Eisenhower said that the scientific data being radioed back to earth should give man new, important information about the universe.

In Congress today, a bill to make Hawaii the 50th state was approved unanimously by the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. The measure now goes to the Senate floor. There debate on it MAY start before the end of the month. Hearings on a similar statehood bill were held today by the House Rules Committee.

This is L.L. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news (cue) just a word from George Bryan on Hawaiian Prime Minister MacMillan conducted his "Mission to Moscow," with typical politeness and circumspection.. But he flew out of Moscow today, with a blast that almost knocked Nikita Kruschev off his feet.. The hot blast from the jets of the British comet, did knock the hat from Kruschev's head and the smile from his face.. It was a British photographer, aided by a soviet colleggue who actually protected him.. ~~They both held their heavy coats in front of Kruschev as he beat a dusty retreat.~~ Later he thanked both of them warmly..

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Tuesday
Wednesday, March 4, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Mr. Macmillan has on occasion been accused of wanting to adopt a policy toward Russia that is too flexible. Tomorrow the two relatively inflexible leaders of the Allied camp, Adenauer and de Gaulle, will be meeting in the French capital. For a report of what may come of their negotiations, we switch now to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: One of the most important diplomatic events of this new year will take place here tomorrow, when German Chancellor Adenauer confers with French President de Gaulle. The meeting will take place at the Presidential hunting lodge in the old royal forest of Marly, a noble and austere historic setting for these two great European leaders. Each of them has a particular style of grandeur that is his own. Tall, straight-backed and stiff-lipped, they are - despite their personal dynamism and vigor - almost historic figures themselves who seem to be living simultaneously in active life and in the history books. And they are making history in their own close association, symbolizing the new reconciliation of their two countries, allied together for the first time in a thousand years to face a common threat from the East.

The French are committed to full support for the West German Federal Republic in general, and in particular, for the outpost of the West, Berlin. French and Germans both have been consistently opposed to any proposals for the neutralization of Central Europe, against any suggestions for a disengagement of Allied forces from Germany. They are equally alarmed at recent indications that the British might be inclined to consider some measures of neutralization or disarmament - and they are determined to fight against any such tendency in the Western camp.

Both de Gaulle and Adenauer are apparently convinced that for the immediate future, the status quo must be maintained - and both of them are pledged to fight for full treaty rights of the West in Berlin. Opposition forces in these countries, and in Britain, charge these two men with being inflexible and rigid in their policies. But both de Gaulle and Adenauer tend to stiffen up even more under this kind of attack. De Gaulle's spokesmen answer the charges by saying that flexibility is not necessarily a virtue in itself. On the contrary, they argue, if you bend over too much, the other side may be tempted to give you a strong push to finish it off. And then you may have to fight. The French view is that the West must be very firm now and let the Russians know that there'll be no appeasement of force in order not to have any accidents or miscalculations later. That being said, the French are ready to meet with the Russians to discuss the tensions of Central Europe and to explore ways and means of avoiding a conflict without surrendering basic principles or the fundamental needs of security. Charles de Gaulle is ready to hold a summit conference if there is any hope of success. Indeed, de Gaulle, being the powerful kind of leader that he is, understands as well as anyone the Soviet argument that the top men have a better chance to decide real issues than their ministers. In fact, de Gaulle - from the point of view of creating policy - is his own foreign minister, as is Khrushchev. The same might be said of Macmillan, who personally lays down British policies. And as for the United States, with Mr. Dulles ill, it is President Eisenhower who must make the vital decisions rather than some last minute substitute leader for Mr. Dulles.

It's interesting to note that in the major countries today, Russia, America, Britain, France and Germany, real power is vested in the Chief Executive - and except for America, foreign ministers have tended to be civil servants in the past decade rather than policy makers. Therefore, it is felt in Paris that a foreign ministers conference will have to be followed very quickly by a meeting at the summit. The ministers can do little more than clear the terrain and trace the path. But the real decisive meeting will have to take place on the highest peak - and there's just the possibility that they may decide to go to the summit right away.

That's the view here in Paris tonight, on the eve of the meeting between Charles de Gaulle and Konrad Adenauer.

This is Paris - David Schoenbrun reporting.

Now, back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: In Walter Reed Hospital today, the doctors gave Secretary of State Dulles an injection of radioactive gold, in a new effort to control his abdominal cancer. The regular X-ray treatments will be resumed in a few days.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The State Department informed the Bolivian ambassador in Washington that it views the anti-American rioting in Bolivia with "grave concern"...and that it expects the Bolivian government to take "all possible measures" for safeguarding American lives and property. The government of Bolivia says that firm steps are being taken to deal with any new attempt to create disorder. Yesterday's riot in La Paz, capital of Bolivia, was set off by an article in the Latin American edition of Time Magazine. The article discussed Bolivia's economic difficulties...then quoted an unnamed official attached to the U.S. Embassy in La Paz as saying that the "only solution" to Bolivia's problems is to "abolish Bolivia." "Let her neighbors divide up the country and the problems." The article said the unidentified U.S. Embassy official made this statement as a "wisecrack." Copies of the magazine were burned by a mob that gathered in front of the United States Embassy. Stones were hurled, smashing windows in the embassy. An American flag was burned, and the United States Information Center was broken into and books and magazines destroyed. Today, all approaches to theembassy were guarded by Bolivian troops, and there was no new disorder. As a safety precaution, U.S. nationals in La Paz were evacuated to an undisclosed suburban area. In Congress, Republican Senator Bridges suggested that American troops be sent to Bolivia, if necessary, and that American aid to the Latin American country be cut off. Henry Luce, editor-in-chief of Time Magazine, said he "very much regretted" that the story should have been "the occasion for expressions of unfriendliness toward the United States." Nevertheless, he said, the story in Time was "a factual analysis of Bolivia's economic difficulties."

A new outbreak of violence today in the British protectorate of Nyasaland, in Southeast Africa...in which at least 23 Africans were killed. The fresh outbreak occurred after the British governor declared a state of emergency...and members of the African National Congress were placed under arrest. In one community, security police opened fire when a crowd tried to storm a jail and set the prisoners free. Seventeen Africans died in that incident.

In Tanganyika, police fired on another crowd of rioting Africans...killing two and wounding seven.

The British colonial secretary...Alan Lennox-Boyd...defended the action in Nyasaland, during the course of questioning today in the House of Commons. He had secret information, he said, that African leaders in the protectorate had planned a massacre.

Prime Minister Macmillan returned to Britain today from his mission to Moscow. He told a cheering crowd at London Airport that his trip to Russia had been worthwhile...said that if he and Premier Khrushchev did not see eye to eye on some points, they did agree that the problems of Europe should be settled by negotiation and not by force. The prime minister told reporters, "There are lots of difficulties shead---noone would deny that. But," he said, "without trying to sound egotistical, I believe we in Britain should try to give a lead to finding a way through."

Shortly before Macmillan left Moscow, he and Khrushchev signed a communique acknowledging the need for early negotiations on the German problem. The communique said that by talking they had furthered those negotiations. There had been, it said, a "valuable" exchange of views. The two statesmen not only had discussed the German situation, but had reviewed the course of the Geneva talks looking toward a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests. They recognized, the communique said, the great importance of an "effective" system of international inspection and control. And they looked forward to an expansion of trade. One paragraph of the communique is attracting special attention. This paragraph says that...in laying the foundation for a stable European security system...it could be useful to examine how forces and weapons might be limited in "an agreed area." The question immediately arises whether the so-called Rapacki Plan is being revived. This is the plan advanced by Polish Foreign Minister Rapacki...calling for the creation of a neutral, demilitarized zone on both sides of the Iron Curtain. Prime Minister Macmillan will be filling in other Western leaders on the details when he makes a flying trip next week to Paris and Bonn, Germany. President Eisenhower also has invited him to visit Washington. But, so far, no date has been set.

Russia sent a note to Poland today...saying it was "indispensable" that Polish and Czech representatives attend any conference on Germany. The note plugs again for a summit meeting, although only yesterday Russia seemed to agree conditionally to a conference of foreign ministers. The new Soviet note reiterates Russia's intention to turn the transportation routes to West Berlin over to East German control. Khrushchev will visit East Germany tomorrow and make a speech.

Mr. Macmillan has, on occasion, been accused of wanting to adopt a policy toward Russia that is too flexible. Tomorrow, the two relatively "inflexible" leaders of the Allied camp...Adenauer and DeGaulle...will be meeting in the French capital. For a report on what may come of their discussions, we switch now to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: One of the most important events of this new year will take place here tomorrow, when German Chancellor Adenauer confers with French President DeGaulle. The meeting will take place at the Presidential hunting lodge in the old royal forest of Marly, a noble and austere historic setting for these two great European leaders. Each of them has a particular style of grandeur that is his own. Tall, straight-backed and stiff-lifped, they are - despite their personal dynamism and vigor - almost historic figures themselves who seem to be living simultaneously in active life and in the history books. And they are making history in their own close association, symbolizing the new reconciliation of their two countries, allied together for the first time in a thousand years to face a common threat from the East.

The French are committed to full support for the West German Federal Republic in general, and in particular, for the outpost of the West, Berlin. French and Germans both have been consistently opposed to any proposals for the neutralization of Central Europe against any suggestions for a disengagement of Allied forces from Germany. They are equally alarmed at recent indications that the British might be inclined to consider some measures of neutralization or disarmament - and they are determined to fight against any such tendency in the Western camp.

Both DeGaulle and Adenauer are apparently convinced that for the immediate future, the status quo must be maintained - and both of them are pledged to fight for full treaty rights of the West in Berlin. Opposition forces in these countries and in Britain charge these two men with being inflexible and rigid in their policies. But both DeGaulle and Adenauer tend to stiffen up even more under this kind of attack. DeGaulle's spokesmen answer the charges by saying that flexibility is not necessarily a virtue in itself. On the contrary, they argue, if you bend over too much, the other side may be tempted to give you a strong push to finish it off. And then you may have to fight. The French view is that the West must be very firm now and let the Russians know that there'll be no appeasement of force in order not to have any accidents or miscalculations later. That being said, the French are ready to meet with the Russians to discuss the tensions of Central Europe and to explore ways and means of avoiding a conflict without surrendering basic principles or the fundamental needs of security. Charles DeGaulle is ready to hold a summit conference if there is any hope of success. Indeed, DeGaulle being the powerful kind of leader that he is, understands as well as anyone the Soviet argument that the top men have a better chance to decide real issues than their ministers. In fact, DeGaulle - from the point of view of creating policy - is his own foreign minister, as is Khrushchev. The same might be said of Macmillan, who personally lays down British policies. And as for the United States, with Mr. Dulles ill, it is President Eisenhower who must make the vital decisions rather than some last minute substitute leader for Mr. Dulles.

It's interesting to note that in the major countries today, Russia, America, Britain, France and Germany real power is vested in the Chief Executive, and except for America, foreign ministers have tended to be civil servants in the past decade rather than policy makers. Therefore, it is felt in Paris that a foreign ministers conference will have to be followed very quickly by a meeting at the summit. The ministers can do little more than clear the terrain and trace the path. But the real decisive meeting will have to take place on the highest peak - and there's just the possibility that they may decide to go to the summit right away.

That's the view here in Paris tonight, on the eve of the meeting between Charles DeGaulle and Konrad Adenauer.

This is Paris - David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

LESUEUR: In Walter Reed Hospital today, the doctors gave Secretary of State Dulles an injection of radio-active gold...in a new effort to control his abdominal cancer. The regular X-Ray treatments will be resumed in a few days.

Pioneer four the 13-pound, gold plated satellite launched at Cape Canaveral last midnight...has now streaked more than 120-thousand miles into space. Traveling at a speed of better than 5-thousand miles an hour, it is expected to pass the moon shortly after noon tomorrow and then fall into orbit around the sun. There, it would join Russia's Mecheta satellite, which was sent up in January. The Russians,say their one a a half ton artificial planet passed within 4-thousand miles of the moon. Our Pioneer is not expected to come that close.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: Prime Minister Macmillan conducted his Mission to Moscow, with typical politeness and circumspection. But he flew out of Moscow today with a blast that almost knocked Nikita Khrushchev off his feet. The hot blast from the jets of the British comet did knock the hat from Khrushchev's head and the smile from his face. It was a British photographer aided by a Soviet colleague who actually protected him. Later, he thanked both of them warmly.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Wed., March 4, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

From London, where Prime Minister Macmillan addressed Parliament..,to Paris WITH an all-day marathon meeting between Adenauer and Degaulle.,.to Washington, where President Eisenhower talked to reporters, there was ONE predominant question: How to handle the problem of Berlin.

Here is the story from London, Alexander Kendrick reporting.

(Tape runs 2:05
Ends on cue: "---to Larry Lesueur in New York."

President Eisenhower ALSO spoke of disengagement today. Since his news conference came at the same time that Mr. Macmillan was speaking, he did not, of course, know what the prime minister had had to say. For a first-hand report on the President's news conference, we switch to Washington and CBS News Correspondent Robert Pierpoint, who was there.

→

Tape runs 3:05
Ends on cue: "---back now to CBS News in New York."

President Eisenhower had opened his news conference by saying that Mr. Dulles was doing "very well indeed." He deplored the absence of a man so experienced in foreign affairs...but pointed out that, for years, Mr. Dulles had been "selecting and training a team." There is in the State Department, Mr. Eisenhower said, "a tremendous depth of knowledge and understanding and capacity." He remarked that in Christian Herter the country has an "acting" secretary. ..one that is responsible, the President said, until someone else is designated. ..or until Mr. Herter is placed in "another capacity." Mr. Eisenhower's use of the phrase "another capacity" has led to speculation that if Dulles does resign, Herter will get the job. In some quarters, it is regarded as a "strong" hint.

West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and the French president, Charles DeGaulle, conferred in Paris today for eight-and-a-half hours. No statement has been issued regarding the results of their meeting. Observers say they are seeking complete agreement between themselves

ON the best policy FOR Berlin. This is assumed to be a "firm" policy...perhaps "less flexible" than that advocated by either Great Britain or the United States. Chancellor Adenauer is returning to West Germany tomorrow by train.

A visitor to EAST Germany today was Soviet Premier Khrushchev...who said in a speech at Leipzig that "only lunatics can seek solutions in war." But Khrushchev showed no flexibility. He said...again...that the Western powers "must get out of Berlin...that any application of force would result in war"...that Russia WILL transfer control of the West Berlin TRAFFIC ROUTES over to the East Germans, whether we like it or not...and that if the West refuses to sign a peace treaty with East Germany, Russia will. CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser...who heard the Khruschev speech...says that the reception it got was "lukewarm". The East German radio claims 200-thousand East Germans heard the speech and cheered. Leiser says that about one-fourth that many people actually turned out...and that there was very little cheering indeed.

The American satellite...Pioneer Four...passed the moon at 5:24 p.m., Eastern Standard Time...travelling at a speed of more than 45-hundred miles an hour. According to the space agency, the 13-pound, gold-plated cone can now be described as orbiting the sun... although it will not move into its PERMANENT orbit for nearly two weeks. It already is more than 240-thousand miles from earth.

In Bolivia today, there were new, violent demonstrations against the United States. While it was quiet in La Paz, the Bolivian capital, two U.S. Information Agency offices in other Bolivian cities were stoned and windows smashed. No injuries were reported.

There were new anti-British demonstrations today in Nyasaland, in Southwest Africa. A brief, uneasy calm...lasting 24 hours...was [redacted] shattered when police fired on a crowd, killing one demonstrator and raising to thirty the number of Africans killed in the past week. The demonstrators HAD called for the release from prison of members of the African National Congress and refused to disperse. In another city, rioters stormed and destroyed a courthouse. We are not given [redacted] the details.

Elsewhere in Africa, the revolutionary council which has ruled the Sudan since last November resigned today---reportedly under military pressure. Premier Abboud made a broadcast, appealing to the population to remain calm. The reason for the mass resignation of ministers was a mystery. Some of them, however, are known to be pro-Western...while others are intensely nationalistic and pro-Arab. The premier announced that he will confer tomorrow with the commanders of all Army units. After that, he said enigmatically, "the situation will be clarified."

~~He told the Sudanese...meanwhile...not to listen to rumors.~~

Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler said today that---right now---Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts appears to be the leading contender for the Democratic presidential nomination. Butler made the comment at a news conference in Trenton, New Jersey, after paying a social call on New Jersey's Democratic governor, Robert Meyner...who has himself been mentioned as a presidential possibility. Butler added that no one so far has the nomination "sewed up". Meyner, he said, is "very highly" regarded. But whether the governor could be a front-runner by convention time, Butler didn't know.

Harold Stassen, who failed last year to win the Republican nomination for governor of Pennsylvania, agreed today to run for mayor of Philadelphia. Stassen said that, if elected, he will recognize no boss except the people of Philadelphia. The city Republican organization asked him to run.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news----first a word from George Bryan on the weather.

Nikita Kruschev turned tourist today and made a pilgrimage to the spot where the victorious russian and american armies first joined HANDS over the body of Nazi Germany..

At torgau on the river Elbe, the visiting soviet premier got out of his car, and strode up to the stone memorial on the river bank that commemorates the link-up on april 25th, 1945..

He told the assembled local communists that if the two world powers retained the common viewpoint they had in their war against nazism... the present tension would NOT exist..

this is larry leSueur--good nite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: LARRY LE SUEUR SUBSTITUTING

Wednesday, March 4, 1959
5:45 - 6:00 PM., EST

LE SUEUR: Here's the story from London, Alexander Kendrick reporting.

KENDRICK: The House of Commons is even ordinarily in a state of much more animation than the American House of Representatives say, but this afternoon it must have set its own new record for cheers, shouts, applause, waving of papers and tramping of feet as Prime Minister Harold MacMillan entered the Chamber just before half past three. The tentire Conservative Party side rose enmass in this burst of enthusiasm and most prominent among them in the front row with his hand raised was the figure of Sir Winston Churchill. The Prime Minister was there to report on his completed trip to Moscow and his forthcoming trip to Paris, Bonn, and Washington. His reconnaissance behind the Kremlin line has transformed Mr. MacMillan - in Britisheyes,into the main catalytic agent of East-West negotiations, and even the Labor opposition did not come today to bury Mr. MacMillan but to praise his achievements. He said again that agreement to negotiate rather than use force was the main one, and his hope for future progress toward an Anglo-Soviet non-aggression decleration.

The Opposition leader, Hugh Gaitskill singled out the possibility of disengagement as the most fruitful item in the Kremlin communique and suggested it should be Mr. MacMillan's chief task to win the support of General De Gaulle, Chancellor Adenauer and Pres. Eisenhower to this end. The Prime Minister said that was indeed his intention, there were more cheers, more shouts of here here. So, the Parliamentary atmosphere is ebullient tonight despite sharp party differences on such matters as the colonial trouble in Nyasaland. It is felt here that Britain has indeed assumed an initiative toward the breaking of the East-West deadlock on Germany and Mr. MacMillan's trip to Washington is regarded not as an obeisance or the substance for an inter-governmental memo, but as perhaps the beginning of a hopeful new chapter in international relations.

Now, back to Larry Le Sueur in New York.

LE SUEUR: Pres. Eisenhower also spoke of disengagement today ...

For a first-hand report on the President's news conference, we switch to Washington and CBS News correspondent Robert Pierpoint who was there.

PIERPOINT: The President's comments on disengagement in central Europe actually came in answer to a question based on yesterday's Moscow-MacMillan-Khrushchev communique. The President took a somewhat more guarded view than Mr. MacMillan saying that if such a plan were to be put into effect it would have to come about as part of a general agreement in which we have confidence. And, in order to support that confidence, the President added that any agreement for troop reduction would have to include some self-inforcing elements, another words, some kind of inspection system. In one area, the President showed himself in mild disagreement with Prime Minister MacMillan today. He said the British leaders ideas for nuclear test suspension do not appear completely practical, but he added that we are still studying them and that he had no objection whatsoever to MacMillan bringing these ideas up to Premier Khrushchev. Pres. Eisenhower did seem to be in agreement with MacMillan's mild optimism on negotiations with the Russians over the German problem. While the President pointed out that the latest Russian notes setting forth their conditons for a foreign ministers conference contained what the President called the usual distortions, he added, that we are taking it as optimistically as we can. The note indicates, said Mr. Eisenhower, some lessening of the rigidity of Soviet positions, and he added that it was being studied together with our Allies to see what constructive answer we might make. Making no flat rejections of Soviet ideas today, the President commented that within the whole field of a German peace treaty, there could be very many different types of solutions and propositions advanced and he said, "I think all of them would have to be discussed." In commenting on America's military strength, Pres. Eisenhower said that he feels that the present 15 minute alert for America's Sac bombing force is sufficient, that we do not need a constant airborne alert, but he added, that if this situation develops along the lines that it appears to be going, now at that time, there will probably be a need for air alert. Nor does the President favor mobilization of the Free World's forces to face the Berlin crisis. "General mobilization for a long time in democracies such as ours"declared the President, produces a garrison state. And, this he added, is not only futile but would be the most disastrous thing we could do. The President warned today against thinking all the time every minute that while we are sitting here we're going to get a bombing attack, pointing out that we're going to have to get used to living with Russian propaganda and vituperation the President said that we must not allow ourselves to get thrown off balance to get freightened or hysterical, but that on the other hand, we must not ever be indifferent to what is happening in the world today. With Secretary of State Dulles still hospitalized, the President today seemed to be devoting more than the usual time, effort and interest to the complex field of foreign affairs.

Back now to CBS News in New York.

LE SUEUR: Pres. Eisenhower had opened his news conference by declaring ....

PT/ N.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Goodevening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

From London, where Prime Minister Macmillan addressed Parliament...to Paris with an all-day marathon meeting between Adenauer and DeGaulle...to Washington, where President Eisenhower talked to reporters, there was one predominant question: How to handle the problem of Berlin.

Here is the story from London, Alexander Kendrick reporting.

KENDRICK: The House of Commons is even ordinarily in a state of much more animation than the American House of Representatives say, but this afternoon, it must have set its own new record for cheers, shouts, applause, waving of papers and tramping of feet as Prime Minister Harold MacmIllan entered the Chamber just before half past three. The entire Conservative Party side rose enmass in this burst of enthusiasm and most prominent among them in the frontrow with his hand raised was the figure of Sir Winston Churchill. The Prime Minister was there to report on his completed trip to Moscow and his forthcoming trip to Paris, Bonn, and Washington. His reconnaissance behind the Kremlin line has transformed Mr. Macmillan - in British eyes, into the main catalytic agent of East-West negotiations, and even the Labor opposition did not come today to bury Mr. Macmillan but to praise his achievements. He said again that agreement to negotiate rather than use force was the main one, and his hope for future progress toward an Anglo-Soviet non-aggression declaration.

The Opposition leader, Hugh Gaitskill singled out the possibility of disengagement as the most fruitful item in the Kremlin communique and suggested it should be Mr. Macmillan's chief task to win the support of General DeGaulle, Chancellor Adenauer and President Eisenhower to this end. The Prime Minister said that was indeed his intention, there were more cheers, more shouts of hear, hear. So, the Parliamentary atmosphere is ebullient tonight despite sharp party differences on such matters as the colonial trouble in Nyasaland. It is felt here that Britain has indeed assumed an initiative toward the breaking of the East-West deadlock on Germany and Mr. Macmillan's trip to Washington is regarded not as an obeissance or the substance for an inter-governmental memo, but as perhaps the beginning of a hopeful new chapter in international relations.

Now, back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

LESUEUR: President Eisenhower also spoke of disengagement today. Since his news conference came at the same time that Mr. Macmillan was speaking, he did not, of course, know what the prime minister had had to say. For a first hand report on the President's news conference, we switch to Washington and CBS News Correspondent Robert Pierpoint, who was there.

PIERPOINT: The President's comments on disengagement in Central Europe actually came in answer to a question based on yesterday's Moscow-Macmillan-Khrushchev communique. The President took a somewhat more guarded view than Mr. Macmillan saying that if such a plan were to be put into effect it would have to come about as part of a general agreement in which we have confidence. And, in order to support that confidence, the President added that any agreement for troop reduction would have to include some self-enforcing elements, in other words, some kind of inspection system. In one area, the President showed himself in mild disagreement with Prime Minister Macmillan today. He said the British leaders ideas for suspension do not appear completely practical, but he added that we are still studying them and that he had no objection whatsoever to Macmillan bringing these ideas up to Premier Khrushchev. President Eisenhower did seem to be in agreement with Macmillan's mild optimism on negotiations with the Russians over the German problem. While the President pointed out that the latest Russian notes setting forth their conditions for a foreign ministers conference contained what the President called the usual distortions, he added, that we are taking it as optimistically as we can. The note indicates, said Mr. Eisenhower, some lessening of the rigidity of Soviet positions, and he added that it was being studied together with our Allies to see what constructive answer to might make. Making no flat rejections of Soviet ideas today, the President commented that within the whole field of a German peace treaty, there could be very many different types of solutions and propositions advanced and he said, "I think all of them would have to be discussed." In commenting on America's military strength, President Eisenhower said that he feels that the present fifteen minute alert for America's SAC bombing force is sufficient, that we do not need a constant airborne alert, but he added, that if this situation develops along the lines that it appears to be going, now at that time, there will probably be a need for air alert. Nor does the President favor mobilization of the free world's forces to face the Berlin crisis. "General mobilization for a long time in democracies such as ours," declared the President "produces a garrison state. And this," he added, "is not only futile, but would be the most disastrous thing we could do." The President warned today against thinking all the time every minute that while we are sitting here, we're going to get a bombing attack, pointing out that we're going to have to get used to living with Russian propaganda and vituperation the president said that we must not allow ourselves to get thrown off balance to get frightened or hysterical, but that on the other hand, we must not ever be indifferent to what is happening in the world today. With Secretary of State Dulles still hospitalized, the President today seemed to be devoting more than the usual time, effort and interest to the complex field of foreign affairs.

Back now to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: President Eisenhower had opened his news conference by saying that Mr. Dulles was doing "very well indeed." He deplored the absence of a man so experienced in foreign affairs...but pointed out that, for years, Mr. Dulles had been "selecting and training a team." There is in the State Department, Mr. Eisenhower said, "a tremendous depth of knowledge and understanding and capacity." He remarked that in Christian Herter the country has an acting secretary...one that is responsible, the President said, until some one else is designated...or until Mr. Herter is placed in another capacity.
Mr. Eisenhower's use of the phrase "another capacity" has led to speculation that if Dulles does resign, Herter will get the job. In some quarters, it is regarded as a strong hint.

West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and the French president Charles DeGaulle, conferred in Paris today for eight and a half hours. No statement has been issued regarding the results of their meeting. Observers say they are seeking complete agreement between themselves on the best policy for Berlin. This is assumed to be a "firm" policy...perhaps less flexible than that advocated by either Great Britain or the United States. Chancellor Adenauer is returning to West Germany tomorrow by train.

A visitor to East Germany today was Soviet Premier Khrushchev...who said in a speech at Leipzig that "only lunatics can seek solutions in war." But Khrushchev showed no flexibility. He said...again...that the Western powers must get out of Berlin...that any application of force would result in war...that Russia will transfer control of the West Berlin traffic routes over to the East Germans, whether we like it or not...and that if the West refuses to sign a peace treaty with East Germany, Russia will. CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser...who heard the Khrushchev speech...says that the reception it got was "lukewarm." The East German radio claims 200-thousand East Germans heard the speech and cheered. Leiser says that about one-fourth that many people actually turned out...and that there was very little cheering indeed.

The American satellite.... Pioneer Four...passed the moon at 5:24 PM, EST travelling at a speed of more than 45-hundred miles an hour. According to the space agency, the 13-pound, gold-plated cone can now be described as orbiting the sun...although it will not move into its permanent orbit for nearly two weeks. It already is more than 240 thousand miles from earth.

In Bolivia today, there were new, violent demonstrations against the United States. While it was quiet in La Paz, the Bolivian capital, two U.S. Information Agency offices in other Bolivian cities were stoned and windows smashed. No injuries were reported.

There were new anti-British demonstrations today in Nyasaland, in Southwest Africa. A brief, uneasy calm, lasting 24 hours, was shattered when police fired on a crowd, killing one demonstrator and raising to thirty the number of Africans killed in the past week. The demonstrators had called for the release from prison of members of the African National Congress and refused to disperse. In another city, rioters stormed and destroyed a courthouse. We are not given the details.

Elsewhere in Africa, the revolutionary council which has ruled the Sudan since last Novembrr resigned today---reportedly under military pressure. Premier Abboud made a broadcast, appealing to the population to remain calm. The reason for the mass resignation of ministers was a mystery. Some of them, however, are known to be pro-Western...while others are intensely nationalistic and pro-Arab. The premier announced that he will confer tomorrow with the commanders of all Army units. After that, he said enigmatically, "the situation will be clarified."

Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler said today that...right now... Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts appears to be the leading contender for the Democratic presidential nomination. Butler made the comment at a news conference in Trenton, New Jersey, after paying a social call on New Jersey's Democratic Governor, Robert Meyner...who has himself been mentioned as a presidential possibility. Butler added that no one so far has the nomination "sewed up." Meyner, he said, is very highly regarded. But whether the governor could be a front-runner by convention time, Butler didn't know.

Harold Stassen who failed last year to win the Republican nomination for governor of Pennsylvania, agreed today to run for mayor of Philadelphia. Stassen said that, if elected, he will recognize no boss except the people of Philadelphia. The city Republican organization asked him to run.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: Nikita Khrushchev turned tourist today and made a pilgrimage to the spot where the victorious Russian and American armies first joined hands over the body of Nazi Germany.

At Torgau on the river Elbe, the visiting Soviet premier got out of his car, and strode up to the stone memorial on the river bank that commemorates the link-up on April 25, 1945.

He told the assembled local communists that if the two world powers retained the common viewpoint they had in their war against nazism, the present tension would not exist.

This is Larry LeSueur---goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Thurs., March 5, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower met for nearly two hours with the National Security Council...then summoned congressional leaders of both parties to the White House tomorrow to consider the "German" problem. News Secretary Hagerty said the White House meeting...called for 10:30 a.m....does NOT mean Congress will be asked to take "specific" action. Nor would he call it an "emergency" session...but rather a meeting at which the Berlin situation and the German problem generally will be discussed. Hagerty declined to give any details about today's extraordinary session of the National Security Council...but took the rather unusual action of saying that it dealt with "the evolving situation in Berlin."

Normally, to questions about the National ~~[illegible] to the~~ Security Council, the White House news secretary declines comment. A reporter asked Hagerty if anything had happened in the past 24 hours to require tomorrow's meeting with top congressional leaders. "No," said Hagerty, "I wouldn't say that there had."

At 7:30 a.m. tomorrow, Eastern time, the United States and Britain will make a joint announcement dealing with Prime Minister Macmillan's forthcoming visit to Washington. ~~London sources said tonight that Mr. Macmillan will be in Ottawa late this month to confer with Canadian leaders. He has already announced plans for a flying trip next week to Paris and Bonn to report on his talks with Soviet Premier Khrushchev.~~

In East Germany today, Premier Khrushchev got up and made a speech at a luncheon given in his honor by the mayor of Leipzig. It was an ad lib speech... ~~[illegible]~~ full of jokes, such as "I didn't come here to talk politics. I represent Russian business." An apparent allusion to the Leipzig trade fair, which is in progress. Khrushchev said that if the West will negotiate "reasonably", Russia will "postpone" handing over ~~[illegible]~~ its responsibilities in Berlin to East Germany. The West, he said, "claims" that the "ultimatum date" is May 27th. And then he said, "We have no reason to hurry. We might be willing to wait until as late as July."

→

The problem of Berlin, he said, MUST be solved. In Washington, the State Department said that...May OR July...this country does not recognize the right of the Soviet Union unilaterally to relinquish "its" rights and responsibilities.

In Congress, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said he thought the "easing" of Russia's stand on Berlin arose from the fact that America had demonstrated its unity on this issue. "In my judgment," he said, "the country will "continue" to be united."

Secretary of Defense McElroy held a news conference today...and said that in his view a surprise missile attack on the United States was "almost impossible". McElroy said the United States does not expect "war over Berlin---"it's still in the realm of negotiation"--but we are doing a great deal of planning, in order to cope with "any" situation which might arise. There is NO plan at present, he said, to postpone the scheduled cut in military manpower.

Russia has formally protested this country's action in boarding that Soviet fishing trawler last month, off the coast of New Foundland. FIN

The United States acted under terms of an 1884 treaty, permitting the inspection of ships suspected of damaging underseas cables. The Russian note denies that the trawler damaged the cable...and points out that "hundreds" of other fishing vessels were in the area. It suggests that the American action was carried out for "provocative purposes".

→

A State Department spokesman said today that this "certainly" was not so. He said the Russian note is being studied and that a reply will be made in due course.

One hears little these days about the situation in the Formosa Strait. Today, the Quemoy islands were shelled in a light artillery attack. This has been going on...nearly every other day...for months.

From French authorities, word that an American...and his German interpreter...were ambushed and killed by Algerian rebels last night in the mountainous country near the Moroccan frontier. The American is identified as Homer Kellems, brother of Connecticut businesswoman Vivian Kellems. A THIRD member of the party (which was traveling by car) was William Hobbs, of Siloam Springs, Arkansas. Hobbs was wounded severely, but is expected to recover. The attack occurred soon after the three men had entered Algeria, from Morocco, on a photographic MISSION.

Today...in Wrightsville, Arkansas...21 children died when flames swept through a dormitory at the Negro Boys Industrial School. Forty-seven other youths escaped from the building through windows. Governor Faubus calls the disaster "inexcusable". Both doors of the dormitory were locked, and not a single adult was on duty. Cause of the fire has not yet been determined. The school is a "state correctional institution.

The Navy gave the go-ahead today for the construction of SIX atomic submarines.

Another story has just "broken" in Washington. And so we switch there at once, Lou Schollenberger reporting.

(Tape runs 50 seconds
Ends on cue: "---to CBS News in N.Y."

The Federal Reserve System has approved an increase in the discount rate for four of its member banks. The increase, amounting to one-half of one percent, goes into effect tomorrow. It's an ANTI-inflationary move.

During the last war, more than ONE captured german general said that american military tactics were pretty easy to figure out... All you had to KNOW - WAS HOW TO how to play football, Because MOST american commanders had been football players in their college days...And always followed a pattern of end-runs, slices off guard, or plunges through the center...

Well, Soviet diplomacy has often been compared to "moves on a chessboard.. We grudgingly give them credit for thinking one or two moves ahead... and perhaps thats not unusual for a snobound country, whose long and confining winters have made them into a nation of chess-players..

Indeed, soviet educators have recently complained that students in Russia waste too much time playing chess, when they should be doing their homework...

But there's a pattern to chess, just as there is to football... There may be a greater number of moves possible, but there's certain rythym, peculiar to indvidual players...

Premier Kruschev is a bold player...Not quite as tough as Stalin was in his day, but perhaps more of a gambler... yet there's a rythym to his play too...

WHEN Kruschev ~~When he~~ gets his PAWN ~~out~~ into an exposed position, he awaits the reaction of the West... If we react too strongly, he moves back... He doesn't necessarily give up any ground, but "bides his time", hoping for a future sign of weakness... possibly a split among the Western allies.. Then he moves forward again... In chess-playing as well as in military tactics, the idea, of course, is to get the move on your opponent... make him react to your initiatives...That keeps him on the defensive, and doesn't give him time to think ahead..

The position of the West is not enviable... Russia is a nation on the "make"... AND In this game of power politics, its more-or-less built-in, that we are the defenders... The communists are on the aggressive..

Germany and the industrial Ruhr, and, of course, the centers of power in Europe... Kruschev may be making passes at Berlin now...But his goal is all Germany and its industrial might..

But somewhat obscured by this threatening "Berlin" crisis, has been a move of our own in the Middle East... a vital check to the Russian initiatives, ONE which has them howling with anger... I refer to Iran's brave denunciation of the 1921 treaty, by which Russia had the right to send in troops, if it felt it was threatened from Iran.

This is the treaty, underwhich Russia and Britain both occupied Iran during world war two, [redacted] to safeguard it FROM [redacted] the Germans... And in 1946, russia "walked-out" of the U.N. when the West demanded that she get out of northern IRAN. [redacted]n... It may have been the [redacted] exclusive american possession of the atom-bomb then, that MADE [redacted] stalin reluctantly [redacted] pull his troops back..

Soviet Russia's andrei Gromyko was the U.N. delegate then...Now he is Russia's foreign minister... And it is the soviet foreign office which is issuing the latest outbursts against the temerity of Iran, [redacted] for denouncing a treaty with [redacted] her big neighbor, with whom she has a 12 hundred mile, practically undefended frontier..

[redacted] The reason's for [redacted] Iran wanting to denounce the treaty WITH RUSSIA [redacted] are obvious... [redacted] A move to the warmwaters and oil of the Persian Gulf, have long been a russian objective...This was openly avowed by Molotov when he signed the 1939 treatty of non-agression with Hitler Germany... According to the records, he asked for "freedom of movement in the direction of the Persian Gulf.." STALIN openly attempted Iran's subjugation, when he created a puppet government in NORTHERN AZERBAIJAN [redacted], before U.N. [redacted]s pressure forced him to [redacted] pull back..

The reasons for Iran not wanting Russia to retain her occupation rights may be perfectly plear.....But the reasons for her courageous action, may not be...Its true that today the United States signed defense agreements, guaranteeing protection, not only to Iran but to Turkey and Pakistan...But geography has n't changed, and Iran especially, with its token army, could easily be over-run by Russia, before a single american troopship could leave a U.S. port..

Britain, of course, still retains rights to send troops to Iran under the Bagdad pact....But america is a long way off...

Yet the same reasnn that caused Secretary of State Dulles to say, before his illness, that Russia would "not risk a war over Berlin," holds true for little Iran... She may not be able to hold-off the mighty mechanized divisions of the Soviet army, coming thru the passes of the Caucasus...But Iran can afford to play a bold hand, when even Premier Kruschev permits himself to dwell on the horrors of Atomic war, as he said in Leipzig; "over Berlin a war NOW, would be worse than all the wars in history.. well, what' sauce for the goose in Berlin, is sauce for the gander--in Iran...

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news---CUE first a word from George Bryan on the weather.

Footnote

~~Premier Kruschev talks a lot, but he doesn't always say what he thinks...But to the astonishment of Britons at the Liepzig [redacted] Fair today [redacted] the Russian Premier indulged in an UN-usual bit of frankness.~~

A British official at the (Leipzig) Trade Fair, presented Kruschev with a BLUE tie...He apologized, saying he wished it could have been red. But the world's leading 'Red' [redacted] explained he couldn't stand his national color.. " I've had red telephones," said Kruschev, "but I had them thrown out. Red irritates my eyes."

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Thursday, March 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Another story has just broken in Washington - and so we switch there at once, Lew Shollenberger reporting.

SHOLLENBERGER: It's been learned here in Washington that the Republicans intend to hold their next convention in Chicago, beginning August 8th, four weeks after the Democrats open in Los Angeles. Chicago will be fixed with the hope of furthering the traditionally strong Republican hold in the great mid-west. August 8th is being recommended because it gives the Democrats four full weeks to nominate a candidate. Republican leaders are not unmindful that the Democratic camp is full of Presidential hopefuls, that it took the Democrats 15 days and 103 ballots to nominate a candidate in 1924. And the Republicans next year want the news coverage to themselves when they begin their convention; they don't want to face the possibility of sharing the spotlight with a deadlocked Democratic convention. Therefore, Chicago, and August 8th, will be recommended to the Republican National Committee, which meets here in Washington next month.

Back now to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: One hears little these days about the situation in the Formosa Strait.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower met for nearly two hours with the National Security Council...then summoned congressional leaders of both parties to the White House tomorrow to consider the German problem. News Secretary Hagerty said the White House meeting...called for 10:30 AM...does not mean Congress will be asked to take specific action. Nor would he call it an emergency session...but rather a meeting at which the Berlin situation and the German problem generally will be discussed. Hagerty declined to give any details about today's extraordinary session of the National Security Council...but took the rather unusual action of saying that it dealt with "the evolving situation in Berlin." Normally, to questions about the National Security Cuuncil, the White House news secretary declines comment. A reporter asked Hagerty if anything had happened in the past 24 hours to require tomorrow's meeting with top congressional leaders. "No," said Hagerty, "I wouldn't say that there had."

At 7:30 AM tomorrow, Eastern time, the United States and Britain will make a joint announcement dealing with Prime Minister Macmillan's forthcoming visit to Washington.

In East Germany today, Premier Khrushchev got up and made a speech at a luncheon given in his honor by the mayor of Leipzig. It was an ad lib speech... full of jokes, such as "I dodn't come here to talk politics. I represent Russian business." An apparent allusion to the Leipzig trade fair, which is in progress. Khrushchev siid that if the West will negotiate "reasonably," Russia will postpone handling over its responsibilities in Berlin to East Germany. The West, he said, claims that the "ultimatum date" is May 27th. And then he said, "We have no reason to hurry. We might be willing to wait until as late as July." The problem of Berlin, he said, must be solved. In Washington, the State Department said that...May or July...this country does not recognize the right of the Soviet Union unilaterally to relinquish its rights and responsibilities.

In Congress, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said he thought the "easing" of Russia's stand on Berlin arose from the fact that America had demonstrated its unity on this issue. "In my judgment," he said, "the country will continue to be united."

Secretary of Defense McElroy held a news conference today...and said that in his view a surprise missile attack on the United States was "almost impossible." McElroy said the United States does not expect war over Berlin---it's still in the realm of negotiation---but we are doing a great deal of planning, in order to cope with any situation which might arise. There is no plan at present, he said, to postpone the scheduled cut in military manpower.

Russia has formally protested this country's action in boarding that Soviet fishing trawler last month, off the coast of Newfoundland. The United States acted under terms of an 1884 treaty, permitting the inspection of ships suspected of damaging underseas cables. The Russian note denies that the trawler damaged the cable...and points out that "hundreds" of other fishing vessels were in the area. It suggests that the American action was carried out for "provocative purposes." A State Department spokesman said today that this certainly was not so. He said the Russian note is being studied and that a reply will be made in due course.

One hears little these days about the situation in the Formosa Strait. Today, the Quemoy islands were shelled in a light artillery attack. This has been going on..nearly every other day...for months.

From French authorities, word that an American...and his German interpreter were ambushed and killed by Algerian rebels last night in the mountainous country near the Moroccan frontier. The American is identified as Homer Kellems, brother of Connecticut businesswoman Vivian Kellems. A third member of the party (which was traveling by car) was William Hobbs, of Siloam Springs, Arkansas. Hobbs was wounded severely, but is expected to recover. The attack occurred soon after the three men had entered Algeria, from Morocco, on a photographic mission.

Today...in Wrightsville, Arkansas...21 childrdn died when flames swept through a dormitory at the Negro Boys Industrial School. Forty-seven other youths escaped from the building through windows. Governor Faubus calls the disaster "inexcusable." Both doors of the dormitory were locked, and not a single adult was on duty. Cause of the fire has not yet been determined. The school is a state correctional institution.

The Navy gave the go-ahead today for the construction of six atomic submarines.

Another story has just "broken" in Washington. And so we switch there at once, Lew Shollenberger reporting.

SHOLLENBERGER: It's been learned here in Washington that the Republicans intend to hold their next convention in Chicago, beginning August 8th, four weeks after the Democrats open in Los Angeles. Chicago will be fixed with the hope of furthering the traditionally strong Republican hold in the great mid-west. August 8th is being recommended because it gives the Democrats four full weeks to nominate a candidate. Republican leaders are not unmindful that the Democratic camp is full of Presidential hopefuls, that it took the Democrats 15 days and 103 ballots to nominate a candidate in 1924. And the Republicans next year want the news coverage to themselves when they begin their convention; they don't want to face the possibility of sharing the spotlight with a deadlocked Democratic convention.

Therefore, Chicago, and August 8th, will be recommended to the Republican National Committee, which meets here in Washington next month.

Back now to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The Federal Reserve System has approved an increase in the discount rate for four of its member banks. The increase, amounting to one-half of one percent, goes into effect tomorrow. It's an anti-inflationary move.

During the last war, more than one captured German general said that American military tactics were pretty easy to figure out. All you had to know was how toplay football, because most American commanders had been football players in their college days, and always followed a pattern of end-runs, slices off guard, or plunges through the center.

Well, Sovier diplomacy has often been compared to moves on a chessboard. We grudgingly give them credit for thinking one or two moves ahead, and perhaps that's not unusual for a snowbound country, whose long and confing winters have made them into a nation of chess-players.

Indeed Soviet educators have recently complained that students in Russia waste too much time playing chess, when they should be doing their homework.

But there's a pattern to chess, just as there is to football. There may be a greater number of moves possible, but there's certain rhythm, peculiar to individual players.

Premier Khrushchev is a bold player, not quite as tough as Stalin was in his day, but perhaps more of a gambler. Yet there's a rhythm to his play too. When Khrushchev gets his pawn out into an exposed position, he awaits the reaction of the West. If we react too strongly, he moves back. He doesn't necessarily give up any ground, but bides his time, hoping for a future sign of weakness, possibly a split among the Western allies. Then he moves forward again. In chess playing as well as in military tactics, the idea, of course, is to get the move on your opponent, make him react to your initiatives, that keeps him on the defensive, and doesn't give him time to think ahead.

The position of the West is not enviable. Russia is a nation on the make, and in this game of power politics, it's more or less built-in, that we are the defenders. The communists are on the aggressive.

Germany and the industrial Ruhr are of course the centers of power in Europe. Khrushchev may be making passes at Berlin now, but his goal is all Germany and its industrial might.

But somewhat obscured by this threatening Berlin crisis, has been a move of our own in the Middle East...a vital check to the Russian initiatives, one of which has them howling with anger. I refer to Iran's brave denunciation of the 1921 treaty, by which Russia had the right to send in troops, if it felt it was threatened from Iran.

This is the treaty under which Russia and Britain both occupied Iran during World War Two, to safeguard it from the Germans. And in 1946, Russia walked out of the U.N. when the West demanded that she get out of northen Iran. It may have been the exclusive American possession of the atom-bomb then, that made Stalin reluctantly pull his troops back.

Soviet Russia's Andrei Gromyko was the U.N. delegate then. Now he is Russia's foreign minister, and it is the Soviet foreign office which is issuing the latest outbursts against the temerity of Iran, for denouncing a treaty with her big neighbor, with whom she has a 12 hundred mile, practically undefended frontier.

The reasons for Iran wanting to denounce the treaty with Russia are obvious. A move to the warmwaters and oil of the Persian Gulf have long been a Russian objective. This was openly avowed by Molotov when he signed the 1939 treaty of non-aggression with Hitler Germany. According to the records, he asked for "freedom of movement in the direction of the Persian Gulf." Stalin openly attempted Iran's subjugation, when he created a puppet government in northern Azerbaijan before U.N.pressure forced him to pull back.

The reasons for Iran not wanting Russia to retain her occupation rights may be perfectly clear. But the reasons for her courageous action may not be. It's true that today the United States signed defense agreements, guaranteeing protection, not only to Iran but to Turkey and Pakistan, but geography hasn't changed, and Iran especially with its token army could easily be over-run by Russia, before a single American troopship could leave a U.S.port.

Britain, of course, still retains rights to send troops to Iran under the Baghdad pact, but America is a long way off.

Yet the same reason that caused Secretary of State Dulles to say, before his illness, that Russia would not risk a war over Berlin holds true for little Iran. She may not be able to hold off the mighty mechanized divisions of the Soviet army, coming thru the passes of the Caucasus. But Iran can afford to play a bold hand, when even Premier Khrushchev permits himself to dwell on the horrors of Atomic war. As he said in Leipzig: A war now over Berlin would be worse than all the wars in history. Well, what's sauce for the goose in Berlin is sauce for the gander in Iran.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: A British official at the Leipzig Trade Fair presented Khrushchev with a blue tie. He apologized saying he wished it could have been red. But the world's leading Red explained he couldn't stand his national color. "I've had red telephones," said Khrushchev, "but I had them thrown out. Red irritates my eyes."

This is Larry LeSueur. Goodnite.

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

The leaders of Congress voiced unanimous support of a "firm" policy regarding Berlin. The congressional leaders went to the White House this morning at President Eisenhower's invitation, and received a briefing that lasted an hour and-a-half. Among others attending the conference were: Vice President Nixon, Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter, Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy, and Allen Dulles, director of Central Intelligence. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said after the White House meeting, "There is "no" thought of yielding to pressure." But at the same time, he said, we are willing to explore every avenue for "peace." Senator Johnson told reporters that he had "discussed" with the President the need for "gathering our strength as quickly as possible." With this in mind, Johnson said, the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee will review the military situation, probably next week. Members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other defense officials will be asked to testify.

House Speaker Rayburn said after seeing the President, "We want the world to know that we are "unified" when it comes to foreign affairs and in getting ready to do the things that "ought" to be done." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen and House Republican Leader Halleck of course advocated firmness, but emphasized that the "door" to negotiations with Russia is NOT closed. This, Dirksen declared, is so that it may not be said of us that we are rigid, instead of firm. And Halleck said that anything that can be done "with honor" to maintain the peace WILL be done.

The meeting at the White House came just three hours after it was announced that British Prime Minister Macmillan will come to Washington on March 19th for a series of conferences with President Eisenhower on the German situation. Mr. Macmillan will be accompanied by his foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. And it is assumed that they will also call on Secretary Dulles in Walter Reed Army Hospital.

President Eisenhower drove out to the hospital this afternoon and talked with Mr. Dulles for about half-an-hour. Democratic Senator Fulbright says he has a "hunch" that a decision on whether Dulles can resume the full duties of his office will come in the next two weeks. Fulbright...The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee...hastens to add that he has no "real" information on the subject...just a "hunch."

When the British prime minister is in Washington, he will fill-IN Mr. Eisenhower on his recent "mission to Moscow." CBS News in Paris learns that the report that President DeGaulle may ALSO go to Moscow is NOT correct. A high French source says that even if DeGaulle DID receive an invitation from Khrushchev, he would not accept--one, because DeGaulle is chief of state and would refuse to accept an invitation from a HEAD of government...and two, because he believes it would be a grave sign of weakness if the Western leaders, demonstrating their anxiety and confusion, were to go off to Moscow, one by one.

In his talks with Premier Khrushchev, Mr. Macmillan discussed the possibility of "disengagement" in Central Europe---a possible "pull-back" of troops, on both sides of the Iron Curtain. It "was" something, the two leaders agreed, which ought to be "looked into." Today...in Bonn...an official spokesman for the West German government said that Chancellor Adenauer "opposes" the idea of disengagement. // And the spokesman indicated that President DeGaulle opposes it, too.

—)

In East Germany today, Premier Khrushchev continued his tour of the Leipzig Trade Fair. // .predicted there will be no war and called again for "expansion of trade." He ordered 100-thousand dollars' worth of British machine tools at one of the exhibits.

The Indian parliament was in a turmoil today...as Communist deputies questioned Prime Minister Nehru about the new defense treaty between the United States and [redacted] India's neighbor, PAKISTAN. The treaty i[redacted]d against Communist aggression...says that, to prevent aggression, the United States will take "such appropriate action, including the use of armed forces, as may be mutually agreed upon." The Communists [redacted] claimed [redacted] that this was a threat to India. Prime Minister Nehru promised to obtain clarification from the United States ambassador. [redacted] Meantime...in Pakistan...a foreign ministry spokesman said the treaty would be invoked by his government in the event of aggression from ANY quarter. And that, he said, includes India and Kashmir. // In Washington, a State Department spokesman says that the treaty threatens NO country...That it is "entirely defensive in nature."

DAY RUNNING

There was violence in Nyasaland today for the fourth straight day. Colonial security forces opened fire on a crowd of rioting Africans, killing one and wounding three. The Africans are described as being armed with spears, axes and clubs. Nyasaland is a British protectorate, in Southeast Africa.

America's artificial planet...Pioneer IV...lost its "voice" today, more than 400-thousand miles out in space. For all practical purposes, the batteries of the radio transmitter went dead at 10:15 a.m., Eastern time. The small, gold-plated CAPSULE was then 406-thousand miles from Earth...traveling at a speed of 3-thousand, 899 miles an hour. The few radio signals received after that were "just a flicker".

In Congress today, Democratic leaders cleared the Hawaiian statehood bill for Senate action BEFORE Easter. The measure "probably" will be taken up next Thursday.

In Montgomery, Alabama today...a federal judge dismissed the Justice Department suit...designed to force the registration of QUALIFIED Negro voters in Macon County. U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson ruled that since the members of the Board of Registrars had resigned, there was no one left for the Justice Department to take action against. He also held that the Civil Rights Act...passed in 1957...does not give the Federal Government authority to sue individual states, accused of violating voting rights. The Justice Department says the ruling will be appealed.

→

(1)

Well, we're told the americans are moving back into the United States Embassy in La Paz. Bolivia,....the explosion of anti-american demonstrations appears to be "over"...Its a pity that the anti-american riots in [redacted] poverty-stricken Bolivia occurred over nothing more significant than some INDISCREET WORDS in the latin-american edition of time Magazine....[redacted] Which as the world now knows, quoted a U.S. Embassy spokesman in La Paz, as saying in jest that the Best thing to do with Bolivia was to abolish it, and TO divide its territory and problems among its neighbors...[redacted]

But if the disturbances are to be regretted, the significance of the riots stretches far beyond the lofty peaks of the Andes...It is fresh evidence that [redacted] latent hostility to the United states, lies close to the surface in many countries south of the Border. Yet This is surely not extra-ordinary, since the "rich and powerful" are traditionally more respected LOVED — BUT THOSE WHO PATRONIZE ARE JUST ASKING TO BE DISLIKED. than [redacted] to prop-up [redacted] governments, and then being patronizing about it...

~~It so happens that~~ irresponsible, geo-political [redacted] experts have for years speculated on the supposed [redacted] desireability of dividing-up land-locked Bolivia, among its neighbors.

But The history of BOLIVIA fifth largest, but least-populated Republic of South America, has been a series of bloody wars, and of territory lost to its more powerful neighbors. And thus, what the american magazine clearly labelled as a wise-crack, touched upon a raw exposed nerve in Bolivia.. No nationally-minded people, of course could entertain even a poor joke about having their state divided up among its neighbors..

In the case of Bolivia, its never even become reconciled to its land-locked position, especially of the loss of its pacific seacoast to Chile, in the 19th century " war of the pacific." That was a long time ago, of course, in 1884.

But a lot of modern Bolivians and Americans too for that matter, can remember the bloodiest modern war ever fought in South America...

The "chaco" jungle war between Bolivia and Paraguay, That lasted from 1932 to 1935, with Bolivia seeking to capture a river outlet, across the continental DIVIDE-TO the Atlantic... That war was an unmitigated disaster for Bolivia...She not only lost upward of 60 thousand men killed, but she was bled white and left bankrupt, with the 1938 treaty finally reducing Bolivia, to about half the territory she originally possessed when Simon Bolivar first liberated her FROM Spain.

[redacted] There are those in [redacted] the United States who think BOLIVIA'S present government is graft-ridden and INEPT. [redacted]g.. Mistakes, certainly HAVE [redacted] been made in the past...Bolivia did seize the properties of the tin barons, nationalizing its "only" big industry, tin-mining.. It still hasn't paid for them, and in general, its economic policies since then, have led to a raging inflation.. [redacted] Bolivia' story has [redacted] exemplified that of other [redacted] backward countries, dependent on a single commodity. In this case TIN. The boom-and-bust cycle in the price of raw commodities has been disastrous.. In the past five years this country has poured well over [redacted] a hundred million dollars into that unhappy land... [redacted] However, this hasn't been done "purely" for reasons of charity.. The heads of the BOLIVIAN labor unions are known as "communists", altho not necessarily followers of Moscow. And the plight of Bolivia has not escaped the attention of Russia..

The government of President SILES SUAZO [redacted] may have been slow to realize the danger. But he HAS since reacted firmly. It may be well to recall that ON October 2nd of this year, the Bolivian government took a full-page ad in the New York Times, proclaiming that Bolivia was the victim [redacted] of soviet aggression in the Americas...

The advertisement, appealing to the american people to understand the facts of economic life, pointed out that Soviet Russia had committed economic aggression, by dumping large quantities of cheap tin on the world market..

The Bolivian appeal underscores the fact ~~pointed out~~ that by maliciously by-passing the the International Tin Council, which was created to help stabilize Tin prices, the soviet union succeeded in collapsing the world TIN Market within fifteen days...at a cost to Bolivia of almost one-fifth of its MEAGRE yearly revenues.. the Bolivian government warned that this deliberate attempt to collapse the Bolivian economy, might lead to a second phase of communist-attack.. the undermining of the pverty-stricken Bolivian people.

